Acknowledgments

Just as this third edition of The ROLLING STONE Encyclopedia of Rock & Roll has multiplied in word count from the last, so has the size of the team whose efforts have made the book a reality.

First, of course, our gratitude goes to the tireless and talented writers who turned the past five years' worth of rock & roll history into pithy encyclopedia entries. Steve Appleford, Steve Dollar, former Encyclopedia contributor Paul Evans, Bill Friskics-Warren, Andrea Odintz, Richard Skanse, and Elisabeth Vincentelli. Other writers contributed as well: last edition vets Michael Shore, Mark Kemp, and Steve Mirkin, former Rolling Stone Press editors Ann Abel and Wendy Mitchell, as well as the most recent Rolling Stone Press staff editors, Andrew Simon, Jordan Mamone, and Nina Pearlman, the three of whom demonstrated diligence and good cheer under the worst of circumstances. Thanks also to the writers who contributed to the previous editions, from which this book was built: Ken Braun, Jim Farber, Steve Futterman, Elysa Gardner, Nelson George, Jeff Howry, Ira Kaplan, Evelyn McDonnell, John Milward, and Mitchell Schneider. My above-mentioned staff at Rolling Stone Press not only wrote entries but helped with editing, fact-checking, proofreading, and photo research. Thanks, too, to Andrea Danese, Elizabeth Gall, and Michele Garner, who contributed editorial expertise to the project. My coeditor, Patricia Romanowski, added her unparalleled editing, writing, and organizational powers to this project—for the third time. Thanks to Jon Pareles for his guidance. And we're very grateful to our team of Rolling Stone Press interns: Joshua Sturtevant, Christopher Cooper, Kim Curry, Marya Garskof, Rachael Shook, Emily Bodenberg, Agata Zak, Heidi Pauken, Becki Heller, Marcie Muscat, and Dana Grayson. Former and current Rolling Stone staffers who helped immensely include John D'Amico, Allison Grochowski, Evan Schlansky, Doug Gottlieb, Lee Berresford, and Omnia Othello Leathers. Thanks, also, to additional fact-checkers Michael Chandler, Stephen Pener, and Came Smith.

Without the fine team at Fireside/Simon & Schuster, we couldn't have created the book we envisioned. A thousand kudos to our very supportive editor, Dominick Anfusio, as well as Kristen McGuinness, Nancy Inglis, Suzanne Anderson, Jennifer Love, and J. P. Jones for their editorial expertise. We also appreciate the efforts of our agent, Sarah Lazin, and her staff, Paula Balzer and Dena Koklanaris, as well as those of ROLLING STONE's Jann S. Wenner, Kent Brownridge, John Lagana, Fred Woodward, and Evelyn Bernal.

Our thanks to the numerous musicians, their publicists, managers, and record company personnel who helped us get the facts straight. Above-and-beyond honors go to Graham Parker, Jeff Hanna, Spencer Davis, Will Rigby, Ed Sanders, Phoebe Snow, Irwin Chusid, Andy Schwartz, Eric Andersen, Sue Khaury, Cynthia Barry, Lisa Kidd, Gary Lambert, Suzzy Roche, Meryl Wheeler, Steve Chapman, Bruce Duff, Mike Donahue, Daniel Markus, Debbie Rawlings, Michelle Chambers, Mitchell Greenhill, Tim Livingston, Charles Turner, Rick Gershon, Bill Bentley, Gary Stewart, James Austin, David McLees, David Dorn, Harry Weinger, Steve Burton, John Jackson, Brian Gilmore, John Fisher, Risa Morley, Alison Tamošky, and Karen Wiessen. Others who went out of their way for us include Robert Warren, David McGee, Anthony DeCurtis, and Michael Hill. Finally, we thank all those readers who made the previous editions such a success. We hope you find rock & roll trivia nirvana with this first edition of the 21st century.

HOLLY GEORGE-WARREN

The Encyclopedia writers acknowledge the following:

SA thanks Holly George-Warren and Andrew Simon, along with that heroic army of RS Press fact-checkers. Also, extra points go to John Doe, Dave Alvin, Craig Rosen, and Lisa Fancher.

SD: Thanks to neighborly Fall completist Steven Joerg for technical assistance and letting me bum smokes (as well as rare vinyl from his golden archive). And thanks again to Holly and the staff of Rolling Stone Press for making this such a congenial and, even, educational experience. I dedicate half of my future Rock & Roll Jeopardy winnings to you.

BFW: Thanks to Holly, Patty, and Andrew, especially for your patience toward the end.

AO wishes to thank Holly George-Warren for the opportunity, Patricia Romanowski for the feedback, Andrew Simon and Wendy Mitchell for their hard work and patience, David McGee for his continued guidance, Norma and Mel Odintz for their belief in my goals, and Jeffrey and Benjamin Cohen for their love and support.

EV would like to thank Holly George-Warren and everyone at Rolling Stone Press for their assistance.

Preface

to the First Edition

by Jon Pareles

There's no stopping rock & roll. It is the most vital, unpredictable force in pop culture, and the exception to every rule. Like all important popular art, it can speak to and from the public's heart of hearts even if it has been crafted by the most knowing artisans. And even at its most elaborate it hints at a rebel spirit: the idea that an outsider with something important to say can broadcast it to the world. At its best, rock can be entertainment, good business, and catharsis all at once; at its worst, it's only rock & roll.

It is music that just can't be pinned down, a contradiction any old way you choose it. Rock can be both amateur and professional, innocent and slick, subtle and crass, sincere and contrived, smart and stupid. It is a happy bastard style, claiming a pedigree from jazz, blues, Tin Pan Alley, country, classical music, movies, television, sex, drugs, art, literature, electronics, and out-and-out noise. It is rooted in real emotion; it is also rooted in racism, cynicism, and greed.

Rock accepts everything its detractors say, only to laugh it off. Sure, its basics are stolen, and its ideas are often clichés. Yes, it tends to aim for a lowest common denominator and appeal to base, primal impulses. It is proud to be a commodity, one that brings in billions of dollars, with "artistic" success frequently measured in sales figures. It doesn't even have to be in tune. No matter—rock & roll moves people, in simple and sophisticated ways. And it never takes no for an answer.

The history of rock & roll is a wild tangle, affected by changes in technology, media, demographics, politics, and the economy as well as by the inspirations of packagers and musicians. Rock cheerfully accepts all its roles; it is product and spectacle and art, something for everybody, and its development and documentation are by no means orderly.

In the '50s, pop was infiltrated by rockabilly from Memphis and blues from Chicago and rhythm & blues from New Orleans and doo-wop from city street corners, more like outbreaks of some mysterious contagion—rockin' pneumonia?—than a concerted artistic movement. The music business counterattacked with its own more malleable teen idols and girl groups, but by the early '60s their records were rocking anyway. As baby-boom babies became America's largest population group, the Beatles and other British Invasion bands fed back Little Richard and Chuck Berry and teen-idol pop to an eager audience, and rock took over pop.

During the '60s the music grouped and regrouped into an explosion of genres: folk rock, soul, Motown, psychedelic rock, hard rock, funk, blues rock, jazz rock, progressive rock, country rock, bubblegum. By the '70s, a split had been established between singles buyers (who listened to bouncy AM pop) and album buyers, as genres solidified and subdivided; the early '70s brought heavy metal, Southern rock, fusion, hard funk, singer/songwriters, and classical rock. As rock record buying peaked in the later '70s, disco and punk and reggae arose to reemphasize rhythm and energy, and in the '80s those styles—and all the rest—helped foster new wave, rap, and other genres yet unnamed. After all these years, rock is still wide open.

But one kind of tension shows up in every phase of rock. That's the tension between convention and rebellion—between familiarity and freedom. In the music itself musicians forge personal statements from a common "commercial" language; imitators become innovators because they can't help leaving fingerprints on the formula. Periodically, when genres become too familiar, new generations of rockers arrive with something tougher and simpler, shaking down the current convention. That tension makes rock an eternal hybrid, testing and absorbing and mutating new ideas as the public listens.

The music business also sees battles between tradition and insurgency, between a pop-star careerism it understands and a rock-rebel goal it doesn't. Rock has always been a collision—and a marriage—of minority culture and majority tastes; new ideas pop out of unlikely places to threaten, then merge with, the mainstream. Virtually every rock genre has come out of nowhere—amateur musicians, commerce that has always made rock so fascinating—that has magnificently honed some music and probably destroyed just as much—is bound to change, with unforeseen results.

One notion at the heart of rock & roll is that the right song with the right sound at the right time is a chance to use the mass media to send a private, even subversive message. The Internet, which has the pervasiveness of mass media but not the uniformity, could alter that ambition. Songwriters may no longer create or record with an eye to broadcasting to the world all at once. Instead, a song might work like an e-mail or a computer virus, spreading from person to person rather than from transmitter to receivers. Musicians may be content to reach a handful of fans, or they may be determined to be heard by huge numbers of people without corporate involvement. The typically steep and narrow career ladder—from local efforts to regional fame to a major-label shot at the big time—could turn into a labyrinth of do-it-yourself choices.

Habits so ingrained they once seemed like laws of nature are likely to crumble as online music reveals its own technological imperatives. One of those habits is treating the album as rock's artistic unit. The four-minute recording time of a 78 rpm disc still shapes our conception of how long a pop song should be. The length of an LP, and then a CD, trained both listeners and musicians to hear an album as a whole. And since the 1960s, most rock careers have been measured in albums, which appear every year or two in a regular cycle of recording and touring. Although singles remain pop's calling cards and sales tools, they're almost invariably attached to albums. This Encyclopedia, like its subjects, its writers, and most of its readers, is a product of the album era.

The Internet frees musicians from the need to assemble an album's worth of work at a time, convince a company to release it, then wait while it's manufactured, packaged, and distributed. Instead, musicians can make music available the moment it's finished. If they're willing to live with imperfections, they can offer songs in every stage from demo recording to full studio production, or let each fan assemble an individual version of a live album from an entire tour's worth of recordings. They can still compile full albums, but they can also release one-minute jingles or 90-minute jams. The technical limit to album length is now the capacity of a fan's computer storage: in essence, infinite. Or irrelevant.

The album had already been under siege through the 1990s. Music television and radio stations care about hit songs, not performers' careers, and recording companies have been increasingly impatient with musicians who don't have immediate commercial success. The 1990s were filled with one- or two-hit wonders who saturated the airwaves and then, all of a sudden, seemed to have worn out their welcome permanently, perhaps because they had released albums that surrounded a single or two with obvious filler.

Recording companies also made handsome profits from compilations and soundtrack albums that included hit singles but didn't build an identity for the musicians who made them. They trained listeners to hear the song, not the singer—a return, in a way, to the early years of rock & roll, when the hit song was the point and the album an afterthought. Meanwhile, Internet music swapping has encouraged listeners to chase down one song at a time, not to hear a batch of them in the order and context that a musician creates on an album.

So this Encyclopedia could be the summation of the album era, a chance to reconnoiter before the music turns back into a cottage industry and the Internet floodgates burst wide open. Not all the musicians in this book courted the mass market, but even the most unworldly and unprofitable of them had to deal with corporate priorities. That may change, and soon.

In the end, this is a book about individuals' geniuses and hustlers, virtuosos and amateurs, hooligans and do-gooders, hard workers and hangers-on, idealists and phonies. The stories of the musicians and groups here are unpredictable arcs in which inspiration conspires with entrepreneurship, musical skill allies itself with brilliant mistakes, naiveté faces off with cynicism, and listeners hijack finished songs to make them their own.

They are chronicles of friendships, romances, legal entanglements, and the mutable relationships between musicians, their work, and their audience. They are tales about the infinitely variable distance between artistic and commercial success, and about the rewards and the price of those successes. They are cautionary parables and claims of miracles.

Most of all, they testify to the ability of rock and hip-hop to invert all received notions: to create raunchy beauty, crude grace, and lowbrow brilliance. Just when pop seems predictable, when corporate moguls and cultural watchdogs think they've got everything under control, the only sure thing is that the music will shake things up.

Introduction

by Patricia Romanowski

This, the second revision of The ROLLING STONE Encyclopedia of Rock & Roll, brings up to date our last major revision, published in 1995. We began this project in 1980, when the editors of Rolling Stone Press set out to create an accurate guide to the people and phenomena of rock & roll. Since its original publication in 1983, the Encyclopedia has grown from the initial 1,300 entries to approximately 1,800 in 1995, to the nearly 2,000 contained herein. For the first time, the book is devoted entirely to the people who make the music.

Each of the alphabetically arranged entries provides basic biographical information and, where appropriate, a selective or full discography plus group personnel chronology showing as clearly as can be determined the history of personnel changes. This is followed by an essay that not only sums up the subjects' lives and careers but also attempts to place their work in critical and historical perspective.

Approach and Content. In compiling this edition we reviewed the 1,800-plus extant entries and opted to remove three categories of "nonartist" entries: the Grammy Award boxes, the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame boxes, and the entries that consisted of style and genre definitions. Given the rapidly evolving plethora of hyphenated subgenres, attempting to catalogue them all seemed an exercise in futility destined to be outdated upon publication. As a result, we had space to add more artists.

For this edition, we continued our policy of consolidating some artists who were originally listed as solo artists back into the groups with which they came to fame. So, for example, the last time out, we moved Eddie Kendricks and David Ruffin back to the Temptations entry, and Ronnie Spector's solo career is traced in the Ronettes. For this edition, we created a separate solo entry for Brian Setzer, under which we have included the Brian Setzer Orchestra. Because of space limitations, we have continued trying to place related artists and groups (for example, Pearl Jam, Temple of the Dog) under one general entry and been a little stingier than before in spinning group members off into their own solo entries. Extensive cross-referencing throughout will guide readers to the correct entry.

It was with great regret and hard consideration that we again cut entries (listed by title in the appendix and most still available online at RollingStone.com). There were many factors we considered in deciding which entries would be cut, but if there was a single "reason" for making cuts in general, it was simply space. When we decided on cuts, they usually were made to older artists whose impact on subsequent artists was not as dramatic as some of their contemporaries' or to newer artists for whom we had jumped the gun by including them earlier.

Choosing which new artists to include was a difficult decision that involved not only Holly George-Warren, Jon Pareles, and me but our writers and countless other acquaintances. Not surprisingly, each person we consulted—actually everyone we knew—had an opinion and a short list of favorites: hot new bands they were sure would make a big splash and older, unfairly neglected artists. While a third of our choices were obvious and a second third very nearly indisputable, a good third fell onto a list for which any of several other acts could have been chosen. Generally, however, artists who were critically or commercially successful, influential, or otherwise interesting for other, even nonmusical, reasons fared better than those who were not. Conversely, a few little-known artists were so unique they could not be ignored. Other times the inclusion of a given artist in a previous edition dictated making room for a newer artist in the same vein. Or the last edition's subtle overemphasis on certain types of artists and genres at the expense of others called for some balancing in this edition.

As for the length of any given entry, this really is one place—maybe the only place—where size does not matter. There is no reason for John Lennon's current entry to be longer than any of his fellow former Beatles' except that it took more words to tell his and Yoko Ono's story. A subject's so-called "importance" was considered with the same weight we gave other criteria: length of career, influence on other artists and listeners, uniqueness, newsworthy extramusical activities (lawsuits, arrests, benefit work, acting and writing credits, etc.), and the degree to which the subject was representative of a given style, period, or issue. One way in which this volume differs from previous editions is a more selective inclusion of information not directly related to the subject's musical career. When faced with choosing between the ability to add more entries or include more details about an aging rocker's fourth divorce, we opted for the music.

Our Sources. The incredible developments in how we create, access, and share information has changed—and improved—our ability to find the facts. For the last edition, it was the CD-drive anthologization of rock's recorded history that brought us not only some great, overlooked music, but pieces of history that either had passed unwritten or unrecorded. Thanks to anthologies and historic compilations, artists who had hung up their rock & roll shoes decades ago were suddenly back. Interestingly, the Internet revolution has continued that trend, giving listeners access to a greater variety of music than ever before. It has also given longevity to artists whose career paths diverged from the high-speed, high-stakes, roadkill-strewn superhighway to stardom. Ten years ago, the loss of a recording contract or lack of radio play or heavy rotation often spelled the loss of a viable career. No more. The Internet has given "fringe" artists a new way to share their music and allowed major-label veterans a way to continue the dialogue between artist and listener. In addition to music, the Internet has given researchers not only information—most of it quite good, since devoted fans tend to know more about an artist's career than anyone else—but access. In creating their own official Web sites, many artists have provided anyone interested with an insider's perspective, untainted by a journalistic "middleman."

For the purposes of researching and verifying the information here, the mainstream media continues to provide more and, in some cases, better coverage of music today than in the past. Not only are there more publications devoted to music but most of them are increasingly specialized, which, at least theoretically, should result in more accurate reporting. While this does not guarantee factual accuracy (or the ever-present PR concerns of artists and their employers), taken together these publications give researchers and writers a standard by which to judge an item's veracity. For example, while a string of reviews from local newspapers across the country can provide invaluable insight into a group's concert tour, revealing everything from lineup and playlists to audience response, for the correct spellings of musicians' names or the legal particulars of Marilyn Manson's skirmishes with local law enforcement on tour, we would favor accounts from respected, fact-checked national publications. Conversely, obituaries from local newspapers and specialized magazines are generally more complete and accurate than the "abridged" accounts that appear in larger publications. This is particularly true when the artist is less well known or past his or her career peak.

Our second edition was transformed and the entries it contained made more complete thanks to the rise in serious studies, autobiographies, and biographies of groups and individual artists. While few of these proved error-free, they made great contributions, if not by setting the record straight, at least by broadening our understanding of the subjects. Now they have been joined by cable television's steady stream of subject-friendly documentaries: Behind the Music, A&E Biography, and Headliners and Legends are just three of the series through which performers are rewriting their own stories.

Searchin'. These new waves of information have changed rock history, and for the better, I think. The view of rock and what it means was, until the past decade or so, largely the view of rock critics and what it meant to predominantly middle-class white-boy rock fans grown up. Through artist-dedicated Web pages, fans have brought the DIY ethic that revolutionized the music in the late '70s to history and criticism. Now that everyone is getting into the act, our conception of rock history—and thus of rock itself—changes from a series of snapshots to a richly textured, multihued tapestry of fresh ideas. Somewhere out there someone is writing from around a corner that regular music journalism rarely turns, making connections, arguing points, introducing or resurrecting some song, some fact, some artist, some passion that makes the music real to them.

As we move into the 21st Century, we are witnessing the first wave of artists who are destined to get old before they die. (And these days, even Pete Townshend in his joyously defiant way seems pretty pleased about that.) As they continue to work and to share their thoughts on their pasts, older artists also reshape our views. The Beatles Anthology video series and book are good examples of the power of artists to rekindle the imaginations of both longtime fans and new listeners in a way third-person accounts rarely do. Their revelations also provide a humbling reminder that all that is known at any moment is not necessarily all there is to know.

There is no artist's story that could not, with the next wave—the next book, the next interview, the next record, the next day—be suddenly recast and rewritten in triumph or in tragedy. The twists and turns of any artist's life can rarely be foreseen: just ask Tina Turner. In the last edition, we mentioned a few surprising developments—including Sonny Bono's election to Congress and Lisa Marie Presley's marriage to Michael Jackson. With this edition, we are rewriting those stories once again, sometimes sadly. At the same time, we are pondering developments that a decade ago would have sounded like Conan O'Brien predictions for the year 2000: Elvis Costello and Burt Bacharach? A Supreme reunion? Iggy Pop in a kids' movie? The Beatles at #1? Brian Wilson on tour? Prince becoming Prince again? A former Menudo dominating the charts? At this point, the only artist we would never count out or be surprised by is Cher.

Our Method. As we did in the previous editions, we collected information from a broad range of sources in all media: print (newspapers, magazines, books), video (documentaries as well as commercial releases), and CDs, LPs, and singles (as well as their accompanying liner notes). As mentioned before, the other major source this time out was the "official" or highly credible artist- and genre-dedicated Web pages. Again, we made several attempts at contacting each and every artist or group and/or their appointed press representative or manager. We invited those who were included in our previous edition to submit corrections of factual errors to their existing entries and to provide current information, which was then scrupulously fact-checked.

As always, we were very encouraged and happily surprised at the number of responses we received. For the most part, artists who took the time to answer us personally, via post, fax, e-mail, or telephone, graciously pointed out errors and offered verifiable corrections. It is important to note, however, that we refused to disclose the full contents of new or revised entries and did not offer artists the chance to review or approve their entries before publication. While fact-checkers, researchers, writers, and editors may have contacted an artist with specific questions, we never submitted to any artist or artist's representative the full, completed text of his or her entry for further comment.

Any artist or group that could not be traced through an Internet search of national newspapers and Web sites and a thorough review of current record charts and record catalogues, or that was not listed in any industry directory as having a manager, an agent, or other means of contact, and/or whose death could not be verified, was considered as having retired. The Encyclopedia never was intended to become a "Where are they now?" collection. However, the temptation to add what we learned of some artists' recent, nonmusical pursuits proved irresistible. For a small minority, however, an artist's name returned to the news only through tragedy or death.

For the artists covered in the new entries, we used these research hunts to collect all the information we needed. These facts were corroborated by other independent sources. In many ways these new entries show the benefit of documenting a piece of history as it happens, while the records are still available, the artists still living (and talking), and the trail still too hot to be overgrown with legend, hype, and rumor.

We kept all of the letters we received from readers after the second edition was published. In every instance, we researched readers' corrections and considered their comments. As it turned out, not all "corrections" were correct, but the approximately 20 percent that were proved invaluable. We like to think of The ROLLING STONE Encyclopedia of Rock & Roll as a living reference work. We remain open to and welcome all comments, suggestions, information, and corrections. Please address them to: Rolling Stone Press, Encyclopedia of Rock & Roll, 1290 Avenue of the Americas, New York, NY 10104.

That said, the history of rock & roll can never totally escape being the history of show business. Never before have artists' images been so painstakingly created and controlled. We have striven—gleefully at times—to scrape away the glitz and slow the spin. Even so, sometimes it is an artist himself who deliberately (and sometimes quite successfully) muddies the truth. When an artist retracts and/or denounces his own quotes and autobiography, writers recount interviews not recorded on paper or tape, and so-called reputable publications exempt their "arts" sections from the rigorous fact-checking standards they routinely apply to the front page, the results can be baffling. While in some areas no source is as valuable as the subject is, we made it a rule to approach "official" information with a healthy skepticism (which, by the way, continues to be very generously rewarded). We have been particularly tough on anyone who claims to be the first, the best, the only, or the latest anything.

In each case, we weighed our sources and our standard references (see later), taking into consideration the reliability of all. In many instances, the truth is quite clear. For our purposes, a chart position is a Billboard chart position or, for British charts, those listed in Guinness' British Hit Singles and British Hit Albums; a gold or platinum record is one so certified by the Recording Industry Association of America, an award is really an award if the organization bestowing it says so in its official publications, Web site, or press releases. Record release dates are based on the copyright date on the actual record or CD or, if that is not available, the date the record entered the charts, the dates of contemporaneous reviews and feature stories about it (usually from ROLLING STONE), or discographies that appear in reputable publications (such as Goldmine), reliable reference works (The ROLLING STONE Album Guide for example, or The Trouser Press Record Guide), Internet sources, and books (such as label histories, autobiographies, biographies). Accounts of other important events are based on a wide range of sources, and each source is usually corroborated by at least two other reliable sources.

As always, we encountered the usual problems with accurate birth dates, or I should say, some artists' birth dates. The first time out, in the early '80s, about 75 percent of our requests for a performer's date of birth were either refused, answered incompletely (day and month but no year), or answered in a way that proved misleading. We are very pleased to report that many artists whose birth dates were not entirely accurate in the first edition later volunteered corrections. (How interesting to note that they all "became" older.) Obviously, by the time the second edition came out, it was clear that the Encyclopedia was not going to disappear, and we were touched that so many artists cared enough about our mission to fess up and give us the real dates. Others, however, persist in blurring the truth. In cases where we have sufficient documentation to support another year, we have used it. Where the artist has either refused to offer any date or has given one that stretches credulity, we have calculated it from published accounts that mention the possible dates. Feel free to draw your own conclusions.

Discographies and Chronologies. Generally speaking, most of our discographies are selective, which is to say that we have edited them to give the reader a general picture of an artist or group's recorded history through the inclusion of important releases of original material (as opposed to greatest-hits packages, although we do list some of these selectively); releases that have special critical, commercial, or historical significance; and releases that have been deemed to be representative of the entire oeuvre. Most major artists and those first included in the 1995 edition are complete (except, of course, for those recordings released after this book goes to press). For artists and groups whose careers are considerably longer, the selective discography is almost a given. Before the late '60s, careers were based on singles, not albums. Ironically, however, many popular artists then released two, three, four, maybe even five albums a year. It's interesting to note that in 1964 and 1965 alone the Beatles released more albums than Madonna did in her first decade; Johnny Cash had eight charting LPs out (including some greatest hits and repackages) in 1969; in contrast, Michael Jackson built his entire post-Motown solo career over 22 years on five.

Decisions on what to keep and what to cut were made on a case-by-case basis. To cite one example, it was absolutely necessary that we list every single Beatles album of new original material, though we have not included most of the repackaged greatest-hits releases. In contrast, space alone prohibits listing the full discography of Johnny Cash, while lack of critical, historical, and commercial importance eliminated most of Chubby Checker's, and a paucity of verifiable information and/or product has rendered some doo-wop groups' discographies misleadingly short. Among those releases we have routinely omitted are soundtracks where the artist's input is minimal or not historically significant, Christmas albums, and those that did not chart within the Top 100 albums, as determined by Billboard. We omitted most of Elvis Presley's soundtrack releases (due to space considerations and because there was such a wealth of other significant albums to choose from), but we included a handful of extremely successful Christmas albums in other artists' discographies and included soundtracks where they are a crucial part of the artist's work (e.g., Quincy Jones, Tangerine Dream, Curtis Mayfield, Ry Cooder). In the case of group entries, some discographies end up being more complete than historically necessary because group personnel and lineup shifts occur around them, and it's simply easier to fix these changes to album releases than to provide a longer, more complicated explanation in the text. However, the order of facts in the Discographies/Chronologies for artists whose careers began after the mid-'80s will generally reflect the order of events, not who plays on what album.

Rather than be limited by hard-and-fast restrictions, we chose instead to try to craft for each entry a discography that worked with the narrative text to give a full picture of the artist or group, musically, historically, commercially, and critically. To that end, we have also not indicated differences in content between formats except where they are of interest beyond their existence, and then only in the text. Nor have we routinely included Internet-only releases or alternate foreign releases or alternate titles or information regarding dates and labels of reissued product except when the record was too important to cut and information regarding the original release was unavailable or seemed unreliable.

Although these discographies are based on LPs or their equivalents (we refer to both vinyl records and CDs as "albums" and "LPs"), where appropriate, we have also included a limited number of EPs (extended-play recordings), foreign releases (particularly British), and cassette-only releases. Because the Encyclopedia is concerned primarily with history, wherever possible the record label given is the one that the work was first released on in the United States. In the interest of saving space, record labels are noted in parentheses following the album title of the first release on that label listed. Thereafter, each album can be assumed to have been released on the same label until indicated otherwise by a new label name following a title. In those instances where foreign releases are included, the label is followed by an abbreviation for the country of release. Alternate formats (EP and cassette-only releases) are noted following the title, as is the word "soundtrack" where applicable. An "NA." in the place of the release date or the label signifies that the information was "not available" or impossible to verify with a reasonable degree of certainty.

How to Read These Entries. The artists' entries come in two basic forms: that for a solo artist and that for a group. The solo artist's entry begins with his or her name, followed by his or her given name (if appreciably different from his or her stage name), date of birth, place of birth, date of death, and place of death. Only in cases where there are discrepancies among highly reliable sources are two possibilities offered. This is followed by a discography.

The group entry begins with the group's date and place of formation, followed by a personnel chronology/discography that sets forth for each group member the same basic biographical information provided for solo artists, followed by that member's role in the band. Except for original lineups, all personnel shifts are listed as they occur chronologically in parentheses, with a plus sign (+) indicating an addition to the group and a minus (-) a departure.

The personnel chronology lists only those musicians who have recorded with the group or whose membership is clearly documented in published articles or press releases. Thus most guest or session musicians are not listed, although major ones are mentioned in the entry text. Where the discography is complete, the chronology indicates the approximate order of two main recurrent events in the life of a band: personnel changes and record releases. Generally speaking, the chronology of a successful, well-documented band that began recording in the late '60s will reveal which musicians appeared on a given album. One reason for this is many of those groups released albums frequently enough that there was little lag time between recording and release. Bearing in mind that there are exceptions to every rule, this same claim probably cannot be made as readily for less thoroughly covered acts, such as R&B and disco groups.

While we use album credits as a source of information, there are a number of compelling reasons why following these credits strictly and exclusively would distort the order of events. For one thing, there are many groups for whom personnel listings are incomplete or nonexistent. Second, it is typical for years to elapse between the recording of a given song and its release as a single or on an album. During that time, key personnel events, including deaths, may have occurred. Third, it is more common now than ever to repackage recordings, so that a single album may contain songs recorded by any number of previous lineup configurations (imagine tackling the personnel on a Frank Zappa or Jefferson Airplane/Starship retrospective).

How the chronologies were handled was largely determined by the amount and quality of information available and the group itself. It is an arduous but relatively simple task to construct a chronology for, say, Fleetwood Mac, a group with many widely documented changes over the course of relatively few albums. It is as good as impossible, however, to accurately and fully list the name of every singer who ever appeared with the Drifters. Some groups have endured for decades, yet their true historical significance is restricted to a finite period in time. For these, we have indicated "original lineup" or "best-known lineup." In cases where the space necessary to recount a group's complete chronology was in inverse proportion to its significance, or where a group has developed into the musical equivalent of a temporary employment agency, we have indicated "numerous personnel changes follow," or words to that effect. There are also a handful of cases where only one or several versions of a long-lived group could be determined; there we indicate "lineup ca. late '60s" or "lineup ca. 1994." Regardless of how complete the discography/chronology section is, it is not intended to replace the discussion of these events in the body of the text. We use this abbreviated format simply because it provides a great amount of information in a small amount of space, makes it easy to see at a glance the basic order of events, saves the basic biographical information from being buried in the text, and gives the writer the option of not having to list in the text releases and personnel changes about which there may not be too much to say at the expense of other, more important occurrences. Virtually all discography and personnel listings are current through spring 2001, though we have continued to include major updates for selected entries through summer 2001.

The Charts. As in the Encyclopedia's first edition, chart positions are based on those published weekly in Billboard and compiled and published in Joel Whitburn's series of Record Research books. Record Research books are the bible of U.S. chart, label, and title information, and no serious rock fan should be without at least one of these scrupulously researched and dependable tomes. Fortunately, many of these are now available to the general public in bookstores. A wider variety of more specialized titles is available from Record Research Inc., P.O. Box 200, Menomonee Falls, WI 53052-0200; 262-251-5408; www.recordresearch.com

One of the most profound changes in popular music has been the continuing "subgenre-fiction" of styles. Today Billboard tracks record sales, radio airplay, and club play through more than 30 different charts. For our purposes, we are mainly concerned with the singles and LP charts in three different categories: pop, R&B (rhythm & blues), and C&W (country & western). Through the years, Billboard has refined its methods of compiling its charts, most notably in 1991 when it incorporated actual record sales figures and changed the charts' titles to best reflect the current market.

Unless indicated otherwise, every chart position included here should be assumed to be U.S. pop, derived from the "Hot 100" (established in August 1958) for singles, and the "Billboard 200" for albums. "R&B" and "C&W" follow positions from the rhythm & blues and country & western charts or their equivalents. The official chart titles in all three genres, and on all six charts, have changed periodically. For example, through the years the official title of what we consider the R&B singles chart has evolved from "Race Records" in 1945, to "Rhythm & Blues Records" in 1949, to "Hot Soul Singles" in 1973 and "Hot Black Singles" in 1981, before changing to "Hot R&B Singles" in 1990. (In fact, for a period between November 1963 and January 1965, there were no R&B singles charts, and from August to early October 1972, no R&B LPs chart.) In this book, all of these positions are categorized as R&B. In our discussions of music, however, we do make stylistic distinctions between R&B, soul, rap, hip-hop, and black music, although any charting records within these genres would be charted under "R&B." The country charts, which debuted in 1944, contained "C&W" in their titles only between 1949 and 1962; since then, it's been just country, and we use the terms "country" and "C&W" interchangeably.

Discussions of a record's showing on other charts, such as jazz, modern rock, world music, adult contemporary, or New Age, is limited. Where necessary, we have included some British chart positions. These are denoted by "U.K." and apply to pop singles or albums only.

In every instance, the chart position shown is the highest attained by that recording. The year that follows the position is, in almost all cases, the year it debuted on the chart. Discrepancies may arise for those singles for which Record Research's Top Pop Artists & Singles, 1955-1978 was the main source. For that book, the year given was that in which the record reached its peak, or highest, position. Then it is only a problem in those instances where a record was released at year's end but did not chart until early the next year. In updating the material carried over from the first edition, we have made every effort to revise the chart positions to reflect the "debut" as opposed to the "peak" year. Because a record's natural commercial life cycle is typically short and its fate rendered in mere weeks, the year of debut and the year of peak are usually the same.

Discographies and Chronologies. Generally speaking, most of our discographies are selective, which is to say that we have edited them to give the reader a general picture of an artist or group's recorded history through the inclusion of important releases of original material (as opposed to greatest-hits packages, although we do list some of these selectively); releases that have special critical, commercial, or historical significance; and releases that have been deemed to be representative of the entire oeuvre. Most major artists and those first included in the 1995 edition are complete (except, of course, for those recordings released after this book goes to press). For artists and groups whose careers are considerably longer, the selective discography is almost a given. Before the late '60s, careers were based on singles, not albums. Ironically, however, many popular artists then released two, three, four, maybe even five albums a year. It's interesting to note that in 1964 and 1965 alone the Beatles released more albums than Madonna did in her first decade; Johnny Cash had eight charting LPs out (including some greatest hits and repackages) in 1969; in contrast, Michael Jackson built his entire post-Motown solo career over 22 years on five.

Decisions on what to keep and what to cut were made on a case-by-case basis. To cite one example, it was absolutely necessary that we list every single Beatles album of new original material, though we have not included most of the repackaged greatest-hits releases. In contrast, space alone prohibits listing the full discography of Johnny Cash, while lack of critical, historical, and commercial importance eliminated most of Chubby Checker's, and a paucity of verifiable information and/or product has rendered some doo-wop groups' discographies misleadingly short. Perspective. All that explains how we traced, collected, sifted, and verified our information. Here I'll try to give some idea of how we determined what to do with it.

The ROLLING STONE Encyclopedia of Rock & Roll is a reference work—not a history, not a consumer guide, not an alphabetized collection of critics' musings. The hardest part of this job for all of us was not only consciously putting aside our personal opinions but deliberately separating the prevailing critical line from the facts. For better or worse, however, sometimes it's the historical backdrop and the facts that dictate the critical line, and not the other way around.

As the deservedly esteemed music historian Peter Guralnick advised me nearly 20 years ago, "It isn't necessary to have an opinion about everything." To most hard-core music fans, that may seem unthinkable, but I think he's right. History is not a story that has been told but a story that bears retelling from many different points of view. After rocking this baby for 20 years, I have witnessed the revolutions within the revolution that is rock. Every couple of years brings forth a new generation of listeners, another wave to hear the music and claim it as their own. That might make you feel older, but it can also make you feel somewhat wiser, too. Some of us know that one day Ricky's skintight leather pants, Sean Combs' phat furs, and Marilyn Manson's trash-cum-glam gear will look every bit as fabulous and silly as the same duds once worn by the Lizard King, vintage Shaft-era Isaac Hayes, and Alice Cooper in his ingenu days. We may hear the traces of an older, even forgotten artist in the "latest" sound, or see more clearly through the transparent aping that some pass off as "inspiration" and find the real thing. We can save ourselves exasperation over the latest wave of teen groups, for example, because we know what, historically, fate probably has in store for them. We can recognize that snippet of "Pink Moon" in a car commercial and know that not even a voice as obscure as Nick Drake's will be lost for long.

Since this is probably the last edition of the Encyclopedia for me, I want to thank all of the editors, writers, researchers, and fact-checkers who have contributed to this since the beginning, particularly my wonderful friend Holly George-Warren. All of these people were incredibly passionate and highly opinionated. And yet they put that aside to answer what I think of as this "higher calling." Speaking as someone who in nearly 30 years still has not entirely recovered from the realization that people actually like the Eagles and does not understand why Laura Nyro is not a household name, I know how hard it is to ignore the writer's and editor's reflexive need to be "right" (although we strive to always be accurate) and to allow even the most familiar stories to tell us how to tell them. That has meant listening anew, allowing for possibilities and improbabilities, and seeing every artist and every record not as we might see them today but within their original contexts, on their own terms, in their own times. In a field where great music, even whole careers, were sparked by hearing a single two-minute-long recording—perhaps even one made 75 years before by someone from the other side of the world—nothing can be discounted. Rock & roll is always unpredictable, improbable, impossible. And yet it stands.

No matter where they came from, the genre they worked in, or how well they fared, every artist here is someone who believed he or she had something to say and had the guts to get up and say it. For that alone, these artists demand and deserve attention and respect. Whether it was worth saying or hearing is almost beside the point. After all, who knows? We cannot determine whether Kiss, or Fabian, or Eminem "deserved" to be heard; we can only tell you what happened once they were.

And that's the story of rock & roll. Whether the revolutions come at 45 per minute or at the speed of light, it's never going to slow down or stop. Best of all, it's your story, too. Read on.

Formed 1971, Sweden

Benny Andersson (b. Dec. 16, 1946, Stockholm, Swe.), kybds., synth., voc.; Bjorn Ulvaeus (b. Apr. 25, 1945, Gothenburg, Swe.), gtr., voc.; Agnetha "Anna" Fältskog (previously Ulvaeus; b. Apr. 5, 1950, Jönköping, Swe.), voc.; Anni-Frid "Frida" Synni-Lyngstad-Fredriksson-Andersson (b. Nov. 15, 1945, Narvik, Nor.), voc. 1974—Waterloo (Atlantic) 1975—Abba 1976—Greatest Hits, vol. 1; Arrival 1977—The Album 1979—Voulez-Vous; Greatest Hits, vol. 2 1980—Super Trouper 1981—The Visitors 1982—Abba, The Singles, The First Ten Years 1984—I Love Abba 1986—Abba Live 1995—Thank You for the Music (A&M).

Anni-Frid "Frida" Lyngstad-Fredriksson-Andersson solo: 1982—Something's Going On (Atlantic) 1984—Shine.

Agnetha Fältskog solo: 1983—Wrap Your Arms Around Me (Atlantic) 1985—Eyes of a Woman (Epic) 1987—I Stand Alone (Atlantic).

Easily the most commercially successful group of the '70s, Abba became the focus of a revival in the early '90s, when its Abba Gold topped charts around the world. Abba's wholesome image and buoyant, catchy records made the group international pop stars (Nelson Mandela once declared Abba his favorite pop group) and the second most profitable corporation on the Stockholm stock exchange. Ironically, it was their massive financial success that, according to group members, led to the death and kidnapping threats that prompted their disbanding in 1982.

Though Bjorn Ulvaeus and Benny Andersson's hook-laden singles ("Fernando" and "Money, Money, Money," 1976, "Knowing Me, Knowing You," 1977) often topped European charts, U.S. success was limited to several hit albums and three Top 10 singles. "Waterloo" (#6, 1974), "Dancing Queen" (#1, 1977), and "Take a Chance on Me" (#3, 1978).

Each member was a solo star in Sweden before Abba (an acronym of their first initials) coalesced in 1973. "Waterloo" won the prestigious Eurovision Song Contest in 1974, a year after they began recording in English. Abba tours were limited initially because of the difficulty of re-creating the group's densely layered, richly produced sound live. Nevertheless, Abba mounted its first international tour in 1977 and appeared in the U.S. two years later. Longtime live-in lovers Benny and Anni-Frid (who both have children from teenage marriages) were wed in 1978; they divorced in 1981. Two years earlier, Bjorn and Agnetha's marriage of six years had also ended in divorce. Abba's public image, however, remained harmonious. By then the group had sold an estimated 100 million records worldwide. In 1982 Phil Collins produced Frida's post-Abba solo debut, Something's Going On, which featured "I Know There's Something Going On," a Top 20 hit. In 1985 her duet with B.A. Robertson, "Time" was a minor U.K. hit. Andersson and Ulvaeus cowrote with British lyricist Tim Rice the London and Broadway musical Chess, from which "One Night in Bangkok" became a #3 hit for Murray Head in 1985. Agnetha "Anna" Fältskog has also released solo albums and had several minor U.K. hits; her "Can't Shake Loose" hit #29 in 1983.

In more recent years, Abba's enduring appeal has manifested itself in the Australian Abba impersonators Bjorn Again, Erasure's #1 U.K. cover EP Abba-esque, and the A*Teens, four Stockholm-based singing and dancing youngsters who deal in pimple-pop updates of Bjorn and Benny's most beloved material. Featuring 22 Abba songs, Mamma Mia!, created by Andersson and Ulvaeus, became a hit musical in London in 1999, reaching the States in 2001.

ABC

Martin Fry (b. Mar. 9, 1958, Manchester, Eng.), voc.; Mark White (b. Apr. 1, 1961, Sheffield), gtr., kybds.; Mark Lickley, bass; David Robinson, drums; Stephen Singleton (b. Apr. 17, 1959, Sheffield), sax.

1980—(– Lickley; – Robinson; + David Palmer [b. May 29, 1961, Chesterfield, Eng.], drums) 1982—The Lexicon of Love (Mercury) 1983—Beauty Stab (– Singleton; – Palmer; + Eden, voc., perc; + David Yarritu, kybds., synth.) 1985—How to Be a . . . Zillionaire! 1987—Alphabet City 1989—Up 1990—Absolutely 1996—(– White) 1997—(+ various musicians) Skyscraping (Deconstruction, U.K.) 1999—Lexicon of Live (Blatant, U.K.).

Hailed by the British music press as "purveyors of perfect pop," ABC was actually a highly self-conscious white neosoul group that articulated singer Martin Fry's grandiloquent vision. His mannered vocals recall "Thin White Duke"—era David Bowie, and his songs of romance revisit the worldly fatalism of Roxy Music's Bryan Ferry.

Fry was writing and editing his own music fanzine, Modern Drugs, when he interviewed White and Singleton about their electric rock band, Vice Versa. They asked Fry to join them, and he did—changing the group's name to ABC and its direction toward pop. Completed by a rhythm section, the group recorded "Tears Are Not Enough" and released it on their own Neutron Records. A British Top 20 hit in 1981, it was followed over the next six months by three more crafty, melodramatic Top 10 hits—"Poison Arrow," "The Look of Love," and "All of My Heart"—from the lavish Trevor Horn-produced Lexicon of Love. Released stateside, the album garnered rave reviews and sold well (#24, 1982); bolstered by lush, evocative videos, "The Look of Love" (#18, 1982) and "Poison Arrow" (#25, 1983) were hit singles, too.

ABC lost most of its U.S. fans with Beauty Stab (#69, 1983), a harsher, harder-rocking, guitar-based collection that contained only one charting single: "That Was Then but This Is Now" (#89, 1984). With female percussionist Eden and American keyboardist David Yarritu replacing David Palmer and Stephen Singleton, ABC adopted a cartoonish image and rebounded with Zillionaire (#30, 1985), which yielded the yearning pop ballad "Be Near Me" (#9, 1985) and another hit in "(How to Be a) Millionaire" (#20, 1986).

Shortly thereafter, Fry was diagnosed with non-Hodgkin's lymphoma. ABC was off the scene until Alphabet City (#48, 1987), which featured the group's biggest hit to date, the Motown tribute "When Smokey Sings" (#5, 1987). Fry dropped out of the music business after the release of Up. He made a full recovery from his illness and, by 1997, was back onstage. A new edition of ABC, with Fry the sole remaining original member, recorded two British releases—Skyscraping and the live album Lexicon of Live—and toured the U.S. in 1999.

Born June 19, 1962, Los Angeles, CA

1988—Forever Your Girl (Virgin) 1990—Shut Up and Dance (The Dance Mixes) 1991—Spellbound 1995—Head Over Heels 1998—Greatest (Virgin, U.K.) 2000—Greatest Hits (Virgin).

A true MTV-era success story, Paula Abdul choreographed videos for several popular artists before becoming a pop star herself. Trained as a dancer, Abdul had had little singing experience before recording 1988's Forever Your Girl, and her vocals were widely panned. Nonetheless, the album sold 7 million copies domestically, thanks to catchy hooks, perky bubblegum-funk arrangements, and glossy videos that displayed Abdul's true strengths: her stylish, high-energy dance technique and plucky girl-next-door charm.

The second daughter of a French-Canadian mother and a father of Syrian and Brazilian extraction, Abdul began taking dance lessons when she was seven; at 10, she won a scholarship to study tap and jazz dancing. She captained her high school cheerleading squad, and while attending California State, Northridge, joined the Los Angeles Lakers' cheerleaders; she eventually became head Laker girl. Her work was spotted by Jackie Jackson (with whom she later became romantically involved), who asked her to choreograph the Jacksons' 1984 "Torture" video. She also befriended sister Janet Jackson and choreographed all of her Control videos (she makes a cameo as Janet's girlfriend in "Nasty"). Abdul's other clients have included the Pointer Sisters, ZZ Top, and Duran Duran, and she has choreographed for television (The Tracey Ullman Show) and films, most notably The Doors and American Beauty.

In the late '80s Abdul signed to Virgin Records. The release of her debut album followed auspiciously on the heels of "Knocked Out," a single that Abdul recorded for a Virgin sampler. That song became popular on R&B radio, but with Forever Your Girl, Abdul immediately crossed over into the pop stratosphere, topping the albums chart and producing four #1 singles: 1988's "Straight Up" and, in 1989, "Forever Your Girl," "Cold Hearted," and "Opposites Attract" (with the Wild Pair). Another track, "(It's Just) the Way That You Love Me," went to #3.

Virgin capitalized on Abdul's success by releasing an album of dance remixes of her hit songs in 1990. In 1991 she released Spellbound, an LP of new songs—some of them cowritten by Abdul, many written and produced by the New York-based R&B trio the Family Stand (Other contributors included John Hiatt and Prince.) The album peaked at #1 and spawned the #1 singles "Rush, Rush" (Abdul's first hit ballad) and "The Promise of a New Day," "Blowing Kisses in the Wind" (#6, 1991), "Vibeology" (#16, 1992), and "Will You Marry Me" (#19, 1992). But legal troubles ensued when Yvette Marine, credited as a backup singer on Forever Your Girl, sued Virgin, alleging that her voice had been overdubbed on some of the album's lead vocals. In 1993, a jury ruled in Virgin's favor. Head Over Heels peaked at #18 on the pop album chart and included "My Love Is for Real" (#28, 1995), which featured backing vocals by Ofra Haza. In the mid- to late '90s Abdul delved into acting, segueing from cameos playing herself on episodes of sitcoms to starring roles in TV movies.

Australian heavy-metal band AC/DC features knickers-clad guitarist Angus Young, who became as famous for mooning audiences regularly as for his gritty blues-based lead guitar and songs about sex, drinking, and damnation. AC/DC's raucous image, constant touring, and raw, juvenile yet amusing lyrics in songs like "Big Balls" and "The Jack" helped make it one of the top hard-rock bands in history. The group has remained a major concert draw, and its albums consistently go platinum despite its never having had a Top 20 single in the U.S.

The Young brothers moved with their family from Scotland to Sydney in 1963. In 1973 they formed the first version of AC/DC, adding vocalist Bon Scott in early 1974, followed by drummer Phillip Rudd and bassist Mark Evans later that year. Their first four albums were produced by ex-Easybeats Harry Vanda and George Young, Angus' older brother. The group had gained a solid reputation in their homeland early on, but it wasn't until 1979 with the platinum Highway to Hell (#17, 1979) that they became a presence on the American charts.

Within months of AC/DC's American success, vocalist Scott died from choking on his own vomit after an all-night drinking binge. Two months later he was replaced by ex-Geordie vocalist Brian Johnson, and less than four months after that, Back in Black began a yearlong run on the U.S. chart, peaking at #4 (1980), selling over 13 million copies to date, and featuring the double-entendre-titled "You Shook Me All Night Long." Dirty Deeds Done Dirt Cheap, a 1981 reissue of a 1976 Australian LP, went to #3 in the U.S., followed by For Those About to Rock We Salute You, the group's first and, to date, only U.S. #1 LP, in late 1981. The less spectacular showings of the gold albums Flick of the Switch (#15, 1983) and Fly on the Wall (#32, 1985) gave way to the multiplatinum Who Made Who (the soundtrack to Maximum Overdrive) and The Razors Edge (#2, 1990). The latter contains the group's closest thing to a hit single, "Moneytalks" (#23, 1991). In January 1991 three fans were crushed to death at an AC/DC show in Salt Lake City, Utah. In late 1992, the group paid the families of the three deceased teenagers an undisclosed sum, following an out-of-court settlement. Other parties to the settlement included the convention center, the concert's promoter, and the company in charge of security.

AC/DC laid low until 1995, when the Rick Rubin-produced Ballbreaker (which also marked the return of drummer Phil Rudd) entered the charts at #4. The bulk of the 5-CD box set Bonfire, released in 1997, was made up of live tracks recorded in 1977 and 1979, as well as of a remastered version of Back in Black. It marked the first time AC/DC had released material featuring Bon Scott since the singer's death. With older brother George Young (who had worked on such early AC/DC albums as Let There Be Rock and Powerage) back on board as producer, Stiff Upper Lip (#7, 2000) confirmed AC/DC's status as one of the most enduringly popular hard-rock bands on the planet. Wisely sticking to its time-tested formula of no-frills riffing, the band followed the record's release with extensive touring, during which Angus Young wore, as always, a schoolboy uniform. (That outfit has become such a part of rock legend that it was included in Rock Style, an exhibit at New York's Metropolitan Museum of Art, which opened in 1999.) Always a reliable live act, AC/DC once more brought out the big guns—literally, since the band's stage act included cannons that went off during "For Those About to Rock (We Salute You)."

Ace/Paul Carrack

Formed 1972, London, Eng.

Alan "Bam" King (b. Sep. 1946, London), gr., voc.; Phil Harris (b. July 1948, London), gr.; Paul Carrack (b. Apr. 1951, Sheffield, Eng.), kybds., voc.; Terry "Tex" Comer (b. Feb. 1949, Burnley, Eng.), bass; Steve Witherington, drums.
 1974—(– Witherington; + Chico Greenwood, drums; – Greenwood; + Fran Byrne [b. Mar. 1948, Dublin, Ire.], drums) Five-A-Side (Anchor) 1975—Time for Another (– Harris; + Jon

Paul Carrack solo: 1980—Nightbird (Vertigo, U.K.) 1982—Suburban Voodoo (Epic) 1987—One Good Reason (Chrysalis) 1988—The Carrack Collection 1989—Groove Approved 1996—Blue Views (Ark 21) 1997—Beautiful World 2000—Satisfy My Soul (Compass).

Ace became the best known of London's pub-rock bands when "How Long," written and sung by Paul Carrack, became a #3 U.S. hit in 1975. The group had been founded by Alan King and Phil Harns, and "How Long" was a product of its first recording session. What many listeners believed was a love song actually concerned Terry Comer's temporary departure from the band to work with the Sutherland Brothers and Quiver and his return to Ace. The rest of the group's material failed to match the success of the debut single, and after a 1976 tour with Yes, the group resettled in L.A. and in 1977 disbanded. Carrack, Byrne, and Comer joined Frank Miller.

Carrack later recorded with Roxy Music, Squeeze (he sings lead on its 1981 hit "Tempted") [see entry], and a short-lived backup band for Carlene Carter. In 1982 he joined Nick Lowe's Noise to Go, and in 1985, Mike + the Mechanics, for which he sang lead on the latter group's Top 10 "Silent Running (On Dangerous Ground)" and on the #1 "Living Years" [see Genesis entry]. In 1987 Carrack's "Don't Shed a Tear" went Top 10. He rejoined Squeeze for its 1993 album, Some Fantastic Place, then returned to Mike + the Mechanics for 1995's Beggar on a Beach of Gold. In 1997 Carrack finally resumed his solo career with Blue Views, which featured the #2 adult-contemporary hit "For Once in Our Lives." His subsequent albums continue to explore his signature brand of blue-eyed soul pop.

Johnny Ace

1974—Johnny Ace Memorial Album (MCA).

Johnny Ace was one of the most popular balladeers of the early '50s but is perhaps most famous for the way he died: He allegedly shot himself while playing Russian roulette. Ace served in the navy during World War II. After his discharge he joined Adolph Duncan's Band as a pianist, he often jammed with B.B. King and Bobby "Blue" Bland in Memphis' famed Beale Streeters. In 1953 he released his first single, "My Song," which became a big R&B hit. Like his subsequent releases, it featured his soothing baritone in a subdued arrangement similar to the style of Nat "King" Cole.

On Christmas Eve 1954 Ace died backstage at Houston's City Auditorium. In recent years some familiar with the details of Ace's death have questioned whether it might have been a murder. One of his biggest pop successes came with the posthumously released Top 20 hit "Pledging My Love" in early 1955. In 1983 Paul Simon invoked the singer's name in "The Late Great Johnny Ace," a song about the assassination of John Lennon.

Roy Acuff

Born Roy Claxton Acuff, Sep. 13 or 15, 1903, Maynardville, TN; died Nov. 23, 1992, Nashville, TN
1966—Roy Acuff Sings Hank Williams (Hickory) 1970—Best of Roy Acuff (Capitol); The Great Roy Acuff; Songs of the Smoky Mountains; The Voice of Country Music; Roy Acuff: Columbia Historic Edition (Columbia) 1989—The Best of Roy Acuff (orig. 1963; Capitol) 1992—The Essential Roy Acuff 1936–1949 (Legacy).

Singer, songwriter, fiddler, bandleader, music publisher, show-business booster, Roy Acuff was the "King of Country Music" for over 50 years, and continued to perform regularly at the Grand Ole Opry until shortly before his death at the age of 89.

As a teenager he suffered a sunstroke, which prevented him from realizing his ambition to play pro baseball. He took up the fiddle and later joined a traveling medicine show that was passing through his Tennessee mountain hometown—only after he had been assured that he'd work only after sundown. In medicine and tent shows traversing the South he perfected an act that included old-time string-band music, hymns, a few popular contemporary songs, and comedy routines (he was known for the yo-yo he played with onstage). In 1933 he formed the Tennessee Crackerjacks, with whom he performed on Knoxville radio. The next year, the group became the Crazy Tennesseans, and in 1936 they began recording. That same year Acuff recorded his two best-known hits, "Great Speckled Bird" (a million-selling record in 1943) and "Wabash Cannonball."

In 1938 he changed the group's name to the Smoky Mountain Boys. Acuff and the Boys began appearing regularly at Nashville's Grand Ole Opry, and Acuff became one of the Opry's first solo stars. His dry, high-pitched voice became familiar on such hits as "Night Train to Memphis," "Fire Ball Mail," and "Wreck on the Highway." His career sales total exceeds 25 million records. He also appeared in several feature films through the '40s, including The Grand Ole Opry.

In 1942 Acuff formed the Acuff-Rose Music Publishing Company with songwriter Fred Rose. Though Acuff continued to record, his success as a music publisher eclipsed that of his later recording career. Acuff-Rose eventually became one of the biggest country music publishing companies in the world, and in the process Acuff and Rose were mentors to many of Nashville's most successful songwriters and performers (Hank Williams, Marty Robbins, Boudleaux Bryant, and others). Such was Acuff's popularity and influence that in 1944 and 1948 he ran for the governorship of Tennessee. He continued to appear at the Opry and traveled the world to entertain troops during both World War II and the Vietnam War.

In 1962 he became the first living musician elected to the Country Music Hall of Fame Among his many honors were the Grammy Lifetime Achievement Award (1987) and the National Medal of Art and the Kennedy Lifetime Achievement Award (both 1991). He recorded his last single in 1974. In 1971 his version of "I Saw the Light" from the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band's Will the Circle Be Unbroken became his last charting single. In 1983 he moved into a home that was especially constructed for him on the grounds of the Opryland USA amusement park. He died of congestive heart failure.

Adam and the Ants/Adam Ant

1978—first recorded lineup: Adam Ant (b. Stuart Goddard, Nov. 3, 1954, London), voc., gtr., piano; David Barbe (a.k.a.

Barbarossa, b. Eng.), drums, perc.; Matthew Ashman (b. 1960, London; d. Nov. 21, 1995, London), gtr., piano; Andrew Warren (b. Eng.), bass.

Adam Ant solo: 1982—Friend or Foe (Epic) 1983—Vive Le Rock 1988—Manners & Physique (MCA) 1995—Wonderful (Capitol).

The undisputed leaders of Britain's short-lived, fantasy-oriented New Romantic movement of the early '80s, Adam and the Ants were less well appreciated stateside. Using their music as only one facet of an imaginary world, complete with self-promoting mottos like "Antmusic for Sexpeople" and their own vocabulary (ians were Antpeople), these cheeky swashbucklers took England by storm. Late in 1980, foppish postpunkers began to imitate Adam's fashion sense, which combined cartoonish hero images of pirates, Western men, and Native Americans. His unusual music, which featured double-drum rhythms from Burundi and yodeling vocals, produced several British pop singles, including "Ant Music" (#2) and "Dog Eat Dog" (#4) and a #1 LP, Kings of the Wild Frontier.

Ant, who had played in various bands since 1976, first came to national attention under the auspices of ex-Sex Pistols manager Malcolm McLaren, who worked on the Ants' debut LP, Dirk Wears White Sox (unreleased in the U.S. until 1983). McLaren left in 1980, taking with him Gorman and Barbe, and adding Ashman to form Bow Wow Wow (see entry). Ant teamed up with ex-Rema Rema guitarist Marco Pirroni, who had played one gig with Siouxsie and the Banshees in 1976. The pair developed the Antpeople image that imbued the songs on Kings of the Wild Frontier, the group's U.S. debut. Despite extensive media coverage and a well-publicized American tour, the album sold a disappointing 300,000 copies. In November 1981 Prince Charming, which was recorded with ex-Roxy Music bassist Gary Tibbs, spent over six months on the British charts, but failed to become a U.S. hit.

The Ants disbanded in 1982. Adam's debut solo effort, a single entitled "Goody Two Shoes," peaked at #1 in England and reached #12 in the U.S., making Friend or Foe a Top 20 album. None of his succeeding LPs fared as well, although Manners & Physique (produced by former Prince cohort André Cymone) boasted "Room at the Top" (#17, 1990). Adam has also pursued acting; his credits include the films World Gone Wild and Slam Dance, along with television's The Equalizer and Northern Exposure. Following a 1993 comeback tour, Ant made several guest live appearances with Nine Inch Nails. This activity predated the modest success of 1995's Wonderful, the adult-alternative title track of which peaked at #39 on the U.S. singles chart.

Born Bryan Guy Adams, Nov. 5, 1959, Kingston, Can.

1980—Bryan Adams (A&M) 1981—You Want It, You Got It 1983—Cuts Like a Knife 1984—Reckless 1986—Live! Live! Live! (A&M, Jap.) 1987—Into the Fire (A&M) 1991—Waking Up the Neighbours 1993—So Far So Good 1996—18 til I Die 1997—MTV Unplugged 1998—On a Day Like Today 1999—The Best of Me (A&M/Universal, Can.).

With his trademark white T-shirt and blue jeans, Bryan Adams may have looked like a regular guy. But his unerring gift for radio-friendly pop hooks made him the most successful artist exported from Canada in the '80s. Even as critics dismissed his straightforward, anthemic rock as a shallow formulaization of Bruce Springsteen, Adams' work received multiple Juno and Grammy awards, as well as three Oscar nominations.

Adams' father was a Canadian diplomat, and Adams attended military schools in England, Austria, Portugal, and Israel. When he was 12 his parents separated, and he lived with his mother in Vancouver, British Columbia. By then he had taught himself to play guitar and decided to make music his career. At 16, he quit school, bought a grand piano with money from his college fund, and joined bands. At age 17 he befriended Jim Vallance, who had written songs for the Canadian band Prism. After two years of writing and recording demo tapes, their partnership produced the 1979 disco-styled Canadian single "Let Me Take You Dancing." The pair sold songs to Bachman-Turner Overdrive, Joe Cocker, and Juice Newton, then landed a publishing deal with A&M Records, which led to Adams' recording contract.

Adams' eponymously titled debut album stiffer, but the followup, You Want It, You Got It (#118, 1982), fared better, and Adams opened shows for such bands as the Kinks, Foreigner, and Loverboy. Cuts Like a Knife (#8, 1983) was Adams' U.S. breakthrough, producing hits in "Straight From the Heart" (#10, 1983), the title cut (#15, 1983), and "This Time" (#24, 1983); the latter two were accompanied by popular eye-catching videos. Reckless (#1, 1984) was even bigger, selling over 5 million copies and yielding such hits as "Run to You" (#6, 1984), "Somebody" (#11, 1985), and "Summer of '69" (#5, 1985), Adams' first hit ballad in "Heaven" (#1, 1985), and "It's Only Love" (#15, 1985), a duet with Tina Turner (with whom Adams toured, and for whom he produced a track on her 1986 Break Every Rule). Adams appeared at Live Aid in Philadelphia in 1985, and in 1986 he performed on Amnesty International's Conspiracy of Hope Tour with Sting and U2.

His Into the Fire yielded hits in "Heat of the Night" (#6, 1987), "Hearts of Fire" (#26, 1987), and "Victim of Love" (#32, 1987). Adams refused to allow the use of the album's "Only the Strong Survive" in the Tom Cruise film Top Gun because he felt the movie glorified war.

After performing at the 1988 Freedomfest in London to honor freed South African apartheid fighter Nelson Mandela, Adams began work on Waking Up the Neighbours. Meanwhile, Joe Cocker recorded Adams' "When the Night Comes," and Dion recorded his "Drive All Night." Adams had a quick cameo in the 1989 Clint Eastwood film Pink Cadillac and performed at Roger Waters' 1990 Berlin production of The Wall. The release of Waking Up the Neighbours (#6, 1991) was preceded by the appearance of "(Everything I Do) I Do It for You" under the credits of the Kevin Costner film Robin Hood—Prince of Thieves. The ballad was an instant smash, topping the U.S. pop chart for seven weeks and the U.K. chart for a record-breaking 16 weeks, as well as scoring an Oscar nomination. In February 1992 Adams took issue with his homeland's "Canadian Content" regulations, which restricted airplay of Neighbours because Adams cowrote and coproduced the record with an Englishman, Robert John "Mutt" Lange. Adams briefly threatened to boycott the annual Juno Awards, Canada's version of the Grammys, where he ended up winning Entertainer and Producer of the Year awards. A hits collection, So Far So Good (#6, 1993), featured the new song "Please Forgive Me" (#7, 1993). This, along with a collaboration with Rod Stewart and Sting for the movie The Three Musketeers, "All for Love" (#1, 1993), cemented Adams' status as a pop balladeer. This new image continued with 18 til I Die (#31, 1996), which included yet another film soundtrack hit, "Have You Ever Really Loved a Woman?" (#1, 1995) from Don Juan de Marco, garnering Adams his second Oscar nod. The album also produced the popular love song "Let's Make a Night to Remember." Adams' balladry reached new heights when he recorded a duet with Barbra Streisand for her 1996 movie, The Mirror Has Two Faces. "I Finally Found Someone" hit #8 on the pop chart and earned an Academy Award nomination.

The following year, Adams performed a concert for the MTV series Unplugged with his band as well as a 16-piece orchestra of students from the Juilliard School of Music. Highlights were quickly released as an album, MTV Unplugged (#88, 1997). On a Day Like Today (#103, 1998) found Adams duetting with Melanie C., Sporty Spice of the Spice Girls. In 1999 Adams focused on three non-U.S. projects: a second greatest-hits collection, titled The Best of Me, which had been rejected by A&M's new parent company in the States, Universal, but sold 4 million copies worldwide; and two collections of black-and-white portraits of women, Made in Canada and Heaven. The first showcased Adams' photographs of 80 prominent Canadian women (among them Celine Dion, Alanis Morissette, and Joni Mitchell). The book's royalties were donated to the Canadian Breast Cancer Foundation. Heaven's royalties benefited HavenTrust, a London breast-cancer support center.

King Sunny Ade

Born Sunday Francis Adeniyi, Sep. 26, 1946, Ondo, Nigeria
 1968—The Master Guitarist (African Songs/Serengeti, U.K.)
 1976—The Late General Muritala Mohammed (Decca); Sunny Ade Live Play (Sunny Alade) 1978—Festac 77 1980—Check "E" 1981—The Message 1982—Ariya Special; Juju Music (Mango) 1983—Synchro System; Ajoo (Makossa) 1984—Aura (Island) 1985—Otto (Sunny Alade) 1986—Saviour 1987—Return of the Juju King (Mercury) 1988—Live! Live Juju! (Rykodisc) 1989—Funmilayo (Sunny Alade) 1994—Live at the Hollywood Palace (I.R.S.) 1995—E Dide (Get Up) (Mesa) 1998—Odu 2000—Seven Degrees North (Mesa/V2).

A superstar in his native Nigeria since the late '60s, juju bandleader King Sunny Ade was hailed by American critics in 1982 as the next Bob Marley. While Ade, who sings in his native Yoruba tongue, never achieved that level of popularity in the U.S., he and his 20-piece African Beats band did whet American and European appetites for "world music." In addition, Ade helped open the door for other Afro-pop artists, among them fellow Nigerian juju stars Ebenezer Obey and Dele Abiodun, Zaire's Tabu Ley Rochereau and Papa Wemba, Senegal's Youssou N'Dour, South Africa's Mahlathini and the Mahotella Queens, and Madagascar's Rossy and Tanka Sammy.

Born into the royal family of Ondo, the youthful Ade horrified his parents by pursuing music, which was considered a profession for commoners. He dropped out of school in 1963 to join semipro bands in the capital of Lagos, playing juju, a popular Nigerian guitar music style since the '20s, which had been radically altered by the infusion of electric guitars and Western rock influences. Within a year Ade was a guitarist with a top juju outfit, Moses Olaiya's Rhythm Dandies. By 1967 he had formed his own band, the Green Spots (taking off on the name of longtime juju king I.K. Dairo's Blue Spots band), and recorded his first single, "Challenge Cup," which celebrated a local soccer team's championship and became a national hit.

By the early '70s Ade's Green Spots had grown into the African Beats, an orchestral ensemble with four or five vocalists, just as many guitarists, a Hawaiian guitarist (inspired by the pedal-steel heard on records by Ade's favorite country singer, Jim Reeves), keyboards or vibraphone (in the '80s, he added synthesizers), bass, trap drums, and a half-dozen or so percussionists including the talking drum players so central to the distinctive juju sound ("Talking drums" are small hand drums with variable pitch.) Ade's style of juju music is a gently hypnotic, polyrhythmic mesh of burbling guitars, sweet harmony vocals, swooping Hawaiian guitar, and throbbing talking drums.

By 1975 Ade was a certified superstar in his homeland: by decade's end, he'd released a half-dozen albums a year, selling around 200,000 copies of each. He set up his own Sunny Alade record label and Ariya nightclub in Lagos. The early '80s found Ade building a substantial European cult following, leading Island Records to sign him for both Europe and North America, where his influence had already been felt on such albums as Talking Heads' Remain in Light (1980) and King Crimson's Discipline (1981). Juju Music, featuring new recordings of tunes from Ade's vast repertoire, got universal rave reviews, as did his first of many U.S. tours; the album sold well enough to graze the bottom of the pop chart (#111, 1983). Synchro System, with a harder rhythmic edge and more prominent synthesizers, fared slightly better (#91, 1983), but when Aura failed to chart, despite a guest appearance by Stevie Wonder, Island dropped Ade. The African Beats then broke up, amidst dissension and claims of being underpaid (though Ade was reportedly losing money on tours, supporting his large band while playing undersized venues). Back in Lagos, Ade formed a new band, Golden Mercury, retaining his trademark sound and continuing to record and tour internationally, periodically returning to the U.S. Ade's 1995 album, E Dide (Get Up), was his first U.S. studio recording in a decade. It was followed by the Grammy-nominated 1998 release, Odu, and 2000's Seven Degrees North.

Fronted by Mick Jagger lookalike Steven Tyler and known for its aggressive blues-based style, Aerosmith was the top American hard-rock band of the mid-'70s, despite endless attacks from critics who considered them a poor man's Rolling Stones. But the members' growing drug problems and internal dissension contributed to a commercial decline that began with 1977's Draw the Line. Two crucial lineup changes and a few poorly received albums preceded a 1984 reunion of the original lineup and the multiplatinum Permanent Vacation, which signaled one of the most spectacular comebacks in rock history. Though now vociferous adherents to the sober lifestyle, Aerosmith forfeited none of their bad-boy image, and their live shows were among the best of their long career. Even critics liked them better the second time around. With its members now over 50, Aerosmith continues to embody classic rock grounded in a late-'70s style—typically, most of their recent hits have been power ballads.

The group was formed in 1970 by Joe Perry, Tom Hamilton, and Tyler, who was then a drummer. The group was completed with drummer Joey Kramer and Brad Whitford; Tyler became lead singer. For the next two years all five members shared a small apartment in Boston and played almost nightly throughout the area, occasionally venturing to New York City. Clive Davis saw them perform at Max's Kansas City in New York and signed them to Columbia. A minor hit and future FM-radio staple from their debut, "Dream On," strengthened their regional following.

Meanwhile, Aerosmith began to tour widely. In 1976 "Dream On" recharted, rising to #6. And by the time of "Walk This Way" (#10, 1977), the band had become headliners. Its phenomenal success was short-lived, however. A series of sold-out tours and platinum albums (including Aerosmith, Get Your Wings, Toys in the Attic) peaked in 1976.

By 1977 the group's constant touring and the band members' heavy drug use (Perry and Tyler were nicknamed "the Toxic Twins" for their heroin habits) had begun to take their toll. After months of rest, Aerosmith recorded Draw the Line and appeared as the villains in Robert Stigwood's movie Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band, their version of Lennon and McCartney's "Come Together" from the soundtrack was a minor hit. But Aerosmith was unraveling: In 1979 Perry quit, admitting to long-standing personality and musical conflicts with Tyler, his songwriting partner. Jim Crespo took his place. The next year Whitford departed to form the Whitford/St. Holmes band with ex-Ted Nugent sidekick Derek St. Holmes and was replaced by Rick Dufay. Neither Perry's nor Whitford's outside records did particularly well.

Rock in a Hard Place, Aerosmith's first new recording in almost three years and the first without Perry, peaked at #32, as the band was eclipsed by a new breed of young hard rockers. In early 1984 the five original members met backstage at an Aerosmith concert and decided to re-form. Done With Mirrors, their first "comeback" LP, sold moderately. The group's reascendence began in earnest when Perry and Tyler appeared with rap duo Run-D.M.C. in a video for the latter's version of the 1977 Aerosmith warhorse "Walk This Way" (#4, 1986). That fall, just as "Walk This Way" was peaking on the chart, Permanent Vacation (#11, 1987) was released, with three hit singles and their accompanying videos—"Dude (Looks Like a Lady)" (#14, 1987), "Angel" (#3, 1988), and "Rag Doll" (#17, 1988)—introducing Aerosmith to a new generation.

Aerosmith further consolidated its success with the quadruple-platinum Pump (#5, 1989), which boasted "Love in an Elevator" (#5, 1989), "Janie's Got a Gun" (#4, 1989)—the song about incest won 1990's Grammy for Best Rock Performance by a Duo or Group With Vocal—"What It Takes" (#9, 1990), and "The Other Side" (#22, 1990).

In 1991 the group signed a record deal with Sony worth a reported $30 million for four albums and including provisions for 22 percent royalties. Three years later, in summer 1994, the group landed a seven-figure deal from G.P. Putnam's Sons for its group autobiography. With the hit singles "Living on the Edge" (#18, 1993), "Cryin'" (#12, 1993), and "Crazy" (#7, 1993), Get a Gnp hit #1, followed by 1994's double-platinum #6 greatest-hits package, Big Ones, continuing Aerosmith's run at the top. Box of Fire, a 12-CD compilation of Aerosmith's Columbia output, went gold in early 1995.

Aerosmith got back into rougher waters in 1996. The band started working on the followup to Get a Grip—and its first album back on Columbia—but didn't get along with producer Glen Ballard. Ballard left in the middle of the sessions and was replaced by Kevin Shirley. Meanwhile, Joey Kramer's father had died, sending the drummer into such a depression that he had to be replaced by session drummer Steve Ferrone on some tracks. In the midst of it all, the band fired its longtime manager, Tim Collins, who had helped the musicians through sobriety and helmed their '80s comeback. Collins retaliated by suggesting that some of the band members had fallen off the wagon. Tyler was then accused of "not being part of the team" in a letter sent to him by his four bandmates. Tyler denied taking drugs, saying, "I've had no mood-altering substances in 10 years."

When Nine Lives finally came out in 1997, it entered the chart at #1. Yet it sold only a disappointing 140,000 copies the week of its release and didn't yield any memorable singles—though "Pink" (#27, 1998) did win Aerosmith another Grammy for Best Rock Performance by a Duo or Group With Vocal in 1999.

The group landed on its feet yet again when "I Don't Want to Miss a Thing" (#1, 1998), its contribution to the soundtrack of Armageddon (which starred Tyler's increasingly successful daughter Liv), became a huge hit the following year and was nominated for an Academy Award. In early 2001, Aerosmith was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, just as the band's new album, Just Push Play (#2, 2001), yielded the hit single "Jaded" (#7, 2001).

Christina Aguilera

Born Dec. 18, 1980, Staten Island, NY

1999—Christina Aguilera (RCA) 2000—Mi Reflejo; My Kind of Christmas.

Sexy teen idol Christina Aguilera was one of a handful of former Mouseketeers who, by the turn of the millennium, had graduated from the Disney Channel to MTV.

An army brat, Aguilera spent her early childhood traveling with her family from Texas to Japan to New Jersey. Her parents divorced when she was seven, and Aguilera settled with her mother and sister in Wexford, Pennsylvania. The following year, she appeared on Star Search performing the Whitney Houston hit "Greatest Love of All." Four years later, in 1993, Aguilera was a member of The New Mickey Mouse Club, along with Britney Spears and future members of 'N Sync.

In 1998, after Disney tapped Aguilera to sing "Reflections" for the animated film Mulan, RCA signed the budding star and spent a rumored $1 million for a team of songwriters, producers, voice teachers, and marketing experts. Aguilera's first single, "Genie in a Bottle," came out the following year and topped the pop chart on the strength of its suggestive lyrics and bubblegum pop sound. A chart-topping self-titled album followed. When the video for Aguilera's second single, "What a Girl Wants" (#1, 1999), hit MTV, the teenaged singer's grown-up looks and steamy moves had critics describing her as everything from a "micro-diva" to a "legal Lolita." In late 1999, Aguilera released a holiday single, "The Christmas Song (Chestnuts Roasting on an Open Fire)" (#18, 1999).

Capitalizing on the popularity of the Latin music movement (and her Spanish surname), Aguilera learned enough Spanish to record a Spanish-language album, Mi Reflejo (#27, 2000); it was followed closely by a holiday collection, My Kind of Christmas (#28, 2000). By late 2000, each of Aguilera's first three albums were on Billboard's Top 200 chart, she had sold more than 8 million copies of her debut album and won a Grammy for Best New Artist. In 2000 her singles included "Come On Over Baby (All I Want Is You)," and in 2001 she duetted with Ricky Martin on "Nobody Wants to Be Lonely" (#13) and appeared in the #1 remake of "Lady Marmalade" with Lil' Kim and others.

Formed 1982, Oslo, Nor.

Morten Harket (b. Sep. 14, 1959, Kongsberg, Nor.), voc.;

Magne "Mags" Furuholmen (b. Nov. 1, 1962, Oslo), kybds.; Pål Waaktaar (b. Sep. 6, 1961, Oslo), gtr.

1985—Hunting High and Low (Warner Bros.) 1986—

Scoundrel Days 1988—Stay on These Roads 1990—East of the Sun, West of the Moon 1991—Headlines and Deadlines: The Hits of a-ha 1993—Memorial Beach 2000—Minor Earth, Major Sky (Warner Music, Ger.).

With chiseled Scandinavian good looks and a few pop hooks, a-ha is a Norwegian electropop answer to Duran Duran, as mid-'80s teen idols of the music-video age. It might be argued that Steve Barron, who directed the video for the trio's "Take On Me," and Michael Patterson and Candace Reinger, who animated the clip, were as important to a-ha's American success as the band members themselves.

A-ha's three members had played in such Scandinavian bands as Spider Empire, Soldier Blue, and Bridges before coming together in the early '80s and moving together to London. The group's first single, "Take On Me" (#1, 1985), got heavy MTV play with its video clip, which blended live action and animation in a romantic adventure starring the handsome Harket as a comic-book hero who comes to life and pulls an unsuspecting young woman into the action. The song propelled Hunting High and Low to #15. A-ha would score a few more hits—including "The Sun Also Shines on TV" (#20, 1985) and "Cry Wolf" (#50, 1987)—but its album sales steadily decreased, and East of the Sun and Memorial Beach failed to chart at all. A-ha remained a steady draw internationally, however, especially in Latin America, where it topped the singles charts no fewer than 14 times, and in 1991 played for record-breaking crowds at Brazil's Rock in Rio concert. In 1987 a-ha wrote and recorded the theme song for the James Bond film The Liv- ing Daylights. In 1995 Harket began a solo career with Wild Seed (Vogts Villa followed a year later), while Waaktaar and his wife, Lauren Savoy, formed the band Savoy, who released Mary Is Coming (1996) and Lackluster Me (1997). With "Take On Me" placing high atop such lists as MTV's 100 Greatest Music Videos Ever, Harket, Furuholm, and Waaktaar reconvened to greet the new millennium with a new Europe-only a-ha album, Minor Earth, Major Sky.

Air

Formed 1995, Versailles, Fr.

Nicolas Godin (b. Dec. 25, 1969, Paris, Fr.), kybds., gr., bass, piano, others; Jean-Benoit Dunckel (b. Sep. 7, 1969, Versailles), kybds., gr., bass, piano, others.

1998—Moon Safari (Source/Caroline) 1999—Premiers Symptomes (Source/Astralwerks) 2000—Original Motion Picture Score for "The Virgin Suicides" (Record Makers/Source/Astralwerks) 2001—10,000 Hz Legend (Record Makers/Source/Virgin).

At a time when its native country had become the new hotbed of electronic music, French duo Air distinguished itself from its more house-music-oriented contemporaries (Daft Punk, Dimitri From Paris) with soft, keyboard-heavy compositions that recalled music from the '60s and '70s. With Jean-Benoit Dunckel having been formally trained in classical music at Paris' Conservatoire, he and his musical partner, Nicolas Godin, often cited classical composers like Debussy and Bach as influences. But their lush melodies also drew inspiration from sources as varied as Ennio Morricone, Brian Wilson, and Moog composer Jean Jacques Perrey.

Godin and Dunckel met during the mid-'80s while attending college in Versailles; they were introduced by Alex Latrobe (later known as the producer Alex Gopher), with whom they formed the indie-rock band Orange. After graduation, they continued to collaborate without Latrobe, recording their first single as Air, "Modular Mix," in 1995 for France's Source label. Three years later Source released Air's full-length debut, Moon Safari, which landed the band on countless critics' top-10 lists. In 1999 Air issued an expanded EP, Premiers Symptomes, which previously had been released in Europe in 1997 and which collected the band's pre-Moon Safari singles. Continually promising a proper followup to Moon Safari, Air next composed the soundtrack to The Virgin Suicides (#161, 2000) before releasing 10,000 Hz Legend in 2001. The latter recording featured vocals by Beck and Japan's Buffalo Daughter.

Air Supply

Formed 1976, Melbourne, Austral.

1978—Graham Russell (b. June 1, 1950, Nottingham, Eng.), voc., gr.; Russell Hitchcock (b. June 15, 1949, Melbourne), voc.; Ralph Cooper (b. Apr. 6, 1951, Coffs Harbour, Austral.), drums; David Moyse (b. Nov. 5, 1957, Adelaide, Austral.), gr.; David Green (b. Oct. 30, 1949, Melbourne), bass; Rex Goh (b. May 5, 1951, Singapore), gr.; Frank Esler-Smith (b. June 5, 1948, London, Eng.), kybds.

1980—Lost in Love (Arista) 1981—The One That You Love 1982—Now and Forever 1983—Greatest Hits 1985—Air Supply 1986—Hearts in Motion 1988—(group disbands) 1991—(group re-forms: Russell; Hitchcock; Cooper) The Earth Is (Giant) 1993—The Vanishing Race 1995—News From Nowhere 1997—Book of Love.

Air Supply is an Australian group based around the duo of Graham Russell (the main songwriter) and Russell Hitchcock. The group's light pop-rock hits have earned Air Supply several platinum LPs and gold singles worldwide, Greatest Hits was quadruple platinum in the U.S., and The Earth Is, which failed to chart here, went gold in over 20 countries.

The group originally consisted of lead vocalists Hitchcock and Graham backed by studio musicians. As such, they had several hit singles in Australia, including "Love and Other Bruises" (1976), "Empty Pages" and "Do What You Do" (both 1977), and two gold albums. After forming a band to record their third LP, they came up with one of the U.S.'s biggest hits in 1979, "Lost in Love," (#3, 1979). A string of Top 10 hits followed: "Every Woman in the World" (#5, 1980), "The One That You Love" (#1, 1981), "Even the Nights Are Better" (#6, 1982), and "Making Love Out of Nothing at All" (#2, 1983). To date, the group has sold over 15 million records worldwide.

The group first disbanded in 1988, but Russell and Hitchcock re-formed Air Supply in 1991, including only Cooper from the old lineup. The pair has continued to tour with various backing configurations.

Alabama

Formed 1969 (as Young Country), Fort Payne, AL

Jeff Cook (b. Aug. 27, 1949, Fort Payne), gr., fiddle, voc.; Randy Owen (b. Dec. 13, 1949, Fort Payne), gr., voc.; Teddy Gentry (b. Jan. 22, 1952, Fort Payne), bass, voc.

N.A.—Wild Country (LSI); Deuces Wild; Alabama 3 1973—(+ Rich Scott, drums) 1979—(- Scott; + Mark Herndon [b. The biggest-selling country group of the '80s, Alabama began in 1969 as a trio of cousins: Jeff Cook, Randy Owen, and Teddy Gentry. Then known as Young Country, the band performed on weekends at a local amusement park, Canyonland. In 1973, after moving to Myrtle Beach, South Carolina, the group (with drummer Rich Scott), began playing its own songs in clubs, renaming itself Alabama.

After a few self-produced singles, the group signed with GRT Records in 1977. Its first release, "I Want to Be With You," made the country Top 100, but subsequent releases failed to match even that standing. In 1979 Alabama went to MDJ Records of Dallas, and its first single on the independent label, "I Wanna Come Over," reached #32 on the country chart in 1980, and the followup, "My Home's in Alabama," #17. Alabama's first RCA single, "Tennessee River," hit #1 in 1980. It was the first of 42 country chart-toppers.

To date the group has sold over 65 million records worldwide of its country-pop sound, becoming the first country group to sell quintuple-platinum albums. Of its 16 releases on RCA through 1993, only that year's Cheap Seats failed to go gold or platinum—an indication that after nearly 15 years, Alabama's thunder had been stolen by Garth Brooks, Travis Tritt, and other contemporary country acts. Nevertheless, 1993 did see the quartet win the People's Choice award for favorite musical group, and as the decade ended the group had scored several country Top 5 singles. When It All Goes South debuted on the country albums chart at #4 (#37 pop) in early 2001.

The Alarm

 Mike Peters with ColourSound: 1999—ColourSound (21st Century, U.K.).

The earnest guitar-dominated band the Alarm first came to the attention of American audiences when it opened U2's 1983 tour. Like U2, the Alarm sought to forge a new, idealistic arena rock, one marked by a sense of band-audience communion and punk's galvanizing spirit. Eschewing electronic effects, the Alarm's Mike Peters and Dave Sharp strummed acoustic guitars.

The quartet came together in their native Wales while all were in their teens. Peters and Nigel Twist were part of the Toilets when Eddie MacDonald and Sharp joined them in 1978. Inspired by the Sex Pistols, for a while they called themselves Seventeen. In 1981 they relocated to London, where, after gigging steadily in clubs, they were signed by I.R.S. Records. The following year they became the Alarm. Despite scoring hits on rock-oriented radio with such songs as "Strength" (#61, 1985) and "Rain in the Summertime" (#71, 1987), only one album broke the Top 40, Strength (#39, 1985). Sharp released his first solo album, Hard Travellin', in late 1991; the band broke up in 1992.

Peters moved on to a solo career, releasing four albums in five years. The third, Rise, was accompanied by an all-request tour, in which fans determined the set list for each concert date via fax and the singer's Web site. At the same time, Peters began a collaboration with Billy Duffy, onetime guitarist for the Cult. Their band, ColourSound, released an eponymously titled album in 1999. To promote an Alarm box set, Peters embarked on the Mike Peters Alarm 2001 Tour, with a lineup (guitarist James Stevenson, bassist Richard Llewellyn, and drummer Steve Grantley) that had performed together in 2000.

Arthur Alexander

Born Arthur Bernard Alexander Jr., May 10, 1940, Florence, AL; died June 9, 1993, Nashville, TN
 1962—You Better Move On (Dot) 1972—Arthur Alexander (Warner Bros.) 1993—Lonely Just Like Me (Elektra Nonesuch); The Ultimate Arthur Alexander (Razor & Tie) 1994—Rainbow Road (Warner Bros.).

Country-soul vocalist Arthur Alexander wrote and recorded the 1962 hit "You Better Move On." He began singing in church as a child, and during his teens belonged to an a cappella group called the Heartstrings. In 1961 he was working a day job as a bellhop and recording occasionally. Early the next year, his song "You Better Move On" hit #24 on the pop chart. Not only was it Alexander's first and most successful single, but the first hit to come out of Rick Hall's Muscle Shoals studios. Dot Records unwisely attempted to market Alexander as a pop singer, and such followup releases as the Barry Mann-Cynthia Weil composition "Where Have You Been (All My Life)" and his own "Anna (Go to Him)" (both 1962) were well sung but commercially unsuccessful.

His records had more impact in England, and his songs were later recorded by the Beatles ("Anna"), the Rolling Stones ("You Better Move On"), Bob Dylan ("Sally Sue Brown"), Elvis Presley ("Burning Love"), and Otis Redding ("Johnny Heartbreak"). In 1972 Alexander's eponymous album on Warner Bros. drew critical kudos but low sales. A few years later he reentered the pop chart with "Every Day I Have to Cry" (#45, 1975), but then he quit the music business, tired, as he said, of "the rip-offs." After 1981 he drove a bus for a Cleveland social-services agency. He remained popular in England, where three of his albums (Shot of Rhythm and Soul, Soldiers of Love, and Arthur Alexander) were reissued through the '80s. Following the 1991 murder of his eldest son, he returned to music.

Alexander was on the verge of a commercial comeback in 1993, with the release of his first LP in two decades, Lonely

Just Like Me Unanimously praised by critics, the album featured backing by such Muscle Shoals mainstays as guitarist Dan Penn and keyboardist Spooner Oldham. Sadly, just a few months after its release and on the eve of a summer tour, Alexander died of heart failure.

Alice in Chains

Formed 1987, Seattle, WA

Jerry Cantrell (b. Mar. 18, 1966, Bellevue, WA), gr.; Layne Staley (b. Aug. 22, 1967, Bellevue, WA), voc.; Sean Kinney (b. May 27, 1966, Seattle), drums; Mike Starr (b. Apr. 4, 1966, Honolulu, HI), bass.

1990—We Die Young EP (Columbia); Face Lift 1991—Sap EP 1992—Dirt (—Starr; + Mike Inez [b. May 14, 1966, San Fernando, CA], bass) 1993—Jar of Flies EP 1995—Alice in Chains 1996—MTV Unplugged 1999—Music Bank; Nothing Safe—Best of the Box 2000—Live.

Jerry Cantrell solo: 1998—Boggy Depot.

A metal band with an alternative-rock edge, Alice in Chains was among the biggest to emerge from the grunge scene that spawned Nirvana, Pearl Jam, and Soundgarden. The group's dark, bitter songs, laden with references to drug addiction and death, occupy a musical landscape somewhere between Metallica's dense head bangers and Pearl Jam's grinding anthems. Layne Staley formed Alice N' Chains with an earlier lineup while still in high school. In 1987 he met Jerry Cantrell at the Music Bank, a notorious Seattle warehouse rehearsal space, and the two put together the newly christened Alice in Chains along with Cantrell cohorts Kinney and Starr. By 1989 the group had signed to Columbia Records, where it became the beneficiary of an aggressive promotion campaign that saw the release of a five-song promotional EP, We Die Young, and had the group opening for a range of disparate acts, including Iggy Pop and Poison. As a result, by September 1991, Face Lift (#42) had sold a half-million copies and featured the Grammy-nominated "Man in the Box." A low-key and mostly acoustic EP, Sap, and a track in the Seattle youth culture movie Singles kept the band in the public eye between albums.

The group's thematically bleaker sophomore effort, Dirt (#6), went platinum in 1992 (eventually selling 3 million copies), and the group's appearance on the following summer's Lollapalooza Tour confirmed its popularity. Reports of drug abuse, however, had begun to plague Staley and the band: a couple of songs from Dirt—"Junkhead" and "Angry Char"—had hinted at mental fatigue and self-destruction. Yet Alice in Chains' success was at an all-time high: In late 1993 Dirt went double-platinum, and the following year the acoustic Jar of Flies rocketed to #1, the first EP to ever top the Billboard album chart. In 1994 Staley hooked up with fellow Seattleites Mike McCready (Pearl Jam), Barrett Martin (Screaming Trees), and John Baker Saunders to play a few gigs under the name Gacy Bunch; the next year they changed their name to Mad Season and released Above (#24, 1995), but Staley quit the side project (replaced by Mark Lanegan of Screaming Trees) before its second album.

In 1995 Alice in Chains returned to action with a self-titled album (which debuted at #1), but the quartet failed to tour, owing to internal discord and rumored addictions. Even so, the band reconvened in 1996 for its first public performance in three years to record and release MTV Unplugged (#3), which stripped the band's hard-rock sound to an acoustic, unexpectedly melodic core. Nothing new was heard from Alice in Chains until the 1999 release of Music Bank (and the excerpted Nothing Safe—Best of the Box). Named for the warehouse where the band lived and recorded in its early days, the album was a 48-song collection that mixed two new tracks ("Get Born Again" and "Died") with the band's hits, live recordings, demos, and B sides. Another anthology of sorts, Live documented performances from throughout the band's career.

Lee Allen

Born July 2, 1927, Pittsburg, KS; died Oct. 18, 1994, Los Angeles, CA

1958—Walkin' With Mr. Lee (Ember).

Although the closest Lee Allen ever came to getting a hit for himself was "Walking With Mr. Lee" (#54, 1958), his tenor saxophone session performances and arrangements were integral to numerous hits by Fats Domino, Little Richard, and others who recorded in New Orleans in the '50s and early '60s. He moved to New Orleans in 1944, where he attended Xavier University on a music and athletic scholarship. By 1948 he was performing professionally with Paul Gayten's band, one of the pioneer New Orleans R&B bands. In 1956 he joined Dave Bartholomew's band, which recorded and toured with Fats Domino during Domino's peak years. At that time Allen also worked as a session musician and arranger; he and baritone saxophonist Alvin "Red" Tyler led New Orleans' most in-demand session ensemble, the Studio Band, which included drummers Earl Palmer and Charles "Hungry" Williams, guitarists Ernest McLean and Justin Adams, pianists Salvador Doucette, Edward Frank, and Allen Toussaint, bassist Frank "Dude" Fields, and trumpeter Melvin Lastie.

Bumps Blackwell hired the Studio Band to back Little Richard on some of his hit records: "Tutti Frutti," "Long Tall Sally," "The Girl Can't Help It," and others. Allen also played behind Shirley and Lee ("Let the Good Times Roll"), Huey Smith and the Clowns ("Rockin' Pneumonia and the Boogie Woogie Flu"), Sam Cooke, Lowell Fulson, Charles Brown, and Jimmy Clanton. In 1957 Allen signed a solo contract with Herald Records. His first single was "Walking With Mr. Lee," a #1 hit in New Orleans, followed by "Tic Toc" and a tour of the U.S. in the late '50s. He then returned to the New Orleans studios to work for $42 per session on hit records that sold millions of copies. He retired in the early '60s but returned in 1982 to tour with the Blasters; he guested on the band's first album.

In 1994 Allen contributed tenor saxophone and vocals to Crescent City Gold, an album featuring an aggregation of New Orleans jazz and R&B greats. Later that year Allen died of lung cancer at age 67.

Luther Allison

Born Aug. 17, 1939, Mayflower, AR; died Aug. 13, 1997, Madison, WI

1969—Love Me Mama (Delmark) 1972—Bad News Is Coming (Gordy) 1974—Luther's Blues 1976—Night Life 1979—Gonna Be a Live One Here Tonight (Rumble) 1993—Hand Me Down My Moonshine (Inak, Ger.) 1994—Soul Fixin' Man (Alligator); Serious (Blind Pig) 1995—Blue Streak (Alligator) 1997—Reckless.

Luther Allison belongs to a generation of electric blues guitarists who came of age in the '60s. These musicians appealed to both old-line blues audiences and younger, white rock audiences. Born on a cotton plantation, Allison was one of 15 children. Before he was 10 years old, he sang with a gospel group, the Southern Travellers, with whom he toured throughout the South. Circa 1951, he moved with his family to Chicago and began playing guitar. One of his boyhood friends in that city would turn out to be Muddy Waters' son. Allison first performed as a blues guitarist with his elder brother's band, which played Chicago clubs between 1954 and 1957. Luther's own nascent band, the Rolling Stones (later renamed the Four Jivers), lasted for one year.

For the next decade Allison was a mainstay of the Chicago blues scene, often playing behind Freddie King and Magic Sam. He made his first records for Delmark in 1967, the same year he took to the road with his group, the Tornados. In 1968 he toured and recorded for World Pacific with Shakey Jake, and began making annual appearances at the Ann Arbor Blues and Jazz Festival. Hoping to find success in the music business, he moved to California in the late '60s and soon began playing such rock venues as the Fillmore West and, in New York City, the Fillmore East and Max's Kansas City. Dispirited, he returned to Chicago and recorded three albums for Motown's Gordy label and the soundtrack to Coolley High.

Allison, who eventually settled near Paris, began extensively touring Europe in the '70s and continued to delight the festival circuit over the next two decades with his lengthy, intense performances. In July 1997, Allison was diagnosed with inoperable lung cancer, succumbing to the illness a few days short of his 58th birthday.

Mose Allison

Born Mose John Allison Jr., Nov. 11, 1927, Tippecanoe, MS

1957—Back Country Suite (Prestige) 1983—Lessons in Living (Elektra/Musician) 1988—Ever Since the World Ended (Blue Note); Greatest Hits (Fantasy) 1990—My Backyard (Blue Note) 1993—I Don't Worry About a Thing (Rhino) 1994—The Earth Wants You (Blue Note); Allison Wonderland—The Mose Allison Anthology (Rhino); High Jinks: The Mose Allison Trilogy (Columbia) 1997—Gimcracks and Geegaws (Blue Note).

Singer/pianist Mose Allison has been popular in jazz circles for over 40 years. Rock musicians know him for his songs—which have been covered by the Who ("A Young Man Blues"), Bonnie Raitt ("Everybody's Cryin' Mercy"), John Mayall ("Parchman Farm"), Van Morrison ("If You Only Knew"), the Clash ("Look Here"), and the Yardbirds ("I'm Not Talking"), among others—and for a sardonic sense of humor as evidenced in his "Your Mind Is on Vacation (But Your Mouth Is Working Overtime)." The son of a stride jazz pianist, Allison began playing at age six. Later, he also took up the trumpet. He absorbed both jazz and country blues, and when he arrived in New York City in 1956, he played piano with "cool" jazzmen Al Cohn, Stan Getz, Gerry Mulligan, and Zoot Sims. Allison's style blended the simplicity of the blues with modernist harmonies. He began to sing in 1957, when he formed his own trio. For decades to come, his understated and laconically cynical songs would be periodically rediscovered by the rock audience. In the '90s, Allison's daughter, Amy, became known for her twangy voice, inspired songwriting, and critically acclaimed alt-country albums.

The Allman Brothers Band blended strains of Southern music—blues, R&B, country, jazz, and gospel—into a flexible, jam-oriented style that reflected the emergence of the "New South" and set the style for Lynyrd Skynyrd, the Marshall Tucker Band, and countless other Southern rockers. Oddly—or eerily, some would say—the band's unusual string of untimely deaths has been repeated in other Southern-rock bands. Through personal tragedy and turmoil, the Allman Brothers Band has endured and, though lacking the commercial clout of its early-'70s heyday, it remains highly respected and well received by legions of fans.

Brothers Gregg and Duane Allman were living in Daytona Beach, Florida, in 1960, and played in various bands until 1963, when they formed the Escorts, which became the Allman Joys in 1965. After their version of Willie Dixon's "Spoonful" failed as a single, the two brothers and three other band members went to L.A., where they signed with Liberty Records as the Hourglass. They recorded two albums of outside material (Hourglass, 1967, and Power of Love, 1968) before heading to Muscle Shoals, Alabama, to record at Fame Studios. Liberty rejected the resulting tapes, and Duane and Gregg returned to Florida.

Soon after, the brothers joined the 31st of February, whose drummer was Butch Trucks. After recording an album, Gregg went back to L.A. to make good on the Liberty contract. (A 1973 Bold album called Duane and Gregg consisted of tapes made by the 31st of February.) Duane stayed in Jacksonville, where he began playing with the Second Coming, which included Dickey Betts and Berry Oakley veterans of Tommy Roe and the Romans. But before Duane became an established member of the Second Coming, Fame Studios owner Rick Hall asked him to return to Muscle Shoals to play lead guitar for a Wilson Pickett session. At Duane's suggestion, Pickett recorded Lennon and McCartney's "Hey Jude." Duane became Fame's primary session guitarist, recording over the next year with Aretha Franklin, King Curtis, Percy Sledge, Clarence Carter, and Arthur Conley, and signing with Fame Productions as a solo artist.

At the urging of Atlantic Records vice president Jerry Wexler, Phil Walden bought the Fame contract, with the notion to build a band around Duane for his upstart Capricorn Records. Allman hired Jai Johanny Johanson, a Muscle Shoals drummer who had worked with Otis Redding, Percy Sledge, Joe Tex, and Clifton Chenier. He went back to Florida and reconvened Trucks, Oakley, Betts, and Gregg. Once assembled, the Allman Brothers Band moved to Macon, Georgia, where Walden was launching Capricorn. (In 1991 Trucks said of the group's long tenure with the label: "We had grossed $40 million and woke up one day to realize our own manager [Phil Walden] had cheated us out of every cent.") The Allman Brothers Band, the group's debut, was well received only in the South. After its release, Duane continued to play on sessions with Boz Scaggs, Laura Nyro, Otis Rush, Delaney and Bonnie, Ronnie Hawkins, and John Hammond. He appears with Eric Clapton on Derek and the Dominos' Layla (His session work is collected on the two Anthology volumes.)

On the strength of the Allman Brothers' growing reputation as a live band, its second album sold well. In March 1971, four shows at New York's Fillmore East were recorded for release as a live double LP set in July. By the time the album reached the Top 10, the Allman Brothers Band was being hailed in print as "America's best rock & roll group." But on October 29, 1971, less than three months after At Fillmore East's release, Duane was killed in a motorcycle accident in Macon. The group played at his funeral and decided to continue without a new guitarist. Three songs on their next LP, Eat a Peach, had been recorded before Duane's death, and with live material from the Fillmore East concerts, the double LP was released in February, entered the chart in the Top 10, and rose to #4. In 1972, Oakley was killed in a motorcycle crash three blocks from the site of Duane's accident a year earlier.

Dickey Betts, by then the band's unofficial leader, wrote and sang "Ramblin' Man," the band's first and biggest hit single (#2, 1973); Brothers and Sisters went to #1, with Lamar Williams, a childhood friend of Jaimoe's, taking Oakley's place, and Chuck Leavell on keyboards. The first two albums, when reissued as Beginnings, more than doubled their original sales. The group returned to the road after two years. In Watkins Glen, New York, 600,000 people gathered in July 1973 for an all-day concert by the Allman Brothers Band, the Grateful Dead, and the Band. There was growing dissension in the group, however, as Gregg and Betts began to disagree over schedules and musical direction. In 1974 they each released a Top 20 solo album (Allman's Laid Back and Betts' Highway Call), and Allman formed the Gregg Allman Band with Johanson, Leavell, Williams, and others to tour and record The Gregg Allman Tour. The subsequent Allman Brothers Band album, Win, Lose or Draw (#5, 1975), sold well, but it was four years before the next album of new material, The Road Goes On Forever, a compilation, and Wipe the Windows, a live collection, were released in 1976. By 1975, Allman was involved in a tumultuous marriage to Cher (they divorced in 1979). They had a son, Elijah Blue, in 1977. Their 1977 LP, Allman and Woman: Two the Hard Way, was universally panned.

But the greatest blow to the group occurred in 1976, when Allman testified against Scooter Herring, his personal road manager, charged with dealing narcotics. Herring was subsequently sentenced to 75 years in prison (later reduced to two years on appeal). Allman's action, the others said, betrayed the fraternal loyalty that had sustained them: They vowed never to work with him again.

The members pursued separate but at times intertwining paths. Betts formed Great Southern, duplicating the original Allman Brothers lineup with two guitars, two drums, bass, keyboards, and vocals. Only the group's first album charted in the Top 100. After Allman's disastrous duet LP with Cher, he regrouped the Gregg Allman Band, with no help from any former Brothers, and put out Playin' Up a Storm in 1977. The other members also remained active: Trucks studied music at Florida State University for two years and formed an experimental group, Trucks, Leavell, Williams, and Johanson, with guitarist Jimmy Nails, formed the fusion-oriented Sea Level. Later, Leavell returned to session work, notably with the Rolling Stones, with whom he has toured since 1989.

In 1978, the Allman Brothers Band regrouped for the first time. After Allman, Trucks, and Jaimoe joined Betts and Great Southern onstage in New York in 1978, Great Southern guitarist Dan Toler and bassist Rook Goldflies also joined the new Allman Brothers Band. Enlightened Rogues (#9, 1979) was certified gold within two weeks of its release. Two years later Brothers of the Road gave the group a minor hit single, "Straight From the Heart." The group broke up again in 1980. In 1983 Lamar Williams died of Agent Orange-related cancer. Betts recorded an album with the Dickey Betts Band, and Allman released I'm No Angel (#30, 1987) with its #49 title track.

Regrouping yet again in 1989 with core members Allman, Betts, Jaimoe, and Trucks, the Allman Brothers Band took to the road. Dreams, a box set, compiles songs from 1966 to 1988. The group's recent albums and performances have attracted a new generation of fans who have come to appreciate the Allman Brothers as the root of much latter-day collegiate jam rock. There was renewed critical respect, as well, especially for Allman's singing and writing. Allman, who finally won his struggles with heroin and alcohol, has also acted, appearing in the film Rush and the syndicated TV series Superboy.

In 1995 the group was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame and released 2nd Set. It received its first Grammy Award (for Best Rock Instrumental Performance) the next year, for "Jessica." Gregg Allman released his first solo recording in a decade with 1997's Searching for Sim- licity, which opens with a remake of the Allman Brothers' classic blues "Whipping Post." Allman's solo anthology, One More Try, includes only eight previously released songs.

A series of personnel changes, and the occasional intramural ruckus, have kept the band in flux. In 1996, Warren Haynes and Allen Woody left to work full-time with their own project, the blues-rock trio Gov't Mule. Guitarist Jack Pearson, who cowrote Gregg Allman's epic "Sailin' Cross the Devil's Sea," and bassist Oteil Burbridge (Aquarium Rescue Unit) replaced them. Pearson's departure in 1999 made way for 20-year-old guitarist Derek Trucks, Butch's nephew, to join a band he had been sitting in with for years. In June 2000, Betts was ousted via fax from the band on the eve of a summer tour. Soon thereafter, he put together a new eight-piece band, touring as the Dickey Betts Band.

Herb Alpert rose to fame in the mid-'60s as the king of South of the Border MOR, or as it was called, "Ameriachi." He has since become a music industry force, both as a performer (he's sold more instrumental records than any artist in history) and as cofounder and vice chairman of A&M Records, which he and Jerry Moss sold to PolyGram in 1990 for a sum reported to be in excess of $500 million.

Alpert was raised in L.A. and began playing trumpet at age eight. After returning from the army he had briefly acted and then recorded as Dore Alpert for RCA. Under the pseudonym Barbara Campbell, Alpert, Lou Adler, and Sam Cooke cowrote a number of Cooke's hits, among them "Only Sixteen" and "Wonderful World." During the late '50s he produced Jan and Dean, and with songwriting partner Lou Adler recorded a cover version of the Hollywood Argyles' "Alley Oop" under the name Dante and the Evergreens.

In 1962 he and Jerry Moss (b. 1946) founded A&M Records. Initially a shoestring operation out of Alpert's garage, A&M eventually became the nation's biggest independent record company, largely on the strength of Alpert's Tijuana Brass hits such as "The Lonely Bull" (#6, 1962), "A Taste of Honey" (#7, 1965), and "The Mexican Shuffle" (#85, 1964), later used in chewing gum commercials as the "Teaberry Shuffle." In 1965 the group had five LPs in the Top 20 and in 1966 sold 13 million records.

Among Alpert's signings for A&M were the Carpenters and Carole King. He returned to the charts in 1979 with the biggest record of his career, "Rise." It was only Alpert's second #1 hit, the other being a rare vocal outing, 1968's "This Guy's in Love With You." His third-biggest hit, "Diamonds" (#5, 1987), was produced by Jimmy Jam and Terry Lewis and featured one of A&M's biggest latter-day coups, Janet Jackson. Alpert launched his own fragrance, called Listen, in 1989. In 1994 Alpert and Moss resumed their record business activity and founded Almo Sounds, the company that would release the trumpet player's post-A&M catalogue. The alternative-rock quartet Garbage was among the new label's early successes; however, the company closed down in 2000. Alpert has also exhibited his paintings throughout Europe, produced for Broadway, and done philanthropic work through his Herb Alpert Foundation. Alpert's wife is singer Lani Hall.

The country-rock Amazing Rhythm Aces were formed as an informal assemblage headed by guitarist/lead singer/main songwriter Russell Smith, who had learned how to sing country blues while working as a teenage disc jockey on a station in his native Lafayette. The group was temporarily sidetracked in the early '70s when several members joined Jesse Winchester's backup band, but they then regrouped. Their debut, Stacked Deck, featured a mixture of country, gospel, rock, and bluegrass and yielded a hit single, "Third Rate Romance" (#14, 1975). Despite continuous touring, however, that success was never repeated, even though subsequent efforts like "The End Is Not in Sight" (1976) and "Amazing Grace (Used to Be Her Favorite Song)" (1976) placed in the Top 20 on the country chart. The band has had a turbulent managerial history; in 1979 its album Amazing Rhythm Aces appeared first on ABC, then on Columbia when the group's contract changed hands. The Amazing Rhythm Aces broke up in 1981.

Since 1982 Smith has released solo albums. He has written songs for such country artists as Ricky Van Shelton and the title track of rockabilly pioneer Billy Lee Riley's comeback LP, Blue Collar Blues. In 1991 he joined the so-called Spinal Tap of country & western, Run C&W (which includes ex-Eagle Bernie Leadon, Jim Photoglo, and Vince Melamed), which performs country versions of '60s soul classics. Earhart joined the Bama Band (Hank Williams Jr.'s backing band) in 1986.

The Aces, abetted by a new guitarist, reconvened in 1995 to record Ride Again, a self-released collection of remakes of their most popular material. Following the all-new Out of the Blue, the band deemed its reunion "official," though the group was sidelined by the cancer-related death of drummer Butch McDade in 1998. A session drummer was employed for Chock Full of Country Goodness. Founding keyboardist James Hooker left in 1999, though the Aces and their Breaker label remained active.

David Pack (b. 1952), gtr., voc.; Joe Puerta (b. 1952), bass, voc.; Burleigh Drummond (b. 1952), drums, voc.; Christopher North (b. 1952), kybds., voc.

1975—Ambrosia (20th Century-Fox) 1976—Somewhere I've Never Travelled (Warner Bros.) 1977—(– North) 1978—Life Beyond L.A. 1980—One Eighty 1982—Road Island.

Ambrosia plays pop with classical flourishes and is best known for its late-'70s hit singles. David Pack and Joe Puerta met in high school and were later joined by Burleigh Drummond and Christopher North. Three months later, while helping check a new sound system in the Hollywood Bowl, renowned classical-music engineer Gordon Parry heard them play and arranged for them to perform at UCLA. Parry arranged for Los Angeles Philharmonic conductor Zubin Mehta to attend the performance, and Mehta then invited the group to participate in his All American Dream Concert in the Hollywood Bowl soon thereafter. In 1973 Ambrosia performed in the debut of Leonard Bernstein's Mass at the Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington, DC.

The four members play a total of 72 instruments, and their songs often contain literary allusions such as "Nice, Nice, Very Nice," a line from Kurt Vonnegut's Cat's Cradle. The group contributed to the soundtrack of All This and World War II. Its hit singles include "Holdin' On to Yesterday" (#17, 1975), "How Much I Feel" (#3, 1978), "Biggest Part of Me" (#3, 1980), and "You're the Only Woman (You & I)" (#13, 1980). Ambrosia broke up in 1984, but the four original members reunited in 1989 and continue to tour. They contributed three new songs to a 1997 best-of anthology.

Amen Corner/Andy Fairweather-Low

Formed 1966, Cardiff, Wales

Andy Fairweather-Low (b. 1948), voc., gtr.; Neil Jones, gtr.; Blue Weaver, organ; Clive Tayler, bass; Dennis Byrn, drums; Allen Jones, baritone sax; Mike Smith, sax.

1968—Round Amen Corner (Deram) 1969—National Welsh Coast Live (Immediate); Farewell the Real Magnificent Seven; World of Amen Corner (Decca) 1975—Amen Corner and Small Faces (New World) 1976—Return of the Magnificent Seven (Immediate) 1978—Greatest Hits.

Andy Fairweather-Low solo: 1974—Spider Jiving (A&M) 1975—La Booga Rooga 1977—Be Bop 'n' Holla 1980—Mega-Shebang (Warner Bros.).

Amen Corner was one of the last British Mod bands. Led by Andy Fairweather-Low, it had its first British Top 20 hit in 1967 with "Gin House," an R&B song, and subsequent hits included a cover of the American Breed's "Bend Me, Shape Me" and "High in the Sky," both of which went Top 10 in 1968. The group's only #1 hit came in 1969 with "(If Paradise Is) Half as Nice"; "Hello Suzie" was a Top 5 hit later that year.

After Immediate Records folded at the height of the group's popularity, Amen Corner was overhauled. The two horn players were dropped, and the name was changed to Fairweather. It had a 1970 Top 5 single with "Natural Sinner" but disbanded soon thereafter. Byron played briefly with the Bee Gees, and Weaver worked with the Bee Gees and the Strawbs.

Fairweather-Low went on a sabbatical of several years before beginning a solo career in 1974. He enjoyed a pair of Top 10 U.K. hits—"Reggae Tune" (1974) and "Wide Eyed and Legless" (1975)—although none of his solo albums charted in the U.S. He has appeared on albums by Dave Edmunds, Gerry Rafferty, Richard Thompson, the Who, and Roy Wood, among others. In 1990 he appeared in Roger Waters' production of The Wall in Berlin. Fairweather-Low subsequently joined Eric Clapton's backing band.

Dewey Bunnell (b. Jan. 19, 1952, Yorkshire, Eng.), gtr., voc., drums; Dan Peek (b. Nov. 1, 1950, Panama City, FL), gtr., voc.; Gerry Beckley (b. Sep. 12, 1952, Fort Worth, TX), gtr., voc. 1972—America (Warner Bros.); Homecoming 1973—Hat Trick 1974—Holiday 1975—Hearts; History: America's Greatest Hits 1976—Hideaway; Harbor 1977—America/Live (– Peek) 1979—Silent Letter (Capitol) 1980—Alibi 1982—View From the Ground 1983—Your Move 1984—Perspective 1990—Encore! More Greatest Hits (Rhino) 1994—Hourglass (American Gramophone) 1998—Human Nature.

With its breezy acoustic guitars, high vocal harmonies, and smooth production, America was one of the most popular U.S. folk-rock groups of the early '70s. Sons of U.S. servicemen stationed in England, America's members were schoolmates in London's Central High when they began composing and performing together. Three years later "A Horse With No Name" hit #1 in March 1972. A string of gold and platinum singles ("I Need You," #9, 1972; "Ventura Highway," #8, 1972; "Tin Man," #4, 1974; "Lonely People," #5, 1975; "Sister Golden Hair," #1, 1975) and albums followed.

After Dan Peek's departure in May 1977, America continued as a duo, but with less success. Peek, who had become a born-again Christian, made some religious records; his 1979 All Things Are Possible was nominated for a Grammy. In late 1981 Bunnell and Beckley were the subject of controversy when they toured South Africa, defying the "cultural boycott" the United Nations had instituted to protest the nation's apartheid policies.

Bunnell and Beckley collaborated with Billy Mumy (Will Robinson from TV's Lost in Space) and in 1982 America returned to the Top 10 with "You Can Do Magic" from View From the Ground. Subsequent albums, however, fared poorly, with Perspective (which included songs by Jimmy Webb, among others) peaking at #185. Bunnell and Beckley continue to tour, in 1993 Peek rejoined them as America opened for the Beach Boys. After a 10-year absence from the studio, Bunnell and Beckley returned to record Hourglass. In 1998 America signed a multialbum deal with Oxygen Records. That same year the band performed "Ventura High-

The American Breed

Al Ciner (b. May 14, 1947, Chicago), gtr.; Gary Loizzo (b. Aug. 16, 1945, Chicago), gtr., voc.; Lee Graziano (b. Nov. 9, 1943, Chicago), drums; Charles Colbert (b. Aug. 30, 1944, Chicago), bass; later added Kevin Murphy, kybds.

1967—American Breed (Dot) 1968—Bend Me, Shape Me; Pumpkin, Powder, Scarlet and Green (Atlantic); Lonely Side of the City.

With five hit singles in 1967 and 1968, the American Breed was one of Chicago's top pop bands. Originally called Gary and the Nite Lights, they recorded one unsuccessful single for MGM entitled "I Don't Think You Know Me." After signing with Acta, a Dot subsidiary, they changed their name to the American Breed and rereleased the song, thus beginning a short but successful string of hits including "Step Out of Your Mind" (#24, 1967), "Green Light" (#39, 1968), and the song for which the band is best remembered, "Bend Me, Shape Me" (#1, 1968). Following the American Breed's peak years, Kevin Murphy, along with André Fischer (a later member) and Chaka Khan [see entry], founded Rufus in 1972. Fischer later married singer Natalie Cole. Gary Loizzo worked through the late '60s as a jingles singer before establishing his recording studio, Pumpkin Studio, in a Chicago suburb. He has produced records by Styx and Liza Minelli, among others. The American Breed still performs; in 1993 it released an homage to its local baseball team, "Rock With the Sox."

Mark Eitzel (b. Jan. 30, 1959, Walnut Creek, CA), voc. gtr.; Mark "Vudi" Pankler (b. Sep. 22, 1952, Chicago, IL), gtr.; Dan Pearson (b. May 31, 1959, Walnut Creek), bass, gtr., mandolin, voc.; Brad Johnson, kybds.; Matt Norelli, drums.

1985—The Restless Stranger (Gritter) 1987—(– Johnson; – Norelli; + Tom Mallon, gtr., drums, voc.; + Dave Scheff, drums) Engine (Gritter/Frontier) 1988—(– Scheff) California 1989—(– Mallon; + Mike Simms, drums) United Kingdom (Demon, U.K.) 1991—(+ Bruce Kaphan [b. Jan. 7, 1955, San Francisco], pedal steel gtr., kybds.) Everclear (Alias) 1993—(– Simms; + Tim Mooney [b. Oct. 6, 1958, Las Vegas, NV], drums) Mercury (Reprise) 1994—San Francisco 1995—Hello Amsterdam EP.

Mark Eitzel solo: 1991—Songs of Love (Demon, U.K.) 1996—60 Watt Silver Lining (Warner Bros.) 1997—West 1998—Caught in a Trap and I Can't Back Out 'Cause I Love You Too Much, Baby (Matador) 2001—The Invisible Man.

Led by the charismatic songwriter Mark Eitzel, American Music Club became one of the most acclaimed U.S. underground bands of the '80s.

In 1980 Eitzel moved to San Francisco from Columbus,

Ohio, with his band Naked Skinnies. After that group dissolved, he formed American Music Club, going through various lineups and becoming infamous for his desperate attempts to either entertain or terrify the audience. Tom Mallon produced and released the band's debut on his Gritter label, later he joined the group. The Restless Stranger introduced Eitzel's songs of loneliness and decay, set to AMC's postpunk honky-tonk. Engine featuring such classic downers as "Gary's Song," "Nightwatchman," and "Outside This Bar," revealed emotional and musical depth. California confirmed the band as an underground favorite and garnered international attention.

When the band's label, Frontier, signed a licensing deal with BMG it financed what would have been AMC's major-label debut. Bruce Kaphan, who had been playing as a sideman for the band, joined full-time and produced Everclear, but the BMG deal collapsed, and AMC parted company with both Frontier and Mallon. While in limbo, the band recorded the partially live United Kingdom, named after the only country in which the album was released and where AMC had developed a strong following. In 1991 Eitzel released a solo live record, Songs of Love, on the same label.

Everclear was eventually released by the indie Alias to much fanfare (ROLLING STONE critics dubbed it album of the year in 1991) but negligible sales. Eitzel's alienation from religion—as a teen, he was born again—fueled songs like "What the Pillar of Salt Held Up" and "Jesus' Hands." Notorious for his often alcohol-induced rages and depressions, the singer became sober around this time. He subsequently returned to drinking, although not to the onstage abuses of yore.

In 1991 AMC's revolving door of drummers settled on the Toiling Midgets' Tim Mooney, who had also played with the band in the mid-'80s (Eitzel moonlighted in the Midgets for a while and sang on their 1992 Matador release Son). The band signed with Reprise/Warner Bros. in 1992 after a bidding war. Mercury, produced by Mitchell Froom, was a strange major-label debut, full of lush, discordant music and obtuse majoring with titles like "What Godzilla Said to God When His Name Wasn't Found in the Book of Life" and "Johnny Mathis' Feet."

The title cut of AMC's 1995 Hello Amsterdam EP (the song first appeared on 1994's San Francisco) confronted the band's commercial lack of success and proved to be its last gasp. In 1996 Eitzel released his second solo album, 60 Watt Silver Lining, a jazzy adult-contemporary affair. Eitzel made West, a collaboration with R.E.M.'s Peter Dinklage, in 1997. Recorded with members of Yo La Tengo and Sonic Youth, Caught in a Trap and I Can't Back Out 'Cause I Love You Too Much, Baby appeared the following year. Meanwhile, former AMC members Mooney and Pearson formed Clodhopper, a rootsy, banjo-driven outfit that included Pearl Jam's Jeff Ament, and released Red's Recovery Room in 1998.

Born Myra Ellen Amos, Aug. 22, 1963, Newton, NC

the Pink 1996—Boys for Pele; Hey Jupiter EP 1998—From the Choirgirl Hotel (Atlantic) 1999—To Venus and Back (Atlantic).

After spending her youth studying classical piano, child prodigy Toni Amos' first foray into rock—with her hard-rock band Y Kant Ton Read—was mercifully short. It was a return to her beloved piano and the development of an intimate style of pop songwriting that brought her widespread success.

The youngest of three children of a Methodist minister father and homemaker mother, Amos showed signs of being a gifted musician when she began tinkering on the piano at age two and a half. At five, she began studying classical piano at the prestigious Peabody Institute at Baltimore's Johns Hopkins University. After she insisted on playing her own pop compositions for the school's examination board, her scholarship wasn't renewed. By the time she was 13, Amos was performing her songs at clubs in Washington, DC.

In 1984 Amos moved to L.A. to pursue her dream of becoming a rock star, she also began calling herself Toni. Three years later she signed a deal with Atlantic Records, and in 1988 her band Y Kant Ton Read, which included future Guns n' Roses drummer Matt Sorum, released one self-titled album. Adorned with teased hair and sporting a low-cut corset, Amos appeared on the LP's cover brandishing a saber.

The album's quick failure and a cathartic experience at the piano resulted in many of the extremely personal songs that eventually appeared on Amos's solo debut, Little Earthquakes. The most revealing, "Me and a Gun," detailed Amos' experience of being raped by an acquaintance.

With her record company's encouragement, Amos moved to London to perform in that city's small clubs—and to help break her album in a smaller market. By the end of 1992 Little Earthquakes had gone gold in Britain, a year later, it went gold in the U.S. as well. Crucify, an EP of mostly covers, included a soft, understated "Smells Like Teen Spirit."

With her more ornate platinum followup, Under the Pink (#12, 1994), Amos continued to embrace songs about the female experience: "God" questions male authority; "Cornflake Girl" explores what happens when one woman betrays another. Boys for Pele debuted in 1996 at #2 and quickly went platinum, despite being her least accessible album to date.

Amos collapsed during a grueling world tour in support of Boys for Pele. In 1998 she married Mark Hawley, an engineer working on From the Choirgirl Hotel (#5, 1998). That album departed from Amos' "girl with a piano" image with fuller instrumentation and dance-music twiddles, and it included "Jackie's Strength," a ballad in which she compares Jacqueline Kennedy's wedding day with her own. The two-disc set To Venus and Back (#12, 1999) comprises one disc of new studio tracks and one disc of live recordings from her 1998 tour.

In 1994 Amos cofounded RAINN, the Rape, Abuse and Incest National Network, which operates a free 24-hour hotline and works with more than 600 crisis centers across the country. She continues to serve as a chairperson on RAINN's board and participates in fund-raisers such as pay-per-view video downloads on the Web, ticket auctions, and benefit concerts.

Eric Andersen

Born Feb. 14, 1943, Pittsburgh, PA
 1965—Today Is the Highway (Vanguard) 1966—Bout Changes & Things 1967—Bout Changes & Things, Take Two 1968—More Hits From Tin Can Alley; Avalanche (Warner Bros.) 1969—A Country Dream (Vanguard); Eric Andersen (Warner Bros.) 1972—The Best of Eric Andersen (Vanguard); Blue River (Columbia) 1975—Be True to You (Arista) 1976—Sweet Surprise 1977—The Best Songs 1989—Ghosts Upon the Road (Gold Castle) 1991—Stages: The Lost Album (Columbia) 1999—Memory of the Future (Applesseed); Violets of Dawn (Vanguard) 2000—You Can't Relive the Past (Applesseed).
 With Danko/Fjeld/Andersen: 1991—Danko/Fjeld/Andersen (Rykodisc) 1994—Ridin' on the Blinds.

Eric Andersen is a critically acclaimed folksinger/songwriter best known for his compositions such as "Thirsty Boots," "Violets of Dawn," "Be True to You," and "Is It Really Love at All?" Andersen, who began playing guitar at age eight, attended Hobart College in Geneva, New York. He traveled via freight car to the West Coast in search of a music publishing deal. When nothing developed, he returned East.

While living in Cambridge in 1963, the singer/guitarist became part of the burgeoning folk scene. A brief period of homelessness in Cambridge inspired his later composition "Ghosts Upon the Road." In 1964 he moved to Greenwich Village, where he performed at Gerde's Folk City and the Gaslight Cafe, garnering enthusiastic reviews in the New York Times and elsewhere. Several days after his arrival, he had secured a recording contract with Vanguard Records. With the 1965 release of his debut album and his frequent appearances in New York and at the Newport and Cambridge folk festivals, Andersen established himself on the folk circuit.

Though he has never had a hit single, most of his albums have been well received by critics, who praise his poetic, evocative lyrics, particularly on Blue River, his best-selling album to date, and Ghosts Upon the Road, considered one of the best albums of the '80s. Release of the long-awaited followup to Blue River was delayed when the master tapes were lost. They were not found again until 1991, when researchers looking through old tapes for a Paul Revere and the Raiders anthology stumbled across an unmarked reel. The rediscovered recordings were released in 1991 as Stages and include appearances by Leon Russell and Joan Baez. Andersen's songs have been recorded by Rick Nelson, Judy Collins, Peter, Paul and Mary, Johnny Cash, Joan Baez, the Grateful Dead, Fairport Convention, and Linda Ronstadt.

Since the '80s, Andersen primarily has made his home in Norway, where he also founded his own record label. His collaborations with the Band's Rick Danko and Norwegian folksinger Jonas Fjeld resulted in a pair of critically acclaimed albums. John Prine produced Andersen's 1999 album, Memory of the Future, which also included such guests as Danko and Garth Hudson of the Band, Heartbreakers Howie Epstein and Benmont Tench, and Dylan bassist Tony Garnier. Andersen recorded much of his 2000 release, the bluesy You Can't Relive the Past, in Mississippi, though four tracks were originally cowritten and recorded with the late Townes Van Zandt in 1986. Lou Reed cowrote and added vocals to the title track. Andersen's prose has appeared in such publications as 1999's The ROLLING STONE Book of the Beats.

John Anderson

Born John David Anderson, Dec. 13, 1954, Apopka, FL
 1980—John Anderson (Warner Bros.) 1981—John Anderson 2; I Just Came Home to Count the Memories 1982—Wild & Blue 1983—All the People Are Talkin' 1984—Eye of a Hurricane; Greatest Hits 1985—Tokyo, Oklahoma 1986—Countrified 1988—Blue Skies Again (MCA); 10 1990—Too Tough to Tame (Capitol); Greatest Hits, vol. 2 (Warner Bros.) 1992—Seminole Wind (BNA) 1993—Solid Ground 1994—You Can't Keep a Good Memory Down (MCA); Christmas Time (BNA); Country 'Til I Die 1995—Swingin' 1996—Greatest Hits; Paradise 1997—Takin' the Country Back (Mercury) 1998—Super Hits (BNA); The Essential John Anderson 1999—Backtracks (Renaissance) 2001—Nobody's Got It All (Columbia).

John Anderson's career is an exception to F. Scott Fitzgerald's maxim that there are no second acts in American life. One of the first "New Traditionalist" stars, Anderson enjoyed 22 Top 40 C&W hits between 1982 and 1987, including three #1s ("Wild & Blue" [1982], "Swingin'" [1983], and "Black Sheep" [1983]), before bad management and label changes brought his career to a halt. But in the 1990s Anderson returned, placing five singles in the Top 10, including three more #1s: "Straight Tequila Night" (1991), "Seminole Wind" (1992), and "Money in the Bank" (1993). Rock & roll was Anderson's first love, but listening to Merle Haggard at 14 made him a convert to country. He followed his sister Donna to Nashville in 1972, working on the Opryland construction crew by day and playing clubs with her at night. After a deal with Ace of Hearts Records in 1974 resulted in three unsuccessful singles, he concentrated on songwriting; in 1977 Warner Bros. signed him to a singles deal. Anderson's singing, usually compared to Lefty Frazier, garnered some attention, and in 1978 George Jones covered Anderson's first Top 40 hit, "The Girl at the End of the Bar" (#40 C&W, 1978). It took until 1980 and five Top 40 hits for Warners to release his first album. Anderson won the Country Music Association's Best New Artist award in 1981. Two years later he became one of the earliest New Traditionalist stars to cross over when "Swingin'" hit #43 on the pop chart and the album Wild & Blue went to #58.

After four more unhappy years with Warners, Anderson followed producer Jimmy Bowen to MCA. But MCA seemed unsure of how to handle Anderson (only "Somewhere Between Ragged and Right" [#23 C&W, 1987] cracked the Top 30), yet another label change (to Capitol) did not improve matters. In the wake of new stars like Garth Brooks, Anderson seemed like a has-been.

In a strange turn of events, Dire Straits guitarist Mark Knopfler helped Anderson's comeback. After seeing him play, Knopfler took Anderson's case to RCA, which signed him to their new BNA subsidiary. Knopfler then wrote and played on "When It Comes to You" (#2 C&W, 1991) from Seminole Wind (#35 pop, #10 C&W, 1992). Anderson followed it up with Solid Ground (#75 pop, #12 C&W, 1993), MCA capitalized on Anderson's commercial renewal with a 1994 anthology, You Can't Keep a Good Memory Down. Paradise (#40 C&W, 1996), despite guest appearances by Knopfler and the Band's Levon Helm, was something of a commercial disappointment, and after its release, Anderson changed labels once again, moving to Mercury. His first album for the label, 1997's Takin' the Country Back revived his career yet again, peaking at #19 C&W, spawning a hit single in "Somebody Slap Me" (#22 C&W, 1997). Moving to Columbia, Anderson released the rootsy Nobody's Got It All in 2001.

Laurie Anderson

Born June 5, 1947, Chicago, IL
 1982—Big Science (Warner Bros.) 1984—Mister Heartbreak; The United States Live 1986—Home of the Brave 1989—Strange Angels 1994—Bright Red 1995—The Ugly One With the Jewels; In Our Sleep EP 2000—Talk Normal: The Anthology (Rhino).

Avant-garde performance artist Laurie Anderson had a British pop hit with her 1981 recording "O Superman" (b/w "Walk the Dog"). Like all her music, "O Superman" was just one aspect of a larger multimedia oeuvre—in this case a seven-hour work in four parts called United States, I-IV, which premiered at the Brooklyn Academy of Music early in 1983. (A lavishly illustrated book about the show was published shortly thereafter, as well as the five-record United States Live.) With background music performed on various electronic keyboard instruments and woodwinds, and Anderson's speaking and singing voice (sometimes electronically treated), "O Superman" was one of the year's more unusual hits.

Anderson studied violin through her teens, and moved from Chicago to New York in 1967. She earned a B.A. in art history from Barnard College in 1969 and an M.F.A. in sculpture from Columbia University in 1972. She then taught art history and Egyptian architecture at City College. Anderson's works incorporate graphics, sculpture, film, slides, lighting, music, mime, and spoken and printed language. She claims that all her pieces are based on words and their declamation. In 1973 she began performing her works publicly, and by 1976 she was performing in museums, concert halls, and art festivals around the United States and in Europe. "O Superman" sold over 30,000 copies in Europe in 1981, reaching #2 in Britain, and Anderson signed for an album with Warner Bros. The American response to the single was considerably milder.

In 1982 Warner Bros. released her debut album, Big Science. Its follow-up, a collaboration with Peter Gabriel entitled Mister Heartbreak, was Anderson's only LP to chart in the Top 100, peaking at #60 in 1984. She composed the musical score for director Jonathan Demme's 1987 film of monologist Spalding Gray's Swimming to Cambodia and, later, Gray's Monster in a Box (1991). On Strange Angels she abandoned her electronically treated vocals for her regular singing voice.

Bright Red was inspired by her brush with death while mountain climbing in Tibet in the early '90s. The album, recorded with Brian Eno, also featured Lou Reed, with whom Anderson was romantically involved. The two-disc set Talk Normal: The Anthology was released in 2000. Also in 2000, she signed with Nonesuch.

Anderson consistently has toured with various pieces including "Talk Normal" (1987-88), "Speaking Japanese" (1989), "Empty Places" (1990), "Voices From the Beyond" (1991), "Stories From the Nerve Bible" (1993), which appears on The Ugly One With the Jewels, and "The Speed of Darkness" (1997-98). In addition, she has also collaborated with Interval Research Corporation, a research and development lab, on new creative tools, such as the Talking Stick. Among her books are The Package: A Mystery (1971), Transportation (1974), Notebook (1977), Words in Reverse (1979), Home of the Brave (1986), Empty Places (1991), Stories From the Nerve Bible (1994), and Laune Anderson (2000), which offers the first major career retrospective of her visual work.

The Angels

Formed 1961, Orange, NJ
 Barbara Allbut (b. Sep. 24, 1940, Orange), voc.; Phyllis "Jiggs" Allbut Meister (b. Sep. 24, 1942, Orange), voc.; Linda Jansen (b. Hillside, NJ), voc.
 1962—(- Jansen; + Peggy Santiglia McCannon [b. May 4, 1944, Bellview, NJ], voc.) 1963—My Boyfriend's Back (Smash); A Halo to You.

The Angels were one of the most successful of the early-'60s girl groups. Originally known as the Starlets, they were formed when Barbara and Jiggs Allbut, who had sung together in high school, began doing backup vocal work in New York with Linda Jansen. After they were signed to Caprice, Jiggs dropped out of college and Barbara (who arranged the group's early records) ended her studies at the Juilliard School of Music. Shortly before their first release, "Til," they drew the name Blue Angels out of a hat, then dropped the Blue. Their debut single went to #14 in 1961; after their second, "Cry Baby Cry" (#38, 1962), lead vocalist Jansen left and was replaced by Peggy Santiglia, who had sung commercial jingles and appeared on Broadway in Do Re Mi.

Several more singles failed to click until the Angels released the million-selling "My Boyfriend's Back" (#1 pop, #2 R&B, 1963), cowritten by producer Richard Gottschler. After a few minor follow-ups—"I Adore Him" (#25, 1963), "Thank You and Goodnight" (#84, 1963), and "Wow Wow Wee (He's the Boy for Me)" (#41, 1964)—the group faded from the limelight. They provided backup vocals for other singers, including Jackie Wilson and Lou Christie ("Lightnin' Strikes"), and continued to record. They broke up in 1969, then re-formed in the early '70s as the oldies craze created a new audience for their appearances. They cut their last major-label single for Polydor in 1974, "Papa's Side of the Bed."

Of the original British Invasion bands, the Animals were the most clearly influenced by black American R&B rather than blues. Originally the Alan Price Combo (formed in 1958), they became the Animals shortly after the addition of lead vocalist Eric Burdon in 1962. By 1964, under the wing of UK producer Mickie Most, they had recorded their second single, "House of the Rising Sun," a #1 hit on both sides of the Atlantic in summer 1964.

More hits followed through 1966: "Don't Let Me Be Misunderstood" (#15, 1965), "We Gotta Get Out of This Place"

(#13, 1965), and "It's My Life" (#23, 1965). In late 1965 Price left the band (the result of tension between him and Burdon) for a solo career. That, and frequent drug use by members, shook up the band somewhat, but Price was replaced by Dave Rowberry, and the Animals had another hit ("Inside-Looking Out," #34, 1966) before John Steel left. With Barry Jenkins (formerly of the Nashville Teens) replacing Steel, the group had several more hits ("Don't Bring Me Down," #12, 1966; "See See Rider," #10, 1966), but by the end of the year Hilton Valentine left to pursue a solo career, and Chas Chandler became a successful manager (the Animals, Jimi Hendrix, and Slade). Steel became Chandler's assistant.

Now billed Eric Burdon and the Animals, the band endorsed psychedelia with "San Franciscan Nights" (#9, 1967), "Monterey" (#15, 1968), and "Sky Pilot" (#14, 1968). The Animals fell apart, but a year and a half later Burdon formed Eric Burdon and the New Animals, with a lineup that briefly included future Police guitarist Andy Summers, before embarking on an intermittently successful solo career [see entry].

The original Animals reunited for a Christmas show at City Hall in Newcastle in 1968. In 1969 Valentine recorded a solo album entitled All in Your Head. The original band reunited in 1976 to record a one-shot LP, Before We Were So Rudely Interrupted. In 1983 they reunited once more. The Animals recorded Ark and mounted a tour (captured on Rip It to Shreds) before the band members again went their separate ways. In 1992 an Animals lineup that included Vic Briggs (who had become a Sikh and recorded under the name Vikram S. Khalsa) and Barry Jenkins performed in Moscow's Red Square. In 1994 the Animals were inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. Chandler died of a heart attack in 1996.

Born July 30, 1941, Ottawa, Can.

1960—Paul Anka Sings His Big 15 (ABC); Paul Anka Sings His

Big 15, vol. 2; Anka at the Copa; Young, Alive and in Love (RCA); Let's Sit This One Out; Diana and Other Hits; Paul Anka's 21 Golden Hits; Goodnight My Love; Life Goes On; Paul Anka (Buddah) 1972—Jubilation (United Artists) 1975—Feelings; Times of Your Life; The Painter; The Music Man; Listen to Your Heart (RCA); Paul Anka—His Best; Both Sides of Love; Walk a Fine Line (Columbia) 1989—30th Anniversary Collection (Rhino) 1996—Amigos (Columbia).

Disparaged by critics for his often overwrought vocal style on songs such as "Puppy Love," Paul Anka was unique among late-'50s teen idols in that he was also a successful songwriter. After his string of early hits tapered off in 1962, Anka concentrated on composing film scores (The Longest Day) and writing and performing more adult-oriented works, like the English lyrics to the French song that became Frank Sinatra's theme song, "My Way."

The son of a Lebanese restaurateur, Anka began performing at age 10, singing and doing impersonations. Four years later Anka's father paid for a trip to Hollywood, where, in September 1956, the 15-year-old recorded "I Confess" (backed by the Cadets) for Modern. Anka returned to Canada and later, though underage, worked a nightclub in Gloucester, Massachusetts. In 1957 he won a contest for saving soup-can labels. First prize was a trip to New York City, and in May of that year Anka auditioned for ABC with "Diana," a song he had written about a girl he knew. Within a year, "Diana" was a #1 hit.

Throughout his career, Anka composed many of his hits, including "You Are My Destiny" (#7, 1958), "Crazy Love" (#15, 1958), "Lonely Boy" (#1, 1959), "Hello Young Lovers" (#23, 1960), "Put Your Head on My Shoulder" (#2, 1959), and "Puppy Love" (#2, 1960), the latter two about his relationship with Annette Funicello. In 1962 he purchased all of his masters from ABC and signed with RCA. Although his Top 20 hits ended temporarily in 1962, he continued to write and record in French, German, and Italian and remained a top concert draw around the globe. Like many of his teen-idol contemporaries, Anka briefly essayed an acting career; his film credits include Girls Town (1959), Look in Any Window (1961), and The Longest Day (1962), for which he also wrote the theme song.

In 1970 he signed with Buddah, and four years later Anka's controversial "(You're) Having My Baby," a duet with his protégée Odia Coates, became his first #1 since 1959. Due in part to outcry against the song's seemingly sexist tone, Anka substitutes "our baby" for "my baby" in concert. In 1983 he made his last foray into the Top 40 with "Hold Me 'Til the Mornin' Comes." He has become a fixture on the Las Vegas-Lake Tahoe circuit, where he is extremely successful. Over 400 of his compositions have been recorded, including "It Don't Matter Anymore" (Buddy Holly), "My Way" (Frank Sinatra), and "She's a Lady" (Tom Jones). He wrote the Tonight Show theme (originally entitled "It's Really Love," and written for and recorded by Funicello). His "Times of Your Life" became the signature song for Kodak films in the mid-'70s. He has amassed worldwide record sales in excess of 100 million copies.

Anthrax began as an average posthardcore thrash band but eventually developed its own distinct sound by blending rap's street sense with heavy metal's brute force. The band hit a career height in 1991 when it joined forces with rap group Public Enemy for a recording and video of the latter's rallying cry, "Bring the Noise." Two years later the band inked a reported $10 million, five-album deal with Elektra.

Anthrax hit New York City's postpunk metal scene in 1981 when Bayside, Queens, native Scott Ian, still in his teens, formed the band along with friends Neil Turbin and former Overkill guitarist Dan Spitz. The group literally began following managers Johnny and Marsha Zazula, heads of the independent metal label Megaforce Records, around the city. Eventually the couple signed the band and began directing its career. By album number three, Anthrax had landed on Island, and its cult following had begun to expand. The group's 1987 EP, I'm the Man, sold platinum and hinted at Anthrax's growing social consciousness in songs such as "Indians" and "One World."

One of the few heavy-metal-oriented bands to get consistently high critical marks, Anthrax—along with Metallica and Megadeth—redefined the metal genre in the '80s, stressing anger, speed, and emotional intensity over big hair and power ballads. The band flirted with funk and rap rhythms, a sound that peaked with "Bring the Noise." Anthrax adjusted its style after replacing longtime lead singer Joey BellaDonna with L.A. native and ex-Armored Saint singer John Bush in 1992. Bush, a more traditional, smooth-voiced vocalist, gave the group a slicker sound, though the basic speed-metal foundation remained. The band signed a much-publicized $10 million contract with Elektra, but left the label after just two albums.

By 1995's Stomp 442, lead guitarist Spitz had departed the group, which remained as a four-piece. Drummer Charlie Benante began dabbling on lead guitar during the recording Guitanist Scott Ian was arrested in 1998 (though the charges were later dropped) after breaking into a New York Yankees training facility.

Vol. 8—The Threat Is Real (#118, 1998) included guest appearances by the likes of Pantera's Phil Anselmo and Dimebag Darrell, joining forces to celebrate the return of hard, hard rock at the end of the '90s. The most popular songs from the band's first two decades were gathered for Return of the Killer A's in 1999, setting in motion plans for both singers BellaDonna and Bush to lead an Anthrax tour in 2000. BellaDonna withdrew from the tour shortly before it began.

 As Mike & Rich: 1996—Expert Knob Twiddlers (with Michael Paradinas) (RePhLeX, U.K.).

Aphex Twin is perhaps the best known of the many monikers used by Richard D. James, one of the more creative minds in '90s electronica. James, who has recorded as AFX, Polygon Window, Caustic Window, and several others, is equally capable of both Eno-esque ambient pieces and headache-inducing techno. He will juxtapose melodies played by computer-generated string instruments with frantic, mechanized beat patterns that make sense only to him. More an avant-garde composer than a creator of dance-floor hits, he has spent most of his extremely prolific career ignoring commercial trends.

James began his unique approach to music making early on. As a child, he conducted sound experiments on the strings and hammers of his family piano; by age 14, he had recorded his first compositions. During the late '80s, he DJ'd at raves in Cornwall before moving to London, where he attended college for one year before dropping out to focus on his music. His first release came in 1991 with the Analogue Bubblebath EP, recorded with Tom Middleton (known as Schizophrenia). His second EP, Analogue Bubblebath, vol. 2—a solo James effort under the name AFX—followed the same year, it contained the single "Digeridoo" (#55, U.K.), which foreshadowed the advent of drum-and-bass. After putting out a series of singles as Caustic Window on his own RePhLeX imprint, James released his first full-length album as Aphex Twin, Selected Ambient Works 85-92, in 1992. Hailing the album as an ambient masterpiece comparable to work by the Orb and Brian Eno, critics similarly applauded Selected Ambient Works, vol. 2, which followed two years later and went to #11 in the U.K.

His next Aphex Twin full-length, ... I Care Because You Do, saw James seeking a middle ground between his ambient and hardcore techno compositions. The result placed him more in line with minimalist composers like Philip Glass, who attempted to re-create one of the album's songs with a live orchestra on his Donkey Rhubarb EP. The Richard D. James Album continued its namesake's marriage of drifting melodies and frenzied beats, as did the Come to Daddy EP (#36, U.K.) and 1999's "Windowlicker" (#16, U.K.) single. James spent 2000 writing the score to the independent short film Flex.

Fiona Apple

Born Fiona Apple McAfee-Maggart, Sep. 13, 1977, New York, NY

1996—Tidal (Work/Clean Slate/Sony) 1999—When the Pawn Hits the Conflicts He Thinks Like a King What He Knows Throws the Blows When He Goes to the Fighting and He'll Win the Whole Thing 'Fore He Enters the Ring There's No Body to Batter When Your Mind Is Your Might So When You Go Solo, You Hold Your Own Hand and Remember That Depth Is the Greatest of Heights and If You Know Where You Stand, Then You Know Where to Land and If You Fall It Won't Matter, 'Cuz You'll Know That You're Right (Clean Slate/Epic/Sony).

A late-'90s overnight sensation, Fiona Apple was cast as the antidote to packaged pop divettes like Britney Spears and Christina Aguilera. Considering her angst-ridden lyrics and her propensity to shock interviewers, some critics classed her among such provocateurs as Alanis Morissette and Sinéad O'Connor; others, listening to her jazz-tinged, full-throated, accomplished debut, compared her to Laura Nyro and Nina Simone.

Her parents, actor Brandon Maggart and singer/dancer/chef Diane McAfee, never married and separated when Fiona was four years old. Her father relocated to L.A.; Fiona grew up in Manhattan with her mother and older sister. Teaching herself piano (and starting psychotherapy) at eight, Fiona was drawn to the Beatles, Jimi Hendrix, Joan Armatrading, and jazz standards. The primary influence she claims was the poet Maya Angelou; Apple herself wrote poetry and journals as a girl, then, at 11, began combining music and lyrics. Moving to L.A. at 16, Apple completed high school through independent study and recorded a three-song demo. She passed a tape along to a friend who baby-sat for Kathryn Schenker, the publicist for Sting and Lenny Kravitz, among others. Impressed by Fiona's precocious talent, Schenker alerted Wallflowers manager Andy Slater, who landed the singer a record contract in early 1996.

Tidal, featuring Apple's melodically and rhythmically intricate songs, strong piano work, and achingly confessional lyrics, along with Slater's inventive production work, drew nearly unalloyed raves. Yet Apple was controversial, speaking openly about her rape at age 12 (the basis for the song "Sullen Girl") and appearing in her underwear for the video for "Criminal" (#21 pop, 1997). The video was interpreted alternately as either self-exploitation or a cryptic denunciation of such exploitation. Accorded Best New Artist in a Video honors at the 1997 MTV Video Awards, Apple, in an obscenity-laced acceptance speech, denied the star-making machinery of show biz and its deleterious effects on adolescents, a maneuver that was mocked by some and praised by others. Musically, with gems like the Modern Rock hit "Shadowboxer" making her case, Apple was unassailable; in media terms, however, she'd become known as a "loose cannon."

In 1999 Apple chose a 90-word "poem" as a title for her followup to the double-platinum-selling Tidal. When the Pawn... (#13, 1999) showed influences ranging from the late Beatles to bossa nova, and yielded the Modern Rock hit "Fast as You Can."

The Archies

Formed 1968, Riverdale, NY

"Archie" (Ron Dante, b. Carmine Granito, Aug. 22, 1945, Staten Island, NY), voc.; Toni Wine, voc.; Ellie Greenwich (b. 1940, Brooklyn, NY), voc.; Andy Kim (b. Andrew Joachim, Dec. 5, 1946, Montreal, Can.), voc.; Tony Passalacqua, voc.

1968—The Archies (Calendar) 1969—Everything's Archie (RCA); Jingle Jangle 1970—Sunshine (Kirshner); The Archies Greatest Hits 1993—The Archies (Sony).

The Archies were a make-believe group based on the comic book and mid-'60s cartoon series of the same name. "Sugar, Sugar," cowritten by Jeff Barry and Andy Kim, was a #1 hit and the biggest-selling single of 1969, with 6 million copies sold worldwide. Songwriter Barry produced the Archies: studio musicians (among them Hugh McCracken, Dave Appell, and Bobby Bloom) were hired to provide the cartoon series' soundtrack. The singing Archie, voiced by Ron Dante, led his group, which included songwriters Ellie Greenwich and Andy Kim, through a number of hits, including "Bang-Shang-a-Lang" (#2, 1968), "Jingle Jangle" (#10, 1969), and "Who's Your Baby" (#40, 1970).

Dante later produced several Barry Manilow hits and records by Cher and Pat Benatar. In 1971 he became editor of the literary magazine Pans Review. He continued to work as a composer through the '90s. Among his most familiar recent "performances" is the "You deserve a break today" theme from McDonald's commercials. Andy Kim went on to a successful pop career, with a number of Top 40 singles, among them "Baby I Love You" (#9, 1969) and "Rock Me Gently" (#1, 1974).

Argent/Rod Argent

Rod Argent (b. June 14, 1941, St. Albans, Eng.), kybds., voc.; Jim Rodford (b. July 7, 1941, Eng.), bass; Robert Henrit (b. May 2, 1944, Broxbourne, Eng.), drums; Russ Ballard (b. Oct. 31, 1945, Waltham Cross, Eng.), gtr., voc.

Rod Argent solo: 1991—Red House (Relativity).

After the Zombies broke up in 1967, keyboardist Rod Argent started his own band just in time to capitalize on the Zombies' postmortem hit, "Time of the Season" (#3, 1969). Argent had heavier rhythms than the Zombies, while continuing that band's penchant for minor keys and obscure lyrics. Although their debut album was their most consistent, the group peaked commercially with "Hold Your Head Up" (#5, 1972), and "Liar" and "God Gave Rock & Roll to You" became FM-radio staples. In 1974 songwriter Ballard left, and after expanding to a quintet, Argent folded in mid-1976. In recent years, the group has re-formed to perform for charities.

Ballard and Argent went on to solo careers, although Ballard was more successful as a songwriter (Redbone's "Come and Get Your Love," Three Dog Night's "Liar," Rainbow's "Since You've Been Gone," Ace Frehley's "New York Groove," Santana's "Winning," Hot Chocolate's "So You Win Again") and producer (Roger Daltrey, Leo Sayer) than as a performer. John Venty, Jim Rodford, and Robert Henrit formed Phoenix, which recorded briefly for Columbia. By 1978 Rodford had joined the Kinks, six years later Henrit joined him as Mick Avory's replacement.

Through the years Rod Argent has worked as a pianist, composer, record producer, and arranger. He played piano on the Who's "Who Are You," coproduced Nanci Griffith's Late Night Grand Hotel, and has scored music for BBC Television. His musical Masquerade was staged in London in 1982, and he was the keyboardist for the London productions of two Andrew Lloyd Webber musicals, Starlight Express and Cats. He released a series of U.K. solo albums in the late '70s and '80s: Moving Home, Siren Songs, and Red House (which was released in the U.S. as well). In 1994 Argent coproduced and played keyboards on Jules Shear's Healing Bones. He has since become a classical pianist, his 1998 solo effort, Classically Speaking, mixed original compositions with works by Chopin, Greig, and Ravel. In 2001 he reunited with Zombie mate Colin Blunstone for Out of the Shadows.

Joan Armatrading

Born Dec. 9, 1950, St. Kitts, West Indies
 1974—Whatever's for Us (A&M) 1975—Back to the Night
 1976—Joan Armatrading 1977—Show Some Emotion
 1978—To the Limit 1979—How Cruel; Steppin' Out 1980—Me, Myself, I 1981—Walk Under Ladders 1983—The Key; Track Record 1985—Secret Secrets 1986—Sleight of Hand 1988—The Shouting Stage 1990—Heart and Flowers 1991—The Very Best of Joan Armatrading 1992—Square the Circle 1995—What's Inside (RCA).

Joan Armatrading's synthesis of folk, reggae, soul, and rock has made her a critical and cult favorite in America, where Me, Myself, I (#28, 1980) and The Key (#32, 1983) were successful. In Europe, particularly in the U.K., she is a major star. She left the West Indies and moved to England with her family while still a child. She began her professional career in 1972 in collaboration with lyricist Pam Nestor (born April 28, 1948, Guyana), but by the mid-'70s the two had parted.

A distinctive vocalist and lyricist, Armatrading has worked with producers Gus Dudgeon, Glyn Johns, Richard Gottelher, and Steve Lillywhite, but generally does her own arranging; she produced Heart and Flowers. Her backup bands have included alumni of Fairport Convention and Little Feat, and guitarist Albert Lee. Except for a sole charting single, "Drop the Pilot" (#78, 1983), from The Key, Armatrading has had relatively little commercial success in the States. In companson, her albums have consistently charted in the U.K. Top 30, with Show Some Emotion, Me, Myself, I, Walk Under Ladders, and The Key going Top 10. In 1994, she parted ways with her longtime label, A&M Records, and signed to RCA, which released What's Inside the following year.

Arrested Development took the light, funky sound of the Native Tongues school of hip-hop (De La Soul, Queen Latifah), blended in the folk-blues instrumentation of their native South (harmonica, acoustic guitars), added uplifting, gospel-tinged lyrics, and became one of the most successful crossover acts in rap. On the strength of its first single, "Tennessee" (#6 pop, #1 R&B), the group's 1992 debut album shot to #13 (#3 R&B).

Born in Milwaukee and raised part-time in Ripley, Tennessee, Todd Thomas grew up listening to a wide range of artists, from Kiss to Parliament/Funkadelic. His father owned a disco, but by high school he was a budding DJ who listened exclusively to hip-hop. In 1987 he moved to Georgia to study at the Art Institute of Atlanta. There he met Tim Barnwell, a New Jersey native raised in the coastal Georgia city of Savannah. After an initial, unsuccessful attempt at gangsta rap under the name Disciples of a Lyrical Rebellion, Thomas and Barnwell, who started going by the names Speech and DJ Headliner, reexamined their motives for wanting to make music. In 1988 they discovered the political fire-and-brimstone sound of Public Enemy and decided to change direction. Rejecting gangsta-rap expressions like "nigga," "bitch," and "ho," the two incorporated their Christian values into politically and philosophically charged songs that celebrated African-American culture and history. Inspired by Speech's belief that the black community needed spiritual rebirth, they renamed the group Arrested Development.

With the addition of drummer Rasa Don, the group's music became softer and funkier. By the time of its 1992 signing to Chrysalis, Arrested Development had expanded into a coed and multigenerational group, including "extended family" members Aerie Taree, Speech's cousin and designer of the group's clothing; dancer/choreographer Montsho Eshe, and elder spiritual advisor Baba Oje.

The group's platinum-selling debut was a critical as well as commercial success. The album produced two other hits: "People Everyday" (#3 pop, #2 R&B, 1992) and "Mr. Wendal" (#6, 1992). "Tennessee" featured the singer Dionne Farris, another "extended member" who ultimately left the group and had her own Top 10 single, "I Know," in 1995. The non-LP single "Revolution," recorded for Spike Lee's film Malcolm X, reached #90 (#49 R&B, 1992). In 1993 Arrested Development's performance on MTV's Unplugged (#38 R&B) was issued on CD, and the group participated in the third annual Lollapalooza Tour. Taree departed and three new members joined for the summer 1994 release, Zingalamaduni, which means "beehive of culture" in Swahili. That album was met mostly by ambivalence from critics and disappointing sales. Zingalamaduni eventually went gold, but by 1996 the band had officially split up.

The solo career of Speech has at least earned the attention of critics, if not fans. His 1996 self-titled solo debut album failed to chart at all, and the single "Like Marvin Gaye Said (What's Going On)" peaked at #59 R&B. He continued to write a column for the Milwaukee Community Journal, his mother's newspaper, and lectured on college campuses. In 1999 Speech released Hoopla on T.V.T. using strings for the first time and focusing on lyrics that were less political and more personal (though it included a version of Bob Marley's "Redemption Song"). That same year, Arrested Development reunited in Atlanta for its first concert in five years and in 2000 began recording a new album, tentatively entitled The Heroes of the Harvest.

Arrow

Born Alphonsus Cassel, Nov. 16, 1954, Montserrat, West Indies 1974—On Target (Arrow) 1977—Positively Jumpy 1983—Hot Hot Hot (Arrow/Chrysalis) 1985—Soca Savage (London) 1987—Best of Arrow, vol. 1 (Arrow) 1988—Knock Dem Dead (Mango/Island) 1989—Massive (Arrow); Ola Soca (Mango/Island) 1990—Soca Dance Party 1991—Zombie Soca (Arrow) 1992—Best of Arrow, vol. 2; Modely De Bam Bam 1993—Outrageous 1995—Phat 1997—Ride De Riddim 1998—Turbulence 1999—Best of Arrow; Hot Soca Hot.

A founding father and leading purveyor of soca, a Trinidad-based blend of soul music and calypso, Arrow is best known in the U.S. for having written "Hot, Hot, Hot"—an international hit for the singer in 1983, but an American hit only as it was covered in 1987 by Buster Poindexter (David Johansen's lounge-lizard alter ego).

The youngest of nine children, Arrow listened to American R&B on the radio while growing up in Montserrat. He began composing calypso songs at a young age, earning the island-wide title of "calypso king" in a 1971 competition. He retained the title for four years and in 1974 started releasing albums on his own label while supporting himself by selling insurance and running a men's clothing store. In 1983, with numerous LPs already to his credit, Arrow signed with Chrysalis Records. Subsequent singles such as 1984's "Long Time" and 1988's "Groove Master" proved popular in British and American dance clubs, but the singer's ebullient melodies and seductive rhythms never made him a big star outside the Caribbean. Having switched labels repeatedly throughout the '80s, Arrow returned to releasing his own albums in 1991. He continues to draw crowds at calypso and reggae festivals.

Formed 1969, Paris, Fr.

Roscoe Mitchell (b. 1940, Chicago, IL), saxes, flutes, reeds, misc.; Lester Bowie (b. 1941, Fredrick, MD; d. Nov. 9, 1999, New York, NY), trumpet, misc.; Malachi Favors, a.k.a. The Art Ensemble of Chicago was arguably the most innovative jazz group to emerge in the '70s. Its compositions and collective improvisations draw from all sorts of world musics, traditional and avant-garde jazz, rhythm & blues, African music, 20th-century European art music, even rock & roll, gospel, martial music, jug-band music, and the natural sounds of human and animal voices. The quintet has been known to employ 500 instruments in a concert, which might also include a slide show, dance, or vaudeville shtick. No matter the format, they adhere to their motto: "Great Black Music—Ancient to the Future."

The Ensemble evolved from collective jazz experiments in Chicago in the early and mid-'60s. Roscoe Mitchell and Malachi Favors first played together in Muhl Richard Abrams' Expenmental Band in 1961. Along with Abrams, the two were charter members of the Association for the Advancement of Creative Music, founded in 1965 with such jazz experimentalists as Anthony Braxton and the future members of Air (not the French duo of the same name). Lester Bowie (who had played R&B with Little Milton and Albert King) was also an AACM member. In 1968 the Roscoe Mitchell Art Ensemble (including Mitchell, Bowie, Favors, and drummer Phillip Wilson) began gigging and earned a local reputation for both their music and their integration of music and conceptual theater.

Before the end of 1968, Wilson had joined the Paul Butterfield Blues Band. The Ensemble continued without a drummer, but the addition of Joseph Jarman (who had studied under John Cage and Indian classical musicians) kept it a quartet. In 1969 the players moved to Paris, and over the next two years, they recorded 11 albums and three film scores, performed hundreds of concerts, and met drummer Don Moye (who joined the group in 1970). They returned to the U.S. in 1971 to tour. Atlantic signed the Art Ensemble in 1972, but it took a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts to finance the group's second Atlantic album. Since then the Ensemble has recorded for large and small labels including its own AECO Records.

Each of the members has recorded solo and with other musicians, including Anthony Braxton, Henry Threadgill, and Jack DeJohnette. Abrams and singer Fontella Bass (who had a #1 soul hit with "Rescue Me" in 1965; Bowie and Bass were married at this time) have performed frequently with the Art Ensemble.

Although the late 1980s and 1990s saw the band recording in a variety of different settings (Dreaming of the Masters is a collaboration with pianist Cecil Taylor; America-South Africa is a collaboration with an African vocal choir), band members' side projects cut into the Ensemble's visibility. Bowie led the popular Brass Fantasy, Mitchell composed and played with his own new music groups, and Moye played in the all-star Leaders band with Lester Bowie.

While in London, on tour with Brass Fantasy, Bowie fell ill. Subsequently diagnosed with liver cancer, he died in 1999.

Art of Noise

Formed 1983, London, Eng.

Anne Dudley (b. May 7, 1956), kybds., voc.; Jonathan "J.J." Jeczalik (b. May 11, 1955), kybds., voc.; Paul Morley, kybds., voc.; Gary Langan, various instruments.

1983—Into Battle With the Art of Noise EP (ZTT/Island); Art of Noise 1984—(Who's Afraid of?) The Art of Noise (Island) 1986—In Visible Silence (China/Chrysalis); Re-works of the Art of Noise 1988—The Best of the Art of Noise [Blue Cover] (China) 1989—Below the Waste 1990—Ambient Collection: Remix Collection (Alex) (group disbands) 1992—Best of the Art of Noise [Pink Cover] (Discovery); Best of Art of Noise [#1] (Alex) 1993—Best of Art of Noise [#2]; Best of Art of Noise [#3] 1996—Drum & Bass Collection (Discovery) 1997—State of the Art; Fon Mixes (group re-forms: Morley; Dudley; + Trevor Horn [b. July 15, 1949, Hertfordshire, Eng.], kybds.; + Lol Creme [b. Lawrence Creme, Sep. 19, 1947, Manchester, Eng.], gtr.) 1999—Seduction of Claude Debussy (ZTT/Universal).

With its name culled from an Italian Futurist manifesto, Art of Noise approached pop from a distinctly postmodern slant. Using the studio as their tool, these three producers/programmers/arrangers were virtually anonymous; star power, when called for, was imported. Dudley, formerly a producer for Paul McCartney and Frankie Goes to Hollywood, joined up with Jeczalik and Langan as part of Trevor Horn's innovative production team in the early '80s. Under Horn's auspices, Art of Noise was formed to fashion state-of-the-art dance instrumentals. "Beat Box" and "Close (to the Edit)"—with their audacious and influential mixture of treated musical textures, found sounds, and overdriven disco rhythms—became popular on both sides of the Atlantic.

Breaking away from Horn, Art of Noise recruited rock & roll guitar pioneer Duane Eddy to update his 1960 hit "Peter Gunn" (#50, 1986); the song won a 1986 Grammy for Best Rock Instrumental Performance. The video for "Paranoimia" (#34, 1986) incorporated computer-generated TV character Max Headroom. Art of Noise also contributed to the Headroom television series. Eschewing any pretense of aesthetic purity, the group began doing considerable advertising work for Revlon, Swatch, and Barclays Bank, among others. In July 1986 Art of Noise toured for the first time, appearing in the U.S., Japan, and at a solitary British performance. The next year the group worked on the soundtrack to the film adaptation of Dragnet. A remake of Prince's "Kiss" (#31, 1988) featuring '60s pop icon Tom Jones helped revive Jones' career. Other left-of-center recordings followed, including "Yebo" (#63 U.K., 1989), which featured South African singers Mahlathini and the Mahotella Queens. By the turn of the decade the three were concentrating on individual projects, and Art of Noise dissolved. Throughout the '90s, the group enjoyed a kind of vicarious fame, its music frequently sampled by other artists and its sound recognized as seminal by hip-hopsters, minimalist composers, and ambient musicians. Paul Morley and Anne Dudley reunited in 1999 to release, along with Trevor Horn and Lol Creme of 10cc, The Seduction of Claude Debussy, an homage to the 19th Century French composer. Mixing dance versions of Debussy's music with lush orchestration, Art of Noise drew parallels between the classical music innovator and their own pioneering.

Ashford and Simpson

Nickolas Ashford (b. May 4, 1943, Fairfield, SC), voc.; Valerie Simpson (b. Aug. 26, 1948, Bronx, NY), voc., kybds. 1973—Keep It Comin' (Tamla); Gimme Something Real (Warner Bros.) 1974—I Wanna Be Selfish 1976—Come As You Are 1977—Send It 1978—Is It Still Good to Ya? 1979—Stay Free 1980—Musical Affair 1981—Performance 1982—Street Opera 1983—High-Rise (Capitol) 1984—Solid 1986—Real Love 1989—Love or Physical 1996—Been Found (Hopsack and Silk).

Valerie Simpson solo: 1971—Exposed (Tamla) 1972—Valerie Simpson.

During the late '60s, writer/performer/producers Nickolas Ashford and Valerie Simpson wrote and produced some of Motown's greatest hits, and since the early '70s they've also become successful performers. The son of a construction worker, Ashford grew up in Willow Run, Michigan, where he sang in the church choir as a child. He spent one semester at Eastern Michigan College before dropping out. Against his parents' wishes, he left home and moved to Harlem with only $57. He worked as a busboy and began attending the White Rock Baptist Church in Harlem, where in 1964 he met Simpson, then 17 years old. She had recently graduated high school and was studying music at Chatham Square School.

They began writing songs together (the first bunch of which they sold for $64). Two years later, when Ray Charles had a hit with their "Let's Go Get Stoned," they signed on with Berry Gordy's Motown organization as staff writers and producers. They created a series of romantic duets, including Marvin Gaye and Tammi Terrell's "Ain't No Mountain High Enough" and "You're All I Need to Get By," and Diana Ross' "Reach Out (and Touch Somebody's Hand)." While neither of Simpson's Ashford-produced solo albums sold well, the pair were anxious to concentrate on performing (which Gordy discouraged) and recorded Keep It Comin' just before leaving Motown in 1973 for Warner Bros. They married in 1974. Their early R&B hit singles included "So, So Satisfied" (#27, 1977) and "Is It Still Good to Ya?" (#12, 1978), and 1979's "Found a Cure" was their first 45 to make the pop Top 40. They had to wait six years for their next one, "Solid," which reached #12 in 1985 and topped the R&B chart. Two other R&B hits followed: "Outta the World" (#4, 1985) and "Count Your Blessings" (#4, 1986). Send It, Is It Still Good to Ya? and Stay Free have been certified gold. The duo's most recent studio album, Been Found, features esteemed poet Maya Angelou on seven of its 11 songs. Ashford and Simpson also continue to tour and work frequently as independent writers and producers; their clients include Diana Ross (The Boss), Gladys Knight and the Pips (About Love), and Whitney Houston ("I'm Every Woman"). The latter song, contained on The Bodyguard soundtrack, hit #5 in 1993.

Carl Palmer (b. Mar. 20, 1947, Birmingham, Eng.), drums; John Wetton (b. July 12, 1949, Derby, Eng.), bass, voc.; Steve Howe (b. Apr. 8, 1947, London, Eng.), gtr.; Geoffrey Downes (b. Eng.), kybds.

1982—Asia (Geffen) 1983—Alpha (- Wetton; + Greg Lake [b. Nov. 10, 1948, Bournemouth, Eng.], bass, voc.) 1985—(- Howe; + Mandy Meyer, gtr.; - Lake; + Wetton; - Meyer; + Pat Thrall [b. San Francisco, CA, gtr.]) Astra Then & Now 1992—Asia: Live in Moscow (Rhino) (- Thrall; + Howe; + Downes; + Palmer; + John Payne, voc., bass; + Al Pitrelli, gtr.); Aqua (Pyramid) 1994—Aria (Mayhem) 1996—Arena (Resurgence); Archiva 1 & 2 1997—Anthology (Snapper); Live in Köln (Blueprint); Live in Osaka; Live in Philadelphia 1999—Axioms (Snapper); Live at the Town & Country Club (Resurgence); Live Acoustic 2000—The Very Best of Asia: Heat of the Moment 1982-1990 (Geffen) 2001—Aura (Recognition, U.K.).

The first supergroup of the '80s, Asia was composed of famous musicians whose earlier work in major rock groups virtually guaranteed their success. Carl Palmer had been a member of Emerson, Lake and Palmer, Steve Howe and Geoffrey Downes had both belonged to Yes, and Downes had worked with the Buggles; John Wetton had been bassist for King Crimson, U.K. Family, and Roxy Music. Greg Lake, who briefly replaced Wetton, was also an ELP alumnus. Despite widespread critical revulsion and a cool reception in its native U.K., the group was embraced by AOR radio programmers and fans of bombastic arena rock.

The group's quadruple-platinum debut LP, Asia, held the #1 spot for over two months in 1982 and launched two hits: "Heat of the Moment" (#4, 1982) and "Only Time Will Tell" (#17, 1982). Alpha (#6, 1983), with the #10 1983 hit "Don't Cry," was also certified platinum. At its commercial peak, Asia performed live from the Budokan Theatre in Tokyo, Japan, in a satellite telecast, Asia in Asia, that was seen by 20 million viewers. But Astra (#67, 1985) proved markedly less popular than its predecessors. Howe was replaced by ex-Krokus guitarist Mandy Meyer, and in 1986 Asia disbanded until 1990, when it re-formed with guitarist Pat Thrall (formerly of Automatic Man and the Pat Travers Band) in the spot originally held by Howe. By 1992 Howe was back in with Downes, Palmer, John Payne, and Al Pitrelli to record Aqua (Simon Phillips, Anthony Glynn, and Nigel Glockler also contributed).

When Downes and Payne regrouped with Pitrelli to record Asia's 1994 album, Aria, both Howe and Palmer were gone again. By the time of the band's 1996 album Arena, Downes and Payne were the only constant members, performing together on occasion as an acoustic duo. Between 1996 and 2000, Asia released numerous collections of demos, live performances, and hits packages on small labels. In early 2001, the band reemerged yet again with an album of new material, Aura, and an all-star cast of prog-rock musicians cranking out more of the same arena-style rock that had initially put Asia on the map.

June 25, 1951, Yuma, AZ], sax; Ricky Turpin, fiddle, electric mandolin, voc.; David Earl Miller, bass; Tommy Beavers, drums) Tribute to the Music of Bob Wills and the Texas Playboys (Liberty) 1997—Back to the Future Now (Lucky Dog) 1999—Ride With Bob (DreamWorks).

For over three decades Asleep at the Wheel has been steadfastly dedicated to reviving, with slight modernization, the Western swing pioneered by Bob Wills in the '30s and '40s, a hybrid of country, big-band jazz, Cajun fiddling, and be-bop. With frequent personnel changes (there have been more than 80 lineup changes over the past 30 years), Asleep at the Wheel has become a dependable attraction in country and roots-rock circles. The group was founded by three Easterners: lead guitarist/vocalist Ray Benson, rhythm guitarist/vocalist/songwriter Leroy Preston, and pedal steel guitarist Lucky Oceans; female singer Chris O'Connell joined for the debut album. At first they mixed satinc originals with Western swing standards, to the incomprehension of their early record companies. Today the Grammy-winning group is acknowledged as the leading practitioner and champion of Western Swing.

After a few years in San Francisco, Asleep at the Wheel resettled in Austin, Texas, in 1974. The following year the group signed with Capitol and began to reach the country market with such deadpan songs as "The Letter That Johnny Walker Read" (#10 C&W, 1975) and versions of "Bump Bounce Boogie" (#31 C&W, 1975) and "Nothin' Takes the Place of You" (#35 C&W, 1976). Each of its Capitol releases since 1976 garnered at least one Grammy nomination; the group snagged its first in 1978 when its version of Count Basie's "One O'Clock Jump" won for Best Country Instrumental Performance. (The band has since won a total of seven Grammys.)

Though the group's recordings have sold only moderately, Asleep at the Wheel has retained a strong live following. For the critically acclaimed 1993 Bob Wills tribute album, Benson—the group's sole remaining founding member and leader—assembled such artists as Dolly Parton, Vince Gill, Chet Atkins, Garth Brooks, Huey Lewis, Lyle Lovett, and Merle Haggard, who were joined by Texas Playboys Eldon Shamblin and Johnny Gimble and Asleep alumni Lucky Oceans, Chris O'Connell, and Floyd Domino. "Red Wing" from the Wills tribute album won the 1993 Grammy for Best Country Instrumental Performance. Another Wills tribute, Ride With Bob (#24 C&W, 1999), featured yet more guests, ranging from Lyle Lovett to Tim McGraw to the Dixie Chicks.

The Association

Jules Alexander (b. Sep. 25, 1943, Chattanooga, TN), gtr., voc.; Terry Kirkman (b. Dec. 12, 1941, Salinas, KS), kybds., voc.; Brian Cole (b. Sep. 8, 1942, Tacoma, WA; d. Aug. 2, 1972, Los Angeles), bass, voc.; Ted Bluechel Jr. (b. Dec. 2, 1942, San Pedro, CA), drums; Jim Yester (b. Nov. 24, 1939, Birmingham, AL), gtr., voc.; Russ Giguere (b. Oct. 18, 1943, Portsmouth, NH), gtr., voc.

1962—And Then . . . Along Comes the Association (Valiant)
 1967—Renaissance (– Alexander, + Larry Ramos [b. Apr. 19, 1942, Kauai, HI], gtr., voc., harm.); Insight Out (Warner Bros.)
 1968—Birthday; Greatest Hits 1969—(+ Alexander)

 1981—(group re-forms with surviving original members)
 1986—Songs That Made Them Famous (Pair).

A primarily soft-rock and ballad band, the Association sold over 15 million records in the '60s. The group first formed when Terry Kirkman, who had played in several bands, including Frank Zappa's Mothers of Invention, and Jules Alexander recruited Brian Cole and Jim Yester (whose brother Jerry was a member of the Lovin' Spoonful). Russ Giguere and Ted Bluechel joined soon after, and following six months of rehearsal the band debuted in Pasadena.

The hits, most written by various group members, began in 1966 with the group's first single, "Along Comes Mary" (which some listeners believed was an ode to marijuana), and continued with the more romantic songs for which the Association is best remembered: "Chenish" (#1, 1966), "Windy" (#1, 1967), "Never My Love" (#2, 1967), and "Everything That Touches You" (#10, 1968). Its singles, including the theme song from the movie Goodbye Columbus (1969), continued to chart but never again reached the Top 30. After an unsuccessful try at progressive rock from 1969 through 1973, the group faded from the charts and began working nightclubs. Several members (Ramos, Bluechel, Yester) released a single in 1975, but the Association attracted no further notice until early 1981, when all of the band's original surviving members (Cole died in 1972 of a heroin overdose) made a comeback attempt. Giguere and Ramos continued to tour with other musicians under the Association name into the '90s. In 1990 BMI designated "Never My Love" (along with the Beatles' "Yesterday") one of the most often played songs in history.

With more than 35 million copies of his 75-plus original releases sold, Grammy Lifetime Achievement Award winner Chet Atkins was one of the most successful guitarists in history, as a country music producer, he was largely responsible for the pop-oriented "Nashville Sound" of the '60s.

Raised in poverty, Atkins received musical training from his evangelical-singer father and an older half brother. He took up the guitar at age nine and counted among his influences Les Paul, Django Reinhardt, and Merle Travis (Atkins' finger-picking style is a modification of Travis' technique). Beginning professionally in his teens playing fiddle for Archie Campbell, by the late '40s he had switched exclusively to guitar, performed at the Grand Ole Opry, and recorded as a sessionman and a solo artist. In the late '50s he became vice president in charge of RCA's Nashville operations and as such was involved as both a player and producer in the development of Eddy Arnold, Perry Como, Elvis Presley and Roy Orbison. Later he expanded country music's horizons by helping introduce black country singer Charley Pride and encouraging the "outlaw" movement of Waylon Jennings and Willie Nelson.

As a producer at RCA from 1957 through the mid-'70s, Atkins established the Nashville Sound, string-laden and embellished with pop-style backup choruses. Traditionalists balked, but Atkins insisted that the style, augmented by his use of innovative studio technique (echo, reverb, tremolo guitars), brought country music into the pop mainstream. Admired by such diverse musicians as Paul McCartney, Leo Kottke, Earl Klugh, and George Benson, Atkins' guitar style was characterized by versatility. He recorded 12 duet albums featuring the likes of Les Paul, Doc Watson, Jerry Reed, and Mark Knopfler. He also performed with sitar player Ravi Shankar, the Atlanta Symphony and Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops. As designer of a series of Chet Atkins Signature Guitars, he consistently maintained an interest in the technical side of guitar-playing.

In 1973 Atkins became, at 49, the youngest inductee into the Country Music Hall of Fame; a year later, he released an autobiography, Country Gentleman, its title Atkins' longtime nickname (on his albums he bills himself "C.G.P."—"Certified Guitar Player," a title he coined). In the '80s, backing off from producing, the guitarist enjoyed a performing renaissance. He toured with folksy pundit Garrison Keillor and continued to put out critically acclaimed albums with other guitarists. In 1991, South Street, in the heart of Nashville's Music Row, was renamed Chet Atkins Place. And in 1997, he received the Century Award, Billboard's highest honor. Atkins died of cancer at age 77.

Formed 1971, Doraville, GA

Barry Bailey (b. June 12, 1948, Decatur, GA), gr.; Rodney Justo, voc.; Paul Goddard (b. June 23, 1945, Rome, GA), bass; Robert Nix, drums; J.R. Cobb (b. Feb. 5, 1944, Birmingham, AL), gr.; Dean Daughtry (b. Sep. 8, 1946, Kinross, AL), kybds. 1972—Atlanta Rhythm Section (MCA) (- Justo; + Ronnie Hammond (b. Macon, GA), voc.) 1973—Back Up Against the Wall 1974—Third Annual Pipe Dream (Polydor) 1975—Dog Days 1976—Red Tape 1977—A Rock and Roll Alternative 1978—Champagne Jam (MCA) (- Nix; + Roy Yeager (b. Feb. 4, 1946, Greenwood, MS), drums) 1979—Are You Ready?; Underdog 1980—The Boys From Doraville 1981—Quinella (Columbia) (group disbanded) 1989—(group re-forms as ARS) Truth in a Structured Form (Imagine/CBS) 1991—The Best of ARS (Polydor) 1997—Partly Plugged (Platinum Entertainment) 1999—Eufaula.

Comprised of former sessionmen, the Atlanta Rhythm Section smoothed out Southern rock's rough edges with studio sophistication. J.R. Cobb, Dean Daughtry, and producer/manager Buddy Buie had been members of the Classics IV. Daughtry, Rodney Justo, and Don Nix had also been in the Candymen, a group that at one time included Bobby Goldsboro, had backed Roy Orbison, and recorded two LPs (The Candymen, 1967, and Bring You Candy Power, 1968). They met the other Section members while working together on a Roy Orbison session in 1970 and soon after formed the group, adding lead vocalist Justo for their debut LP. He was soon replaced by Ronnie Hammond, a former recording engineer. Though hampered by the lack of a distinctive frontman or a group identity and only moderate sales, the Atlanta Rhythm Section became established through frequent touring in the late '70s. Beginning in 1977 the group had a string of hit singles that included "So in to You" (#7, 1977), "Imaginary Lover" (#7, 1978), "I'm Not Gonna Let It Bother Me Tonight" (#14, 1978), "Do It or Die" (#19, 1979), and a remake of the Classics IV hit "Spooky" (#17, 1979). A Rock and Roll Alternative and Underdog have been certified gold and Champagne Jam, platinum, but after Quinella peaked at #70 with only one charting single ("Alien" [#29, 1981]), the band members drifted apart.

A loose aggregation comprised of Buie, Hammond, Bailey, Daughtry, and a revolving door of other musicians re-formed as ARS in 1989 and performed sporadically over the next decade. Truth in a Structured Form (1989), an attempt to update the band's trademark sound, flopped. Partly Plugged (1997) found a revamped Atlanta Rhythm Section using its original name again and celebrating its 25th anniversary by running through 11 of its hits and three new songs. Eufaula (1999) is an all-new studio recording.

Brian Auger

Born July 18, 1939, London, Eng.

1967—Open (Marmalade) 1968—Definitely What 1969—Streetnoise 1970—Befour (RCA) 1971—Brian Auger's

Oblivion Express; A Better Land 1972—Second Wind 1974—Closer to It 1975—Straight Ahead; Live Oblivion, vols. 1 and 2; Genesis (early Steampacket recordings) (Polydor); This Is (Metronome); Reinforcements (RCA) 1977—Happiness Heartaches (Warner Bros.); Best of Brian Auger (RCA) 1978—Encore Here and Now (Grudge) 1989—Planet Earth Calling (Dunhill/Garland) 2000—Voices of Other Times (Miramar).

British keyboardist Brian Auger helped lay the groundwork for fusion with his jazz-rock hybrids in the '60s and early '70s. In 1964 he abandoned pure jazz and upright piano for R&B and a Hammond organ. He soon formed the Brian Auger Trinity with bassist Rick Brown and drummer Mickey Waller. Within a few months he was asked to join a new group, Steampacket, which included vocalists Long John Baldry, Rod Stewart, and ex-model Julie Driscoll. Each had a spotlight segment during the group's live shows, which also featured jazzy R&B instrumentals highlighting Auger's keyboards. In mid-1966 Auger left, and the group dissolved.

Auger then reorganized Trinity with bassist Dave Ambrose (b. Dec. 11, 1946, London), drummer Clive Thacker (b. Feb. 13, 1940, Enfield, Eng.), guitarist Gary Boyle (b. Bihar, India), and Driscoll. In 1969 they had hits in Europe ("Save Me") and England (a cover of Dylan's "This Wheel's on Fire"). Subsequent singles floundered, however, and during a 1969 U.S. tour Driscoll quit the group. She later married pianist Keith Tippets and continues to record occasionally under the name Julie Tippets. Further hampered by contractual and management problems, Trinity broke up in mid-1970 after releasing Befour, and Auger reemerged late in the year with the four-piece Oblivion Express (at one time including drummer Robbie McIntosh, who later joined the Average White Band), a jazz-rock band that released several influential albums but failed to crack the U.S. market in a big way. The group's latter-day vocalist was Alex Ligertwood, later of Santana. By 1977 Auger was playing synthesizers as well, and the following year he did a reunion album with Julie Driscoll Tippets, Encore. As the '70s closed Auger was without a recording contract and living in California. He wrote "Happiness Is Just Around the Bend," a minor 1974 hit for the Main Ingredient.

Since then Auger has remained active, releasing albums in Europe and, to a lesser extent, America. In 1990 he teamed up with singer Eric Burdon and continues to tour the globe. A live CD recorded in California, Access All Areas, was issued in Europe in 1993. In 1995 a new Oblivion Express was conceived. The lineup on Voices of Other Times includes Auger's daughter, Savannah, on vocals, and his son, Karma, on drums.

Frankie Avalon

Born Francis Avallone, Sep. 18, 1939, Philadelphia, PA
1959—Swingin' on a Rainbow (Chancellor) 1995—The Best of Frankie Avalon (Varèse Sarabande).

Teen idol Frankie Avalon was originally a trumpet-playing prodigy when, at age 18, he joined a group called Rocco and the Saints (which then included neighbor Bobby Rydell). He began making appearances on local television, and in 1958 his debut single, "DeDe Dinah," was #7. Through the late '50s and up until 1960, Avalon had six Top 10 hits: "Ginger Bread" (#9, 1958), "Bobby Sox to Stockings" (#8, 1959), "A Boy Without a Girl" (#10, 1959), "Just Ask Your Heart" (#7, 1959), "Venus" (#1, 1959), and "Why" (#1, 1960). He was a regular on Dick Clark's American Bandstand, appeared in several beach-party movies with Annette Funicello (including Beach Blanket Bingo), and also appeared in Disc Jockey Jamboree (1957), Guns of the Timberland (1960), and The Carpetbaggers (1962).

By the '70s he was appearing regularly on the resort club circuit and occasionally had TV roles on such shows as Love, American Style. His 1976 disco remake of "Venus" peaked at #46. In 1987 he and Funicello coproduced and costarred in Back to the Beach; the pair's Back to the Beach concert tour (1989/90) was well received. They also released a Christmas single, "Together We Can Make a Merry Christmas," and made a number of guest appearances. Avalon continues to tour solo and with Bobby Rydell and Fabian as one of the "Boys of Bandstand."

Alan Gorrie (b. July 19, 1946, Perth, Scot.), bass, voc.; Onnie McIntyre (b. Sep. 25, 1945, Lennox Town, Scot.), gr., voc.; Roger Ball (b. June 4, 1944, Dundee, Scot.), kybds., saxes; Malcolm "Molly" Duncan (b. Aug. 24, 1945, Montrose, Scot.), tenor sax; Robbie McIntosh (b. 1950, Scot.; d. Sep. 23, 1974, Los Angeles, CA), drums; Hamish Stuart (b. Oct. 8, 1949, Glasgow, Scot.), gr., voc.
1973—Show Your Hand (MCA) 1974—AWB (Atlantic) (- McIntosh; + Steve Ferrone [b. Apr. 25, 1950, Brighton, Eng.], drums) 1975—Cut the Cake; Put It Where You Want It (MCA) 1976—Soul Searching (Atlantic); Person to Person 1977—Benny and Us 1978—Warmer Communications 1979—Feel No Fret (Arista); Volume VIII (Atlantic) 1989—(group re-forms: Gorrie, McIntyre; Ball; + Alex Ligertwood, voc.; + Eliot Lewis, bass, kybds., gr., voc.) Aftershock (Track) 1996—(- Ligertwood; + Pete Abbot, drums) Soul Tattoo (Foundation) 1997—(- Ball; + Fred Vigdor, kybds., sax).

The Average White Band's derivative but convincing funk crossed the Atlantic and the color line, heralding the arrival of disco in the mid-'70s. Each of the members had been active in various English and Scottish bands before Alan Gorrie founded the group. Robbie McIntosh had been with Brian Auger's Oblivion Express; Roger Ball and Malcolm Duncan had been members of the Dundee Horns. After opening for Eric Clapton at his January 1973 Rainbow Theatre comeback concert, they released an unnoticed debut album. The next year they began abbreviating the band name as AWB, and a 1974 album produced by Anif Mardin yielded a Grammy Award-winning disco hit, "Pick Up the Pieces" (#1, 1975). The group was shaken by drummer McIntosh's death from accidental heroin poisoning at a Hollywood party but regrouped for a second gold album, Cut the Cake (which it dedicated to McIntosh). Put It Where You Want It is a rerelease of their debut album. Benny and Us featured soul singer Ben E. King.

After 1975, AWB began recording together less often while its members worked as sidemen, including backup work for Chaka Khan in 1978. Gorie, Ferrone, and Stuart recorded as Easy Pieces, with Renee Geyer Ferrone later played drums for Duran Duran, and Stuart joined Paul McCartney's band for Flowers in the Dirt and his subsequent tour. In 1989, Gorie, McIntyre, and Ball enlisted vocalist Alex Ligertwood and re-formed the AWB. The group continued to perform (and to a lesser extent, record) in the '90s. Meanwhile, in 2000, the Hamish Stuart Band released the album Sooner or Later.

Kevin Ayers

Born Aug. 16, 1945, Herne Bay, Eng.

1970—Joy of a Toy (Harvest) 1971—Shooting at the Moon
1972—Whatever's Hebringswising 1973—Bananamour
1974—Confessions of Dr. Dream (Island); June 1st, 1974 (with John Cale, Brian Eno, and Nico) 1975—Sweet Deceiver
1976—Old Ditties 1977—Yes We Have No Mañanas
1978—Rainbow Takeaway.

Cheerfully eccentric Kevin Ayers has been active in British progressive rock since 1963, when he and some friends from Canterbury founded the Wilde Flowers. In 1966 Ayers and drummer Robert Wyatt left to start Soft Machine [see entry]. He played bass with the group until 1968, then began his ongoing solo career. Singing in a deep bass voice and making quiet jokes about moons and bananas—his specialty is pataphysical humor, the British equivalent of Zen koans—Ayers has played alongside Mike Oldfield (who first recorded on Ayers' albums), Steve Hillage, John Cale, Brian Eno, and Andy Summers. He spends most of his time at his estate on the island of Ibiza and continues to tour and release European albums every few years.

Roy Ayers

Born Sep. 10, 1940, Los Angeles, CA

1963—West Coast Vibes (United Artists) 1967—Virgo Vibes (Atlantic) 1968—Stoned Soul Picnic 1969—Daddy Bug and Friends 1970—Vibrant (Alex) 1971—Roy Ayers: Ubiquity (Polydor) 1972—He's Coming; Live at the Montreux Jazz Festival (Verve) 1973—Virgo Red (Polydor) 1974—Change Up the Groove 1975—A Tear to a Smile; Red, Black and Green 1976—Mystic Voyage; Vibrations; Everybody Loves the Sunshine 1977—Lifeline (Polydor); Crystal Reflections (Muse) 1978—Let's Do It (Polydor); You Send Me; Step Into Our Life 1979—Fever; Love Fantasy 1980—No Stranger to Love; Prime Time 1981—Africa, Center of the World 1982—

Feelin' Good 1983—Drivin' On Up; Silver Vibrations (Uno Melodic) 1984—In the Dark (Columbia) 1985—You Might Be Surprised 1987—I'm the One (for Your Love Tonight) 1990—Wake Up (Ichiban) 1991—Searchin' (Ronnie Scott's) 1992—Double Trouble (Uno Melodic) 1995—Vibrant (Alex); Evolution: The Polydor Anthology (Polydor); Good Vibrations (Ronnie Scott's); Vibesman Live at Ronnie Scott's; Naste (Groovetown) 1996—Essential Groove Live (Ronnie Scott's) 1998—Spoken Word (AFI); Lots of Love (Charly); Fast Money—Ronnie Scott's (Castle).

Vibraphonist Roy Ayers crossed over from jazz to funk and found commercial success in the mid-'70s with what he called "disco jazz." He then was rediscovered in the '90s as one of the precursors of acid-jazz. He learned piano at an early age; at five, his playing impressed Lionel Hampton, who gave him a pair of mallets. Ayers began playing vibes professionally with West Coast bands in the late '50s. In 1965 he formed his own quartet but disbanded it when Herbie Mann invited him to join his band. He recorded and toured with Mann from 1966 to 1970, and Mann produced Ayers' first three solo albums.

Around 1970 Ayers began experimenting with electronics and rock rhythms. He was probably the first vibraphonist to electrify his instrument and certainly the first to employ such devices as the wah-wah pedal and effects like fuzztone. In 1970 he formed the Roy Ayers Ubiquity, a fully electrified ensemble that fused jazz, rock, Latin pop, and R&B. Guest soloists with Ubiquity have included drummer Billy Cobham, flutist Hubert Laws, guitarist George Benson, trombonist Wayne Henderson of the Crusaders, vocalist Dee Dee Bridgewater, R&B composer and vocalist Edwin Birdsong, and Nigerian saxophonist Fela Anikulapo Kuti, with whom he toured Nigeria in 1979, resulting in the 1981 LP Africa, Center of the World. His albums from this period earned him a loyal audience among jazz and R&B fans.

Beginning in 1976, Ayers' records hit the charts after receiving radio and disco play; "Running Away," which became a dance-club classic, made the R&B Top 20 in 1977. "The Freaky Deaky" inspired a dance step of the same name in 1978. Ayers broke up Ubiquity that year and formed a recording partnership with Henderson on the album Step Into Our Life; they had a minor hit with "Heat of the Beat" (#59 R&B, 1978).

In 1981 Ayers formed his own label, Uno Melodic, to release other artists' work that he produced. Throughout the next decade Ayers continued to have hits, including "In the Dark" (#35 R&B, 1984), "Slip 'n Slide" (#49 R&B, 1985), and "Hot" (#20 R&B, 1986), and remained popular in Great Britain. In 1987 Ayers recorded with Whitney Houston on her "Love Will Save the Day."

By the '90s, Ayers had become a seminal influence on the burgeoning acid-jazz scene, particularly in the U.K. Such hip-hop artists as Big Daddy Kane, A Tribe Called Quest, Brand Nubian, Monie Love, and Mary J. Blige sampled Ayers' '70s recordings; his 1976 song "Everybody Loves the Sunshine" was an especially popular sample. This brought him even more visibility, as did his appearance on Jazzmatazz, the hip-hop/jazz project produced by Guru of Gang Starr.

Aztec Camera

Formed 1980, East Kilbride, Scot.

Roddy Frame (b. Jan. 29, 1964, East Kilbride), voc., gtr., most other instruments in studio; Campbell Owens, bass; Dave Mulholland, drums.

1983—High Land, Hard Rain (Sire) 1984—Oblivious EP (- Owens; - Mulholland); Knife; Still On Fire EP (WEA) 1985—Backwards and Forwards EP (Sire) 1987—Love 1988—Somewhere in My Heart EP (WEA) 1990—Stray (Sire) 1993—Dreamland 1994—Covers & Rare (Alex) 1995—New, Live, and Rare (WEA); Live on the Test (Windsong); Frestonia (Reprise); Old Grey Whistle Test Series—Live (Alex) 1999—The Best of Aztec Camera (WEA International).
Roddy Frame solo: 1998—North Star (Sony International).

This one-man band arrived on the heels of punk. Roddy Frame had started writing songs at 15. He formed Aztec Camera a year later as a vehicle for his highly individual style of folk-pop. Initially signed to the Glasgow independent label Postcard, Aztec Camera soon moved to the much higher profile English indie Rough Trade. A flurry of attention in Great Britain piqued Sire's interest. Before the release of High Land, Hard Rain, however, the group's original bassist Campbell Owens and drummer Dave Mulholland departed. Aztec Camera has since consisted of Frame with various backup musicians.

Frame's songs never charted well in the U.S., but his penchant for hook-drenched melodies and clever wordplay made him a critic's darling. Aztec Camera's debut fared better in Britain, with modest hits including "Oblivious" and "Walk Out to Winter." The second album, produced by Dire Straits' Mark Knopfler, offered more of the same. Frame fell out of critical favor with 1987's Love, an ill-conceived attempt to marry his singer/songwriter pop with Philadelphia soul. Despite that, the album achieved platinum status internationally and in Europe spun off four hit singles, including "Somewhere in My Heart."

He reclaimed his critical reputation with Stray. On 1993's Dreamland, Frame collaborated on two songs with Ryuichi Sakamoto. In 1995 four albums were released under the Aztec Camera banner, most of them live recordings, but also including Frestonia, a collection of new studio tracks that continued Frame's exploration of classic pop. Nothing else was heard from Frame until 1998, when his first official solo album, North Star, was released in England.

B

Formed 1987, Minneapolis, MN

First recorded lineup: Michelle Leon (b. Feb. 11, 1969, Newark, NJ), bass; Katherine "Kat" Bjelland (b. Dec. 9, 1963, Salem, OR), voc., gtr.; Lori Barbero (b. Nov. 27, 1960, Minneapolis), drums. 1990—Spanking Machine (Twin/Tone) 1991—To Mother 1992—(- Leon; + Maureen Herman [b. July 25, 1966, Philadelphia, PA], bass) Fontanelle (Reprise) 1993—Painkillers EP 1995—Nemesisters 2000—Lived (Almantone, U.K.).

Babes in Toyland, one of the first all-female bands to come out of the early-'90s grunge scene, featured Kat Bjelland's distinctive and demanding vocals. Defying expectations by wearing baby-doll dresses while venting a deep rage, Bjelland and her band opened doors for such groups as Hole and Bikini Kill.

In 1987 Bjelland moved from San Francisco, where she had played with L7's Jennifer Finch and Hole's Courtney Love in a band called Sugar Baby Doll, to Minneapolis, then an indie-rock hotbed. Babes' original all-girl lineup included Barbero, who had never drummed before, bassist Chris Holetz, and singer Cindy Russell; Holetz and Russell left after one year and Leon joined.

Babes released their first single on an independent label in 1989 and already had a following by the time Spanking Machine was released a year later. They toured Europe that fall with Sonic Youth. Originally released only in Europe, To Mother, a seven-song disc, spent 12 weeks on top of the U.K.

Babes in Toyland: Kat Bjelland, Lori Barbero, Maureen Herman

indie charts. That and frequent touring, including the Reading Festival, secured Babes in Toyland's European following. Leon left Babes in early 1992 after her boyfriend, roadie Joe Cole, was shot and killed when he and his roommate, Henry Rollins, were attacked by robbers. She was replaced by Maureen Herman. Babes' major-label debut, Fontanelle, was produced by Sonic Youth's Lee Ranaldo and featured a cover photo by noted artist Cindy Sherman. In 1993 Babes first broke through to American audiences after being the only female-led band on that summer's Lollapalooza Tour and having their video for "Bruised Violet" plugged by MTV's Beavis and Butt-head Painkillers featured that track and a live CBGB performance.

Nemesisters was Babes' most "polished" record yet, including an eclectic mix of covers: Eric Carmen's "All by Myself," Billie Holiday's "Deep Song," and Sister Sledge's "We Are Family." The record nevertheless failed to earn the trio the critical or commercial acceptance of their all-female counterparts L7 and Hole. Herman left the group in June 1996 to pursue a writing career (she later started her own multimedia company). Bjelland and Barbero soldiered on with different bass players, including Leon, before calling it quits in 1997. The three women reunited in 1998 to play on Songs of the Witchblade, a Bjelland-produced soundtrack to the comic book The Witchblade.

The Babys/John Waite/Bad English

John Waite (b. July 4, 1955, Lancaster, Eng.), bass, voc.; Wally Stocker (b. Mar. 17, 1954, London), gtr., voc.; Mike Corby (b. July 3, 1955, Eng.), voc., kybds.; gtr.; Tony Brock (b. Mar. 31, 1954, Bournemouth, Eng.), drums, voc.

1976—The Babys (Chrysalis) 1977—Broken Heart (—Corby) 1978—Head First (+ Jonathan Cain [b. Feb. 26, 1950, Chicago, IL], kybds.; + Ricky Phillips, bass) 1980—Union Jacks; On the Edge (—Cain) 1981—Anthology 1997—The Best of the Babys (EMI).

John Waite solo: 1982—Ignition (Chrysalis) 1984—No Brakes (EMI) 1985—Mask of Smiles 1987—Rover's Return 1992—Essentials (Chrysalis) 1995—Temple Bar (Imago) 1996—Falling Backwards (EMI) 1997—When You Were Mine (Pure).

Bad English, formed 1988: Waite; Cain; Phillips; + Neal Schon (b. Feb. 27, 1954, San Mateo, CA), gtr.; + Deen Castronovo, drums.

1989—Bad English (Epic) 1991—Backlash (—Schon; —Castronovo).

Power pop with a veneer of youthful vibrancy made the Babys a hot act on FM rock radio in the late '70s. Formed in London as a teen-oriented act, the group signed with Chrysalis in late 1976 on the strength of one of the first video demos. Conceived by producer Mike Mansfield, it showed off the members' looks, gleaming smiles, and wardrobes. The Babys appeared on several American television programs in 1977 to support their debut (produced by Bob Ezrin) and, aided by massive advertising, had such hits as "Isn't It Time"

(#13, 1977). As the '70s drew to a close, the Babys experimented with a more synthesizer-oriented style on Head First and 1980's Union Jacks, which bore two moderate hits, "Back on My Feet Again" (#33, 1980) and "Turn and Walk Away" (#42, 1980). Jonathan Cain joined Journey in early 1981, and the Babys disbanded.

Chrysalis released lead singer John Waite's solo debut, Ignition, in 1982, and the album's "Change" went to #54. No Brakes became a Top 10 LP on the strength of "Missing You" (#1, 1984). "Every Step of the Way" (#25, 1985) was Waite's last Top 30 single: his fourth album, Rover's Return, stalled at #77.

Two years later Waite reemerged, fronting Bad English, which featured two ex-Babys, Jonathan Cain and Ricky Phillips, and included Cain's ex-Journey mate, Neal Schon, and drummer Deen Castronovo. The group's eponymously titled debut struck platinum, peaking at #21 in 1989 and boasting two Top 10 hits: "When I See You Smile" (#1) and "Price of Love" (#5). The group's second effort did not repeat the success, and after its release, Schon quit the group; he and Castronovo joined Hardline, and Castronovo later joined up with Paul Rodgers for his Muddy Waters tribute record. Cain began pursuing a solo career while John Waite continued his with 1995's Temple Bar. The late '90s found Schon, Cain, and Castronovo back together again in a new version of Journey [see entry].

Bachman-Turner Overdrive/BTO

Formed 1972, Winnipeg, Can.

Randy Bachman (b. Sep. 27, 1943, Winnipeg), gtr., voc.; Tim Bachman (b. Winnipeg), gtr.; Robbie Bachman (b. Robin Bachman, Feb. 18, 1953, Winnipeg), drums; C.F. (Fred) Turner (b. Oct. 16, 1943, Winnipeg), bass, voc.

1973—Bachman-Turner Overdrive (Mercury); Bachman-Turner Overdrive 2 (—T. Bachman; + Blair Thornton [b. July 23, 1950], gtr.) 1974—Not Fragile 1975—Four Wheel Drive; Head On 1976—Best of Bachman-Turner Overdrive 1977—Freeways (—Randy Bachman; + Jim Clench, bass, voc.) 1978—Street Action; Rock 'n' Roll Nights (+ Randy Bachman; + T. Bachman; + Gary Peterson, drums; —Robbie Bachman) 1984—Bachman-Turner Overdrive (Compleat) 1993—Bachman-Turner Overdrive: The Anthology (PolyGram) (—Randy Bachman; + Robbie Bachman; + Randy Murray [b. Dec. 9, 1955, Calgary, Can.], gtr.) 1996—Trial by Fire (CMC) 1998—Bachman-Turner Overdrive (King Biscuit Flower Hour).

Bachman-Turner Overdrive parlayed workmanlike heavy metal, a blue-collar image, and nonstop touring into over 7 million records sold in the U.S. by 1977. The group—in various personnel combinations—has retained an impressive following in its homeland, where Randy Bachman is a respected guitar hero and successful solo artist.

Guess Who founders Chad Allan and Randy Bachman had left that group in 1966 and 1970 respectively [see entry]. After Bachman made a solo album (Axe, 1970), he teamed up with Allan and younger brother Robbie Bachman in Brave Belt. After two albums (Brave Belt I and Brave Belt II), Tim Bachman and vocalist/bassist Fred Turner replaced Allan.

and Brave Belt became Bachman-Turner Overdrive, named in part after the truckers' magazine Overdrive.

Twenty-five record companies rejected the band before Mercury released its 1973 debut album. Extensive touring netted BTO several hit singles, including "Let It Ride" (#23, 1974), "Takin' Care of Business" (#12, 1974), "You Ain't Seen Nothing Yet" (#1, 1974), "Roll On Down the Highway" (#14, 1975), "Hey You" (#21, 1975), and "Take It Like a Man" (#33, 1976). (Live recordings from 1974 resurfaced on a King Biscuit Flower Hour CD in 1998.) In 1975 Tim Bachman left to become a producer. That year Warner Bros. rereleased Brave Belt II under the title As Brave Belt. With Randy Bachman's departure in 1977 for a solo career (he released Survivor and later formed Ironhorse, which recorded two LPs, Ironhorse and Everything Is Grey), BTO's momentum slowed considerably, although the group did release two more LPs.

The group disbanded for the first time in 1979 or 1980, but regrouped several times through the '80s to tour under the names Bachman-Turner Overdrive and BTO (sometimes with Turner, sometimes without) while brother Robbie Bachman performed under the BTO moniker (again, not always with Turner along). The ensuing confusion caused Randy to file suit against his ex-band mates' brother Robbie, Turner, and Thornton for rights to the band's logo. Randy Bachman left for good in 1993, leaving the band to Robbie. The new lineup released 1996's Trial by Fire, which included a mix of rerecorded Bachman-Turner Overdrive songs and a handful of new ones.

Randy Bachman tours occasionally with the reconstituted Guess Who (the latest reunion occurred in 2000) and also records as a solo artist. Nineteen-ninety-three's Any Road (Sony, Canada), his first solo album of the decade, featured guest appearances by the guitarist's protégé from their early days in Winnipeg, Neil Young, on "Prairie Town," and by the Cowboy Junkies' Margo Timmins. Young also showed up on Bachman's 2000 album Merger (True North, Canada). By the late '90s he was working as a songwriter for hire, commuting between his Canadian home, London, and Nashville. His son, Tal Bachman, released a self-titled album on Columbia in 1999.

Backstreet Boys

Formed 1993, Orlando, FL

Nick Carter (b. Jan. 28, 1980, Jamestown, NY), voc.; Howie Dorough (b. Howard Dwaine, Aug. 22, 1973, Orlando), voc.; Brian Littrell (b. Feb. 20, 1975, Lexington, KY), voc.; Alexander James "A.J." McLean (b. Jan. 9, 1978, West Palm Beach, FL), voc.; Kevin Scott Richardson (b. Oct. 3, 1971, Lexington), voc.

1996—Backstreet Boys (Jive, U.K.) 1997—Backstreet's Back; Backstreet Boys (Jive) 1999—Millennium 2000—Black & Blue.

After sweeping the European charts, it took almost two years for the Florida vocal group Backstreet Boys to bring its teen-friendly music and arena-ready choreographed moves back to its home country. Selling over 55 million records worldwide in three years, the group embodied the late-'90s pop explosion.

High school friends A.J. McLean and Howie Dorough met Nick Carter at local acting auditions in Orlando. Shortly thereafter, they hooked up with Kentucky native Kevin Richardson, who was singing in shows at Disney World; Richardson got his cousin Brian Littrell, with whom he used to sing back home, to relocate to Florida, and the five named themselves Backstreet Boys, using the name of an Orlando flea market. They were spotted by manager Lou Pearlman, who handed the group's daily care over to former New Kids on the Block road manager Johnny Wright and his wife, Donna. They started performing around local malls, theme parks, and schools, with Carter, Littrell, and McLean emerging as the main lead singers.

Backstreet Boys signed to Jive Records in 1994, but their first Jive single, "We've Got It Goin' On" (#69, 1995), flopped in an American market still in grunge's waning grip. The song did a lot better everywhere else in the world, though, hitting #1 in Germany, for instance; the Boys' self-titled debut, released in the spring of 1996 everywhere but the U.S., sold over 11 million copies worldwide.

The Florida group finally made its full-length American debut with the 14-million-selling Backstreet Boys (#4, 1997), whose bulk was made up of the band's foreign release including a cover of P.M. Dawn's "Set Adrift on Memory Bliss" with a smattering of extra tracks. The group's label and managing company focused their marketing campaign on teen and preteen girls, distributing free tapes at cheerleading camps and placing them in JC Penney makeup cases. This time the strategy worked, and, with the extra help of a musical climate more open to bubblegum R&B, the group rocketed to the top of the pop charts with several singles, including the 2-million-selling "Quit Playing Games (With My Heart)" (#2, 1997), "Everybody (Backstreet's Back)" (#4, 1998), and "I'll Never Break Your Heart" (#35, 1998). The group was also nominated for a Grammy for Best New Artist. In May 1998 it filed a lawsuit for back touring and recording revenues against Pearlman and the two associates he'd hired (The suit was eventually settled out of court with Pearlman receiving one-sixth of the band's earnings.) The band was also angry that Pearlman had been working with the nascent boy band 'N Sync. At about the same time, Littrell had open-heart surgery to correct a congenital defect.

Recorded mostly in Stockholm, 1999's Millennium confirmed Backstreet Boys as the reigning boy band. Featuring some songs cowritten by the singers, the album debuted at #1, selling a record-breaking 1,134,000 copies the week of its release (it has sold over 13 million copies to date). It generated the hit singles "All I Have to Give" (#5, 1999), "I Want It That Way" (#6, 1999), and "Larger Than Life" (#25, 1999), and was nominated for five Grammys, including Best Album. The Millennium Tour sold out all its dates in less than a day, confirming the Backstreet Boys' phenomenal popularity. Also that year the group entered into a promotional campaign for Burger King, which distributed miniature plastic figures of each Boy.

With the group's top position endangered by the rise of rival boy band 'N Sync, it returned with the single "Shape of My Heart" (#9, 2000) and the album Black & Blue (#1, 2000), which included two songs written by the Boys themselves. Black & Blue sold 5 million copies worldwide in its first week but topped the chart for only two weeks—an accomplishment for anybody, but a letdown for the Boys, and not nearly as successful as 'N Sync's simultaneous release. The Boys postponed their summer 2001 North American tour so that McLean could enter a treatment program for depression, anxiety, and alcohol abuse.

Bad Brains

HR (b. Paul D. Hudson, Feb. 11, 1956, London, Eng.), voc.; Dr. Know (b. Gary Wayne Miller, Sep. 15, 1958, Washington, DC), gtr.; Darryl Aaron Jenifer (b. Oct. 22, 1960, Washington, DC), bass; Earl Hudson (b. Dec. 17, 1957, AL), drums.
 1982—Bad Brains (ROIR); Bad Brains EP (Alternative Tentacles); I and I Survive/Destroy Babylon EP (Important) 1983—Rock for Light (PVC) 1986—I Against I (SST) 1988—Live 1989—Attitude: The ROIR Session (ROIR/Important); Quickness (Caroline) 1990—The Youth Are Getting Restless: Live in Amsterdam 1991—Spirit Electricity (SST) 1993—Rise (Epic) (- HR; - E. Hudson; + Israel Joseph-I [b. Dexter Pinto, Feb. 6, 1971, Trinidad], voc.; + Mackie Jayson [b. May 27, 1963, New York, NY], drums) 1995—God of Love (Maverick) (- Joseph-I; - Jayson; + HR; + E. Hudson) 1996—Black Dots (Caroline) 1997—Omega Sessions (Victory).

The members of Bad Brains started out playing '70s jazz-rock fusion, but took a sharp turn when they began breaking up their live sets into reggae and punk. Together with Black Flag and the Dead Kennedys, the band became pioneers of punk's hardcore fringe, influencing nearly every subsequent hardcore or quasi-hardcore outfit, including the earliest incarnation of the Beastie Boys. As an all-black rock band, they also inspired Living Colour and the entire New York City Black Rock Coalition of the '80s.

By 1977 guitarist Gary Miller (a.k.a. Dr. Know) had grown tired of his fusion noodling and looked to the Sex Pistols and Bob Marley for fresh inspiration. He and his mates viewed punk and reggae as complementary (both musically and politically) and believed that if punk and reggae acts could share the same stages in the UK, they could share one band's set list in the U.S.

Bad Brains' single "Pay to Cum" remains a classic of the hardcore genre. Unfortunately, the band's music was never well documented on record; "Pay to Cum" was available only in its rare single form and on the band's self-titled ROIR cassette (since reissued on LP and CD). Ric Ocasek produced 1983's Rock for Light, which mingled two reggae tracks amidst the hardcore.

The long-awaited I Against I was an all-rock explosion, leaning more toward heavy metal than punk. It left the band fragmented, with HR and Earl Hudson wanting to do more reggae and Dr. Know and Darryl Jenifer preferring the new hard-rock direction. After years of coming and going, both HR and Hudson left again in 1989 (the two have recorded several reggae albums under HR's name since 1985's It's About Luv on Olive Tree). Chuck Mosely of Faith No More briefly assumed vocals but appeared on no albums. Bad Brains recruited Trinidadian-born singer Israel Joseph-I and Mackie Jayson on drums to replace HR and released Rise.

In 1995 HR and Hudson returned and the band released God of Love. That same year, the band was booked to tour with the Beastie Boys and seemed poised to finally reach beyond its lingering cult following. But on the tour's first night in Montreal, HR brutally attacked manager Anthony Country and was arrested (he was released later that same night). The band regrouped in time to participate on the tour's final dates, but HR was arrested on a subsequent club tour after allegedly attacking a fan in Lawrence, Kansas, with a microphone stand (charges were later dropped). Bad Brains split up again, seemingly for good. But in 1999 the quartet reunited once more as the Soul Brains, a name HR reportedly chose to separate the band from the bad vibes of the past. The reunited band toured throughout 2000 and began recording in Woodstock, New York, with tentative plans to release a new album the following year.

Paul Rodgers with the Law: 1991—The Law (Atlantic).

The members of Bad Company were stars before their first concert in March 1974. Paul Rodgers and Simon Kirke had been members of Free. Mick Ralphs had been Ian Hunter's main sidekick in Mott the Hoople, and Boz Burrell had played with King Crimson [see entries]. Their self-titled debut album, recorded in only 10 days with a minimum of overdubs in Ronnie Lane's mobile studio, eclipsed all that by going #1 worldwide with the single "Can't Get Enough." The album from which it came also hit #1 and to date has sold more than 5 million copies.

Playing sparse, elemental hard rock dominated by Rodgers' husky vocals and Ralphs' power chords, the original Bad Company sold more than 12 million records worldwide. Its 1975 release, Straight Shooter, yielded the Top 10 single "Feel Like Makin' Love" (#10, 1975) while Run With the Pack was the group's third consecutive album to go platinum.

On Desolation Angels (which included the Rodgers-penned hit "Rock and Roll Fantasy," #13, 1979) Bad Company added synthesizers and strings. Indicative of its increasingly sporadic activities, three years elapsed between Angels and Rough Diamonds, which seemed an anachronism upon its 1982 release. The group disbanded that year, with Rodgers releasing a solo LP in 1983, then forming yet another supergroup, the Firm, with Jimmy Page, bassist/keyboardist Tony Franklin, and drummer Chns Slade.

The Firm never came close to matching the level of success its two principals had enjoyed with their previous groups. After two LPs, the quartet broke up in 1986, just as Ralphs and Kirke were putting Bad Company back together. Former Ted Nugent vocalist Brian Howe stood in for Rodgers. The group stuck closely to the original lineup's rify blues-rock formula, but its first album, Fame and Fortune, disappeared from the chart after just nine weeks. However, Dangerous Age eventually went gold, while Holy Water went platinum and produced a Top 20 power ballad, "If You Needed Somebody." Here Comes Trouble also sold in excess of 1 million copies and gave the group two more Top 40 hits. In 1993 Bad Company expanded into a quintet, adding journeyman bassist Rick Wills (Frampton's Camel, Roxy Music, Foreigner) and rhythm guitarist Dave Colwell, and celebrated its 20th anniversary with a live greatest-hits album. Rodgers, meanwhile, struggled to find musical direction. The Law, a hard-rock duo with drummer Kenney Jones, couldn't get arrested, and the singer returned to a solo career, first releasing two curious tribute albums, one interpreting the music of Muddy Waters, the other a live set of Jimi Hendrix tunes featuring Neal Schon on guitar.

In the fall of 1998 Rodgers and Burrell joined Ralphs and Kirke for a reunion of the original lineup. The group contributed four new songs, including the single "Hey, Hey," to the 2-CD set The "Original" Bad Co. Anthology, then embarked on a farewell tour in 1999. Rodgers has announced that he would resume his solo career afterward when he is not playing as part of the original Bad Company.

Pete Ham solo: 1997—7 Park Avenue (Rykodisc) 1999—Golders Green.

Badfinger was a popular British pop-rock band in the early '70s. Originally called the Iveys, the group signed with Apple Records in late 1968 after its demo tape found its way into Paul McCartney's hands. In 1969 McCartney supervised the quartet's soundtrack work on the Ringo Starr–Peter Sellers film, The Magic Christian, for which he wrote "Come and Get It," Badfinger's first hit (#7, 1970).

During the early '70s Badfinger had three more hit singles: "No Matter What" (#8, 1970), "Day After Day" (#4, 1972), and "Baby Blue" (#14, 1972). Pete Ham and Tom Evans' "Without You," covered by Harry Nilsson on Nilsson Schmilsson, became a #1 single in February 1972; in 1994 it was a hit again, this time for Maniah Carey. The group frequently backed the ex-Beatles on tours and records, appearing at George Harrison's 1971's benefit concert for Bangladesh and on his album All Things Must Pass, on John Lennon's Imagine, and on Ringo Starr's "It Don't Come Easy."

After its fourth album, 1973's Ass, sold disappointingly, Badfinger moved to Warner Bros. the following year for a reported $3 million advance. It proved a disastrous relationship. The group's second album for its new label, Wish You Were Here, was selling a brisk 25,000 copies a week when Warners, claiming (erroneously, it would turn out) that $600,000 in a band escrow account was missing, pulled the album from stores. In frustration over management problems, Molland quit. A despondent Ham, the leader and chief songwriter, hanged himself in his London home on April 23, 1975. Badfinger collapsed. Soon thereafter, Molland formed a group called Natural Gas in L.A. with former Humble Pie drummer Jerry Shirley; Evans returned to England to join the Dodgers. By 1978 Molland was installing carpets for a living, while Evans was a pipefitter. Together they revived Badfinger, releasing Airwaves in 1979 and Say No More in 1981. Each produced a minor hit in "Love Is Gonna Come at Last" and "Hold On," respectively. Business problems continued to haunt the group, which didn't see royalties from its days with Apple Records until 1985. Tragically by then Evans had committed suicide in the same manner as Ham. Molland and drummer Gibbins, now both living in America, still tour as Badfinger; Molland also has recorded several solo albums. The late '90s saw a renewed interest in the group's records, and a documentary film, Badfinger, appeared in 1997. The '90s Ham solo releases consist of demos from the '60s and '70s.

Erykah Badu

Born Erica Wright, Feb. 26, 1972, Dallas, TX
1997—Baduizm (Kedar/Universal); Live 2000—Mama's Gun (Motown/Universal).

Along with D'Angelo and Mary J. Blige, singer Erykah Badu championed the hip-hop/soul movement of the '90s. Her smooth voice, trademark head wrap, and majestic demeanor manifest sentiments of black pride, self-love, and female liberation. Badu's collaborations with the Roots, as well as with jazz bassist Ron Carter, trumpeter Roy Hargrove, and funk vibraphonist Roy Ayers, signify her strong ties to the new and old schools of black music.

The daughter of professional actress Kolleen Wright, Badu began playing piano around the age of seven. She graduated from Dallas' Booker T. Washington High School, an arts-oriented magnet school, and studied theater at Grambling State University in Louisiana. After performing locally and cutting a demo with her cousin, Badu opened a concert for D'Angelo and impressed D'Angelo manager Kedar Massenburg. Massenburg soon signed Badu to a solo deal for Universal and began transforming her demo into Baduizm (#2 pop, #1 R&B), which yielded the hits "On & On" (#12 pop, #1 R&B, 1997) and "Next Lifetime" (#61 pop, #1 R&B, 1997). An album that many critics would argue saved R&B music from complete dilution, Baduizm's integration of jazzy instrumentation, hip-hop beats, and soaring vocals quickly solidified Badu as torchbearer for soul music and won her two Grammys: Best Female R&B Vocal Performance and Best R&B Album. Badu's next album, November 1997's Live (#4 pop, #1 R&B), brought her acclaimed live performances to the masses and yielded "Tyrone" (#62 pop, #1 R&B, 1997), an anthem about a woman's scorn for an oft-apathetic boyfriend.

In 1999 Badu plied her acting skills, appearing in The Cider House Rules, which was nominated for a Best Picture Oscar. She also recorded a couple of successful songs with her Roots counterparts: the Grammy Award-winning "You Got Me" (#39 pop, #11 R&B, 1999) and "Southern Girl" (#76 pop, #24 R&B, 1999) with human beat-box Rahzel. For her next album, Mama's Gun (#11 pop, #3 R&B), a soulful journey into the genres of rock and reggae, Badu enlisted Roots drummer Ahmir-Khalib "Questlove" Thompson for several tracks. The album yielded another hit, "Bag Lady" (#6 pop, #1 R&B, 2000).

Joan Baez

Singer/songwriter Joan Baez was the perfect symbol of the early-'60s folk revival: young, sincere, technically gifted, and equally committed to traditional songs and social action. Though her biggest-selling album, Diamonds and Rust, was released in 1975, in the late '70s she found it increasingly difficult to be both commercial and socially conscious. During most of the '80s she all but ceased recording, concentrating instead on her political, humanitarian activities, only to revive her singing career in the '90s, as she connected with a new generation of (mostly female) singer/songwriters.

The daughter of a Mexican-American physicist father and Scottish drama teacher mother, Baez and her two sisters had traveled widely before her parents settled in Southern California by her early teens. A Quaker, Baez became involved with political issues while attending Boston University in the mid-'50s. Baez emerged from the 1959 Newport Folk Festival acclaimed for the purity of her three-octave voice. In the early '60s she released several influential albums of sparsely arranged traditional folk material, and—largely through her association with the anthemic "We Shall Overcome"—she became a voice of the early-'60s civil rights movement.

Baez also played an important role in the rise of Bob Dylan by recording his songs and sharing concert bills with him in the early '60s. From 1963 until 1965, when their personal relationship disintegrated, Baez and Dylan were virtually inseparable. Nearly a decade later their romance provided the subject matter for Baez's hit "Diamonds and Rust." By 1975 the two were reconciled, and they sang duets in Dylan's Rolling Thunder Revue, captured on the fall 1976 TV special Hard Rain. Baez also appeared in Dylan's 1978 feature film, Renaldo and Clara.

By 1965 politics had become Baez's main concern. In that year, she founded in Carmel, California, the Institute for the Study of Nonviolence, signaling her increasing preoccupation with U.S. involvement in Vietnam. She later founded the Humanitas International Human Rights Committee (which she closed in 1992). In 1968 she married student protest leader David Harris, who was jailed for draft evasion a year later, fueling Baez's antiwar fervor (reflected in David's Album and One Day at a Time). The marriage ended in 1974, five years after the birth of their son, Gabriel. Baez's career suffered under the burden of her political commitment. At the height of her antiwar activities, she devoted the second side of Where Are You Now, My Son? to a quasi-documentary account of a U.S. bombing raid of Hanoi. But in the early '70s she also made some of the most commercial music of her career, including her #3 rendition of the Band's "The Night They Drove Old Dixie Down" (a gold single in 1971) and Diamonds and Rust. Her voice had become lower and richer than in her folk phase.

Baez has remained politically active. In 1973 she was a vocal opponent of the coup in Chile and of the assassination of Socialist president Salvador Allende. In August 1981 Baez toured Latin America and was met with bomb threats and harassment. Later in the year, she met with U.S. government officials in Washington, DC, to discuss human rights in South America. A 90-minute TV special on the tour was scheduled for 1982 but was not shown. She has toured on behalf of Amnesty International, appeared at the Live Aid concert in 1985, and has since extended her activism to fighting on behalf of gay and prisoners' rights. In 2000 she participated in the Honor the Earth Tour organized by the Indigo Girls.

After venturing into uncharted pop territory on 1989's Speaking of Dreams (which featured a Spanish version of "My Way" and guest appearances by Jackson Browne, Paul Simon, and the Gipsy Kings), Baez reverted to classic folk mode and regular touring in the '90s. Her 1992 album, Play Me Backwards, was nominated for a Grammy for Best Contemporary Folk Recording, and on its followup, 1997's Gone From Danger, she interpreted songs written by a new generation of writers who in turn had been heavily influenced by her. Several of those singers and songwriters, such as Dar Williams, the Indigo Girls, Mary Chapin Carpenter, and Tish Hinojosa, joined Baez onstage at New York's Bottom Line nightclub for the shows that comprised the live Ring Them Bells. In 2000 she received a lifetime achievement award at the British Folk Awards.

Anita Baker

Born Dec. 20, 1957, Detroit, MI
 1983—The Songstress (Beverly Glen) 1986—Rapture (Elektra) 1988—Giving You the Best That I've Got 1990—Compositions 1994—Rhythm of Love.

With the success of singer Anita Baker's Rapture, a new musical appellation came into being: "Quiet Storm." Baker's elegant, smoldering approach to R&B was a marked return to traditional vocalizing. In her controlled passion, Baker was reminiscent of one of her idols, jazz-pop singer Nancy Wilson.

After singing in church choirs as a child, Baker began her professional career with the Detroit band Chapter 8, which released an eponymously titled album on Ariola in 1980. After moving to L.A. she recorded her first solo album, The Songstress, which yielded the #5 R&B hit "Angel" and won Baker the first of seven Grammy Awards to date. Despite legal difficulties from her former record label, Baker moved on to Elektra. Rapture, with its pop single "Sweet Love" (#8), was an immediate and influential hit, ultimately selling more than 6 million copies. Baker helped write some of Rapture's most popular tunes, including "Sweet Love" and "Watch Your Step", as executive producer, she also collaborated on production and arranging. Her next album, Giving You the Best That I've Got, went to #1, its title track single climbing to #3. Compositions, recorded live in the studio and featuring Baker's own songs, played up her jazz sensibilities. Despite spawning no hit singles, it still went platinum. In the years between Compositions and Rhythm of Love (#3 pop, #1 R&B, 1994), Baker sang with Frank Sinatra on his 1993 Reprise album, Duets, and gave birth to two sons.

In the adulation that outlasted Cream [see entry], Ginger Baker was touted as a great drummer. "Toad," his lengthy live showcase, paved the way for a decade of heavy-metal drum solos, and he was one of the first rock drummers to incorporate third world rhythms into his style. He has since expanded his palette even further to incorporate jazz.

As a teenager Baker played with traditional jazz bands, but he got his first taste of R&B with Alexis Korner's Blues Incorporated when Charlie Watts left the group to join the fledgling Rolling Stones in 1962. A year later Baker and two other group members, singer Graham Bond and bassist Jack Bruce, formed the Graham Bond Organisation. He and Bruce remained until forming Cream with Eric Clapton in mid-1966. Over the course of two-plus years, Cream became a supergroup. After Cream split up in November 1968, Baker joined the short-lived Blind Faith [see entry].

Ginger Baker's Air Force debuted in January 1970. The percussion-dominated group was loosely structured, both in arrangements and personnel, which in various permutations included Stevie Winwood, Rick Grech, Bond, Denny Laine, and Remi Kabaka, one of three full-time drummers. Another drummer, Phil Seaman, and the members of Air Force encouraged Baker's growing interest in African music, and in 1971 he moved to Lagos, Nigeria, to build the first 16-track studio in West Africa. For the next few years he played with local talent, formed the group Salt, and ran his recording studio. Paul McCartney recorded Band on the Run there in 1973, by which time Baker had been musically inactive for many months. In 1974 he reemerged with the Baker-Gurvitz Army, which recorded three jazz-rock albums before disbanding in the late '70s. By then Baker was reportedly spending a lot of his time playing polo.

In the early '80s Baker moved to Milan, Italy, where he signed with CGD Records, formed a band with American musicians, and set up a drum school in a small mountain village. But mostly he ran an olive farm and tended to his health, for he'd only recently kicked a 21-year heroin addiction. In 1986 producer Bill Laswell coaxed the drummer to play on Public Image Ltd.'s Album. Baker relocated to California, then to Denver, Colorado, and recorded several LPs with Laswell behind the board and occasionally on bass. Baker has also teamed up with Masters of Reality for two albums to date, and in 1994 he released Around the Next Dream with Bruce and Gary Moore (Thin Lizzy). In 1993 Cream was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame; at the ceremony, Baker, Clapton, and Bruce reunited for the first time since 1968 to perform some Cream songs.

In the mid- to late '90s, Baker began pushing his exploration of jazz further. In 1994 he formed the Ginger Baker Trio with bassist Charlie Haden and guitarist Bill Frisell and released Going Back Home, followed by Falling Off the Roof two years later. Baker also initiated the formation of the DJ Q20 (Denver Jazz Quintet-to-Octet) in 1995. Unfortunately, the group's recording sessions were interrupted by Baker's undergoing shoulder surgery. The album, Coward of the County, finally came out in 1999, around the time Baker relocated again, this time to South Africa.

LaVern Baker

Born Dolores Williams, Nov. 11, 1929, Chicago, IL; died
 Mar. 10, 1997, New York, NY 1958—LaVern Baker Sings Bessie Smith (Atlantic) 1970—Let Me Belong to You (Brunswick) 1971—LaVern Baker: Her Greatest Recordings (Atco) 1991—LaVern Baker: Soul On Fire
(Rhino); LaVern Baker: Live in Hollywood '91 1992—Woke Up
This Mornin' (DRG).

A major R&B vocalist during the '50s, LaVern Baker saw her career decline in the early '60s before she essentially retired. Her triumphant return to recording and performing in the late '80s is one of the rare happy endings in the history of early R&B. Baker first sang gospel as a little girl but was familiar with more secular styles; her aunt Merline Baker was better known as Memphis Minnie, a blues singer and guitarist. The singer got her first professional experience working at Chicago's Club DeLisa, where she appeared in the mid-'40s as Little Miss Sharecropper. She was soon signed by Columbia, but her recordings for that label were unsuccessful, as were her efforts for King beginning in 1952. Her luck changed with the emerging Atlantic label in 1953, where she cut tunes like "Tweedle Dee," "Bop-Ting-a-Ling," and "Play It Fair."

Ahmet Ertegun and Herb Abramson, who produced most of her sessions, started getting her stronger material in 1956. Rocking items like "Jim Dandy," "Jim Dandy Got Marned," and "Voodoo Voodoo" established her as a major international R&B star in the late '50s, although her sales were perpetually hampered by white acts' cover versions. (At one point, the competition was so fierce that Baker fired off a letter to her Detroit congressman. All she got back was publicity.) Her only big pop hit came in 1959 with the ballad "I Cried a Tear" (#6), which featured King Curtis on sax. The followup, "I Waited Too Long," reached only #33. Although continuing to score minor hits through the early '60s ("Tiny Tim," "Shake a Hand," "Bumble Bee," "You're the Boss," "Saved," "See See Rider"), by the time she switched to Brunswick in 1963, her career was waning.

In 1969 Baker developed a case of pneumonia during a tour entertaining troops in Vietnam, forcing her to seek treatment in the Philippines. Nearly two decades passed before she journeyed back to the States from Subic Bay, where she had run a nightclub. The occasion was Atlantic Records' 40th-anniversary celebration in New York City in 1988. Shortly thereafter, she replaced Ruth Brown on Broadway in Black and Blue, and in 1990 she was given the Rhythm & Blues Foundation's Career Achievement Award. In 1990 she was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. Baker, a diabetic whose health worsened as the decade progressed, continued to perform to help pay for her medical expenses. She died in 1997.

John Baldry

Born Jan. 12, 1941, East Maddon-Doveshire, Eng.
 1966—Looking for Long John (United Artists) 1971—It Ain't Easy (Warner Bros.); Long John's Blues 1972—Everything Stops for Tea 1974—Heartaches (Golden Hour) (Pye)
 1976—Baldry's Out (EMI); Welcome to Club Casablanca (Casablanca) 1977—Good to Be Alive 1980—Long John Baldry 1981—Rock With the Best (Capitol, Can.) 1982—Best of Long John Baldry (EMI) 1991—It Still Ain't Easy (Stony Plain, Can.) 1996—Right to Sing the Blues.

Although sustained commercial success has eluded him, blues vocalist John Baldry's influence in the '60s on future British superstars was considerable. He grew up in the English countryside and began playing guitar at age 15. He played in Dixieland bands before becoming a solo performer on the English folk-club circuit. After touring Europe with Ramblin' Jack Elliott between 1957 and 1961, he turned to the blues and R&B.

Baldry (nicknamed Long John because of his six-foot-seven frame) came to prominence in Britain's early-'60s blues-rock scene. He played in Alexis Korner's Blues Incorporated (which at times included Jack Bruce, Ginger Baker, Mick Jagger, and Charlie Watts) until 1962, when he toured Germany with a jazz band for a few months.

Upon his return to England, he joined the Cyril Davies R&B All-Stars, and when Davies died in January 1964 from leukemia, Baldry recruited some of the All-Stars to start his own band, the Hoochie Coochie Men, which included Rod Stewart. The following year Baldry formed Steampacket with Stewart, Brian Auger, Julie Driscoll, drummer Mickey Waller (later with Jeff Beck), and guitarist Vic Briggs (later with the Animals). In 1966 he formed Bluesology; its roster included keyboardist Reg Dwight, who would later change his name to Elton John.

Beginning in 1967 Baldry had several hit pop ballads in the U.K. ("Let the Heartaches Begin," #1, 1967; "Mexico," #15, 1968), but he turned to blues and rock in 1971 and recorded It Ain't Easy. Former protégés John and Stewart each produced one side of the disc, which yielded a U.S. Top 100 single, "Don't Try to Lay No Boogie-Woogie on the King of Rock 'n' Roll." After spending a couple of months in a mental institution in 1976, Baldry released an LP titled Baldry's Out. Through the late '70s, Baldry toured the U.S. and Canada. He became a Canadian citizen in 1980, and, as of this writing, resides in Vancouver. Still active musically, Baldry is also often heard on commercial voiceovers. He has become something of a star to the kiddie set as the voice of Captain Robotnick, sworn enemy of the popular cartoon hero Sonic the Hedgehog. In 1998 Baldry was nominated for his first Grammy; he was recognized for narrating The Original Story of Winnie the Pooh, which appeared on a Disney read-along tape for preschoolers.

Hank Ballard

Born Nov. 18, 1936, Detroit, MI
 1992—Naked in the Rain (After Hours) 1993—Sexy Ways: The Best of Hank Ballard and the Midnighters (Rhino) 1998—From Love to Tears (Pool Party).

Hank Ballard earned distinction as a rock pioneer by laying sexually explicit lyrics over raw gospel-derived rhythms. With his backup group the Midnighters, he recorded several successful sides for the King label in the early '50s. In his best year, 1954, he had three R&B Top 10 hits with the "Annie" trilogy—"Work With Me, Annie," "Annie Had a Baby," and "Annie's Aunt Fanny"—each of which sold over a million copies internationally despite being widely banned from the airwaves. They made Ballard a top draw on the R&B circuit, although he did not have another major hit until "Teardrops on My Letter" in 1958.

While recording "Teardrops," he quickly composed a B-side novelty dance tune called "The Twist." In 1960 Chubby Checker's slicker version became one of early rock's best-selling singles. Ballard and the Midnighters had two hits in 1960, "Finger Poppin' Time" (#7) and "Let's Go, Let's Go, Let's Go" (#6). In 1963 he embarked on a solo career. By then his fortunes had waned, and he returned to playing soul clubs. Befitting a man whose biggest successes were nsque records, Ballard tried to promote his 1974 song "Let's Go Streaking" by recording it in the nude. Ballard, who continued to perform in clubs well into the '90s, was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1990, three months after his wife and manager, Theresa McNeil, was killed in a hit-and-run accident. He released an album of new material in 1998.

Afrika Bambaataa

Born Kevin Donovan, Apr. 10, 1960, Bronx, NY
 1983—Don't Stop . . . Planet Rock (The Remix EP) (Tommy Boy)
 1988—The Light (EMI) 1991—1990–2000 The Decade of Darkness 1993—Time Zone (Planet Rock) 1994—12 Mixes (ZYX) 1996—Lost Generation (Hot Production) 1999—Afrika Bambaataa vs. Danmass: Electro Funk Express (Dust II Dust).

Afrika Bambaataa was an important rap-music pioneer who, much like Grandmaster Flash, became a forgotten elder statesman as rap evolved. Bambaataa, who took his name (which means "affectionate leader") from a movie about Zulu warriors, quit the notorious Black Spades street gang in the mid-'70s and formed Zulu Nation, a music-oriented "youth organization." Among the members who became minor rap luminaries were DJs Red Alert, Jazzy Jay, and Whiz Kid, as well as Afrika Islam, who went on to work with Ice-T.

Bambaataa became a popular DJ on the nascent South Bronx rap scene, where his encyclopedic knowledge of funk grooves earned him the nickname "Master of Records." He formed two rap crews: the Jazzy 5 (with MCs Ice, Mr. Freeze, Master D.E.E., and AJ Les) and Soulsonic Force (Mr. Biggs [Ellis Williams], Pow Wow [Robert Darrell Allen], and Emcee G.L.O.B.E. [John B. Miller]). Each made its debut 12-inch single in 1980: Jazzy 5's "Jazzy Sensation" and Soulsonic Force's "Zulu Nation Throwdown," both classic proto-hip-hop party anthems, with round-robin rapping backed by live bands playing slinky funk vamps.

In 1982 Bambaataa and Soulsonic Force dropped the live band to go high-tech. Producer Arthur Baker (who had worked on "Jazzy Sensation") and synthesizer player John Robie provided electronic "beat-box" rhythm and an eene keyboard hook modeled on "TransEurope Express" by Kraftwerk, whose robotic trance music had long been popular with inner-city youth. The result was "Planet Rock," a pop hit (#48, 1982) that went gold and spawned an entire school of "electro-boogie" rap and dance music.

While Bambaataa continued to exert some influence on rap music, "Planet Rock" turned out to be his only hit. Bambaataa's groundbreaking tracks that failed to chart include 1982's "Looking for the Perfect Beat" (sampled in Duice's 1993 rap-dance hit "Dazzey Duks" [#12]); 1983's "Renegades of Funk" (on which G.L.O.B.E. pioneered the rapid-fire "pop-pin" style of rap later popularized by Big Daddy Kane and Das EFX); 1984's "World Destruction" by Time Zone, a rap-rock fusion unit featuring Bambaataa, ex-Sex Pistol John Lydon, and bassist/producer Bill Laswell; and 1984's "Unity," which Bambaataa recorded with rap forebear James Brown. Even Bambaataa's and Soulsonic Force's appearance in the 1984 rap movie Beat Street brought problems: Emcee G.L.O.B.E. and Pow Wow were arrested for their roles in a 1979 Manhattan bank holdup, when a policeman watching the movie recognized Pow Wow from the bank surveillance video. G.L.O.B.E. and Pow Wow were later put on probation and received community service sentences for convictions on conspiracy to commit bank robbery.

Bambaataa has remained active if not commercially successful. The Light featured guests George Clinton, Sly and Robbie, Boy George, and UB40. Decade of Darkness collected dance-oriented tracks produced for an Italian label. Bambaataa formed his own label to release the Time Zone compilation. The rise of "turntablism" as its own subgenre and the ratification of "electronica" as an industry-certified trend in the late '90s brought Bambaataa renewed recognition well beyond the hip-hop community. Each year brings a new batch of remixes on multiple dance and import labels, and updates of his signature hit. Lost Generation sports "Planet Rock '96," and the millennium would not have been complete without the release of "Planet Rock 2000."

Bananarama/Shakespear's Sister

Formed late 1981, London, Eng.
 Sarah Dallin (b. Dec. 17, 1960, Bristol, Eng.), voc.; Keren Woodward (b. Apr. 2, 1961, Bristol), voc.; Siobhan Fahey (b. Sep. 10, 1960, Ire.), voc.
 1983—Deep Sea Skiving (London) 1984—Bananarama
 1986—True Confessions 1987—Wow! 1988—(–Fahey; + Jacqui O'Sullivan, voc.) The Greatest Hits Collection 1991—Pop Life 1992—(–O'Sullivan) Please Yourself 1996—Ultra Violet (Curb).
 Shakespear's Sister: Fahey, voc.; Marcella Detroit (b. Marcella Levy, June 21, ca. 1954, Detroit, MI), voc., gtr.
 1989—Sacred Heart (ffrr-PolyGram) 1992—Hormonally Yours (London).
 Marcella Detroit solo: 1994—Jewel (London).

Bananarama was one of the most successful British girl groups in pop history despite the original trio's inability to play instruments and refusal to do concert tours. Musically, Bananarama (the name combines the late-'60s kids' show The Banana Splits and Roxy Music's "Pyjamarama") presented fluffy pop tunes and a girly image that won fans and sold records.

Woodward and Dallin were childhood friends. Dallin met Fahey at the London College of Fashion, and the three began singing at friends' parties. Bananarama's first single was produced by ex-Sex Pistols drummer Paul Cook. The trio sang backup on Fun Boy Three's "It Ain't What You Do, It's the Way That You Do It," and the guys returned the favor on Bananarama's first UK hit, "He Was Really Sayin' Somethin'," which was a minor 1966 hit for Motown's Velvelettes. Deep Sea Skiving collected Bananarama's earliest singles. Bananarama was produced and cowritten by Swain and Jolley (Spandau Ballet, Alison Moyet) and gave the group its first U.S. hit, "Cruel Summer" (#9, 1984). The song was big in England a year before it broke in the U.S.; the band always had greater success at home (although the British press hated the trio) "Robert De Niro's Waiting." Bananarama's second single, got little airplay in the States.

Bananarama switched producers to Stock/Aitken/Waterson (Kylie Minogue, Rick Astley) while recording True Confessions (#15, 1986), and the team (who produced two of the album's tracks) delivered the smash cover of Shocking Blue's 1970 #1 hit "Venus" (#1, 1986). S/A/W produced Wow!, which featured "Love in the First Degree" and "I Heard a Rumour" (#4, 1987) (used in the Fat Boys movie Disorderlies).

In 1987 Fahey married the Eurythmics' Dave Stewart and a few months later left Bananarama. She was replaced on Pop Life by Jacqui O'Sullivan, formerly of the Shillelagh Sisters. That album was produced primarily by ex-Killing Joke bassist Youth and included a cover of the Doobie Brothers' "Long Train Running." O'Sullivan left the group in mid-1991, and Bananarama continued as a duo, releasing 1992's Please Yourself before being dropped from its record label the following year.

Fahey formed Shakespear's Sister with Marcella Detroit, who in the '70s toured with Eric Clapton and cowrote "Lay Down Sally." Shakespear's Sister's first single, "You're History," made it clear that Fahey was eager to leave Bananarama behind. The band's name came from a Smiths song, which was itself inspired by a Virginia Woolf essay lamenting the lack of credit given to female artists. Although its records have been self-consciously artsy and strange, Shakespear's Sister had a major pop hit with a song from its second album, the ballad "Stay" (#4, 1992).

Shakespear's Sister called it quits in 1993, and Detroit released her solo debut, Jewel, the following year. In 1996 Dallin and Woodward resurfaced with a new Bananarama album, Ultra Violet. The duo continues to perform, mostly overseas, and according to U.K. sources, has a new album in the works.

With its rock-ribbed, austere precise arrangements and a catalogue of songs that linked American folklore to primal myths, the Band—four Canadians and a Southerner—made music that was both earthy and mystical, still unsurpassed in its depth and originality. The group had been playing together for most of a decade before it recorded its first album in 1968. Beginning with Levon Helm, the five members joined rockabilly singer Ronnie Hawkins' Hawks one by one, and by 1960 the future Band members had all been with Hawkins on and off an association that continued until 1963. They then began working on their own, variously as Levon and the Hawks, or the Crackers, or the Canadian Squires. Singer John Hammond heard them in a Canadian club in 1964 and asked them to perform and record with him in New York, Chicago, and Texas.

Once active in Greenwich Village, the group attracted Bob Dylan's attention. Helm and Robbie Robertson were in the electrified backup band at Dylan's controversial Forest Hills, New York, concert of August 28, 1965. Despite a falling-out between Dylan and Helm, Dylan hired the Hawks—with drummer Mickey Jones in lieu of Helm—for his 1965–66 world tour, inaugurating a longtime collaboration.

After Dylan's 1966 motorcycle accident, the group settled near the suddenly reclusive star in the Woodstock, New York, area. Helm rejoined, and while recording extensively with Dylan (the much-bootlegged sessions were released in 1975 as The Basement Tapes), they began working on their own material, most of it written by Robertson and Richard Manuel. Recorded in a basement studio in the group's house (Big Pink) in West Saugerties, the material made up the Band's debut album. With its unflashy sound and enigmatic lyrics, Music From Big Pink was a revolutionary album.

The group moved to Hollywood, but its second album, The Band, was a celebration of rural life and the past. It was the group's masterpiece and commercial breakthrough, and the quintet undertook its first headlining tour to support it.

The Band: Rick Danko, Levon Helm, Richard Manuel, Garth Hudson, Robbie Robertson

Robertson was emerging as chief songwriter as well as producer, and his impressions of the road inspired the Band's third album, Stage Fright. After 1971's Cahoots (with an appearance by Van Morrison), the Band recorded a double live LP, Rock of Ages, followed in 1973 by a tribute to early rock & roll (Moondog Matinee, named after Alan Freed's radio show).

With the exception of a joint appearance in 1969 at the Isle of Wight Festival in Britain, the Band rarely worked with Dylan in the early '70s. But shortly after the Band played before a crowd of nearly 600,000 at the 1993 Watkins Glen rock festival with the Grateful Dead and the Allman Brothers Band (documented on a 1995 live album), the group joined Dylan in the studio for his Planet Waves. The next year, they toured together and produced the live album Before the Flood. The Band's output continued to slow through the '70s. In November 1975 the group released its first new material in four years, Northern Lights—Southern Cross, followed two years later by Islands. Robertson produced an album for Neil Diamond, Beautiful Noise, in 1976. After 16 years together, the Band called it quits with a gala concert on Thanksgiving Day 1976. The Band and guests (including Dylan, Morrison, Neil Young, Muddy Waters, Joni Mitchell, and Neil Diamond) performed at San Francisco's Winterland (the site of its first concert as the Band in 1969) for The Last Waltz, filmed by Martin Scorsese.

After the breakup, Helm continued to record and tour with the RCO All-Stars, an aggregation that included Dr. John, Paul Butterfield, Steve Cropper, Duck Dunn, and Booker T. Jones, the Cate Brothers, and Danko. He made his acting debut in 1980 in Coal Miner's Daughter and has since appeared in several other films. Robertson starred in and composed part of the score for 1980's Carry and wrote music for Scorsese's The King of Comedy before releasing his first solo album in 1987, Robbie Robertson, produced by Daniel Lanois, received tremendous media attention and went gold. 1991's Storyville however, fared poorly. In 1994 Robertson, whose mother was of Mohawk Indian descent, composed the soundtrack to a six-hour television documentary, The Native Americans, which featured American Indian musicians collectively dubbed the Red Road Ensemble. He continued to explore Native American music—with a trip-hop twist—on the adventurous Contact From the Underworld of Red Boy. Danko, too, recorded on his own, releasing his solo debut in 1977 and a pair of albums with singer/songwriter Eric Andersen and Norwegian folksinger Jonas Fjeld in the '90s.

The Band regrouped in 1983 with guitarist Jimmy Weider replacing Robertson, who'd declined an invitation to join. On March 4, 1986, following an appearance at the Cheek to Cheek Lounge in Winter Park, Florida, Manuel returned to his room and hanged himself with a belt. His body contained traces of cocaine and alcohol. The three remaining originals carried on with a variety of backing musicians. In 1993 they released the Band's first album of new material in 16 years, Jencho, which included interpretations of Bruce Springsteen's "Atlantic City" and Bob Dylan's "Blind Willie McTell," as well as their own compositions.

In 1994 the Band was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. Robertson turned out for the ceremony, but Helm stayed home. As he made abundantly clear in his 1993 autobiography, This Wheel's on Fire, the drummer bitterly resented Robertson for allegedly having claimed sole writing credit for collaborative efforts. Across the Great Divide, a three-disc box set, was released the same year.

With the same lineup as for Jencho—Helm, Danko, Hudson, Weider, Randy Ciarlante on vocals and drums, and Richard Bell on keyboards—the Band released High on the Hog in 1996, followed by Jubilation (featuring guests Eric Clapton and John Hiatt) two years later. In 1996 Danko was found guilty of colluding to smuggle heroin into Japan (after legal wrangling, he was eventually released from custody and left Japan). Hudson and Weider both sat in with Danko for his 1999 outing, Live on Breeze Hill, but on December 10 of that year, three weeks shy of his 57th birthday, Danko died in his sleep at his home in Woodstock, New York. He had returned home from a tour earlier that week and had been recording songs for what would have been his first new solo studio album in 22 years.

In 2000 Capitol began to reissue the Band's original albums, all embellished with extensive bonus tracks and outtakes.

Debbi Peterson with Kindred Spirit: 1994—Kindred Spirit (I.R.S.). Vicki Peterson with the Continental Drifters: 1994—Continental Drifters (Monkey Hill) 1999—Vermilion (Razor & Tie) 2001—Better Day.

The Bangles wanted to be an all-girl Beatles from California four pop stars who played competently wrote good songs, and had distinct personalities. The group formed when a "band members wanted" ad in an L.A. newspaper led Hoffs to the Peterson sisters. The group first called themselves the Colours, followed by the Supersonic Bangs, which they shortened to the Bangs. When a group with prior claim to that moniker showed up, they became the Bangles. Early on, the group was heralded as part of L.A.'s "paisley underground," a constellation of folkly psychedelic bands that included the Rain Parade and the Dream Syndicate. After establishing a reputation through a self-released single and live shows, the band signed a management deal with I.R.S. Records head Miles Copeland.

In 1983 the Bangles signed to Columbia. Bass player Zilinskas quit and joined Blood on the Saddle; she was replaced by Michael Steele, who had once sung for the Runaways. Veteran power-pop producer David Kahne produced All Over the Place, which featured such classic Bangles songs as "Hero Takes a Fall" and Kimberley Rew's (Soft Boys, Katrina and the Waves) "Going Down to Liverpool." The record initially sold a respectable 150,000 copies and earned critical praise. After seeing the video for "Hero Takes a Fall," Prince became a fan of the Bangles, particularly of Hoffs. He gave them the song "Manic Monday" (#2, 1986), written under the pseudonym Chnstopher; the single paved the way for the breakthrough success of Different Light (#2, 1986). The Kahne-produced album included "Walk Like an Egyptian" (#1, 1986), Jules Shear's "If She Knew What She Wants" (#29, 1986), "Walking Down Your Street" (#11, 1987), and a cover of Alex Chilton's "September Gurls." In 1987 the Bangles' version of Paul Simon's "Hazy Shade of Winter" from the Less Than Zero soundtrack became their second #1.

Everything (#15, 1988) yielded the hits "In Your Room" (#5, 1988) and "Eternal Flame" (#1, 1989). The group's plan to share songwriting, vocals, and fame had been steadily eroded by the media's focus on Hoffs, especially in light of her feature role in the largely forgotten 1987 film The All-nighter, which her mother, Tamar Hoffs, cowrote, directed, and produced. The other Bangles resented the star treatment and the musical direction in which it pushed the band. In late 1989 the group broke up.

Hoffs' first solo album (produced by Kahne) featured songs by or cowritten with such diverse figures as Diane Warren, Cyndi Lauper, and Juliana Hatfield. A version of David Bowie's "Boys Keep Swinging" (with the Who's John Entwistle on bass) gave the album its title, When You're a Boy. Vicki Peterson began collaborating with Susan Cowsill; they billed themselves as the Psycho Sisters and played clubs backed by the Continental Drifters (which the two eventually joined), and also sang backup for Giant Sand. In 1994 Peterson joined the Go-Go's' reunion tour, filling in for Charlotte Caffey, who was pregnant. Debbi Peterson formed the band Kindred Spirit, which released a self-titled album on I.R.S. in 1994.

Hoffs released her second solo album in 1996. The record included hidden bonus covers of Stealers Wheel's "Stuck in the Middle With You" and Lulu's "To Sir With Love." Hoffs and Debbi Peterson began writing together again in 1998, and the entire group reunited in 1999 to record "Get the Girl" for the movie Austin Powers: The Spy Who Shagged Me. In June 1999 the Bangles sang with the Los Angeles Philharmonic, conducted by George Martin, in a tribute to the Beatles at the Hollywood Bowl. The following year the band began recording a new album and in September 2000 embarked on a brief tour.

The Barbarians

Formed 1963, Provincetown, MA

Jerry Causi, bass; Jeff Morris, gr.; Bruce Benson, gr.; Moulty (b. Victor Moulton, Feb. 24, 1945, Greenfield, MA), drums. N.A.—The Barbarians (Laurie) 1979—The Barbarians (Rhino).

A classic mid-'60s protopunk garage band, the Barbarians boasted a drummer named Moulty who had a hook for a left hand (the result of an accident with a homemade pipe bomb when he was 14). He sang many of the band's songs, including the autobiographical "Moulty" (#90, 1966), in which he implored, "Don't turn away," and spoke of meeting "a girl, a real girl." Members of Levon and the Hawks (later known as the Band) backed Moulty on that track. The group had a minor hit with "Are You a Boy or Are You a Girl" (#55, 1965), a reference to the band's prepsychedelic long hair. The Barbarians appeared in the mid-'60s documentary The T.A.M.I.

Show Moulty now operates a cleaning service and is involved in real estate in Massachusetts. In the mid-'90s he formed a new Barbarians lineup that included two of his sons.

Barclay James Harvest

Stewart "Wooly" Wolstenholme (b. Apr. 15, 1947, Oldham), kybds., voc.; Melvyn John Pritchard (b. Jan. 20, 1948, Oldham), drums; John Lees (b. Jan. 13, 1947, Oldham), gr., voc.; Les Holroyd (b. Mar. 12, 1948, Bolton, Eng.), bass, voc.

1970—Barclay James Harvest (Capitol) 1971—Once Again (Sire) 1972—Early Morning Onward (EMI); Barclay James Harvest (Sire) 1973—Baby James Harvest (Capitol) 1974—Live (Polydor); Everyone Is Everybody Else 1975—Time Honoured Ghosts 1976—Octoberon (MCA) 1977—Gone to Earth 1978—Live Tapes (Polydor); XXI 1979—Best Of, vol. 2 (Harvest) (– Wolstenholme) 1980—Eyes of the Universe (Polydor) 1992—Best of Barclay James Harvest 1993—Caught in the Light.

This English art-rock band has developed a loyal cult following in its homeland, though only one album, 1976's Octoberon, has ever charted in the U.S. With a remarkably consistent personnel record for a veteran band that's never been financially successful, BJH has carried on for more than 25 years. Like the nascent Pink Floyd, with whom it is often compared, BJH was a hard-rock group with classical overtones when it signed to EMI/Parlophone in 1968. The group turned a frequently heard criticism—"poor man's Moody Blues"—into a song title on its 1977 LP Gone to Earth.

Barclay James Harvest was formed by art-school classmates John Lees and Stewart "Wooly" Wolstenholme. Beginning in 1970 EMI released its albums on a subsidiary label, Harvest, which was named after the promising BJH. But the promise never panned out, leaving BJH as a minor British attraction supported by an enthusiastic but limited cult. It released a number of albums in the '80s, but none in the U.S. Cofounder Wolstenholme left the group in 1979 and recorded a 1980 solo album, Maestro.

Barenaked Ladies

Formed 1988, Toronto, Can.

Steven Page (b. June 22, 1970, North York, Can.), voc., gr.; Ed Robertson (b. Oct. 25, 1970), gr., voc.; Jim Creeggan (b. Feb. 12, 1970, Toronto), bass; Tyler Stewart (b. Sep. 21, 1967, Toronto), drums; Andrew Creeggan, kybds.

1992—Gordon (Sire/Reprise) 1994—Maybe You Should Drive (– A. Creeggan) 1996—Born on a Pirate Ship (+ Kevin Hearn [b. July 3, 1969, Grinsby, Can.], kybds.) 1997—Rock Spectacle 1998—Stunt 2000—Maroon.

After a decade of mainstream success in their native Canada, the Barenaked Ladies finally hit big in America with their fifth album, Stunt, and its #1 smash, "One Week." A deliberately silly hybrid of pop and "rap," the song and its accompanying video were unavoidable during the summer of 1998, establishing the Ladies as the biggest Canadian crossover act since Alanis Morissette and Sarah McLachlan.

Cofrontmen and childhood friends Steven Page and Ed Robertson began writing music together after attending a summer music camp in 1988. After a couple of years performing in Toronto as a duo, Page and Robertson were joined by Tyler Stewart and brothers Jim and Andrew Creeggan, and in 1991 the band released an independent EP, The Yellow Tape. They were quickly signed to Sire/Reprise, which issued the band's debut album, Gordon, in 1992. The set repensed the hit "Be My Yoko Ono" from The Yellow Tape and also featured the Canadian hits "Brian Wilson" and "If I Had $1,000,000." Subsequent releases, Maybe You Should Drive (1994) and Born on a Pirate Ship (1996), didn't sell nearly as well, but produced enough Canadian hits to keep them on the pop radar. In 1997 the live album Rock Spectacle provided the group its first hint at U.S. success, although it only made it to #108 on the album chart, two of the album's songs cracked the Hot 100—the bittersweet "The Old Apartment" (#88) and "Brian Wilson" (#68). When Stunt was released the following summer, it debuted at #3.

Just before Stunt hit big, keyboardist Keven Hearn (who had joined in 1996, two years after Andrew Creeggan's departure) was diagnosed with leukemia. (His treatments seemed to put the disease in remission.) In 2000, Barenaked Ladies released Maroon (#5). Although it didn't produce a hit on the level of "One Week," the song "Pinch Me" climbed to #15.

The Bar-Kays

Original lineup: Jimmy King (b. 1949; d. Dec. 10, 1967, Madison, W), gr.; Ron Caldwell (b. 1948; d. Dec. 10, 1967, Madison), organ; Phalin Jones (b. 1949; d. Dec. 10, 1967, Madison), sax; Carl Cunningham (b. 1949; d. Dec. 10, 1967, Madison), drums; Ben Cauley, trumpet; James Alexander, bass.

1967—Soul Finger (Volt) 1969—Gotta Groove (Stax) 1982—Night Cruisin' (Mercury) 1984—Dangerous 1985—Banging the Wall 1987—Contagious 1989—Bar-Kays: Animal 1994—48 Hours (Basix) 1996—Best of Bar-Kays (Curb).

The Bar-Kays were part of the Stax-Volt roster in the mid-'60s and had one big hit, "Soul Finger" (#17), in 1967. The band's career seemed finished when four members died in the icy plane crash that also killed Otis Redding in 1967. Bassist James Alexander, who'd missed the flight, and trumpeter Ben Cauley, the only passenger to survive the accident, re-formed the group in late 1968, although Cauley quit soon after. For many years Alexander and a changing roster of Bar-Kays consistently placed singles on the R&B chart and enjoyed the occasional pop hit, such as "Shake Your Rump to the Funk" (#23, 1976). The '80s saw five R&B Top 10s for the group: "Boogie Body Land" (#7, 1980), "Hit and Run" (#5, 1981), "Do It (Let Me See You Shake)" (#9, 1982), "Freakshow on the Dance Floor" (#2, 1984) (from the hip-hop film Breakin'), and "Certified True" (#9, 1987).

Regarded as one of soul's premier backing bands, the Bar-Kays worked in the early '70s with such artists as the Staple Singers, Albert King, Carla Thomas, Johnnie Taylor, and Isaac Hayes. They backed the latter on his Grammy Award-winning "Shaft" in 1971. Several excellent R&B musicians have passed through the Bar-Kays' ranks, including vocalist Vernon Burch and drummer Willie Hall, who went on to play in Hayes' band for several years and then joined the revamped Booker T. and the MG's in 1975. Since 1987 the Bar-Kays lineup has remained fairly stable, with vocalist Larry Dodson and Alexander still at the helm.

Syd Barrett

Born Roger Keith Barrett, Jan. 6, 1946, Cambridge, Eng.
1970—The Madcap Laughs (Harvest); Barrett (Capitol)
1987—Peel Sessions (Harvest) 1989—Opel (Capitol)
1994—Crazy Diamond—The Complete Syd Barrett (EMI); Octopus (Cleopatra).

British singer/songwriter/guitarist Syd Barrett was an art-school student in London when he founded and named Pink Floyd [see entry] in 1964. He wrote "See Emily Play" and "Piper at the Gates of Dawn" for the group, and his acid-inspired lyrics were the quintessence of London's 1967

Syd Barrett

Summer of Love. Barrett was dismissed from the band in April 1968 because of his drug-induced personality problems; David Gilmour replaced him after covering for him when he began missing shows. Barrett released two intriguing but poor-selling solo albums in 1970. He appeared on John Peel's BBC radio show (released on album in 1987) and did a couple of gigs with a loose-knit band called Stars. He has basically been living in Cambridge as a recluse since 1972, and in recent years has suffered from declining health. Pink Floyd dedicated a popular 1975 song, "Shine On, You Crazy Diamond," to its eccentric founder. Barrett's surreal songwriting and atmospheric sound has influenced such artists as Robyn Hitchcock and Julian Cope. As of 2000, Barrett, an insulin-dependent diabetic, was reportedly almost totally blind due to complications from the disease.

Basehead

Formed Apr. 1990, Washington, DC
Michael Ivey (b. Feb. 5, 1968, Pittsburgh, PA), voc., gtr., kybds., bass, perc.; Brian Hendrix (b. July 29, 1968, Pittsburgh), drums, perc.; DJ Unique (b. Paul Howard), DJ.
1991—Play With Toys (Emigre) (- Howard; + Keith Lofton [b. May 9, 1967, Washington, DC], gtr.; + Bill Conway [b. Nov.
29, 1967, Washington, DC], bass; + Clarence "Citizen Cope"
Greenwood [b. May 20, 1965, Washington, DC], DJ) 1993—
Not in Kansas Anymore (Imago) 1996—Faith.

Featuring a scratching DJ and spoken-sung vocals by group leader Michael Ivey, Basehead defied simple categorization. Ivey mumbled or sleepily crooned his wryly ironic lyrics over quirky, quietly rockish arrangements in a hip-hop/college rock hybrid critics termed "slacker rap," while comparing Ivey to Lou Reed, Tom Waits, and Sly Stone.

A middle-class black kid who grew up learning guitar, Ivey formed high school bands with fellow Pittsburgh native Brian Hendrix, then complained about the lack of guitar parts in their keyboard-dominated R&B covers. While studying film at Howard University, Ivey (who made his directing debut with the video "Do You Wanna Fuck [or What]?" from Not in Kansas Anymore) recorded Play With Toys almost exclusively himself. The album signaled its offbeat genre crossing by opening with Ivey, as "Jethro and the Graham Crackers," performing a hillbilly version of James Brown's "Sex Machine" to the sound of audience catcalls.

The tiny West Coast label Emigre released 3,000 copies of Play With Toys to considerable college-radio play and rave reviews. Ivey recruited friends from Howard for a 1991 tour with "alternative rap" acts Me Phi Me, Disposable Heroes of Hiphopnsy, and Divine Styler. The Basehead band also played on three tracks of the Kansas album, which backed Ivey's deadpan takes on racial and sexual politics with a somewhat harder sound. In 1996 Basehead released Faith. Guitarist Keith Lofton, working as Lazy K, released a solo effort, Life in One Day (Mutant Sound System), the next year.

Basia

Born Basia Trzeciełewska, Sep. 30, 1956, Jaworzno, Pol.
 1987—Time and Tide (Epic) 1989—London Warsaw New York
 1991—Brave New Hope EP 1994—The Sweetest Illusion
 1995—Basia on Broadway 1998—Clear Horizon: The Best of Basia (Sony).

The Polish-born Basia crossed the Iron Curtain in the '80s to become an international pop singer and fixture on "jazz-lite" stations everywhere. Born in the industrial city of Jaworzno, she first performed with the all-female group Ali Babki in 1975, touring the Soviet bloc for two years. In 1979 she moved to Chicago to sing with a cover band in a Polish-American club. Two years later she was in London, singing for the jazz-funk group Bronze. She then joined Matt Bianco, a threesome whose hit record, Whose Side Are You On?, featured a smooth pop blend of jazz and Latin styles. In 1985 Basia left Matt Bianco to go solo, taking keyboardist Danny White with her as cowriter. Her first album, the platinum Time and Tide (#36, 1988), yielded the pop hits "Time and Tide" (#26, 1988) and "New Day for You" (#53, 1989). She continued to explore soul, samba, swing, and bossa nova on London Warsaw New York (#20, 1990), a platinum album that featured the single "Cruising for Bruising" (#29, 1990). The Sweetest Illusion (1994) included more Latin-tinged material, including the salsa-styled "An Olive Tree."

The Sweetest Illusion didn't sell nearly as well as its predecessors, and the singer followed it up with the 1995 live set, Basia on Broadway. Culled from dates during Basia's engagement at New York City's Neil Simon Theatre, the album consists of hits and new material; one track features saxophonist Jay Beckenstein from the MOR jazz combo Spyro Gyra. Basia's 1998 best-of includes four songs previously unreleased in the U.S.

Bauhaus/Peter Murphy/ Love and Rockets

Formed 1979, Northampton, Eng.

Peter Murphy (b. July 11, 1957, Northampton), voc.; Daniel Ash (b. July 31, 1957, Northampton), gtr., voc., sax, kybds., bass; David J (a.k.a. David Jay, b. David J. Haskins, Apr. 24, 1957, Northampton), bass, voc., kybds., gtr.; Kevin Haskins (b. July 19, 1960, Northampton), drums, kybds.

David J solo: 1990—Songs From Another Season (Beggars Banquet/RCA) 1992—Urban Urbane (MCA).

Daniel Ash solo: 1991—Coming Down (Beggars Banquet/RCA) 1992—Foolish Thing Desire (Beggars Banquet/Columbia).

Resembling a convention of the undead and playing songs distinguished by spare, atmospheric guitars, sonorous, death-rattle vocals, and deliberate tempos, Bauhaus was the progenitor of gothic rock. Its founding members have gone on to pursue various other projects in the realm of underground rock.

In 1978 brothers David and Kevin Haskins formed the Craze with Daniel Ash, an old school friend. With the addition of vocalist Peter Murphy they became Bauhaus 1919, named after the German architectural group whose credo was "Less is more." The "1919" was dropped for their 1979 debut single, "Bela Lugosi's Dead," an eight-minute epic later heard in the 1983 David Bowie film, The Hunger.

An appearance on BBC radio DJ John Peel's show led to a record contract. Bauhaus became an underground success in Britain, and made the U.K. chart with "Kick in the Eye" (#59, 1981) and Mask (#30, 1981). The Sky's Gone Out (1982) was its American debut. That year the band released its biggest U.K. hit, a cover of David Bowie's "Ziggy Stardust" (#15). Bauhaus' influence was also felt in the Batcave, a popular London club that took its musical and sartorial cues from the band. Burning From the Inside, more a compilation of solo songs than a band project (Murphy was ill and missed most of the sessions), foreshadowed Bauhaus' breakup later that year.

Murphy joined Japan's Mick Karn in the experimental Dali's Car, they recorded one album in 1984. In 1985 he launched a solo career. Collaborating with keyboardist/producer Paul Stratham, Murphy toned down the more excessive, arty elements of Bauhaus and emphasized his Bowie-esque vocals. He had a minor hit with 1990's "Cuts You Up" (#55), from the album Deep (#44, 1990).

Ash, along with Bauhaus roadie Glenn Camppling, originally began Tones on Tail as a side project in 1981. When Bauhaus split, Kevin Haskins signed on. They released several U.K. EPs and singles plus an album, all of which have been compiled on several U.S. releases. After a 1984 American tour, Ash and Haskins dissolved the band. David J joined the Jazz Butcher, but left after the 1984 album A Scandal in Bohemia. He also released a string of U.K. solo albums in the early to mid-'80s. With their careers stalled, the members of Bauhaus planned to reunite in 1985. When Murphy demurred at the last minute, the other three decided to re-form as Love and Rockets (the name comes from the underground comic book series by Los Angeles Gilbert and Jaime Hernandez). A more danceable version of Bauhaus' atmospherics, their initial release, 1985's Seventh Dream of Teenage Heaven, went unreleased in the U.S. until 1988, but their U.K. hit cover of the Temptations' "Ball of Confusion" was included in their U.S. debut, Express (#72, 1986); they broke into the mainstream in 1989 with Love and Rockets (#14) and the Top 10 single "So Alive" (#3).

In the early '90s, Ash issued his solo debut and J resumed his solo recording, this time on an American label. Love and Rockets came under the sway of the acid house/techno sound rampant in England and returned to the studio in 1994. This new inspiration is evident on the resultant Hot Trip to Heaven, especially in the 14-minute ambient "Body and Soul" and in "Ugly," featuring Middle Eastern-inflected vocals by Natacha Atlas of Trans-Global Underground. Sweet F.A. and Lift continued to mix contemporary techno with guitar-based gloom. Their careers cooling once more, Murphy, Ash, J, and Haskins resurrected Bauhaus for a successful tour in 1998, by which time goth rock had become the subject of numerous nostalgic theme nights at American dance clubs. Crackie is a best-of that includes several rarities. Gotham is a two-disc live set taped at New York's Hammerstein Ballroom.

Bay City Rollers

Formed 1970, Edinburgh, Scot.

Alan Longmuir (b. June 20, 1953, Edinburgh), bass; Eric Faulkner (b. Oct. 21, 1955, Edinburgh), gtr.; Derek Longmuir (b. Mar. 19, 1955, Edinburgh), drums; Leslie McKeown (b. Nov. 12, 1955, Edinburgh), voc.; Stuart "Woody" Wood (b. Feb. 25, 1957, Edinburgh), gtr., bass.

1975—Bay City Rollers (Arista) 1976—Rock 'n' Roll Love Letter Dedication (- A. Longmuir; + Ian Mitchell [b. Aug. 22, 1958], gtr.; - Mitchell; + Pat McGlynn [b. Mar. 31, 1958, Edinburgh], gtr.) 1977—Greatest Hits (- McGlynn) 1978—Strangers in the Wild (- McKeown; + Duncan Faure, voc.) 1982-2000—(various reunions, spinoffs, and partial re-formations).

Though the Bay City Rollers were initially hyped as the "new Beatles," the Rollers actually were cute young musicians who were vigorously promoted to a market of teenagers. Probably the most successful act ever to emerge from Scotland, the group scored its first English hit in 1971. Through the next few years, under the guidance of mentor/manager Tam Paton (who named the group by arbitrarily sticking a pin in a U.S. map and hitting Bay City, Michigan), the Bay City Rollers slowly expanded their predominantly female audience. Clad in tartan uniforms, they eventually inspired a genuine outbreak of teenage frenzy reminiscent of Beatlemania. Rollermania spread to the U.S. briefly in early 1976 with the group's first stateside concerts and a late-1975 #1 single, "Saturday Night." The Rollers' close-knit, wholesome image was tarnished somewhat in the late '70s with the disclosures that they had all regularly taken Valium to help them cope with the rigors of superstardom and life on the road and that Faulkner and Mitchell had been treated for overdoses in apparent suicide attempts. (In 1993 Faulkner claimed that his OD was accidental.)

By the early '80s they were a quartet playing bars in the U.S., still wearing their tartan plaid. In an unforeseen turn of events, demand for the reconstituted band was on the rise, particularly in Japan. Years of partial reunion tours and spin-off acts ensued. Alan Longmuir, Faulkner, Wood, and a drummer named Kass toured the U.S. in 1993. In 2000 Wood, who has released several albums of Celtic mood music, was reportedly working on a new album with McKeown. In March of that year, Derek Longmuir pleaded guilty to possessing child pornography. In addition, Courtney Love, who had purchased the rights to Caroline Sullivan's Rollers memoir Bye Bye Baby, was planning to direct a film about the group's fall from grace.

The Beach Boys

Formed 1961, Hawthorne, CA

Brian Wilson (b. June 20, 1942, Hawthorne), voc., bass, piano; Dennis Wilson (b. Dec. 4, 1944, Hawthorne; d. Dec. 28, 1983, Marina Del Rey, CA), voc., drums; Carl Wilson (b. Brian Wilson solo: 1988—Brian Wilson (Sire) 1995—I Just Wasn't Made for These Times soundtrack (MCA); Orange Crate Art (Warner Bros.) 1998—Imagination (Giant) 2000—Live at the Roxy Theatre (Brimel Records).

Carl Wilson solo: 1981—Carl Wilson (Caribou) 1983—What You Do to Me.

Dennis Wilson solo: 1977—Pacific Ocean Blue (Caribou/Epic).

In their early '60s hits the Beach Boys virtually invented California rock. Brian Wilson's songs celebrated an idealized California teenhood—surfing, driving, dating—and his productions were a glossy, perfectionistic, ultra-smooth blend of guitars and vocal harmonies, with their experiments concealed. While the Beach Boys attempted more grown-up topics and more obvious progressivism in the late '60s, they survived into the late '90s as America's premier nostalgia act. Through the years, the Beach Boys have not only been "America's band" but arguably one of the greatest American rock bands ever. The Beach Boys have sold well over 65 million records worldwide.

The three Wilson brothers were encouraged by their parents, Murray and Audree, to try music and sports. Brian was a varsity baseball player at suburban Hawthorne High when he began to work seriously on music. His first band included brothers Dennis and Carl (who was expelled from Hawthorne High for going to the bathroom without permission), cousin Mike Love, and friend Al Jardine. As the Pendletones, Kenny and the Cadets (Brian was "Kenny"), or Carl and the Passions, the group played local gigs. At Dennis' suggestion, Love and Brian wrote "Surfin'," which became a regional hit on the soon defunct Candix label in December 1961 while the group was calling itself the Beach Boys. Like most of their early songs, "Surfin'" used Chuck Berry guitar licks with vocal harmonies (arranged by Brian) recalling '50s pop groups like the Four Freshmen, which Brian studied closely.

Murray Wilson, who was later revealed to have been psychologically and physically abusive to his sons, managed their band and got them a contract with Capitol. The hits began: "Surfin' Safari" (#14, 1962); "Surfin' U.S.A." (#3, 1963), a note-for-note copy of Berry's "Sweet Little Sixteen" with new lyrics; and "Surfer Girl" (#7, 1963), all of which launched and capitalized on the "surf music" fad, although only Dennis surfed regularly. "Surfer Girl" marked Brian's emergence as a producer, with its complex vocal harmonies and sophisticated pop chords. An admirer of producer Phil Spector, Brian would continue to refine his skills and become perhaps one of the greatest record producers in rock.

The years 1963–1965 established the Beach Boys' legacy.

"Little Deuce Coupe" (#15, 1963), "Be True to Your School" (#6, 1963), and "Fun, Fun, Fun" (#5, 1964), written by Brian and Love in a taxi to the Salt Lake City airport; "I Get Around" (#1, 1964); "Dance, Dance, Dance" (#8, 1964); "Help Me, Rhonda" (#1, 1965); "California Girls" (#3, 1965); and such ballads as "In My Room" (#23, 1963) and "Don't Worry, Baby" (#24, 1964). Early in 1965 Brian Wilson suffered a nervous breakdown and decided to quit touring, though he continued writing, recording, and producing.

Pet Sounds, which was released in March 1966, and included "Caroline, No" (#23), "Wouldn't It Be Nice" (#8, 1966), and "God Only Knows" (#39, 1966), hit #10 but sold comparatively poorly. (In fact, it was not certified gold until the 30th anniversary of its release, in 1996.) Nonetheless, it stands as one of the most important works in the Beach Boys oeuvre, for it ushered in the era of studio experimentation, predating the Beatles' Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band and rivaling even Spector in terms of sophistication. With the passage of time, the importance of Pet Sounds has only grown. Paul McCartney and Beatles producer George Martin have acknowledged that it was the inspiration for Sgt. Pepper, and the album's 30th anniversary was celebrated in 1997 (a year late) with the release of a four-CD box set that included tracks stripped of vocals and vocal tracks without instrumentation. At the same time grunge indie label Sub Pop released a single containing three previously unreleased tracks: a stereo mix of "I Just Wasn't Made for These Times," a vocal-only version of "Wouldn't It Be Nice," and the stereo backing track for "Here Today" (All three tracks are also contained in the Pet Sounds box.)

The highlight of the Beach Boys' borderline psychedelic period was "Good Vibrations" (#1, 1966) (from Wild Honey), Wilson's production masterpiece. It took six months and cost $16,000 to make, with several distinct sections and such exotic instruments as Jew's harp, sleighbells, harpsichord, and theremin. Meanwhile, Brian's ambitions, neuroses, and drug intake were increasing throughout the '60s. He and Van Dyke Parks began collaborating on Smile in late 1966, but after a mysterious fire at the studio where they were working, Wilson reportedly destroyed most of the tapes in a fit of paranoia. Several songs have surfaced since; the Wilson-Parks "Heroes and Villains" (#12, 1967) appeared on Smiley Smile, and the melancholy, beautiful title cut of 1971's Surf's Up was also a Smile composition. The Smile debacle, and Smiley Smile, marked the end of Brian's reign as the Beach Boys' sole producer.

Beginning with Wild Honey (#24, 1967), other group members shared writing and production, along with Bruce Johnston, who had joined the touring Beach Boys after Brian retired from the road in late 1964. (Johnston replaced Glen Campbell after a brief stint.) Johnston has been associated on and off with the Beach Boys, primarily as producer, ever since. The Beach Boys' late-'60s touring band also included Daryl Dragon (later the Captain of the Captain and Tennille) on keyboards; Blondie Chaplin (later a sideman with the Rolling Stones and others) on guitar, bass, and vocals; and Ricky Fataar (later of Joe Walsh's band) on drums. In 1968 the Beach Boys became the first major American rock band to play behind the Iron Curtain when they performed in Czechoslovakia. Increasingly, Carl played a larger role in directing the group. His was the lead voice on "Good Vibrations," "Surf's Up," "Wild Honey" (#31, 1967), "Darlin'" (#19, 1967), and "Friends" (#47, 1968), among others.

Beginning in 1970 and for the next 18 years, the Beach Boys released their records on their own Brother label, a custom imprint of Warner/Reprise. Their first album under the deal, Sunflower (#151, 1970), inaugurated a five-year performance hiatus for Brian, although he tried one live show in early 1970 at the Whisky-a-Go-Go in L.A. The group's hugely popular oldies-dominated live shows reinforced in the public's mind the image of a group whose creative past was behind it. In fact, however, 20/20 (#68, 1969), Sunflower, and its more successful followup, Surf's Up (#29, 1971) contained some of the group's more adventurous and interesting work: the lower charting but important singles "Do It Again" (#20, 1968), "I Can Hear Music" (#24, 1969), "Add Some Music to Your Day" (#64, 1970), "Long Promised Road" (#89, 1971), and the intriguing album cuts "This Whole World" and "Til I Die."

In 1972 the Beach Boys decided to record in Holland, but after relocating their families learned there were no adequate studio facilities. They had a studio broken down, shipped, and reconstructed in a converted barn, where over six months they recorded Holland. Reprise initially rejected the album for a lack of what the company considered a solid hit single, so Brian Wilson and Van Dyke Parks provided "Sail On Sailor" (written by Brian and several others in addition to Parks). With a rare lead vocal by Blondie Chaplin, the single hit #79 when released in 1973, but rose to #49 when rereleased in 1975. Holland also contained "The Trader," yet another of Carl's more introspective, mature works, and Al Jardine's "California Saga (On My Way to Sunny Californ-ia)" (#84, 1973). Aside from a critically acclaimed double live album, The Beach Boys in Concert (#25, 1973), the group's next five charting releases would be repackages and greatest-hits compilations, including Endless Summer (#1, 1974) and Spirit of America (#8, 1975). Another stellar live collection, Beach Boys '69 (The Beach Boys Live in London) came out in 1976 (#75).

Meanwhile, efforts continued to coax Brian out of his Bel Air mansion, which included a sandbox as well as a recording studio. In the late '60s he had briefly run a West Hollywood health food store, the Radiant Radish, and in 1972 he produced an album by his wife, Marilyn, and her sister Diane Powell, as Spring (or American Spring). In 1976, after a much-publicized rehabilitation, Brian rejoined the band for 15 Big Ones (#8, 1976). It included oldie remakes (Chuck Berry's "Rock and Roll Music," which went to #5 and was the Beach Boys' only Top 10 hit from late 1966 through mid-1988) and Brian Wilson originals such as "It's O.K." (#29, 1976), with backing tracks Brian had recorded with ELO founder Roy Wood's group Wizzard.

In 1977 open personality clashes (primarily between Dennis Wilson and Mike Love) jeopardized the band's future as it switched labels and moved over to CBS; eventually Love's brothers Stan and Steve were removed from the Beach Boys' management organization. Steve Love was later sentenced to prison for embezzling nearly $1 million from the group. Johnston was back as coproducer for L.A. (Light Album); in the mid-'70s he had left the band to concentrate on songwriting (including Barry Manilow's hit "I Write the Songs") and make a solo album, Going Public (1977). Love You (#53, 1977) contained another overlooked gem, "Honkin' Down the Highway" along with Brian's surreal tribute to the king of late-night TV, "Johnny Carson." Chartwise, the late '70s were a low time for the group. Neither M.I.U. Album (1978) nor L.A. (Light Album) (1979) charted. A flop single from M.I.U. was rereleased in 1981 and provided the group's first nonmedley Top 20 hit since 1976 in a #18 remake of the Dell-Vikings' "Come Go With Me."

The '80s proved a tumultuous decade for the group. Carl Wilson quit in 1981 to concentrate on his solo career. He, more than the others, seemed to resist the band's increasingly nostalgic appeal. But after his return the following year, the Beach Boys continued being known more as an oldies-but-goodies act, albeit an extraordinarily successful one. In 1983 they unwittingly became the center of controversy when Secretary of the Interior James Watt banned them from performing a Fourth of July concert at the Washington Monument. Public opinion was solidly against Watt, who later resigned, and the group was personally invited to play the Washington Monument the next summer by First Lady Nancy Reagan. Nineteen eighty-three marked Brian's return to the stage with the group, but also the death of Dennis. On December 28 the hard-living drummer drowned while swimming off his boat in Marina Del Rey, California. With the help of President Ronald Reagan, special permission was granted so that Dennis' body could be buried at sea. Brian had since come and gone from the group. The Beach Boys enjoyed their third #1 hit, their biggest-selling single ever, "Kokomo" (1988), from the hit film Cocktail, without him. Brian's long-awaited first solo album came out that year. Coproduced by his longtime therapist, Dr. Eugene Landy (whose license to practice therapy was later revoked), Brian Wilson elicited glowing reviews but sold poorly. The Beach Boys were inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1988.

As of 1993 Brian was a touring Beach Boy again. Later Mike Love sued Brian, his cowriter Todd Gold, and Landy, claiming he had been defamed in Wilson's autobiography, Wouldn't It Be Nice?: My Own Story. The case was settled out of court in early 1994. In 1995 Brian and Love settled a long-running legal dispute over songwriting credit and royalties for Love. Wilson paid Love $5 million and Love has writing credit on such songs as "Wouldn't It Be Nice" and "California Girls." That same year, Brian Wilson and his estranged daughter Nicole reconciled their differences and contributed "Fantasy Is Reality/Bells of Madness" to Rob Wasserman's Trios LP.

The period from the mid-'90s through the turn of the century brought dramatic changes within the group, including what appears to be, at this writing, the end of the Beach Boys as we know them. They made their biggest impression on the country chart, where their Stars and Stripes, vol. 1 (#12 C&W, 1996) featured "duets" with the group and country stars. In 1995 Brian was the subject of producer Don Was' documentary I Just Wasn't Made for These Times; he also released a second solo album, Orange Crate Art, and remarried. In 1997 he provided some production work, songwriting, and background singing for his daughters Carnie and Wendy's album The Wilsons. His third solo album, Imagination (#88, 1998), was warmly received upon its release, and Wilson returned to performing. By then he had relocated to Illinois, and in a series of candid interviews gave the impression of someone happy and comfortable at last. "My music isn't going to save the world," he said when Imagination was released. "But I think it's going to save souls, certain people in the world. It pleases me to be able to do that. It feels good." He began touring in 1999. For his 2000 tour, he performed Pet Sounds accompanied by a symphony orchestra, a live album was released from that tour in 2001. In June 2000, Brian was inducted into the Songwriters' Hall of Fame. In 2001 he and Pet Sounds were the recipients of a star-studded tribute (with guests Elton John, Paul Simon, and Billy Joel, among others), televised on TNT.

Ironically, as Brian Wilson seemed to be coming back into his own, the Beach Boys were enduring perhaps the most difficult times of their long career. In 1997 Carl Wilson was diagnosed with lung cancer, which later developed into brain cancer. He continued to tour with the group as his health would permit, sometimes even performing sitting in a chair. However, by fall 1997 he retired (he was replaced by David Marks, an original member who quit the group in 1963 but continued receiving about $20,000 a year in royalties). Carl died on February 6, 1998, in L.A., at age 51.

Shortly after Carl's passing, Al Jardine quit the group, leaving only Love, Johnston, and Marks (who, ironically, had been replaced by Jardine back in 1964). The trio toured as the Beach Boys, with added musicians, while Jardine emerged with his Beach Boys Family and Friends (later renamed Al Jardine's Family and Friends Beach Band after Brother Records International, the corporate entity that is the Beach Boys, got an injunction against his using the Beach Boys name), which included two of his sons and Carnie and Wendy Wilson. Love and Jardine feuded bitterly in the press and in court, but much of this was overshadowed by an ongoing celebration of the Beach Boys legacy, in a documentary (VH1's The Beach Boys: Endless Harmony), a made-for-TV miniseries (The Beach Boys: An American Family), and three simultaneously released greatest-hits packages. In 2001 the group received a Lifetime Achievement Award Grammy.

The Beastie Boys were the first white group to offer a successful send-up of rap. After emerging from New York's hardcore punk underground of the early '80s, the group crossed over into the mainstream in 1986 with its first full-length album, Licensed to Ill, the first rap album to hit #1. Featuring "(You Gotta) Fight for Your Right (to Party)" (#7) and "Brass Monkey" (#48 pop, #83 R&B, 1987), the album sold 720,000 copies in six weeks, becoming one of Columbia's fastest-selling debuts ever. By the late '80s, the Beastie Boys' sound had begun to mature, expanding into spaced-out funk and psychedelia, yet retaining its adolescent charm and hit-making sensibility.

At 14, Adam Horowitz, son of playwright Israel Horowitz, joined the hardcore band the Young and the Useless. His friends Adam Yauch and Mike Diamond, children of wealthy New York families, had formed the four-piece hardcore band the Beastie Boys along with Kate Schellenbach, later of the group Luscious Jackson, and John Berry. By 1982 the Beasties had released a 7-inch EP, Polly Wog Stew, on the independent label Rat Cage. Horowitz joined shortly thereafter.

The Beasties' first attempt at rap came with the 1983 12-inch spoof, "Cookie Puss," based on a crank call they made to the Carvel ice cream company. It wasn't until the trio teamed up with friend Rick Rubin—who would start the Def Jam label in his college dorm room the next year—that the Beasties began taking rap seriously. The marriage was perfect, producer Rubin working into the group's bratty raps samples with appropriately white, upper-middle-class references: Led Zeppelin, heavy-metal guitar, and the theme to TV's Mr. Ed.

With thumbs-up from Rubin's then-partner, Russell Simmons, head of Rush Productions and manager of Run-DM.C., the Beasties were signed to Def Jam in 1985. That same year they appeared in one of rap's first movies, Krush Groove, with the single "She's on It." They also opened for Madonna's Virgin Tour, during which they shouted obscenities to the audiences and got booed in return. In 1986 the trio toured with Run-DM.C.'s violence-plagued Raisin' Hell Tour.

Nineteen-eighty-seven was a watershed year for the Beasties. The success of "Fight for Your Right" led to the trio headlining their own tour, which was plagued by lawsuits, arrests, blame for violence and vandalism, and accusations of sexism and obscenity. In 1988 they appeared in Run-DM.C.'s movie, Tougher Than Leather. The Beastie Boys broke with Rubin and Def Jam over financial and personal differences, and moved to L.A., where they met producers the Dust Brothers (John King and Mike Simpson). Together they created the long-awaited second album, Paul's Boutique (#14, 1989), whose release on Capitol came three years after the Beasties' debut—partially due to a bitter legal dispute with Rubin. The band made an artistic leap on the record, turning their obnoxious, white, bourgeois take on rap into a funky, album-long sound collage. The record produced the Top 40 song "Hey Ladies" (#36), but sold far less than Licensed to Ill.

It would be another three years until their third LP, Check

Your Head (#10, 1992), an eclectic album on which the Beastie Boys picked up their instruments again, was released on their own Capitol-distributed Grand Royal label. The record marked the first appearance of longtime sidemen DJ Hurricane and keyboardist Money Mark (a.k.a. Mark Ramos Nishita). It broke the Top 10 in a week, even though it jumps stylistically from funk to rap to hardcore. In 1994 the Beasties released a compilation of their early hardcore singles and EPs as Some Old Bullshit (#46), followed by a new album, Ill Communication (#1 pop, #2 R&B, 1994), which continued in the eclectic (and successful) vein of Check Your Head and debuted at the top of the albums chart. That summer, the Beastie Boys joined Smashing Pumpkins, the Breeders, George Clinton, and other big names for Lollapalooza '94 (as Luscious Jackson played on the second stage).

It would be four more years before the Beastie Boys released another full album of new material. Meanwhile, they demonstrated a lingering fondness for hardcore punk on the Aglio E Olio EP (1995), and collected old and new jazzy, soul-influenced instrumental tracks on The In Sound From Way Out! (#45, 1996).

Yauch had been responsible for some of the Beasties' wildest behavior (with girls, drugs, and egg-throwing), but in the '90s embraced Buddhism and organized the annual star-studded Tibetan Freedom Concert, which demanded independence for Tibet. Diamond assumed hands-on management of Grand Royal, which branched off into a short-lived magazine of the same name, and co-owned a clothing company called X-Large. In the late '80s Horowitz dabbled in acting, married actor Ione Skye, and created the side project BS2000, releasing Simply Mortified in 2001.

After the hit Spike Jonze-directed video for "Sabotage," the director and the Beasties began discussing doing a feature film. When those ideas fell through, the band began work on a new album. Hello Nasty (1998) debuted at #1 with 22 tracks of hip-hop, rock, soul, bossa nova, opera, salsa, and cutting-edge turntablism by Mixmaster Mike (replacing DJ Hurricane). The band toured that same year. The first single, "Intergalactic," was accompanied by a video directed by Nathaniel Hornblower, a "Swiss independent filmmaker" (actually Yauch in lederhosen and a fake beard). Another tour scheduled for 2000—to include coheadliner Rage Against the Machine—was canceled after Diamond was seriously injured in a bicycle accident.

1976—Nerves EP (Nerves).

The power pop Paul Collins produced with the Nerves and with his own band, the Beat, has been compared to the Hollies and Byrds for its soaring harmonies and spare, gritty guitars.

The Nerves were part of the early San Francisco new-wave scene; they are best known for the original version of "Hangin' on the Telephone," covered by Blondie in 1978. They broke up in 1978; bassist Peter Case went on to form the Plimsouls, songwriter Jack Lee attempted a solo career, and Collins moved to L.A. There he met bassist Steve Huff through a classified ad, the two began to write songs and record them at Huff's home studio. The resulting tape attracted drummer Mike Ruiz, who brought in Larry Whitman.

In 1979 the Beat opened for Eddie Money at Bill Graham's Kabuki Theater in San Francisco. Graham became the new band's manager and secured a contract with Columbia later that year. While the Beat's energetic, concise songs were popular on college radio, the quartet never had a national hit. Columbia dropped the group in 1982. The next year, Collins returned with a new Beat, backed by former members of the Patti Smith Group and Tom Verlaine's solo band. In the early '90s, Collins, then living in New York, began recording and touring with his Paul Collins Band, with whom he has released several live and import titles.

The impact of the Beatles—not only on rock & roll but on all of Western culture—is simply incalculable. As musicians they proved that rock & roll could embrace a limitless variety of harmonies, structures, and sounds; virtually every rock experiment has some precedent on Beatles records. As a unit they were a musically synergistic combination. Paul McCartney's melodic bass lines, Ringo Starr's slaphappy no-rolls drumming, George Harrison's rockabilly-style guitar leads, John Lennon's assertive rhythm guitar—and their four fervent voices. One of the first rock groups to write most of its own material, they inaugurated the era of self-contained bands and forever centralized pop. And as personalities, they defined and incarnated '60s style: smart, idealistic, playful, irreverent, eclectic. Their music, from the not-so-simple love songs they started with to their later perfectionistic studio extravaganzas, set new standards for both commercial and artistic success in pop. Although many of their sales and attendance records have since been surpassed, no group has so radically transformed the sound and significance of rock & roll. At the dawn of the 21st century, a chart-topping collection of their #1 hits, 1, was well on its way to becoming one of the best-selling albums of all time.

Lennon was performing with his amateur skiffle group the Quarrymen at a church picnic on July 6, 1957, in the Liverpool suburb of Woolton when he met McCartney, whom he later invited to join his group; soon they were writing songs together, such as "The One After 909." By the year's end McCartney had convinced Lennon to let Harrison join their group, the name of which was changed to Johnny and the Moondogs in 1958. In 1960 an art-school friend of Lennon's, Stu Sutcliffe, became their bassist. Sutcliffe couldn't play a note but had recently sold one of his paintings for a considerable sum, which the group, now rechristened the Silver Beetles (from which "Silver" was dropped a few months later, and "Beetles" amended to "Beatles"), used to upgrade its equipment. Tommy Moore was their drummer until Pete Best replaced him in August 1960. Once Best had joined, the band made its first of four trips to Hamburg, Germany. In December Harrison was deported back to England for being underage and lacking a work permit, but by then their 30-set weeks on the stages of Hamburg beer houses had honed and strengthened their repertoire (mostly Chuck Berry, Little Richard, Carl Perkins, and Buddy Holly covers), and on February 21, 1961, they debuted at the Cavern club on Mathew Street in Liverpool, beginning a string of nearly 300 performances there over the next couple of years.

In April 1961 they again went to Hamburg, where Sutcliffe (the first of the Beatles to wear his hair in the long, shaggy style that came to be known as the Beatle haircut) left the group to become a painter, while McCartney switched from rhythm guitar to bass. The Beatles returned to Liverpool as a quartet in July. Sutcliffe died from a brain hemorrhage in Hamburg less than a year later.

The Beatles had been playing regularly to packed houses at the Cavern when they were spotted on November 9 by Brian Epstein (b. Sep. 19, 1934, Liverpool). After being discharged from the British Army on medical grounds, Epstein had attended the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art in London for a year before returning to Liverpool to manage his father's record store.

The request he received for a German import single entitled "My Bonnie" (which the Beatles had recorded a few months earlier in Hamburg, backing singer Tony Shendan and billed as the Beat Boys) convinced him to check out the group. Epstein was surprised to discover not only that the Beatles weren't German but that they were one of the most popular local bands in Liverpool. Within two months he became their manager. Epstein cleaned up their act, eventually replacing black leather jackets, tight jeans, and pompadours with collarless gray Pierre Cardin suits and mildly androgynous haircuts.

Epstein tried landing the Beatles a record contract, but nearly every label in Europe rejected the group. In May 1962, however, producer George Martin (b. Jan. 3, 1926, North London, Eng.) signed the group to EMI's Parlophone subsidiary. Pete Best, then considered the group's undisputed sex symbol, was asked to leave the group on August 16, 1962, and Ringo Starr, drummer with a popular Liverpool group, Rory Storme and the Hurricanes, was added just in time for the group's first recording session. On September 11 the Beatles cut two originals, "Love Me Do" b/w "P.S. I Love You," which became their first U.K. Top 20 hit in October. In early 1963 "Please Please Me" went to #2, and they recorded an album of the same name in one 10-hour session on February 11, 1963. With the success of their third English single, "From Me to You" (#1), the British record industry coined the term "Merseybeat" (after the river that runs through Liverpool) for groups such as the Beatles and Gerry and the Pacemakers, Billy J. Kramer and the Dakotas, and the Searchers. By mid-year the Beatles were given billing over Roy Orbison on a national tour, and the hysterical outbreaks of Beatlemania had begun. Following their first tour of Europe in October, they moved to London with Epstein. Constantly mobbed by screaming fans, the Beatles required police protection almost any time they were seen in public. Late in the year "She Loves You" became the biggest-selling single in British history (in the years since, only six other singles have sold more copies there). In November 1963 the group performed before the Queen Mother at the Royal Command Variety Performance.

EMI's American label, Capitol, had not released the group's 1963 records (which Martin licensed to independents like Vee-Jay and Swan with little success) but was finally persuaded to release its fourth single, "I Want to Hold Your Hand," and Meet the Beatles (identical to the Beatles' second British album, With the Beatles) in January 1964 and to invest $50,000 in promotion for the then unknown British act. The album and the single became the Beatles' first U.S. chart-toppers. On February 7 screaming mobs met them at New York City's Kennedy Airport, and more than 70 million people watched each of their appearances on The Ed Sullivan Show on February 9 and 16. In April 1964 "Can't Buy Me Love" became the first record to top American and British charts simultaneously, and that same month the Beatles held the top five positions on Billboard singles chart ("Can't Buy Me Love," "Twist and Shout," "She Loves You," "I Want to Hold Your Hand," "Please Please Me").

Their first movie, A Hard Day's Night (directed by Richard Lester), opened in America in August; it grossed $1.3 million in its first week. The band was aggressively merchandised—Beatle wigs, Beatle clothes, Beatle dolls, lunch boxes, a cartoon series—from which, because of Epstein's ineptitude at business, the band made surprisingly little money. The Beatles also opened the American market to such British Invasion groups as the Dave Clark Five, the Rolling Stones, and the Kinks.

By 1965 Lennon and McCartney rarely wrote songs together, although by contractual and personal agreement songs by either of them were credited to both. The Beatles toured Europe, North America, the Far East, and Australia that year. Their second movie, Help! (also directed by Lester), was filmed in England, Austria, and the Bahamas in the spring and opened in the U.S. in August. On August 15 they performed to 55,600 fans at New York's Shea Stadium, setting a record for largest concert audience. McCartney's "Yesterday" (#1, 1965) would become one of the most often covered songs ever written. In June the Queen of England had announced that the Beatles would be awarded the MBE (Member of the Order of the British Empire). The announcement sparked some controversy—some MBE holders returned their medals—but on October 26, 1965, the ceremony took place at Buckingham Palace. (Lennon returned his medal in 1969 as an antiwar gesture. Interestingly, even though he rejected the medal, the honor itself cannot be returned: Lennon technically remained an MBE.)

With 1965's Rubber Soul, the Beatles' ambitions began to extend beyond love songs and pop formulas. Their success led adults to consider them, along with Bob Dylan, spokesmen for youth culture, and their lyrics grew more poetic and somewhat more political. In summer 1966 controversy erupted when a remark Lennon had made to a British newspaper reporter months before was widely reported in the U.S. The quote—"Christianity will go. It will vanish and shrink. I needn't argue with that; I'm right and will be proved right. We're more popular than Jesus now"—incited denunciations and Beatles record bonfires. The anti-Beatles backlash was particularly intense in the U.S., where the group was set to begin a tour just two weeks after the controversy erupted, and included death threats against the group. Largely out of concern for the safety of his fellow band members, Lennon apologized at a Chicago press conference.

The Beatles gave up touring after an August 29, 1966, concert at San Francisco's Candlestick Park and made the rest of their music in the studio, where they had begun to experiment with exotic instrumentation ("Norwegian Wood," 1965, had featured sitar) and tape abstractions such as the reversed tracks on "Rain," "Strawberry Fields Forever," part of a double-sided single released in February 1967 to fill the unusually long gap between albums, featured an astonishing display of electronically altered sounds and hinted at what was to come. With "Taxman" and "Love You To" on Revolver, Harrison began to emerge as a songwriter.

It took four months and $75,000 to record Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band using a then state-of-the-art four-track tape recorder and building each cut layer by layer. Released in June 1967, it was hailed as serious art for its "concept" and its range of styles and sounds, a lexicon of pop and electronic noises; such songs as "Lucy in the Sky With Diamonds" and "A Day in the Life" were carefully examined for hidden meanings. The album spent 15 weeks at #1 (longer than any of their others) and has sold over 8 million copies. On June 25, 1967, the Beatles recorded their new single, "All You Need Is Love," before an international television audience of 400 million, as part of a broadcast called Our World. On August 27, 1967—while the four were in Wales beginning their six-month involvement with Transcendental Meditation and the Mahañshi Mahesh Yogi (which took them to India for two months in early 1968)—Epstein died alone in his London flat from an overdose of sleeping pills, later ruled accidental. Shaken by Epstein's death, the Beatles retrenched under McCartney's leadership in the fall and filmed Magical Mystery Tour, which was aired by BBC-TV on December 26, 1967, and later released in the U.S. as a feature film. Although the telefilm was panned by British critics, fans, and Queen Elizabeth herself, the soundtrack album contained their most cryptic work yet in "I Am the Walrus," a Lennon composition.

As the Beatles' late-1967 single "Hello Goodbye" went to #1 in both the U.S. and Britain, the group launched the Apple clothes boutique in London. McCartney called the retail effort "Western communism"; the boutique closed in July

1968. Like their next effort, Apple Corps Ltd. (formed in January 1968 and including Apple Records, which signed James Taylor, Mary Hopkin, and Badfinger), it was plagued by mismanagement. In July the group faced its last hysterical crowds at the premiere of Yellow Submarine, an animated film by Czech avant-garde designer and artist Heinz Edelman featuring four new Beatles songs; a revised soundtrack featuring nine extra songs was released in 1999 (#15). In August they released McCartney's "Hey Jude" (#1), backed by Lennon's "Revolution" (#12), which sold over 6 million copies before the end of 1968—their most popular single. Meanwhile, the group had been working on the double album The Beatles (frequently called the White Album), which showed their divergent directions. The rifts were artistic—Lennon moving toward brutal confessionals, McCartney leaning toward pop melodies, Harrison immersed in Eastern spirituality—and personal, as Lennon drew closer to his wife-to-be, Yoko Ono. Lennon and Ono's Two Virgins (with its full frontal and back nude cover photos) was released the same month as The Beatles and stirred up so much outrage that the LP had to be sold wrapped in brown paper. (The Beatles went to #1, Two Virgins peaked at #124.)

The Beatles attempted to smooth over their differences in early 1969 at filmed recording sessions. When the project fell apart hundreds of hours of studio time later, no one could face editing the tapes (a project that eventually fell to record producer Phil Spector), and "Get Back" (#1, 1969) was the only immediate release. Released in spring 1970, Let It Be is essentially a documentary of their breakup, including an impromptu January 30, 1969, rooftop concert at Apple Corps headquarters, their last public performance as the Beatles.

By spring 1969 Apple was losing thousands of pounds each week. Over McCartney's objections, the other three brought in manager Allen Klein to straighten things out; one of his first actions was to package nonalbum singles as Hey Jude. With money matters temporarily out of mind, the four joined forces in July and August 1969 to record Abbey Road featuring an extended suite as well as more hits, including Harrison's much-covered "Something" (#3, 1969). While its release that fall spurred a "Paul Is Dead" rumor based on clues supposedly left throughout their work, Abbey Road became the Beatles' best-selling album, at 9 million copies. Meanwhile, internal bickering persisted. In September Lennon told the others, "I'm leaving the group. I've had enough. I want a divorce." But he was persuaded to keep quiet while their business affairs were untangled. On April 10, 1970, McCartney released his first solo album and publicly announced the end of the Beatles. At the same time, Let It Be finally surfaced, becoming the group's 14th #1 album (a postbreakup compilation would become their 15th in 1973) and yielding the Beatles' 18th and 19th chart-topping singles, "Let It Be" and "The Long and Winding Road."

Throughout the '70s, as repackages of Beatles music continued to sell, the four were hounded by bids and pleas for a reunion. Lennon's murder by a mentally disturbed fan on December 8, 1980, ended those speculations. In 1988 the Beatles were inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame.

McCartney, citing business conflicts with the two other surviving members, did not attend. Relations between him and Harrison, in particular, had been strained for some time.

In January 1994 Goldmine magazine reported that McCartney, Harrison, and Starr had begun recording music for a long-rumored Beatles documentary the previous August, with more secret sessions scheduled. There were other signs that the three band members were on the mend—when Lennon was inducted to the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame as a solo artist in 1994, for instance, McCartney did the honors (McCartney himself was inducted in 1999). Later in 1994 Live at the BBC was released, featuring 56 songs the Beatles performed on the British radio between 1962 and 1965. It debuted at #1 in the U.K.; in the U.S., it debuted and peaked at #3.

The Beatles Anthology, the long-awaited six-hour television special, was broadcast over three nights in November 1995, coinciding with the release of the George Martin–compiled double-CD Anthology 1 (#1), which featured alternate takes, demos, and rare tracks, and premiered the first new song by John, Paul, George, and Ringo since 1970. “Free as a Bird” (#6, 1995), a demo recorded by Lennon in 1977, was completed by the other three and produced by Jeff Lynne; it became the Beatles 34th Top 10 single. Lennon’s lyrics didn’t extend much beyond the title, and so Harrison and McCartney collaborated on lyrics for a new bridge. Two additional double CDs, Anthology 2 and 3 (both #1), followed in 1996, as well as an extended videotape version of the documentary Anthology 2’s “Real Love” (again a Lennon demo, from 1979, with modern additions by the others) reached #11 and became the group’s 23rd gold single (the most of any group).

The Liverpool juggernaut continued to roll on in 2000: the Beatles became the highest-certified act of all time, with over 113 million albums sold, a coffeetable book. The Beatles Anthology topped the New York Times bestseller list, and 1, a collection of the band’s #1 hit songs, became its 19th chart-topping album. By early 2001, it had sold over 20 million copies worldwide, vying for the greatest-selling album of all time.

The Beau Brummels

Sal Valentino (b. Sal Spampinato, Sep. 8, 1942, San Francisco), voc.; Ron Elliott (b. Oct. 21, 1943, Healdsburg, CA), gtr., voc.; Declan Mulligan (b. County Tipperary, Ire.), bass; John Petersen (b. Jan. 8, 1942, Rudyard, MI), drums; Ron Meagher (b. Oct. 2, 1941, Oakland, CA), gtr., bass.

1965—(– Mulligan) Introducing the Beau Brummels (Autumn)

1967—Triangle 1968—Bradley's Barn (group disbands)

1974—(group re-forms: Valentino; Elliott; Meagher; Petersen; + Dan Levitt, gtr.) 1975—The Beau Brummels; The Best of the Beau Brummels (Rhino) 1994—Autumn of Their Years.

The Beau Brummels were the first nationally successful rock act to emerge from San Francisco; they were also the first American rock band influenced by the Beatles to have a hit. With the exception of their Irish-born bassist, Declan Mulligan (who quit the group before their hits began and later sued for a piece of their earnings), all the members were Bay Area high school graduates. Their early performances featured covers of Beatles and Rolling Stones songs as well as Ron Elliott’s originals. San Francisco disc jockey Tom Donahue signed them to his Autumn Records. Their first release, “Laugh, Laugh” (produced by Sylvester Stewart, who later reached fame as Sly Stone), went to #15 in 1965, only a few months after they had played their first live show together. Their next single, “Just a Little” (#8), was their only Top 10 hit. None of their subsequent releases—“You Tell Me Why,” “Don’t Talk to Strangers,” “Good Time Music” (1965), or “One Too Many Mornings” (1966)—entered the Top 30.

In 1965 Autumn went out of business, and the group’s contract was sold to Warner Bros. It failed to regain commercial favor but produced interesting failures, including 1967’s progressive Triangle (recorded after Petersen had left to join Harper’s Bizarre [see entry]) and one of the first country-rock albums, Bradley’s Barn (recorded in Nashville in 1968 by Valentino and Elliott). Neither LP sold well, and by the end of 1968 the Beau Brummels moniker was retired. Valentino then recorded a couple of singles for Warner Bros. before assembling Stoneground. Elliott released a solo album called The Candlestick Maker in 1969 and then took a lengthy sabbatical before resurfacing with a group called Pan in the early ’70s. In 1974 the original Beau Brummels regrouped, augmented by guitarist Dan Levitt. They released The Beau Brummels, but the LP met with little success and the group disbanded. In the years since, versions of the Beau Brummels have included Valentino, Elliott, and Mulligan, in various combinations. The 1994 album Autumn of Their Years includes material recorded from 1964 to 1966.

1999—Cajunization.

The premier Cajun band, Beausoleil has moved comfortably between traditional Cajun music and rock and jazz influences. The group is best known for its work on two 1986 soundtracks, The Big Easy and Belzaire the Cajun.

In the mid-'70s Beausoleil's founder, Michael Doucet, fronted Coteau, known as the "Cajun Grateful Dead." Funded by a NEA grant, he tracked down early Cajun music. The original Beausoleil (the name of an Acadian settlement in Nova Scotia) was a trio: Doucet, mandolin/guitar player Kenneth Richard, and Coteau member Bessyl Duhon on accordion and fiddle. But Doucet employed French folk musicians on Beausoleil's 1976 debut, recorded and released in France. In 1977 a new Beausoleil included his brother David on guitar and Duhon on accordion (later replaced by Pat Breaux, who was then replaced by his brother Jimmy) and signed with Arhoolie Records. The Spirit of Cajun Music, their American debut, is an eclectic mix of blues, ballads, standards, and traditional music.

The members of Beausoleil are regulars on the folk festival circuit and The Prairie Home Companion National Public Radio show. They shared the stage with the Grateful Dead in 1990, and for their 1991 album Cajun Conja they were joined by one of Doucet's heroes, guitarist Richard Thompson. Beausoleil also came to the attention of a wider mainstream audience when it backed Mary Chapin Carpenter on her Grammy-winning "Down at the Twist and Shout" (1991).

The band won its own Grammy in 1997, when L'Amour ou la Folie (Love or Folly) received the Best Traditional Folk Album award. While Beausoleil has expanded its musical palate, adding Latin flavors to 1999's Cajunization, Doucet has also recorded with the more traditionally Arcadian Savoy-Doucet Cajun Band.

The Beautiful South

Formed 1988, Hull, Eng.

Paul Heaton (b. May 9, 1962, Birkenhead, Eng.), voc.; Dave Hemingway (b. Sep. 20, 1960, Hull), voc.; Dave Rotheray (b. Feb. 9, 1963, Hull), gr.; Sean Welch (b. Apr. 12, 1965, Enfield, Eng.), bass; Briana Corrigan (b. May 30, Antrim, Eng.), voc.; Dave Stead (b. Oct. 15, 1966, Huddersfield, Eng.), drums. 1989—Welcome to the Beautiful South (Go! Discs/Elektra) 1990—Choke 1992—0898 1993—(—Corrigan; + Jacqueline Abbott [b. Nov. 10, 1973, Merseyside], voc.) 1994—Miaow (Go! Discs) 1995—Best Of: Carry On Up the Charts (Go! Discs/PolyGram) 1996—Blue Is the Colour (Go! Discs) 1999—Quench (PolyGram) 2000—Painting It Red (Ark 21) (—Abbott).

When the British pop band the Housemartins [see Fatboy Slim/The Housemartins entry] dissolved in the late '80s, frontman Paul Heaton and drummer Dave Hemingway formed the Beautiful South: its name, a barb aimed at the posh southern region of the country, is as drenched in irony as its lyrical sentiments. The Beautiful South's juxtaposing of sweet vocals and sunny hooks with acerbic lyrics evoked the group from whose ashes it rose, while it replaced the Housemartins' jangly guitar arrangements with jazzier textures. Fleshing out their previous band's music, both Heaton and Hemingway sang in the Beautiful South, as did ex-Anthill Runaways vocalist Briana Corrigan (replaced in 1993 by Jacqueline Abbott, who, in turn, left in 2000). Their lush orchestrations gained the band several U.K. hits, starting as early as its first single, "Song for Whoever" (#2, 1989). Lyricist Heaton's caustic wit drew mixed reviews from critics, some of whom found him too clever—or bitter—for his own good. The British public, however, seemed not to care: The band's greatest-hits collection, Carry On Up the Charts, still ranks as one of the fastest-selling albums in U.K. history. Although Beautiful South albums continued to sell well in the U.K. into the 21st century, the band never made more than a passing impression in America.

Bill Nelson (b. Dec. 18, 1948, Wakefield, Eng.), gr., voc., kybds.; Robert Bryan (b. Eng.), bass; Nicholas Chatterton-Dew (b. Eng.), drums; Ian Parking (b. Eng.), gr.; Richard Brown (b. Eng.), kybds. 1974—[group disbands; re-forms: Nelson; + Milton Reame-James, kybds.; + Paul Jeffreys, bass; + Simon Fox, drums] Axe Victim (Harvest) (—Reame-James; —Jeffreys; + Charles Tumahai, bass) 1975—Futurama (+ Andrew Clark, kybds.) 1976—Sunburst Finish; Modern Music 1977—Live in the Air Age 1978—Drastic Plastic 1979—The Best and the Rest of Be-Bop Deluxe.

Bill Nelson was an accomplished guitarist by his late teens; he began his professional career in his early 20s. With a Yorkshire-based group, Gentle Revolution, he recorded two locally distributed albums. On his own he recorded a home-produced LP entitled Northern Dream in 1971. He put together Be-Bop Deluxe, styled after David Bowie's science-fiction rock efforts, in early 1972. Though a modest success in England, the band failed to attract large audiences in America, and Nelson retired its name in 1979. His next group, Bill Nelson's Red Noise, produced the LP Sound-on-Sound in 1979 LP. Since then Nelson, who is also an accomplished producer, has maintained a staggeringly prolific solo career, though many of his largely experimental, soundtrack-like records—some all-instrumental, some with vocals—remained unreleased in the U.S. until 1989, when his complicated import catalogue became available domestically. Quit Dreaming and Get on the Beam, his 1981 double LP, hit the English Top 10. He continues to record, both on his own and with other artists, with remarkable frequency.

Beck

Born Beck Hansen, July 8, 1970, Los Angeles, CA
1993—Golden Feelings (Sonic Enemy) 1994—A Western

Harvest Field by Moonlight EP (Fingerpaint); Stereopathetic Soulmanure (Flipside); Mellow Gold (DGC); One Foot in the Grave (K) 1996—Odelay (DGC) 1998—Mutations 1999—Midnite Vultures (Interscope).

Beck took the lo-fi sound of DIY indie rock to the top of the charts in 1994 with his oddball folk-rap hit "Loser." But his avant-pop musical palette extends well beyond the beats and samples of that hit, including everything from feedback and other sources of noise to toy instruments and found sounds. His disjointed, surreal lyrics have often been compared to Highway 61 Revisited—era Bob Dylan.

Beck was born in L.A. to bohemian parents. His mother, Bibbe, was raised amid New York's Andy Warhol Factory art scene of the '60s and in the '90s was part of the underground L.A. punk-drag band Black Flag. His father was a bluegrass street musician. During his childhood, Beck was shuttled back and forth between his mother in L.A. and his paternal grandparents in Kansas. His grandfather, Al Hansen, was a pioneer in the avant-garde Fluxus movement, and in 1998, Beck helped put together a traveling art exhibition that paired his visual artwork with his late grandfather's. During his teens he discovered the music of Sonic Youth and Pussy Galore. After hearing a record by Mississippi John Hurt at a friend's house, however, he began playing his own postpunk brand of acoustic country blues.

In 1989 Beck took a bus to New York City, where he caught the tail end of the ill-fated East Village antifolk scene.

Beck

After running out of money, Beck moved back to L.A., where he started performing in arty Silverlake coffeeshops along with other underground acts such as Ethyl Meatplow and That Dog. He was approached during this period by Bongload Records owner Tom Rothrock, whose casual recording sessions with Beck produced "Loser." The single came out on Bongload and became so popular on L.A.'s alternative radio station KROQ that it led to a bidding war among the major labels. DGC signed Beck to an unusual deal whereby the songwriter could continue recording for tiny indie labels. "Loser" reached #10 and its album, the critically acclaimed Mellow Gold (#13, 1994), sold 500,000 copies. A second single, "Beer can," reached only #27 on Billboard's Modern Rock Chart, and Beck seemed in danger of being lumped in with novelty acts.

Stereopathetic Soulmanure, another critical success, failed to sell as big because it was released on the tiny L.A. label Flipside. One Foot in the Grave, released on the Olympia, Washington, label K later that year, showed Beck's songwriting was becoming stronger and more focused than ever.

It was Odelay (#16, 1996) that really put Beck on the map. The platinum album pushed his earlier sound-pastiche experiments further, earned album-of-the-year nods from publications including Rolling Stone, Spin, and the Village Voice, and won Beck two Grammys: Best Alternative Music Performance for the album, and Best Rock Male Vocal Performance for "Where It's At." Beck toured for two full years with a full band, DJ, and horn section and earned a reputation as an impressive live performer.

Beck's next album, Mutations (#13, 1998), offered considerably quieter, stripped-down fare, reminiscent of the folksy One Foot in the Grave. Intended for release on the indie label Bongload, which had released the 12-inch of "Loser," it was released on DGC instead. With the pop-culture-meets-soul Midnite Vultures (#34, 1999), Beck returned to his sonic-collage making. The album, which he produced himself (except for two tracks he coproduced with the Dust Brothers, who also coproduced Odelay), featured Stax-Volt horns on "Sexx Laws" and the falsetto soul workout "Debra," which was written during the Odelay sessions and had become a live staple. Both albums garnered critical praise (with Vultures earning two Grammy nominations), went gold.

One of the most influential lead guitarists in rock, Jeff Beck has helped shape blues rock, psychedelia, and heavy metal. Beck's groups have been short-lived, and he has probably been handicapped by the fact that he doesn't sing, but his aggressive style—encompassing screaming, bent sustained notes, distortion and feedback, and crisply articulated fast passagework—has been more important than his material.

After attending Wimbledon Art College in London, Beck backed Lord Sutch before replacing Eric Clapton in the Yardbirds [see entry]. He established his reputation with that band, but he left in late 1966 and after a short sabbatical released a version of "Love Is Blue," played deliberately out of tune because he loathed the song. In 1967 he founded the Jeff Beck Group with Ron Wood and Rod Stewart, the band's reworkings of blues-based material laid the groundwork for '70s heavy metal. Clashing temperaments broke up the group after two acclaimed LPs and several U.S. tours. Stewart and Wood went on to join the Faces [see the Small Faces/the Faces entry], and Stewart continued to use drummer Mickey Waller on his solo albums until 1974. Beck was planning to form a band with Vanilla Fudge members Tim Bogert and Carmine Appice when he was sidelined for 18 months with a fractured skull he sustained in a car crash. (A car aficionado, Beck has been in three crashes and was once sidelined for months after getting his thumb trapped under a car.) When he recovered, Bogert and Appice were busy in Cactus, so Beck assembled a second Jeff Beck Group and put out two albums of Memphis funk laced with heavy metal. When Cactus broke up in late 1972, Beck, Bogert, and Appice returned Beck to a power trio format, but weak vocals hampered the band, and it dissolved in early 1974.

Beck then went into the first of many periods of hibernation. In 1975 he reemerged in an all-instrumental format, playing jazzy tunes. He toured as coheadliner with the Mahavishnu Orchestra and started an on-again, off-again collaboration with former Mahavishnu keyboardist Jan Hammer in 1976 with Wired (#16). During the later '70s Beck reportedly spent most of his time on his 70-acre estate outside London. He and Hammer worked together on the 1980 album There and Back, but Hammer did not join Beck for his 1980 tour, the guitarist's first in over four years. In 1981 Beck appeared at Amnesty International's Secret Policeman's Ball, and in 1985 he toured Japan. Flash, which includes Beck's sole charting single, "People Get Ready" (#48, 1985), with Rod Stewart on vocals, and the Grammy-winning "Escape," written by Hammer, peaked at #39. Four years later Jeff Beck's Guitar Shop With Terry Bozzio and Tony Hymas (#49, 1989) garnered the Grammy for Best Rock Instrumental Performance. Crazy Legs, an homage to Gene Vincent's Blue Caps and rockabilly guitar legend Cliff Gallup, met with mixed reviews.

During the '80s and '90s Beck turned up on recordings by artists including Mick Jagger, Malcolm McLaren, Roger Waters, and Jon Bon Jovi. He finally recorded an album of new material (all instrumental) in 1999. On Who Else!, the guitarist got support from longtime collaborators Hammer (on one song) and Hymas and explored a more electronic environment, a tour followed. The same year Beck was nominated for two Grammys: "A Day in the Life," his contribution to George Martin's album In My Life, was nominated for Best Pop Instrumental Performance, while the guitarist's own "What Mama Said" was nominated for Best Rock Instrumental Performance. Beck spent much of 1999 touring, then returned to the studio with his road band to record You Had It Coming.

Formed 1958, Brisbane, Austral.

In a career now in its fourth decade, the Bee Gees have sold over 120 million albums worldwide. At several points throughout their career, Barry, Maurice, and Robin Gibb have borne commercial dry spells, and critics have chronically dismissed them. However, with the passage of time, their legacy is less defined by the phenomenal disco crossover success of their Saturday Night Fever era than by their enduring pop appeal and the modern standards they created ("To Love Somebody," "Words," "How Can You Mend a Broken Heart"). If anything, the Bee Gees' versatility and undiminished knack for creating hits have earned the group a belated if sometimes grudging critical respect.

The three Gibb brothers (Barry and fraternal twins Robin and Maurice), sons of English bandleader Hugh Gibb, started performing in 1955. They moved with their parents to Brisbane in 1958 and worked talent shows and other amateur outlets, singing sets of Everly Brothers songs and an occasional Barry Gibb composition, by this time calling themselves the Bee Gees. They signed with Australia's Festival Records in 1962 and released a dozen singles and two albums in the next five years. Then as now, close high harmonies were the Bee Gees' trademark, and the Gibbs wrote their own material.

They hosted a weekly Australian TV show, but their records went unnoticed until 1967, when "Spicks and Specks" hit #1 after the Bee Gees had relocated to England. There they expanded to a quintet with drummer Colin Peterson and Vince Melouney (both Australians) and found themselves a new manager, Robert Stigwood, then employed by the Beatles' NEMS Enterprises. Their first Northern Hemisphere single, "New York Mining Disaster 1941," was a hit in both the U.K. and the U.S. (#14, 1967), and was followed by a string of equally popular ballads: "To Love Somebody" (#17, 1967), "Holiday" (#16, 1967), "Massachusetts" (#11, 1967), "Words" (#15, 1968), "I've Got to Get a Message to You" (#8, 1968), and "I Started a Joke" (#6, 1969). Their clean-cut neo-Edwardian image and English-accented three-part harmonies were a variation on the Beatles' approach, although the Bee Gees leaned toward ornate orchestration and sentimentality as opposed to American-style straight-ahead rock.

Cracks in their facade began to show in 1969, when the nonfamily members left the group and reports of excessive lifestyles and fighting among the brothers surfaced. From mid-1969 to late 1970 Robin tried a solo career and had a #2 U.K. hit, "Saved by the Bell." Meanwhile, Barry and Maurice (then married to singer Lulu) recorded Cucumber Castle as a duo and cut some singles individually. The trio reunited for two more hit ballads—the gold "Lonely Days" (#3, 1970) and "How Can You Mend a Broken Heart" (#1, 1971)—before bottoming out with a string of flops between 1971 and 1975. Stigwood effected a turnabout by recruiting producer Arif Mardin, who steered them to the funk-plus-falsetto combination that brought them their third round of hits: Main Course (#14, 1976), including "Jive Talkin'" (#1, 1975) and "Nights on Broadway" (#7, 1975), caught disco on the upswing and gave the Bee Gees their first platinum album.

In 1976 Stigwood's RSO label broke away from its parent company, Atlantic, rendering Mardin unavailable to the Bee Gees. Engineer Karl Richardson and arranger Albhy Galutan took over as producers, and the group continued to record with Miami rhythm sections for hits such as "You Should Be Dancing" (#1, 1976) and a ballad, "Love So Right" (#3, 1976), which recalled the Philly-Motown influence. By this point, the brothers had relocated to Miami. Stigwood, meanwhile, had produced the film versions of Jesus Christ Superstar and Tommy, and asked the Bee Gees for four or five songs he could use in the soundtrack of a John Travolta vehicle about the mid-1970s Brooklyn disco scene, Saturday Night Fever. The soundtrack album, a virtual best-of-disco, included Bee Gees chart-toppers "Stayin' Alive," "Night Fever," and "How Deep Is Your Love," hit #1, stayed on the album chart for over two years, and eventually sold 30 million copies worldwide. Barry, with Galutan and Richardson, also wrote and produced hits for Yvonne Elliman, Samantha Sang, Tavares, Frankie Valli, and younger brother Andy Gibb [see entry] as well as the title tune for the film version of the Broadway hit Grease.

In 1978, with Saturday Night Fever still high on the charts, the Bee Gees started Music for UNICEF, donating the royalties from a new song and recruiting other hitmakers to do the same. They also appeared in Stigwood's movie fiasco Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band and continued to record. After Saturday Night Fever, even the platinum Spirits Having Flown (#1, 1979) with three #1 hits—"Too Much Heaven," "Tragedy," and "Love You Inside Out"—seemed anticlimactic. As of 1979, the Bee Gees had made five platinum albums and more than 20 hit singles.

Along with such phenomenal commercial success came a critical backlash. While the intense antidisco sentiment certainly played a role, the fact that one literally could not turn on a radio without hearing a Bee Gees track did not help. Their career then entered another dry season. In October 1980 the Bee Gees filed a $200 million suit against Stigwood, claiming mismanagement. Meanwhile, Barry produced and sang duets with Barbra Streisand on Guilty (1980). The lawsuit was settled out of court, with mutual public apologies, in May 1981. Living Eyes (#41, 1981) was the Bee Gees' last album for RSO. They composed the soundtrack to Saturday Night Fever's dismal sequel, Stayin' Alive; the soundtrack went to #6 and platinum and included "Woman in You" (#24, 1983). Barry also wrote and produced an album for Dionne Warwick, Heartbreaker. With his brothers he cowrote Diana Ross' "Chain Reaction" and the Kenny Rogers–Dolly Parton hit "Islands in the Stream."

In 1987 the Brothers Gibb again joined forces and refired their singing career with E-S-P, which included "You Win Again" (#75, 1987). While these records appeared commercial disappointments in comparison to previous chart showings, in fact this was the case only in the U.S. E-S-P went to #1 in Germany and the Top 5 in the U.K. Thus began another phase of the Bee Gees' history, in which their singles and albums would top the charts practically everywhere but the U.S.

In March 1988, their younger brother Andy Gibb died of myocarditis, a heart condition, at age 30. He had a long history of addiction to drugs and alcohol, and his surviving brothers were devastated by the loss. They retired for a time, and Maunice suffered a brief relapse of his alcoholism. They returned with One (German Top 5, U.K. Top 30) featuring the trio's highest-charting single of the '80s in its title track (#7, 1989), followed by High Civilization (1991), which did not even chart in the U.S. but hit #2 in Germany and the U.K. Top 30.

In 1997 the Bee Gees were inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. They also released Still Waters (#11, 1997), which produced the minor hits "Alone" (#28, 1997) and "Still Waters (Run Deep)" (#57, 1997). A live album, One Night Only (#72, 1998), was the soundtrack to a live concert, which was filmed Tomorrow the World and This Is Where I Came In (#33, 2001) followed. The group has twice received Britain's Ivor Novello Trust for Outstanding Contribution to British Music (1988, 1997) and the BRIT Award (1997), all in recognition of their outstanding contribution to British music. In 1994 they were inducted into the Songwriters' Hall of Fame.

Adrian Belew

Born Robert Steven Belew, Dec. 23, 1949, Covington, KY
 1982—Lone Rhino (Island) 1983—Twang Bar King 1986—Desire Caught by the Tail 1987—The Bears (Primitive Man)
 1988—Rise and Shine 1989—Mr. Music Head (Atlantic)
 1990—Young Lions 1991—Desire of the Rhino King (Island)
 1992—Inner Revolution (Atlantic) 1994—Here (Plan
 9/Caroline) 1995—Acoustic Adrian Belew (Discipline); Experimental Guitar Series, vol. 1 (Adrian Belew Presents)
 1997—The Guitar as Orchestra (Discipline); Op Zop Too Wah
 (Passenger) 1998—Belew Prints (Adrian Belew Presents);
Salad Days (Thirsty Ear) 2000—Coming Attractions.

A wizard of sonic manipulation and texture, Belew has been the guitarist of choice for the art-rock crowd, playing with Frank Zappa, Talking Heads, David Bowie, Laurie Anderson, and Nine Inch Nails [see entnes]. He has also fronted a version of King Crimson and sustained a lower-profile career as a solo artist.

In his hometown of Cincinnati, Belew was originally a rock drummer before developing his prowess on guitar. He was working the mid-American club circuit with his band Sweetheart when Zappa happened to attend a Nashville performance and tapped Belew for his band. Belew toured and recorded with Zappa (Sheik Yerbouti, 1979). After touring with David Bowie (captured on 1978's Staging; he also appears on 1979's Lodger), Belew recorded with Talking Heads (Remain in Light, 1980). Belew's startling work—e.g., his careening solo on "The Great Curve"—immediately established him as a sought-after player. Belew toured briefly with the first expanded edition of Talking Heads and can be heard on their live 1982 album The Name of This Band Is Talking Heads. Belew later worked with Talking Heads Chris Frantz and Tina Weymouth on their band Tom Tom Club's first album.

In 1981 Belew joined Robert Fripp, Bill Bruford, and Tony Levin in a latter-day King Crimson. Belew's virtuosic playing—which by now included a whole lexicon of electronically produced animal sounds—as well as his urgent singing of his own caustic lyrics helped make this one of the most popular and respected Crimson lineups. Belew recorded Discipline (1981), Beat (1982), and Three of a Perfect Pair (1984) with the band before they broke up in 1984. He also made guest appearances on Laurie Anderson's Mister Heartbreak (1984) and Home of the Brave (1986) and on Paul Simon's Graceland (1986).

With the Bears—a short-lived band he helped form in 1985—and in his subsequent career as a solo artist, Belew displayed his ease with pop songwriting and singing. Mr. Music Head yielded the minor hit "Oh Daddy" (#58, 1989), a humorous look at the vicissitudes of a middle-aged rocker, which Belew sang with his 11-year-old daughter, Audie. Inner Revolution both paid homage to, and affectionately deconstructed, the sound of the Beatles. He joined David Bowie on his 1989 Sound + Vision career retrospective tour. In 1994 Belew's guitar playing was featured on the industrial band Nine Inch Nails' album The Downward Spiral. Belew's own album of that year, Here, recorded at his home in Cincinnati, showcased his vocals and multi-instrumental expertise; Belew played all the instruments and produced. Throughout the '90s and into the new century, Belew continued his guitar explorations, either acoustically or, more typically, employing a full range of techno-heavy effects—an approach best summed up by the title of his 1997 release The Guitar as Orchestra.

Archie Bell and the Drells

Formed mid-'60s, Houston, TX
 Archie Bell (b. Sep. 1, 1944, Henderson, TX); Huey "Billy" Butler; Joe Cross; James Wise.
 Archie Bell solo: 1981—I Never Had It So Good (Becket).

Archie Bell and his group had the nation dancing in 1968 with the strutting "Tighten Up" (#1 pop, #1 R&B), which featured a choked guitar phrase. The Drells were frequently produced by noted Philadelphia soul stylist Bunny Sigler, although their followup hit, the Top 10 "I Can't Stop Dancing" in late 1968, was produced by the then-emerging black music titans Kenny Gamble and Leon Huff. They scored another Top 30 success in early 1969. "There's Gonna Be a Showdown," but have since reached only a loyal black audience, in 1970 they released a #33 R&B version of "Wrap It Up," a minor hit for the Fabulous Thunderbirds in 1986. "Let's Groove (Part 1)" was a Top 10 R&B hit in 1976. In the late '70s Archie Bell and the Drells recorded extensively for the Philadelphia International label, releasing a discofied version of "Tighten Up." By 1981 Bell was recording solo for the Becket label.

William Bell

Born William Yarborough, July 16, 1939, Memphis, TN
 1967—The Soul of a Bell (Stax) 1968—Tribute to a King; Duets 1969—Bound to Happen 1971—Wow... William Bell 1973—Phases of Reality 1974—Relating 1977—Coming Back for More (Mercury); It's Time You Took Another Listen 1983—Survivor (Kat Family) 1985—Passion (Wilbe) 1989—On a Roll 1990—The Best of William Bell (Stax) 1992—Bedtime Stories (Wilbe); A Little Something Extra (Stax).

A soul singer of great subtlety, William Bell was one of the principal architects of the Memphis Sound. Starting off with Rufus Thomas' band in 1953 and recording with the Del Rios vocal quartet in 1957, Bell became an early writer and performer for the Stax/Volt label. Going solo in 1961, the next year he released "You Don't Miss Your Water," its stark power exemplifying the Stax style that provided counterpoint to Motown's pop approach. Sidelined by two years in the army, Bell reemerged in the mid-'60s with songs that fared respectably on the R&B charts: "Everybody Loves a Winner" (#18, 1967) and "A Tribute to a King" (#16, 1968). The latter, an homage to Otis Redding, made clear, however, that Bell had been eclipsed commercially by such other classic soul talents as Redding, Sam and Dave, and Wilson Pickett.

A 1968 R&B Top 10, "I Forgot to Be Your Lover," and duets with Judy Clay ("Private Number," "My Baby Specializes"), highlighted Bell's skills as a balladeer, and the singer has continued crafting sophisticated soul. In 1969 Bell moved to Atlanta and founded his own Peachtree label, with 1976 and his signing to Mercury came the refreshing success of "Trying to Love Two," a #1 R&B hit.

Throughout the 1980s, on Kat Family and his own Wilbe label, Bell continued a low-profile career. In 1997 he received the Pioneer Award from the Rhythm & Blues Foundation. He continues to perform. As a writer and as an elegant singer of romantic tumult, Bell remains a seminal artist.

Bell Biv DeVoe

Formed 1988, Boston, MA
 Michael Bivins (b. Aug. 10, 1968, Boston), voc.; Ricky Bell (b. Sep. 18, 1967, Boston), voc.; Ronnie DeVoe (b. Nov. 17, 1967, Boston), voc.
 1990—Poison (MCA) 1991—WBBD-Bootcity! The Remix Album 1993—Hootie Mack.

As members of the teenage R&B vocal group New Edition [see entry], Ricky Bell, Michael Bivins, and Ronnie DeVoe kept fairly low profiles, leaving the limelight to singers Ralph Tresvant and Bobby Brown, and later Johnny Gill. But when Brown went solo in 1986, Bell, Bivins, and DeVoe began thinking about pursuing their own separate paths together. Two years later—with some prodding from prominent hip-hop producers Jimmy Jam and Terry Lewis—Bell Biv DeVoe was born, and the fierce, provocative pop funk it eventually unleashed on the charts marked a dramatic departure from New Edition's wholesome image.

On New Edition's last studio album, 1988's Heartbreak, Bell, Bivins, and DeVoe had worked with Jam and Lewis, who had crafted for them a harder-edged, more urban sound. As a subsequent tour wrapped, the producers approached the three singers with the idea for Bell Biv DeVoe. The trio then enlisted various hip-hop savants—including Public Enemy producers Hank and Keith Shocklee—to write and produce material for its debut album. Released in 1990, Poison featured streetsmart, rap-tinged arrangements and sexually suggestive lyrics. Its title track, a slamming slice of misogyny, topped the R&B chart and became a #3 pop hit. The album itself shot to #5 pop and #1 R&B that year and included "Do Me!" (#3 pop, #4 R&B), "B.B.D. (I Thought It Was Me)" (#1 R&B), and "When Will I See You Smile Again?" (#3 R&B).

In 1991 the group had a #9 R&B single, "She's Dope!" Later that year Bell Biv DeVoe released WBBD-Bootcity! The Remix Album (#18 pop and R&B). In 1992 the trio reappeared on the singles chart with "Gangsta" (#21 pop, #22 R&B, 1993), an unlikely collaboration with smooth soul singer Luther Vandross. Bell Biv DeVoe released its third album, Hootie Mack, in 1993 (#19 pop, #6 R&B), which yielded the single "Something in Your Eyes" (#38 pop, #6 R&B, 1993).

Regina Belle

Born Regina Edna Belle, July 15, 1963, Englewood, NJ
 1987—All by Myself (Columbia) 1989—Stay With Me 1993—Passion 1995—Reachin' Back 1997—Baby Come to Me: The Best of Regina Belle 1998—Believe in Me (MCA).

A contemporary soul singer with roots in gospel and jazz, Regina Belle had several R&B hits in the late '80s before her 1992 #1 pop duet with Peabo Bryson, "A Whole New World (Aladdin's Theme)"—the theme song from the Walt Disney animated film Aladdin that won three Grammys as well as an Oscar. Born to a gospel-loving mother and a father who was an R&B enthusiast, Belle began singing in church as a child, and was influenced early on by the work of Billie Holiday, Nancy Wilson, and Phyllis Hyman. During high school, Belle studied opera at the Manhattan School of Music. Then, while majoring in accounting and history at Rutgers University, she sang with a jazz ensemble.

In 1985 she began singing backup for the Manhattans and soon signed to that band's label, Columbia. Belle's debut album, All by Myself, yielded the #2 R&B hit "Show Me the Way," as well as favorable comparisons to Anita Baker and Sade. Stay With Me became a #1 R&B album and topped the singles chart for that genre with "Baby Come to Me" and "Make It Like It Was." Also in 1989, Belle teamed up with James "J.T." Taylor, of Kool and the Gang, on "All I Want Is Forever," a #2 R&B hit featured in the movie Tap. Reachin' Back, a collection of '70s R&B covers, produced the #29 R&B single "Love T.K.O.," a version of the 1980 Teddy Pendergrass soul classic.

Formed 1996, Glasgow, Scot.

Stuart Murdoch, voc., gr.; Stuart David, bass, voc.; Chris Geddes, kybds.; Sarah Martin, violin; Stevie Jackson, gr., voc.; Richard Colburn, drums; Isobel Campbell, cello, voc.
 1996—Tigermilk (Electric Honey); If You're Feeling Sinister (Jeepster) 1997—Dog on Wheels EP; Lazy Line Painter Jane EP; 3. 6. 9. Seconds of Light EP 1998—(+ Mick Cooke, trumpet) The Boy With the Arab Strap (Matador) 2000—Fold Your Hands Child, You Walk Like a Peasant (—David).
 Campbell solo as Gentle Waves: 1999—The Green Fields of Foreverland (Jeepster) 2000—Swansong for You.
 David with Looper: 1999—Up a Tree (Sub Pop) 2000—The Geometrid.

Scotland's Belle and Sebastian were one of indie rock's most celebrated groups during the '90s. Critics applauded the band's soft, unobtrusive folk rock, while fans connected with the group's lyrics, which perfectly capture a misfit's cynicism, confusion, and pain. Notorious for their media-shyness—they often use snapshots of friends for press photos, while reluctant frontman Stuart Murdoch refused to conduct interviews until 2000—Belle and Sebastian have nevertheless achieved a surprising amount of commercial success, particularly in the U.K.

Murdoch and bassist Stuart David started playing together in January 1996, recruiting the band's remaining members—including Mick Cooke, who switched from part-time to full-time status in 1998—soon thereafter. Naming the group after a novel by Madame Cécile Aubry (and its resultant French children's television series) about a boy and his dog, the octet recorded a few demos that were chosen for release by the local Stow College music business course, which had a policy of producing one record every year for the college label Electric Honey Records. The label released 1,000 vinyl copies of an album's worth of recordings entitled Tigermilk. The pressings sold out so quickly and became such a commodity that collectors paid up to £400 for a copy (it was eventually rereleased on CD in 1999).

After signing to U.K. label Jeepster that same year, Belle and Sebastian released If You're Feeling Sinister. That same year the octet released a series of EPs: Dog on Wheels (#59 U.K.), Lazy Line Painter Jane (#41 U.K.), and 3. 6. 9. Seconds of Light (#32 U.K.), all three of which were repackaged as the Lazy Line Painter Jane Box Set in 2000. The band's next album and first for U.S. label Matador, The Boy With the Arab Strap (#12 U.K.), was followed by the band's first full-scale tour of the States. Two years passed before the Glaswegians released a new album of original material, Fold Your Hands Child, You Walk Like a Peasant, which entered the U.S. pop charts at #80 and at #10 in the U.K. In the meantime, the band won a 1999 BRIT Award for Best Newcomer. Cellist Isobel Campbell also released two albums of solo material under the name Gentle Waves, while Stuart David recorded two albums as Looper with his wife, Karn, and brother Ronnie Black. In 2000 David left Belle and Sebastian to focus full-time on Looper.

Jesse Belvin

1975—Yesterdays (RCA) 1990—Jesse Belvin: The Blues Balladeer (Specialty) 1991—Goodnight, My Love (Flair/Virgin).

Jesse Belvin's untimely death came just as the singer was achieving success commensurate with his influence on West Coast black vocal music in the '50s. He began his career as a 16-year-old vocalist for Big Jay McNeely's band. After a stint in the army, he formed a vocal duo with Marvin Phillips—Jesse and Marvin—and scored an R&B Top 10 hit with "Dream Girl" in 1953. Over the next eight years, he served as unofficial leader of L.A.'s doo-wop groups, coaching them, writing and arranging their material, and using his influence with the city's independent companies to get them recorded. His biggest songwriting success was with "Earth Angel," a million-seller for the Penguins in 1955. He also sang with the Cliques, the Sharptones, Three Dots and a Dash, and the Sheiks. The Cliques had a 1956 hit with his "The Girl in My Dreams."

Belvin recorded as a solo artist for numerous labels, including Specialty, Knight, and Modern/Kent, but not until the mid-'50s did his soft, careful enunciation and tasteful ballads enjoy some success. "Goodnight My Love" hit the R&B Top 10 in 1956. In 1958 Belvin was signed to RCA, in 1959 "Guess Who" went #7 R&B. Nine months later he died in an auto accident.

Born Patricia Andrzejewski, Jan. 10, 1953, Brooklyn, NY

1979—In the Heat of the Night (Chrysalis) 1980—Crimes of Passion 1981—Precious Time 1982—Get Nervous 1983—Live From Earth 1984—Tropico 1985—Seven the Hard Way 1988—Wide Awake in Dreamland 1989—Best Shots 1991—True Love 1993—Gravity's Rainbow 1997—Innamorata (CMC International) 1998—8-15-80 1999—Synchronistic Wanderings: Recorded Anthology 1979-1999 (Chrysalis/Capitol) 2001—Extended Version (BMG Special).

Pat Benatar was the most successful female hard-rock singer of the '80s. She grew up on Long Island, where at age 17 she began vocal training in preparation for study at the Juilliard School of Music. She soon rebelled against the rigorous training and ended her studies. After turning 18, she married Dennis Benatar, a GI stationed in Richmond, Virginia. There she worked as a bank clerk before taking a job as a singing waitress. In 1975 the couple returned to New York, they later divorced.

Benatar began working Manhattan's cabaret circuit in 1975 with a chanteuse style derived from Barbra Streisand and Diana Ross. At Catch a Rising Star, she attracted the attention of club owner Rick Newman, who became her manager. By 1978 she had switched to a more aggressive rock approach, and after being rejected by several labels was signed to Chrysalis.

Benatar's debut went platinum (the first of six) on the strength of the #23 single "Heartbreaker." Her 1980 followup, Crimes of Passion, sold over 4 million, yielding two hit singles, "Hit Me With Your Best Shot" (#9, 1980) and "Treat Me Right" (#18, 1981). Precious Time (also multiplatinum), boasted "Promises in the Dark" (#38, 1981) and "Fire and Ice" (#17, 1981).

Benatar's early sex-kitten image—which she later stated had been thrust upon her—belied the singer's choice of assertive, tough-girl lyrics and take-no-crap delivery. In 1982 she married her guitarist and musical director, Neil Giraldo, with whom she wrote most of her songs. Her streak of hits continued with "Shadows of the Night" (#13, 1982), "Little Too Late" (#20, 1983), "Love Is a Battlefield" (#5, 1983), and "We Belong" (#5, 1984). She returned to recording after the birth of her first daughter, Haley, with "Invincible" (#10, 1985), "Sex as a Weapon" (#28, 1985), and "All Fired Up" (#19, 1988). Something of a stylistic departure, True Love, a collection of blues recordings, produced no hits. Two years later, Benatar was back with Gravity's Rainbow, which failed to chart.

The disappointing response to her comeback, along with the birth of her second daughter, Hana, in 1994 and the absorption of her longtime label, Chrysalis, by EMI in 1995, caused an extended break in Benatar's recording career. She left Chrysalis and recorded 1997's largely acoustic Innamorata for CMC International, a label that focuses on artists who had their heyday in the '70s and '80s. (The label also released a recording of a 1980 Benatar concert.) In addition to joining new labelmates Styx on a summer tour that year, she performed two dates of the first Lilith Fair. In 1999 Benatar and Giraldo were given carte blanche to select songs for the three-disc hits collection Synchronistic Wanderings, distributed by Chrysalis' new parent company. The box set includes eight previously unreleased tracks, including an early cover of Roy Orbison's "Crying." In 2000 the couple began recording a new album for Sony's Portrait label and had turned their attention to encouraging their teenage daughter Haley's band, GLO.

Tony Bennett

1957—The Beat of My Heart (Columbia) 1959—Basie Swings,

The epitome of cool, Tony Bennett is second only to Frank Sinatra as an interpreter of classic jazz-inflected American song. Careful articulation, a sure sense of swing, and an air of restrained bemusement characterize his style. Originally popular in the late '50s, Bennett enjoyed a remarkable resurgence in the early '90s.

His mother American, his father an Italian grocer, Benedetto worked as a singing waiter in his teens. After performing with the U.S. Army's entertainment corps in World War II and then appearing on Arthur Godfrey's talent show, he was discovered, under the stage name Joe Ban, while performing with Pearl Bailey in 1949. Bob Hope then enlisted him to open shows at New York's Paramount Theater and changed his name to Tony Bennett. In 1950, following an audition with Mitch Miller, he was signed to Columbia Records. His first hit, "Because of You" (#1, 1951) remained on the charts for 32 weeks. His next single, Hank Williams' "Cold, Cold Heart," was the first notable pop cover of a country tune. Both featured the Percy Faith Orchestra, who provided the lush backdrop for most of the 24 Top 40 charters he earned before 1964. Among those hits were "Rags to Riches" (#1, 1953), "Stranger in Paradise" (#2, 1953), and "There'll Be No Teardrops Tonight" (#7, 1954). During that period, his Basie Swings, Bennett Sings served as a blueprint for later forays into jazz singing; in 1956 he formed an alliance with Ralph Sharon, the pianist and musical director who would become Bennett's lifelong collaborator. In 1962 Bennett sold out Carnegie Hall and recorded his first Grammy Award winner and subsequent trademark, "I Left My Heart in San Francisco" (#19, 1962).

But Bennett was primarily an album artist. Given occasionally to the experimental—1957's The Beat of My Heart highlighted percussion as the primary instrumentation—he achieved equal aesthetic triumphs with the polished pop of The Movie Song Album (#18, 1966) and the straight-ahead jazz of When Lights Are Low (#79, 1964), a tribute to the King Cole Trio. Critics reserved special praise for his work with Bill Evans, a pianist whose elegant minimalism matched Bennett's own.

Yet after his '60s heyday came a fallow spell. Bennett continued to appear in concert, but from 1978 to 1985 he didn't record. In the late '70s he formed an independent label, which fared poorly commercially, and his contract with Columbia was not renewed. While other vocalists of the pre-rock era had expanded their repertoire to include songs by younger composers, Bennett adamantly refused such a maneuver, continuing to record material by the Gershwins, Rodgers and Hart, Cole Porter, and the like. And his career stalled. He concentrated instead on painting and began exhibiting in Paris, London, and New York.

In 1986 Bennett re-signed with Columbia. The Art of Excellence featured "Everybody Has the Blues," a duet with Ray Charles. Bennett/Berlin was a critically lauded set of Irving Berlin standards performed with Dizzy Gillespie, Dexter Gordon, and George Benson. But it was with 1992's Perfectly Frank (#102), an homage to Bennett's favorite singer, Frank Sinatra, that his revival began in earnest. The album won a Grammy, as did Steppin' Out (#128, 1993), a collection of songs made famous by Fred Astaire. The singer's son, Danny Bennett, who had managed his father since 1979, capitalized on the newfound popularity, engineering a campaign that saw Bennett appearing in a cameo role on television's youth-oriented The Simpsons in 1991. Paul Shaffer, musical director for Late Night With David Letterman, became Bennett's champion; by appearing on that television show, the singer furthered his exposure to a younger demographic. With the release of Forty Years: The Artistry of Tony Bennett, a four-disc retrospective, Bennett's stature was confirmed, while his hipness quotient intensified with his appearance, alongside Flea and Anthony Kiedis of the Red Hot Chili Peppers, as a presenter at the 1993 MTV Music Video Awards. In 1994 Tony Bennett—MTV Unplugged (#48), including duets with k.d. lang and Elvis Costello, gained Bennett two more Grammys, including Album of the Year.

In 1996 Rizzoli International published What My Heart Has Seen, a collection of Bennett's paintings. In addition to graduating from New York City's High School of Industrial Arts, Bennett has been tutored by artists such as John Barnicoat, Everett Kinstler, and Basil Baylin. His body of artwork includes portraits of idols such as Frank Sinatra, Ella Fitzgerald, and Duke Ellington. In 1998 he published his autobiography, The Good Life.

Jazz guitarist/vocalist George Benson's breakthrough came in 1976 when Breezin' brought him into the pop mainstream; from 1976 through 1983, he racked up seven Top 40 singles. His jazz-pop formula has since been updated by the likes of Earl Klugh and Kenny G, while Benson himself continues to release expert mellow fare—jazz- and blues-based pop material with a consistent melodic emphasis.

Benson won a singing contest when he was four years old and later performed on radio as Little Georgie Benson. He took up the guitar at age eight but worked as a vocalist with numerous Pittsburgh R&B bands before playing guitar in public at age 15. Soon after, he began playing sessions outside Pittsburgh. With his groups the Altairs and George Benson and His All-Stars, he recorded for Amy Records. By the late '50s he had given up singing to concentrate solely on the guitar. In 1965 he moved to New York and met his main influence, Wes Montgomery. John Hammond signed him to Columbia. Though his mainstream jazz albums on Columbia, A&M, and CTI helped him establish a reputation, sales were never outstanding.

In late 1975 Benson signed with Warner Bros., where for the first time in his recording career he was encouraged to sing. Breezin', winner of three Grammys in 1976, featured Leon Russell's "This Masquerade," the first song in history to reach #1 on the jazz, R&B, and pop charts. His success continued throughout the late '70s and early '80s (all six Warners albums of the period are platinum sellers). Understated pop funk with vocals modeled on Stevie Wonder and Donny Hathaway, his hits included "On Broadway" (#7, 1978), "Give Me the Night" (#4, 1980), and "Turn Your Love Around" (#5, 1981).

Benson's sales have remained consistent, but his life hasn't been without tumult. Becoming a Jehovah's Witness in the early '80s, he credited his conversion for his good fortune. However, one of his sons was killed in a 1991 bar fight. In 1988 CTI Records was awarded $3.2 million in a judgment against Warner Bros. Records; Warners, a jury ruled, owed the money in damages for breaching an agreement with Benson. During this period, Benson reaffirmed his jazz roots with live work with Dizzy Gillespie, Freddie Hubbard, and Lionel Hampton. In 1989 Tenderly, with pianist McCoy Tyner, reached the #1 jazz spot. In 1990 Big Boss Band featured a vital partnership with the Count Basie Orchestra. In 1993 Benson, an eight-time Grammy winner, again proved his hitmaking currency when his Love Remembers supplanted Kenny G's Breathless as the #1 Contemporary Jazz album. In 1998 his Standing Together featured MDRC, a band including Benson's son Robert. The release incorporated Caribbean and hip-hop elements.

Brook Benton

Born Benjamin Franklin Peay, Sep. 19, 1931, Lugoff, SC; died Apr. 9, 1988, New York, NY
 1960—The Two of Us (with Dinah Washington) (Mercury)
 1961—Brook Benton's Golden Hits; The Boll Weevil Song and 11 Other Great Hits; If You Believe 1962—Singin' the Blues
 1963—Brook Benton's Golden Hits, vol. 2 1967—Laura, What's He Got That I Ain't Got (Reprise) 1969—Do Your Own Thing (Cotillion) 1970—Brook Benton Today; Home Style
 1971—The Gospel Truth 1973—Something for Everyone (MGM) 1975—Brook Benton Sings a Love Story (RCA)
 1976—This Is Brook Benton (All Platinum) 1977—Making Love Is Good for You (Olde Worlde) 1986—The Brook Benton Anthology (Rhino).

One of a handful of black singers who wrote their own material in the early '60s, Brook Benton had four gold records and 16 Top 20 hits over a lengthy and resilient career. Benton's hits feature his smooth bantone (in a style he learned from Nat "King" Cole and Billy Eckstine) and lush string backing. In the early '50s he sang with Bill Landford and the Golden Gate gospel quartets. By the middle of the '50s Benton had begun recording pop songs for Epic and then Vik Records, for whom he had a minor 1958 hit, "A Million Miles From Nowhere."

Collaborations with songwriter Clyde Otis and arranger Belford Hendricks produced 1958 hits for Nat "King" Cole ("Looking Back") and Clyde McPhatter ("A Lover's Question"). In 1959 Otis helped get Benton a contract with Mercury, and Benton began four years of success for the label, beginning with four Benton/Otis/Hendricks compositions: "It's Just a Matter of Time" (#3), "Endlessly" (#12), "Thank You Pretty Baby" (#16), and "So Many Ways" (#6).

Benton's early-'60s hits included two duets with Dinah Washington, "Baby (You've Got What It Takes)" (#5, 1960) and "A Rockin' Good Way" (#7, 1960), as well as the folk-tinged "The Boll Weevil Song" (#2, 1961) and "Frankie and Johnny" (#20, 1961). Other hits included more standard soul-pop fare like "Think Twice" (#11, 1961), "Revenge" (#15, 1961), "Lie to Me" (#13, 1962), "Shadrack" (#19, 1962), and "Hotel Happiness" (#3, 1963). Thereafter his Mercury releases fared noticeably poorer on the charts. He recorded for RCA (1965-67) and Reprise (1967-68) with meager results.

In 1970 he had one more big pop hit with a stirring version of Tony Joe White's "Rainy Night in Georgia" (#4 pop, #1 R&B, 1970) on Cotillion. As the decade progressed, he recorded for MGM, Brut, Stax, All Platinum, and Olde Worlde. He died at age 56 from pneumonia.

Berlin

Formed 1979, Los Angeles, CA
 John Crawford (b. Jan. 17, 1957, Palo Alto, CA), bass, voc.; Rob Brill (b. Jan. 21, 1956, Babylon, NY), drums; Terri Nunn (b. June 26, 1959, Baldwin Hills, CA), voc.
 1983—Pleasure Victim (Geffen) 1984—Love Life 1986—

Count Three & Pray 1989—Best of Berlin 1979-1988
 2000—Berlin Live: Sacred and Profane (Time Bomb).

While best known for the Giorgio Moroder-produced "Take My Breath Away" (#1, 1986) from the Top Gun soundtrack, Berlin's real raison d'être is probably better divined from the title of its panting, quasi-pornographic song "Sex (I'm a . . .)" (#62, 1983). A vehicle for teen actress (in Lou Grant)-turned-singer Terri Nunn, Berlin combined her moaning boy-toy image with the rhythm section of John Crawford and Rob Brill (three different groups of musicians backed them on album). The resulting slick synth pop and a steamy video brought Pleasure Victim (#30, 1983) some commercial success. Love Life (#28, 1984) successfully repeated the debut album's formula. Count Three & Pray (#61, 1986) featured cameos by Ted Nugent, David Gilmour, and Elliot Easton. While the Top Gun track soared, the rest of the album sputtered, and when Nunn left in 1987, Berlin called it quits. Crawford went on to form the Big F in 1989.

In 1990, Berlin found themselves back on the charts in England, as "Take My Breath Away" was used in a series of car commercials, reissued, and reached #3. The group reunited in 1999 and performed a show of both old and new material, which was recorded and released in 2000 as Berlin Live: Sacred and Profane.

Chuck Berry

Born Charles Edward Anderson Berry, Oct. 18, 1926, San Jose, CA
 1958—After School Session (Chess); One Dozen Berrys
 1959—Chuck Berry Is on Top 1960—New Juke Box Hits
 1975—Chuck Berry '75 1979—Motorvatin' (Atlantic); Rocket (Atco) 1982—The Great Twenty-eight (Chess) 1986—Rock 'n' Roll Rarities (Chess/MCA) 1987—Hail! Hail! Rock 'n' Roll (MCA) 1988—The Chess Box (Chess/MCA) 1990—Missing Berrys: Rarities, vol. 3 1996—The Best of Chuck Berry (MCA) 1997—His Best, vol. 1 (Chess); His Best, vol. 2 1999—Best of Chuck Berry: 20th Century Masters (MCA) 2000—The Anthology (Chess).

The archetypal rock & roller, Chuck Berry melded the blues, country, and a witty, defiant teen outlook into songs that have influenced virtually every rock musician in his wake. In his best work—about 40 songs (including "Round and Round," "Carol," "Brown Eyed Handsome Man," "Roll Over Beethoven," "Back in the U.S.A.," "Little Queenie"), recorded mostly in the mid- and late '50s—Berry matched some of the most resonant and witty lyrics in pop to music with a blues bottom and a country top, trademarking the results with his signature double-string guitar lick. On awarding Berry the prestigious Kennedy Center Honors Award in December

Berry learned guitar as a teenager. From 1944 to 1947 he was in reform school for attempted robbery; upon release he worked on the assembly line at a General Motors Fisher body plant and studied hairdressing and cosmetology at night school. In 1952 he formed a trio with drummer Ebby Harding and pianist Johnnie Johnson, his keyboardist on and off for the next three decades. By 1955 the trio had become a top St. Louis-area club band, and Berry was supplementing his salary as a beautician with regular gigs. He met Muddy Waters in Chicago in May 1955, and Waters introduced him to Leonard Chess. Berry played Chess a demo tape that included "Ida Red"; Chess renamed it "Maybellene," and sent it to disc jockey Alan Freed (who got a cowriting credit in the deal), and Berry had his first Top 10 hit.

Through 1958 Berry had a string of hits: "School Day" (#3 pop, #1 R&B, 1957), "Rock & Roll Music" (#8 pop, #6 R&B, 1957), "Sweet Little Sixteen" (#2 pop, #1 R&B, 1958), and "Johnny B. Goode" (#8 pop, #5 R&B, 1958) were the biggest. With his famous "duckwalk," Berry was a mainstay on the mid-'50s concert circuit. He also appeared in such films as Rock, Rock, Rock (1956), Mister Rock and Roll (1957), and Go, Johnny, Go (1959).

Late in 1959 Berry was charged with violating the Mann Act. He had brought a 14-year-old Spanish-speaking Apache prostitute from Texas to check hats in his St. Louis nightclub, and after he fired her she complained to the police. Following a blatantly racist first trial was disallowed, he was found guilty at a second. Berry spent two years in federal prison in Indiana, leaving him embittered.

By the time he was released in 1964, the British Invasion was underway, replete with Berry's songs on early albums by the Beatles and Rolling Stones. He recorded a few more classics—including "Nadine" and "No Particular Place to Go"—although it has been speculated that they were written before his jail term. Since then he has written and recorded only sporadically, although he had a million-seller with "My Ding-a-Ling" (#1, 1972), and 1979's Rockit was a creditable effort. He appeared in the 1979 film American Hot Wax. Through it all, Berry continued to tour internationally, often with pickup bands.

In January 1986 Berry was among the first round of inductees into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. The following year he published the at-times sexually and scatologically explicit Chuck Berry: The Autobiography and was the subject of a documentary/tribute film, Hail! Hail! Rock 'n' Roll, for which his best-known disciple, Keith Richards of the Rolling Stones, organized a backing band.

When not on the road, Berry lives in Wentzville, Missouri, where he owns the amusement complex Berry Park. Problems with the law and the Internal Revenue Service have plagued him through the years. Shortly before a June 1979 performance for Jimmy Carter at the White House, the IRS charged Berry with income tax evasion, and he served a 100-day prison term in 1979. In 1988 in New York City, he paid a $250 fine to settle a $5 million lawsuit from a woman he allegedly punched in the mouth. In 1990 police raided his home and, finding 62 grams of marijuana and videotapes of women—one of whom was apparently a minor—using the restroom in a Berry Park restaurant, filed felony drug and child-abuse charges against Berry. In order to have the child-abuse charges dropped, Berry agreed to plead guilty to one misdemeanor count of marijuana possession. Berry was given a six-month suspended jail sentence, placed on two years' unsupervised probation, and ordered to donate $5,000 to a local hospital.

As of this writing, Berry was still touring the world, sometimes with fellow classic rockers such as Jerry Lee Lewis and Little Richard.

Formed Oct. 1976, Athens, GA

Cindy Wilson (b. Feb. 28, 1957, Athens), voc., perc., gtr.; Keith Strickland (b. Oct. 26, 1953, Athens), drums, gtr., kybds.; Fred Schneider III (b. July 1, 1956, Newark, NJ), voc., toy piano; Ricky Wilson (b. Mar. 19, 1953, Athens; d. Oct. 12, 1985), gtr., kybds.; Kate Pierson (b. Apr. 27, 1948, Weehawken, NJ), voc., kybds. 1979—The B-52's (Warner Bros.) 1980—Wild Planet; Party Mix EP 1982—Mesopotamia EP 1983—Whammy! 1985—(– R. Fred Schneider solo: 1991—Fred Schneider and the Shake

Society (Reprise) (as Fred Schneider and the Shake Society)
1996—Just . . . Fred.

Initially, the gleefully eccentric party music of the B-52's—stripped-down, off-kilter funk, topped by chirpy vocals and lyrics crammed with '50s and '60s trivia—garnered such a large following at dance clubs and colleges that the band's debut album sold 500,000 copies despite minimal airplay. Named for the tall bouffant hairdos worn onstage by the two female members, the group claims that it originated in a jam session under the influence of tropical drinks. Fred Schneider, Kate Pierson, and Keith Strickland had minimal previous performing experience; the Wilson siblings had none. The B-52's debuted at a Valentine's Day party in 1977 in the college town of Athens, Georgia; they originally performed with taped guitar and drum parts, but they preferred the sound when someone accidentally pulled the plug on the tape recorder.

Their first "official" gig was at Max's Kansas City. They soon attracted a New York cult, partly thanks to their stage image: miniskirts, go-go boots, toy instruments, and demonstrations of such dance steps as the Camel Walk and the Shy Tuna. They pressed 2,000 copies of the single "Rock Lobster," which sold out rapidly, before signing in early 1979 to Warner Bros. Their debut album sold steadily as the band toured the U.S. and Europe. Wild Planet, which hit #18 in 1980, was even more successful, and songs from it reappeared in remixed, more danceable versions on the Party Mix EP. For 1982's Mesopotamia EP, the B-52's collaborated with producer David Byrne of Talking Heads, who brought in backup musicians to broaden the sound. Whammy! was a Top 30 LP, boosted by the singles "Legal Tender" and "Song for a Future Generation." The accompanying videos captured the group's trademark retro American style. Drummer Ricky Wilson's death from AIDS in 1985 made it impossible for the group to tour or promote Bouncing Off the Satellites.

Nearly four years passed before the B-52's returned with their most successful release, the double-platinum Cosmic Thing (#4, 1989). With Keith Strickland moving from drums to lead guitar, the B-52's seemed to strike the perfect balance between their stylistic idiosyncrasies and a four-on-the-floor drive with "Love Shack" (#3, 1990); other hit singles from the Don Was- and Nile Rodgers-produced LP included "Roam" (#3, 1990) and "Deadbeat Club" (#30, 1990). In 1990 Cindy Wilson started a family and left the group (Julee Cruise filled in on tour), which continued as a trio on Good Stuff (#16, 1992). Concurrently Kate Pierson appeared on Iggy Pop's hit single "Candy." (She had previously sung on R.E.M.'s "Shiny Happy People.") Calling themselves the B.C. 52's, the band recorded "Meet the Flintstones" (#33) for the 1994 film version of The Flintstones. Cindy Wilson returned for the ensuing concert appearances.

Time Capsule contained songs spanning two decades of the B-52's' existence, as well as two new tracks. A tour with the Pretenders followed. Schneider, who had previously recorded a campy, cheerfully smutty album with the Shake Society (its delightful single "Monster" warned of what lurked inside Fred's pants), released his second solo album in 1996. Just . . . Fred, produced by ex-Big Black noise master Steve Albini, was a radical departure, featuring aggressive surfably backing by members of such indie grind-punks as the Didjits, the Jon Spencer Blues Explosion, and Tar.

Big Audio Dynamite/B.A.D. II/Big Audio

Mick Jones (b. Michael Jones, June 26, 1955, London), voc., gtr.; Don Letts, kybds.; Leo "E-Zee Kill" Williams, bass; Greg Roberts, drums; Dan Donovan, kybds.

1985—This Is Big Audio Dynamite (Columbia) 1986—No. 10 Upping St. 1988—Tighten Up Vol. 88 1989—Megatop Phoenix.

As B.A.D. II: 1991—(— Letts; — Williams; — Roberts; — Donovan; + Gary Stonadge [b. Nov. 24, 1962, Southampton, Eng.], bass; Nick Hawkins [b. Feb. 3, 1965, Luton, Eng.], gtr.; Chris Kavanagh [b. June 4, 1964, Woolwich, Eng.], drums; DJ Zonka [b. Michael Custance, July 4, 1962, London], DJ) The Globe.

As Big Audio: 1994—(+ Andre Shapps, kybds.) Higher Power (Columbia).

As Big Audio Dynamite (again): 1995—F-Punk (Radioactive); Planet B.A.D.: Greatest Hits (Sony) 1999—Super Hits.

With Big Audio Dynamite, Mick Jones took the mixing of styles he had experimented with in the Clash to adventurous extremes, creating a rock-reggae-house-hip-hop fusion ahead of its time. B.A.D. was one of the first British bands to sample and mix club and rock music, prefiguring such groups as EMF and the Farm.

Just over a year after he was kicked out of the Clash by Joe Strummer and Paul Simonon [see the Clash entry] because they wanted the band to return to its "punk roots," Jones bounced back with an unlikely combo featuring filmmaker/DJ Don Letts and former Basement 5 bassist Leo Williams. The group played a series of dates in 1984 in France, opening for U2 and the Alarm, before adding keyboardist Dan Donovan. On This Is Big Audio Dynamite, B.A.D. programmed a swirl of sound effects and audio vénté collage, including a running motif of dialogue from such movies as A Fistful of Dollars. Jones sang about the kind of political issues he had in the Clash on such songs as "Medicine Show," "E=MC2," and "The Bottom Line," but the emphasis was on dancing and rocking. B.A.D. polished its hybrid further on No. 10 Upping St., which was produced and written by Jones with his old Clash mate Joe Strummer and featured the college radio hit "C'mon Every Beatbox."

Tighten Up Vol. 88, featuring the single "Just Play Music," had barely been released when Jones caught chicken pox in 1988 from his daughter and nearly died. He spent nine months recuperating. The acid-house-inspired Megatop Phoenix was a spiritual rebirth for Jones; the album was dedicated to his grandmother, whose death in 1989 was even more traumatic to the singer than his own brush with mortality. Jones had found in the rave scene a musical movement whose energy reminded him of punk. Unfortunately, the rest of the band wasn't as interested in the new style, and they and Jones subsequently parted ways. Letts, Williams, and Roberts formed Screaming Target, while Donovan joined Sisters of Mercy.

Jones formed B.A.D. II in 1990 with three young musicians who shared his passion for raves and soccer, including former Sigue Sigue Sputnik drummer Chris Kavanagh. (Though DJ Zonka guested on 1991's The Globe, he didn't become an official member of the group until after its release.) In England they released an eight-song disc called Kool-Aid, as well as a live album, Ally Pally Paradiso, that was packaged like a bootleg DJ record, white label and all.

On The Globe B.A.D. II explored systems, techno, and ambient music. The album also featured an acoustic ballad, an orchestral reprise, and the single "Rush" (#32), a techno rocker that sampled the Who's "Baba O'Riley." The song was released as a B side to "Should I Stay or Should I Go?" when the Jones-penned Clash tune became a #1 U.K. single in 1991 after being used in a Levi's ad. Touring heavily behind the album, including opening for U2 on the U.S. Zoo TV Tour and playing with PIL on the 1992 MTV 120 Minutes Tour, B.A.D. II mixed rock-concert staging with a clubby environment, playing extended versions of songs and highlighting DJ Zonka's role. With the same lineup (plus keyboardist/coproducer Andre Shapps), the band returned as Big Audio in 1994, releasing Higher Power. The album also featured noted producer Arthur Baker ("Planet Rock") on one track.

In 1995 Jones and company reassumed their original Big Audio Dynamite moniker, jumped record labels, and released F-Punk, an album that infused the group's beat-wise sound with Clash-like guitar punk. The record also included a cover of David Bowie's "Suffragette City." The same year, Sony issued Planet B.A.D., a hits collection spanning the band's entire career.

Steve Albini is an independent-rock renaissance man. The outspoken producer, guitarist, lyricist, writer, and DIY music advocate first emerged in Chicago in the early '80s while still a journalism student at Northwestern. Big Black began as a solo project. As the band developed, it became notable for imposing the physical impact of American hardcore and the unconventional racket of post-no wave noise onto the stern melodicism of early English art punks like Wire, Gang of Four, and PIL. Albini's subsequent groups, Rapeman and Shellac, refined the approach with technical precision and a flirtation with the chunky riffs of '70s hard rock. A strong critic of slick pop, the CD format, managers, and major-label business practices, Albini has paved the way for countless other musical free-thinkers. In the '90s, he became a prominent engineer; his visceral, naturalistic recording techniques bombarded the mainstream on records by Nirvana, PJ Harvey, and Jimmy Page and Robert Plant.

The six-song Lungs developmentally sketches Big Black's 1982 beginnings. The basic formula—numbing drum machine, trebly guitar, hoarse vocals, and sensationistic lyrics—is laid out but more closely resembles anemic new wave than raging fury. Albini's project expanded with the addition of Jeff Pezatti and Santiago Durango of Naked Raygun, a group who, along with Big Black, helped define Chicago postpunk. Future Urge Overkill drummer Pat Byrne briefly joined them on the more forceful Bulldozer. Racer-X introduces a less rinky-dink, massively effective drum machine and increased violence in the guitar department. The lineup stabilized for Big Black's first full-length LP, 1986's Atomizer. Low in the mix, Albini shrieks and growls stonies from the Midwest's underbelly, unflinchingly detailing brutal sex ("Fists of Love"), arson ("Kerosene"), and child molestation ("Jordan, Minnesota"). Bassist Dave Riley's fractured funk edge brightens the Herculean beats, ultradistorted guitar leads, and punctuations of feedback. The trio ruled the American and European undergrounds as the Headache EP and the precise, tightly wound Songs About Fucking capped off Big Black's career. (The live Pigpile, also released as a box set, coincided with Touch and Go Records' reissues of the group's catalogue.) Durango recorded two shadowy EPs as Arsenal, married British pop singer Cath Carroll, and became a lawyer for the likes of Albini and infamous cock-rock sculptor Cynthia Plaster Caster. In the early '90s Riley had a brief tenure with Chicago's Bull.

In 1988 Albini founded Rapeman with Rey Washam and David Wm. Sims, formerly of Texas' Scratch Acid. Two Nuns and a Pack Mule is less abstract and alien than Big Black, its superbly executed power crunch predates grunge irony with in-joke lyrics and tributes to Golden Earring and ZZ Top. After the group's dissolution, Washam drummed with a succession of acts, Sims formed the Jesus Lizard, and Albini concentrated on his studio. His most recent endeavor, the heavier, more minimalistic Shellac, features ex-Breaking Circus/Rifle Sport drummer Todd Trainer and ex-Volcano Suns bassist/engineer Bob Weston. They record and tour sporadically, on their own terms, crafting meticulously loud albums full of odd time signatures, economical rhythms, and trademark guitar clang

The Big Bopper

Born Jiles Perry "J.P." Richardson, Oct. 24, 1930, Sabine Pass, TX; died Feb. 3, 1959, near Clear Lake, IA
1989—Hellooo Baby!: The Best of the Big Bopper, 1954–1959 (Rhino).

The Big Bopper, a disc jockey moonlighting as a pop star, was killed in a plane crash with Buddy Holly and Ritchie Valens, leaving as his legacy the line "Oh baby that's-a what I like!"

Richardson began working as a disc jockey at KTRM, Beaumont, Texas, while still attending high school, calling himself the "Big Bopper." Except for a two-year hitch in the army (as a radio communications instructor), he worked at KTRM the rest of his life. He began writing songs during his army years, and in 1957 he sent a demo of original material to a Houston record producer, who brought him to the attention of Mercury Records. He cut two country & western singles for Mercury under his real name and a novelty record called "The Purple People Eater Meets the Witch-Doctor" as the Big Bopper. The flip side was a rockabilly original called "Chantilly Lace," which became the international hit of 1958.

He followed "Chantilly Lace" with two modest singles, "Little Red Riding Hood" and "The Big Bopper's Wedding," and developed a stage show based on his radio persona. Buddy Holly, a longtime West Texas friend, invited him to accompany a Midwestern tour in the winter of 1959. On February 3, 1959, between concert stops in Mason City, Iowa, and Fargo, North Dakota, the tour plane flew into a snowstorm and crashed, killing all on board.

Richardson left little in the way of recordings. As a songwriter, however, he returned to the charts a year after his death with "Running Bear," which he'd written for Johnny Preston.

While Big Brother and the Holding Company are remembered as Janis Joplin's band, they were active before Joplin joined them and after she left. Leader Peter Albin (a country-blues guitarist who had played with future founders of the Grateful Dead Jerry Garcia and Ron McKernan) met Sam Andrew, Big Brother's musical director, who had a jazz and classical background and had played rock & roll professionally. They approached James Gurley (who had taught himself to play guitar on hallucinogenic sojourns through the California desert), and the three began playing open jam sessions hosted by entrepreneur Chet Helms in 1965. Helms encouraged them to form a group, found them a drummer, and set up their first gig at the Trips Festival of January 1966. In the festival audience was art historian and amateur musician David Getz, who soon replaced the original drummer. Big Brother and the Holding Company became the house band at the Avalon Ballroom, playing a progressive style of instrumental rock. Feeling a need for a strong vocalist, Helms recalled having heard Joplin before, and contacted her in Austin, Texas. She returned to San Francisco to join the band in June 1966.

The Holding Company was clearly blues influenced, and Joplin had listened intensively to Bessie Smith, Ma Rainey, and Big Mama Thornton. Joplin's voice and presence, and the band's devil-may-care intensity, made them a whole greater than the sum of its parts—and a Bay Area sensation. Their debut album spread their reputation, and their appearance at the Monterey Pop Festival in June 1967 thrust them into the national spotlight. New manager Albert Grossman brought them to Columbia Records, which issued their legacy, Cheap Thrills. The album went to #1 with the help of "Piece of My Heart" (#12, 1968). Numerous observers convinced Joplin that she could use a more precise backing band, and at the end of 1968 she and Andrew left the group [see Janis Joplin entry]. After a year, Big Brother returned as a loose assemblage of four to eight musicians, which might include Gravenites (ex-Electric Flag), Kathy McDonald (a backup vocalist for Ike and Tina Turner, Joe Cocker, and Leon Russell), or no lead singer at all. Albin and Andrew were the only regular members (at times only Andrew). In 1972 Big Brother disbanded; the group re-formed in 1986. By the early '90s they were recording and performing in Europe and on the West Coast. Do What You Love features vocalist Lisa Battle.

In the early '80s Big Country was among a sprinkling of bands that favored guitars over synthesizers and earnest idealism over irony. Like their contemporaries in U2 and the Alarm, the members of Big Country were inspired by punk's energy and its emphasis on connecting with the audience.

Lead singer Stuart Adamson launched his rock career by playing guitar in a self-styled punk quartet called the Skids, who released three albums between 1977 and 1980 and had a #10 hit in England with the 1979 single "Into the Valley." Believing that the band was not living up to its initial ideals of professional and artistic integrity, Adamson decided to form his own band in Scotland. Big Country's first incarnation featured Adamson on vocals and guitar, plus four local Scottish musicians, among them guitarist Bruce Watson. Adamson and Watson eventually parted company with the other three and hooked up with London sessionmen Mark Brzezicki and Tony Butler, who had previously played in a trio with Pete Townshend's brother Simon, a childhood friend of Butler's.

After a series of sessions with producer Chris Thomas, Big Country decided to enlist U2 producer Steve Lillywhite for its debut album. The resulting effort, 1983's The Crossing, emphasized the young band's penchant for passionate, often anthemic songs and Celtic-flavored arrangements that were at once fierce and folksy. ROLLING STONE made note of Adamson's "unconventional guitar playing, which at times recalls such traditional instruments as bagpipes or fiddles"—a feature that was a highlight of Big Country's first and biggest hit, "In a Big Country" (#17, 1983). The following year the EP Wonderland and the album Steeltown were also well received. After that, the band's recordings faltered critically and commercially in the U.S., though a series of largely live albums still consistently reached the U.K. Top 30. The band folded in 1997.

Big Daddy Kane

Born Antonio M. Hardy, Sep. 10, 1968, Brooklyn, NY
 1988—Long Live the Kane (Cold Chillin') 1989—It's a Big Daddy Thing 1990—Taste of Chocolate 1991—Prince of Darkness 1993—Looks Like a Job for Big Daddy Kane
 1994—Daddy's Home (MCA) 1998—Veteranz Day
 (Blackheart) 2001—The Very Best of Big Daddy Kane (Rhino).

With his suave good looks and hard, smooth vocal delivery, Big Daddy Kane became rap's first niche-marketed sex symbol. In addition to his own albums, videos, and performances, he has written hits for other artists and posed nude in Playgirl magazine (June 1991) and for Madonna's 1992 book, Sex. He has been described as the Barry White of rap.

Kane grew up in the tough Bedford-Stuyvesant neighborhood of Brooklyn. As a child, he listened to his mother's records by artists such as Evelyn "Champagne" King; later, he discovered his own favorites in White and Otis Redding. In junior high Kane was introduced to the two worlds he would soon join: the rap world and the Five Percent Nation, an elitist black Muslim sect popular among the hip-hop community. By high school, he had begun writing poetry and looking up to the pioneering rap of Melle Mel, Grandmaster Caz, and Kool Moe Dee.

As his wordplay improved, Kane was asked to write material for the Juice Crew and Kurtis Blow. By 1988 his songs had been covered by Biz Markie ("Vapors" [#80 R&B, 1988]) and the notorious "Pickin' Boogers" and Roxanne Shanté ("Have a Nice Day" and "Go On Girl"). After touring as Shanté's DJ, Kane decided to try rapping.

For his first album, produced by Marley Marl, the songs Kane wrote for himself proved as wide-ranging as those he'd written for others. The macho posturing on "Raw" became his calling card, with the rest of the album ranging from the romantic ("The Day You're Mine") to the cool and funky ("Ain't No Half-Steppin'"). Kane's subsequent albums relied on a similar recipe. Taste of Chocolate (#37 pop, #10 R&B, 1990) provided another career highlight, as two generations of romantic vocalists were brought together when Kane duetted with White. Although he has received consistent critical kudos, Kane has also been criticized for promoting homophobia and sexism. In the '90s he acted in movies, appearing in Mario Van Peebles' Posse and Robert Townsend's Meteor Man. His 1994 album, Daddy's Home (#26 R&B), included a guest appearance by Ol' Dirty Bastard of the Wu-Tang Clan. And he returned to the studio once again for 1998's Veteranz Day (#62 R&B).

Big Star's combination of Beatles-style melody, Who-like punch, and Byrdsy harmonies defined power pop before the term (or an audience for it) existed. In less than four years, Big Star created a seminal body of work that never stopped inspiring succeeding generations of rockers, from the power-pop revivalists of the late '70s to alternative rockers at the end of the century. Despite commercial failure, Big Star has acquired near-mythic status through such songs as "September Gurls" and the continuing solo work and mystique of its chief singer/songwriter, Alex Chilton. Paid homage to by the Replacements ("Alex Chilton" from 1987's Pleased to Meet Me), Big Star has influenced a number of artists, such as Georgia's R.E.M., Scotland's Teenage Fanclub, and New Zealand's Chills.

The band was formed in Memphis by singer/songwriter Chns Bell, Alex Chilton, who'd been a hitmaker in the Box Tops [see entry], was recruited soon after. Following the release of the band's richly textured debut, #1 Record, Bell left the group. Drummer Jody Stephens and bassist Andy Hummel stayed on, and, with Chilton at the helm, the band recorded the more stripped-down Radio City, which included Chilton's "September Gurls" (covered by the Bangles in 1982). Though both albums garnered critical raves, neither sold well and the band fizzled. The dark and haunting Third (a.k.a. Sister Lovers; the LP was never titled at its completion), more of a Chilton solo effort, was not officially issued in the U.S. for years.

Bell, whose solo recordings were posthumously released in 1992, was killed in a car accident in 1978. Chilton moved to New York, formed a band that included future dB Chris Stamey, and recorded an EP. He made the adventurous Like Flies on Sherbet in Memphis with Third's producer Jim Dickinson. Then after producing recordings by the Cramps [see entry] and swampabilly band Panther Burns, Chilton disappeared from the scene. He reemerged in New Orleans in the mid-'80s, playing mostly cover songs in clubs. His music of this period, recorded on Feudalist Tarts, No Sex, and High Priest, veered more toward R&B. Usually with a trio, he continued to tour the U.S. and European club circuit into the '90s, mixing his original songs with an eclectic selection of covers. He recorded several of the jazz songs and standards of his live shows on Clichés (1994). A Man Called Destruction consists of Chilton originals and R&B-tinged obscurities. New product continues to trickle out, mostly reissues and ranties. The album 1970 is a historical footnote, catching Chilton at Ardent shortly after the breakup of the Box Tops and a few months before he cofounded Big Star. The singer was unable to secure a record deal he liked, and the album was lost for 26 years. Set is a latter-day studio recording that breaks no new ground, mingling New Orleans jukebox classics with novelty-tunes like "You've Got a Booger Bear Under There."

In 1993 students at the University of Missouri coaxed

Chilton and drummer Jody Stephens (by then projects director at Ardent Records, Big Star's label during the '70s) to reunite for a campus concert. With bassist Andy Hummel long retired from music, Jon Auer and Ken Stringfellow of the Poses were recruited to round out the quartet. Released in 1993, Columbia: Live at Missouri University chronicles the sloppy but spirited set that draws from all three Big Star LPs. Big Star sporadically performed together through the following year. The band has infrequently reunited since. In 1998 That '70s Show adopted the music from "In the Street" as its title theme. A post-Hummel live album, Nobody Can Dance, surfaced the following year.

Born Manley Buchanan, ca. 1949, Kingston, Jam.
1973—Screaming Target (Trojan, U.K.) 1976—Natty Cultural Dread; Hit the Road Jack 1977—Reggae Phenomenon (Big Youth, U.K.) 1978—Dreadlocks Dread (Klik, U.K.); Isiah, First Prophet of Old 1979—Everyday Skank (Best of) (Trojan, U.K.) 1982—Some Great Big Youth (Heartbeat) 1983—The Chanting Dread Inna Fine Style 1984—Live at Reggae Sunsplash (Sunsplash) 1985—A Luta Continua (Heartbeat) 1988—Manifestation 1990—Jamming in the House of Dread cassette (ROIR) 1997—Higher Grounds (Jet Star) 2000—Tell It Black (Recall, U.K.).

A cabbie turned disc jockey, Big Youth was Jamaica's most popular "toaster" (a disc jockey who ad libs over instrumental tracks) in the '70s. His early records featured rhymes, doggerel, and scat singing over previously released tunes by other artists remixed to cut out the original vocals and bring out the bass and drums. His style influenced the early rappers, who adapted his Caribbean methods to the inner city. Like his first hit, "Ace 90 Skank" (1972), his songs frequently dealt with current events: When a heavyweight boxing championship was fought in Kingston in 1973, Youth took to the airwaves with "George Foreman" and "Foreman and Frazier."

Big Youth later adopted Rastafarianism as his religion, and his songs took on weightier topics, as in "House of Dreadlocks" and "Natty Cultural Dread." He also began writing his own music, recording with a band and singing in a high, breathy croon rather than toasting. "When Revolution Come," produced by Prince Buster, was his first of many Jamaican chart-toppers in the mid-'70s. He performs periodically in the U.S. and Great Britain, and appears at the annual Reggae Sunsplash festival.

Bikini Kill

Formed Oct. 1990, Olympia, WA
Tobi Vail (b. July 20, 1969, Auburn, WA), drums; Kathleen Hanna (b. Kathleen Hanna-Dando, June 9, 1969, Portland, OR), voc.; Billy Boredom (b. William F. Karren, Mar. 10, 1965, Memphis, TN), gtr.; Kathi Wilcox (b. Nov. 19, 1969, Vancouver, WA), bass.

1992—Bikini Kill EP (Kill Rock Stars) 1993—Yeah Yeah Yeah Yeah (split album with Huggy Bear's Our Troubled Youth); Pussy Whipped 1996—Reject All American 1998—Singles. Julie Ruin: 1998—Julie Ruin (Kill Rock Stars). Le Tigre, formed 1999, New York, NY: 2000—Le Tigre (Mr. Lady).

Proclaiming themselves riot grrrls and calling for "Revolution Girl Style Now," Bikini Kill pioneered both a musical and a feminist movement in the early '90s. Hanna, Vail, and Wilcox met at Evergreen College in Olympia, Washington. In their feminist fanzine Bikini Kill they articulated an agenda for young women in and outside of music; the band put those ideas to practice. (Ironically, the zine first coined the "girl power" slogan, later co-opted by England's bubblegum pop band the Spice Girls.) Bikini Kill earned a reputation in the punk underground for confronting certain standards of that genre; for example, asking people to slam at the side of the stage, so that women would not get pushed out of the front, and inviting women to take the mike and talk about sexual abuse. A former stripper, Hanna (who inspired Nirvana's first hit by spray-painting "Smells Like Teen Spirit" on Kurt Cobain's bedroom wall) challenges the sexual expectations of her audience by pulling her shirt off or writing "Kill Me" across her stomach or chest.

In 1991 Bikini Kill circulated a tape, Revolution Girl Style Now, that introduced their fiery style. Some of the same songs appear in new versions, produced by Fugazi's Ian Mackaye, on their debut EP, which features the call-to-arms "Double Dare Ya" and the wrenching "Feels Blind." The Olympia-based indie Kill Rock Stars (Bikini Kill refused to work with majors) released Yeah Yeah Yeah Yeah, an album backed with British riot grrrl band Huggy Bear's Our Troubled Youth, in a joint venture with the U.K. label Catcall on International Women's Day.

Huggy Bear and Bikini Kill toured England together in spring 1993, generating a wave of international interest in riot grrrl and a storm of controversy in the British press. That fall, Joan Jett produced a Bikini Kill single featuring the anthem "Rebel Girl"; Jett and the band toured together the next year. On Pussy Whipped, Bikini Kill returned to a rawer sound; this album included songs by Vail and Wilcox as well as Hanna. All three also wrote tracks for the group's last studio album, the more accessible Reject All American.

On the 1995 Lollapalooza Tour, Hanna made headlines not for her riot grrrl politics but for her riotous scuffle with Hole frontwoman Courtney Love. The two longtime rivals came to blows backstage, and though accounts of the fistcuffs vary, Love was later charged with assault in the fourth degree and received a suspended one-year sentence.

Bikini Kill disbanded in 1998 (the same year a posthumous singles compilation was released), but in 1998 Hanna released a home-recorded, electronica-influenced solo album under the name Julie Ruin. Hanna then left the Pacific Northwest to form the New York-based trio Le Tigre with zine editor Johanna Fateman and videographer Sadie Benning. Their self-titled debut album borrowed from Bikini Kill's punk, softened with synth-pop flourishes and girl group influences. The politics were as potent as ever, though, as Le Tigre's songs name-dropped feminists from Gertrude Stein to Yoko Ono and questioned whether filmmaker John Casavetes was a misogynist.

Elvin Bishop

Born Oct. 21, 1942, Tulsa, OK
1969—Elvin Bishop (Fillmore) 1970—Feel It (Columbia/Epic)
1971—Rock My Soul; Applejack 1972—Crabshaw Rising: The Best of Elvin Bishop; Let It Flow (Capricorn) 1975—Juke Joint Jump 1976—Struttin' My Stuff; Hometown Boy Makes Good

1998—The Skin I'm In 2000—That's My Partner!

Although Elvin Bishop's good-humored blues rock was well received live, the ex-Paul Butterfield guitarist didn't establish his solo recording career until his 1976 smash hit single "Fooled Around and Fell in Love"—sung by Mickey Thomas, who went on to join Jefferson Starship.

Bishop met Paul Butterfield at the University of Chicago. Though Bishop had just started playing guitar, he and Butterfield began jamming together at parties; Bishop also played the Chicago folk circuit by himself. Eventually he and Butterfield jammed with Muddy Waters, Howlin' Wolf, and other leading South Side bluesmen. One winter, when times were especially hard, Bishop was jailed for stealing a preacher's coat from a restaurant. He moved to New York, where he worked breaking toys (for manufacturers' discounts) at a department store but returned to Chicago to join Butterfield's first Blues Band [see entry]. After 1967's The Resurrection of Pigboy Crabshaw, Bishop left the Blues Band to form his own group, settling in Mill Valley, California. He brought with him a Boston folk trio: Jo, Janice and Mary. Jo Baker was the only one to remain with the group. Bishop also jammed with Al Kooper at the Fillmore when Mike Bloomfield was ill. Bishop signed with Bill Graham's Fillmore Records and made several albums.

Dickey Betts of the Allman Brothers Band then persuaded Capricorn's Phil Walden to sign Bishop. His first few Capricorn LPs sold fairly well, yielding near-hits in "Travelin' Shoes" and "Sure Feels Good." His breakthrough finally came with Struttin' My Stuff and its #3 single, "Fooled Around and Fell in Love." Bishop hasn't had a real hit since, but he continues to tour the West Coast and record every so often. Nineteen-eighty-eight's Big Fun was his first U.S. release in nearly 10 years (a 1981 LP, Is You Is or Is You Ain't My Baby, came out in Germany); Don't Let the Bossman Get You Down!, a mix of Bishop originals and old blues, was hailed as a delightful return to form. For That's My Partner!, Bishop teamed up with one of his mentors, guitarist Little Smokey Smothers.

Born Marcel Hall, Apr. 8, 1964, New York, NY
 1988—Goin' Off (Cold Chillin') 1989—The Biz Never Sleeps 1991—I Need a Haircut 1993—All Samples Cleared!
 1994—Biz's Baddest Beats.

The class clown of New York hip-hop, Biz Markie proved himself as adept at goofily sincere crooning and lowbrow comedy as rapping. A rap link to the Coasters of "Charlie Brown" and "Yakety Yak," he is also known for losing the first rap-sampling lawsuit to be decided by a judge.

Born in Harlem and reared on Long Island, Biz got his start on the early-'80s downtown-Manhattan rap scene in such clubs as the Roxy and the Funhouse. In 1985 he met producer Marley Marl (L.L. Cool J, Big Daddy Kane) and made his first demo recordings. His debut album, Goin' Off (#90 pop, #19 R&B, 1988), had such club hits as "Vapors" (#80 R&B, 1988), "Make the Music With Your Mouth, Biz" (a showcase for his human beat-box skills), and the grossout comedy classic "Pickin' Boogers."

Biz Markie's triumph came with The Biz Never Sleeps (#66 pop, #9 R&B, 1989), which featured a Top 10 pop crossover hit in "Just a Friend" (#9, 1990)—a disarmingly abject expression of romantic betrayal in which Biz rapped the verses and sang the pleading chorus in passionate, off-key fashion.

But his next album brought disaster. I Need a Haircut (with a cover showing a chainsaw being put to Biz's head) included "Alone Again"—built on an unauthorized sample of the piano figure underpinning Gilbert O'Sullivan's 1972 #1 pop hit, "Alone Again (Naturally)." O'Sullivan sued, and in a landmark court case, the presiding judge ruled against Biz Markie, ordering Warner Bros. to remove all copies of Haircut worldwide. The album (#113 pop, #44 R&B, 1991) quickly went out of print, and labels began making greater efforts to clear permission before using copyrighted material. Markie covered himself and kept his sense of humor, with All Samples Cleared!—appearing on the cover as an angry judge handing down a sentence on himself. The Beastie Boys, long outspoken fans of Markie, put him on the bill of their second Tibetan Freedom Concert in 1997 in New York City, and he appeared on their 1998 album, Hello Nasty. That year he also joined jazz clannetist Don Byron on his Nu Blaxploitation album, recorded live at the downtown-Manhattan avant-garde club the Knitting Factory.

Björk/The Sugarcubes

Formed 1986, Reykjavik, Iceland
 Björk Guðmundsdóttir (b. Nov. 21, 1965, Reykjavik), voc.; Einar

Örn Benediktsson (b. Oct. 29, 1962, Copenhagen, Den.), voc., trumpet; Þór Eldon Jonsson (b. June 2, 1962, Reykjavik), gtr.; Einar Mellax, kybds.; Bragi Ólafsson (b. Aug. 11, 1962, Reykjavik), bass; Sigtryggur "Siggi" Baldursson (b. Oct. 2, 1962, Stavanger, Nor.), drums.

Björk solo: 1993—Debut (Elektra) 1995—Post 1997—Telegram; Homogenic 2000—Selmasongs—Music From the Motion Picture "Dancer in the Dark."

The biggest rock band to emerge from Iceland, the Sugarcubes drew notice for their offbeat songs and singer Björk Guðmundsdóttir, an elfin womanchild with a powerful, keening voice.

Björk, whose stepfather had been in an Icelandic rock band, recorded her first album at age 11, and later joined Theyr, a legendary Icelandic hard-rock band whose drummer was Siggi Baldursson. Einar Örn Benediktsson launched Gramm Records, and with Bragi Ólafsson formed punk band Purrtkur Pillnikk, whose debut EP reached Iceland's Top 20 in 1981. In 1982 Theyr recorded with Jaz Coleman and Youth of British punk band Killing Joke (who'd suddenly turned up in Iceland fearful of an impending apocalypse), while Purrtkur Pillnikk toured with British punk band the Fall (which had done some recording in Iceland, where it had a strong cult following).

In 1984 Björk, Einar, Siggi, and keyboardist Einar Mellax formed KUKL (Icelandic for "witch"), an atonal, theatrical rock band that toured England and Europe and released some singles on a label run by the British anarchic-punk band Crass. KUKL became the Sugarcubes, who formed the company Bad Taste (encompassing record label, art gallery, bookstore, publishing house, and radio station). Life's Too Good (#54, 1988) got rave reviews in England and the U.S., where MTV aired the video for the hypnotic, incantatory "Birthday."

In 1989 Björk's ex-husband Þór (with whom she had a son, Sindri) married new keyboardist Magga Ornlófsdóttir, while Ólafsson and Örn also were wed (the first openly gay marriage in rock history). Here Today, Tomorrow, Next Week! (#70, 1989), with fussier arrangements featuring strings and horns, was panned by critics. Björk and Baldursson then worked on Gling Glo, a Bad Taste album of jazzed-up '50s Icelandic pop songs. The Sugarcubes played for French President François Mitterrand during a 1991 summit meeting in Reykjavik, before recording Stick Around for Joy (#95, 1992). A year later Björk ventured outside the Sugarcubes to record her first U.S. solo album, Debut (#61, 1993), with producer/composer Nellee Hooper of British soul/jazz collective Soul II Soul. It yielded the single "Human Behavior," which reached #2 on the Modern Rock chart.

Björk's next solo album, Post (#32, 1995), featured a pair of tracks cowritten and produced by tnp-hop artist Tncxy, with whom she had a brief affair. She was later briefly engaged to drum-and-bass star Goldie. Björk made headlines in 1996 when she attacked a reporter in the Bangkok airport for trying to ambush her and her young son with a live TV interview. Later that year, an obsessed fan tried to send her a letter bomb (which was intercepted), as well as a videotape of his own suicide.

Fearing for her life as well as her son's, Björk considered retiring from the public life after the incident. She bounced back within a year with two new releases, beginning with Telegram (#66, 1997), a remix album of songs from Post. Later that year Björk released Homogenic (#28, 1997), which marked her first turn as coproducer (with Mark Bell). Soon afterward, she returned to her hometown of Reykjavik after four years of living in London.

Björk (who had made her film debut in 1986's The Juniper Tree) had a lead role in Danish director Lars von Trier's musical Dancer in the Dark, which won the Palme d'Or award for Best Film at the Cannes Film Festival. Björk's portrayal of a factory worker aspiring to a role in a local production of The Sound of Music while confronting impending blindness earned her an award for Best Actress at the festival, but she immediately vowed never to act again, choosing to focus entirely on music. Selmasongs, her soundtrack to the film, debuted at #41.

Clint Black

Born Feb. 4, 1962, Long Branch, NJ
 1989—Killin' Time (RCA) 1990—Put Yourself in My Shoes
 1992—The Hard Way 1993—No Time to Kill 1994—One Emotion
 1995—Looking for Christmas 1996—The Greatest Hits
 1997—Nothin' but the Tailights 1999—D'Ictricified.

With his husky, expressive voice and matinee-idol looks, Clint Black was one of the dominant forces in '90s country music. Between 1989 and late 1999, he sold over 12 million albums and had a dozen #1 C&W singles, including "A Better Man" (1989), "Loving Blind" (1991), "When My Ship Comes In" (1993), and "Like the Rain" (1996).

Born in New Jersey (where his father was working on a pipeline), Black grew up near Houston. His father, a Cole Porter fan, originally wanted to name his son after the songwriter. He resisted the urge, and Clint was spared the name Cole Black. Part of a musical family, Black started playing harmonica at 13; by 15 he had taught himself guitar, had started writing songs, and was performing everything from Merle Haggard to Yes with one of his three brothers in the Full House Band. He dropped out of high school in 1979 and spent the next eight years working in construction, writing songs, and playing clubs.

Black met Hayden Nicholas, his main songwriting collaborator, at a club in 1987. Nicholas joined Black's band, and the two soon began work on a demo. Their break came later that year when ZZ Top producer and manager Bill Ham met Black, was impressed, and got him a deal with RCA.

"A Better Man" was the first C&W debut single to top the chart in 14 years. Killin' Time (#31 pop, #1 C&W, 1989) contained three other #1 C&W singles: "Killin' Time" (1989),

"Nobody's Home" (1989), and "Walkin' Away" (1990). It held the #1 spot on the C&W chart for eight months, sold over 3 million copies, and won four Academy of Country Music Awards. Black, who, unlike other country acts, toured with his studio band, also became a major concert attraction.

Put Yourself in My Shoes (#18 pop, #1 C&W, 1990) proved that Black was no fluke, with two #1 C&W hits, "Where Are You Now" (1991) and "Loving Blind" (1991). Black was named Best Male Vocalist of 1990 by the Country Music Association. He recorded a duet with legendary King of the Cowboys Roy Rogers, "Hold On Partner" (#42 C&W, 1991).

Black's marriage to Knots Landing star Lisa Hartman in 1991 and his messy break with manager Bill Ham in 1992 led to some speculation that Black was losing touch with his "roots." But the rueful, melancholy album The Hard Way (#8 pop, #2 C&W, 1992) proved otherwise. The following year's No Time to Kill included a hit duet with Wynonna Judd, "A Bad Goodbye" (#2 C&W, 1993) and backing vocals from Kenny Loggins and former Eagle Timothy B. Schmit. In 1994 Black released his fifth album, One Emotion (#8 C&W), which yielded several C&W Top 10 singles, including the #1 "A Good Run of Bad Luck."

Black followed up the next year with a holiday-themed album, Looking for Christmas, which reached only #25 on the C&W charts. The Greatest Hits (#2 C&W, 1996) returned Black to platinum status and included three new songs, including the chart-topping "Like the Rain" (1996). Nothin' but the Tailights (#4 C&W, 1997) was another hit but included only one charting single, "Still Holding On" (#11 C&W, 1997), a duet with Martina McBride. While there were no new albums forthcoming in 1998, Black was active, appearing on the Eagles tribute album, Common Thread, and the soundtrack of the animated film The Prince of Egypt. He returned with his own material on 1999's D'Ictricified.

Oct. 5, 1962, VA], gtr.) 2000—Live at the Greek (with Jimmy Page); A Tribute to a Work in Progress: Greatest Hits 1990-1999 (Musicmaker.com) (- Pipien) 2001—Lions (V2).

With members not much older than the trends they revived, the Black Crowes had the look (long hair, velvet flares, fur-trimmed vests, impossibly skinny physiques) and the bluesy, boozy, two-guitar rock sound of the early-'70s Rolling Stones and Faces. The Robinson brothers' father, Stan, was a one-time singer who had a pop hit in 1959 with "Boom-a-Dip-Dip." He discouraged his sons from becoming professional musicians, but by 1984 they had formed the band Mr. Crowe's Garden (named for a favorite childhood fairy tale). This group evolved into the Black Crowes, with Chns dropping out of college along the way. Their debut album, Shake Your Money Maker (#4, 1990), sold a million copies and won them Best New American Band in the ROLLING STONE readers and critics polls. In true album-rock throwback fashion, its singles were only minor hits: "Jealous Again" (#75, 1990), "She Talks to Angels" (#30, 1991), and a cover of Otis Redding's "Hard to Handle" (#26, 1991).

In March 1991 the Black Crowes were fired from their opening-act slot on ZZ Top's Miller Beer-sponsored tour after Chris Robinson, onstage in Atlanta, made sarcastic remarks about commercialism. That May the Crowes launched their own tour and three shows into it fired opening act Maggie's Dream, after hearing that band in a Miller Beer radio ad. Also in May, Chris Robinson was arrested for assault and disturbing the peace after a postshow argument with a female customer at a Denver convenience store. Before pleading no contest three months later (he got six months' probation and a $53 fine), he collapsed of malnutrition and exhaustion during a British tour. Upon his recovery, the Crowes played Moscow on the Monsters of Rock Tour of the Soviet Union.

With new guitarist Marc Ford (from L.A. band Burning Tree), the Crowes acted on their pro-marijuana rhetoric by playing the April 1992 Great Atlanta Pot Festival, staged by the National Organization to Reform Marijuana Laws (NORML). Two months later the band's second album (named for an antebellum hymnal) entered the Billboard pop albums chart at #1; again its singles were only minor hits: "Remedy" (#48, 1992) and "Thorn in My Pride" (#80, 1992). In February 1993 the band played a free show in Houston, with its own handpicked security, to make up for a show the previous October, at which, the band felt, security guards had roughed up fans. The next month the band ended a Louisville, Kentucky, show after one song, ostensibly because of a backstage fracas between its road crew and plainclothes narcotics officers. The band's security chief and merchandising supervisor were charged with assault and resisting arrest. The band's 1994 album, Amonica, reached #11, but again yielded no hit singles. Amonica's original cover, depicting a closeup of a woman's bikini underwear with pubic hair showing, was changed after some chains refused to carry the album.

The making of the band's 1996 release, Three Snakes and One Charm (#16), was fraught with tension. The group returned to Atlanta to record the effort but was distracted by a lawsuit brought by a former manager (the case was later thrown out of court). During the next year, guitarist

Ford was fired and original bassist Johnny Colt quit (he was replaced by Sven Pipien, a friend of the band's from Atlanta). A career-spanning box set, Sho' Nuff, came out in 1998. And in 1999, the group resurfaced on a new label, Columbia, and an album, By Your Side (#26), that was greeted as a return to rollicking form. The single "Kicking My Heart Around" reached #3. Later that year, the band joined former Led Zeppelin guitarist Jimmy Page for concerts at L.A.'s Greek Theatre, which were documented on the 2000 release Live at the Greek. The artists also toured to support the recording. On New Year's Eve 2001, Chris Robinson was in the news again, when he wed 21-year-old actress Kate Hudson, the daughter of actress Goldie Hawn and singer/songwriter Bill Hudson, who had starred as the groupie Penny Lane in director Cameron Crowe's autobiographical '70s rock saga, Almost Famous. The band's 2001 album, Lions, debuted in the Top 20.

Ginn as Poindexter Stewart: 1993—College Rock EP (SST).

Black Flag became America's premier hardcore punk band in the early '80s. With its uncompromising DIY ethic, constant low-budget touring, and angry, driving songs, the group provided the blueprint for subsequent postpunk bands.

Guitarist Greg Ginn formed the group in 1977, two years after he graduated from UCLA with a degree in economics. He and bassist Chuck Dukowski cofounded SST Records so they could get the group's music into the hands of its small but rabid audience. With its roster of other critically acclaimed bands, including Minutemen, Hüsker Dü, Sonic Youth, and Meat Puppets, SST became the most respected American indie of the '80s.

Black Flag's early songs were marked by Ginn's scorching rhythm and tangled lead guitar work, Dukowski's guttural bass playing, and a succession of wailing vocalists. The band's first single, "Wasted," reflected the nihilistic angst of Black Flag's suburban, middle-class, "party-hearty" surroundings, with a theme that popped up repeatedly in later songs such as "TV Party" (from Damaged) and "Annihilate This Week" (Loose Nut).

When singer Keith Morns left to form the Circle Jerks, Black Flag went through several vocalists before locking in with Henry Rollins, a Washington, DC, punk who had jumped onstage with the band during a New York performance. MCA refused to release the group's first full-length album, Damaged, but after Ginn released it himself on SST—to overwhelmingly favorable critical response—a bitter legal dispute ensued with MCA-distributed Unicorn Records. For two years Black Flag was forbidden to use its name or logo. When Unicorn went bankrupt, Ginn came out of the struggle vowing never to deal with other labels, especially the majors.

In its most prolific period—1984 to 1986—Black Flag released more than one LP per year, in addition to its continuous touring. In 1986 Ginn formed a side trio, Gone (which released three albums), and soon dissolved Black Flag. He has since focused on running SST, although he returned to music in 1993, releasing solo albums under his own name, the pseudonym Poindexter Stewart, and with a new version of Gone.

While it was Ginn who composed all of Black Flag's music and the majority of its lyrics, Rollins' career got the greatest boost from his former band's momentum. With the demise of Black Flag, Rollins immediately formed his own Rollins Band, taking Gone's Andrew Weiss and Sim Cain with him, while enlisting DC guitarist Chris Haskett. Soundman Theo Van Rock was credited as a full member. The Rollins Band recorded several albums and gained a wide following that intensified after its appearance on the 1991 Lollapalooza Tour and with the release of The End of Silence Weight was even nominated for a Grammy, and in 1997, Come In and Burn reached #89 on the Billboard Top 200. By the release of 2000's Get Some, Go Again, the original Rollins Band had moved on, replaced by the members of Mother Superior, an L.A.-based trio, which provided a more straight-ahead hard-rock canvas for Rollins' shouted vocals. In 1998, Rollins collaborated with Bone Thugs-N-Harmony, Flesh-N-Bone, Flea, and Tom Morello of Rage Against the Machine on a remake of the 1970 Edwin Starr hit "War" for the soundtrack to Small Soldiers.

Rollins remains equally busy as a spoken-word artist, releasing numerous spoken-word recordings and videos. He has written a number of books published by his own press, 2.13.61, which has released books by other authors, including Iggy Pop. Rollins is also a working actor, both narrating TV commercials (the Gap, Nike, GMC trucks) and winning roles in serious films alongside the likes of Al Pacino (Heat) or in lighter family fare (Jack Frost).

Ritchie Blackmore/Rainbow

Ritchie Blackmore (b. Apr. 14, 1945, Weston-super-Mare, Eng.), gtr.; Ronnie James Dio (b. Ronald Padavona, July 10, 1949, Portsmouth, NH), voc.; Gary Driscoll, drums; Craig Gruber, bass; Mickey Lee Soule, kybds.

Blackmore's Night, formed 1997: Blackmore, gtr., mandolin;

Candice Night, voc., pennywhistle.

1998—Shadow of the Moon (Edel) 1999—Under a Violet Moon (Platinum Entertainment).

Hard-rock guitarist Ritchie Blackmore began studying classical guitar at age 11, then switched to rock in his teens. He became a session player and worked with Screaming Lord Sutch before cofounding Deep Purple in 1968. Associates claim that Blackmore is often arrogant and belligerent, and after Purple had peaked, he left in 1975 amid rumors of disension. He founded his own band, made up mostly of members of the upstate New York band Elf (which had frequently opened for Deep Purple), and it was billed alternately as Rainbow or Ritchie Blackmore's Rainbow.

The frequently changing lineup included vocalists Ronnie James Dio (who later replaced Ozzy Osbourne in Black Sabbath and found success on his own) and Graham Bonnet (briefly a member of Deep Purple after singer Ian Gillan split in 1973), keyboardist Tony Carey (marginally successful in the mid-'80s both under his own name and as Planet P), and drummer Cozy Powell (formerly of the Jeff Beck Group and later with Sabbath, the Michael Schenker Band, and others. Ex-Deep Purple bassist Roger Glover joined Blackmore in 1979, and with vocalist Joe Lynn Turner and Blackmore he cowrote Rainbow's Top 40 hit "Stone Cold."

Rainbow dissolved two years later when Blackmore, Glover, and the other three members of the "classic" Purple lineup got back together. Turner, after releasing a solo album in 1985, joined Purple in 1990 but was replaced by Ian Gillan, whom he'd replaced in 1993. Shortly thereafter, Blackmore quit. A new Rainbow, which released a 1995 European album, toured the U.S. in 1997. By the decade's close, Blackmore was devoting his time to Blackmore's Night, a largely acoustic, medieval-style duo with vocalist Candice Night and various support casts. Shadow of the Moon features flute by Jethro Tull's Ian Anderson. The band has enjoyed great success in Japan and in New Age circles.

Black Oak Arkansas

Jim "Dandy" Mangrum (b. Mar. 30, 1948, Black Oak, AR), voc.; Ricky Reynolds (b. Oct. 29, 1948, Manilan, AR), gtr.; Harvey Jett, gtr.; Stan Knight (b. Feb. 12, 1949, Little Rock, AR), gtr.; Pat Daugherty (b. Nov. 11, 1947, Jonesboro, AR), bass; Wayne Evans, drums.

1969—The Knowbody Else (Stax) 1971—Black Oak Arkansas (Atco) 1972—Keep the Faith; If an Angel Came to See You, Would You Make Her Feel at Home? 1973—Raunch 'n' Roll/Live (—Evans; + Tommy Aldridge, drums); High on the Hog (Atlantic) 1974—Street Party (—Jett; + Jimmy Henderson [b. May 20, 1954, Jackson, MS, gtr.]) Hot and Nasty 1975—An't Life Grand; X-Rated (MCA) 1976—(numerous lineup changes) Balls of Fire; Live! Mutha (Atco); 10 Year Overnight Success (MCA) 1977—Race With the Devil (Capricorn); Best Of; I'd Rather Be Sailing 1980—(group disbands) 1984—(group reforms: Mangrum; Reynolds; + various lineups) 1986—The Black Attack Is Back (Heavy Metal America) 1999—(+ Daugherty, bass; + Rocky Athas, gtr.; + Johnnie Bolin, drums) The Wild Bunch (Dead Line/Cleopatras). Jim Dandy solo: 1984—Ready as Hell (Heavy Metal America).

Black Oak Arkansas was a Southern heavy-metal group whose boogie philosophy and long-haired, bare-chested frontman, Jim Dandy Mangrum, were briefly popular in the early to mid-'70s. All of the band's original members grew up in rural Arkansas near the small town of Black Oak. They were in a juvenile gang before becoming a band. (In a 1976 press release they boast of having stolen a P.A. system.) They toured the South as Knowbody Else and released one album on Stax before moving to L.A. in 1969 and changing their name to Black Oak Arkansas. They soon signed with Atlantic, the first of several labels for which they recorded.

With almost constant touring, they eventually built up an enthusiastic following composed mainly of young fans who appreciated the group's down-home Dixie boogie and quasi-mystical lyrics. In 1970 they made their national debut, but big-time success eluded them until High on the Hog (1973) and Raunch 'n' Roll/Live (1973) went gold. They also had a #25 hit with "Jim Dandy," which featured Dandy exchanging double entendres with a female singer, a sometime group member named Ruby Starr. By the mid-'70s the group was a huge draw on the U.S. concert circuit. The group sustained numerous personnel changes, and by 1977 Mangrum was the only original member of the band left. He later cited "despotic management" and the rigors of the road for driving the band apart. After recovering from a heart attack, Mangrum recorded a 1984 solo album with original Black Oak guitarist Ricky Reynolds. Several touring versions of the band existed in the '80s and '90s. Daugherty rejoined in time for Black Oak's 1999 studio effort.

Black Sabbath

Formed 1967, Birmingham, Eng.

Ozzy Osbourne (b. John Michael Osbourne, Dec. 3, 1948, Birmingham), voc.; Terry "Geezer" Butler (b. Terence Michael Joseph Butler, July 17, 1949, Birmingham), bass; Tony Iommi (b. Mixing equal parts bone-crushing volume, catatonic tempos, and ominous pronouncements of gloom and doom delivered in Ozzy Osbourne's keening voice, Black Sabbath was the heavy-metal king of the '70s. Despised by rock critics and ignored by radio programmers, the group sold over 8 million albums before Osbourne departed for a solo career in 1979 [see entry]. The band's original lineup reunited for a two-year tour in 1997.

The four original members, schoolmates from a working-class district of industrial Birmingham, first joined forces as the Polka Tulk Blues Company, a blues band. They quickly changed their name to Earth, then, in 1969, to Black Sabbath; the name came from the title of a song written by bassist Geezer Butler, a fan of occult novelist Dennis Wheatley. It may also have been an homage to a Boris Karloff film. The quartet's eponymously titled 1970 debut, recorded in two days, went to #8 in England and #23 in the U.S. A single, "Paranoid," released in advance of the album of the same name, reached #4 in the U.K. later that year; it was the group's only Top 20 hit.

The single didn't make the U.S. Top 40, but the Paranoid LP, issued in early 1971, eventually sold 4 million copies despite virtually no airplay. Beginning in December 1970 Sabbath toured the States relentlessly. Despite the band members' intense drug and alcohol abuse, the constant road work paid off, and by 1974 Black Sabbath was considered peerless among heavy-metal acts, its first five LPs all having sold at least a million copies apiece in America alone.

In spite of their name, the crosses erected onstage, and songs dealing with apocalypse, death, and destruction, the band members insisted their interest in the black arts was nothing more than innocuous curiosity (the sort that led Ozzy Osbourne to sit through eight showings of The Exorcist), and in time Black Sabbath's princes-of-darkness image faded. Eventually, so did its record sales. Aside from a platinum best-of We Sold Our Soul for Rock 'n' Roll (1976), not one of three LPs from 1975 to 1978 went gold. Osbourne, racked by drug use and excessive drinking, quit the band briefly in late 1977 (ex-Savoy Brown-Fleetwood Mac vocalist Dave Walker filled his shoes for some live dates). In January 1979 he was fired. Ronnie James Dio, formerly of Ritchie Blackmore's Rainbow, replaced Osbourne.

Although Dio could belt with the best of them, Sabbath would never be the same. Its first album with Dio, Heaven and Hell (1980), went platinum, its second, Mob Rules (1981), gold. But thereafter, the group's LPs sold fewer and fewer copies, as Black Sabbath went through one personnel change after another. Ill health forced Bill Ward out of the band in 1980; Carmine Appice's brother Vinnie took his place. Friction between Iommi and Dio led the singer to quit angrily in 1982; he took Appice with him to start his own band, Dio. Vocalists over the years have included Dave Donato; Deep Purple singer Ian Gillan; Glenn Hughes, another ex-member of Purple; Tony Martin, and Dio again.

By 1986's Seventh Star, only Iommi remained from the original lineup. He had to wince when Geezer Butler teamed up with the phenomenally successful Osbourne in 1988, though the bassist did return to the fold three years later. Despite bitterness expressed in the press between Osbourne and Iommi, the original foursome reunited in 1985 at the Live Aid concert in Philadelphia, and again in 1992, at the end of what was supposedly Osbourne's last tour. Throughout 1993 word had it that Osbourne, Iommi, Butler, and Ward would tour, but by year's end Osbourne had backed out, allegedly over money. The indefatigable Tony Iommi went right back to work with Butler, rehiring vocalist Tony Martin and adding former Rainbow drummer Rob Rondinelli. That lineup proved as unstable as the previous one, with drummers coming, going, and returning over the following years. Despite hiring Body Count's Ernie C to produce 1995's Forbidden (and inviting guest vocalist Ice-T to sing on a track), Black Sabbath seemed increasingly out of touch with the times, and at the end of the Forbidden Tour, the band unofficially went on hiatus.

But not for long, as Iommi, Butler, and Osbourne reunited to headline Ozzfest 1997. Ward was not invited (he was replaced by Faith No More's Mike Bordin), but he did participate in two shows in the band's hometown of Birmingham, England, in December 1997. The resulting live album, Reunion (#11, 1998), also featured two new studio tracks, including the single "Psycho Man." The album went platinum in the U.S., and the live version of "Iron Man" earned the band its first Grammy for Best Metal Performance—nearly 30 years after the song was originally released. The ensuing tour lasted two years and ended in December 1999. (Ward, who suffered a heart attack in May 1998 before the European tour kicked off, rejoined the group in December 1998; Appice sat in for him while he recuperated). Tony Iommi released his first solo album in 2000; a prestigious roster of guest singers (Osbourne, Billy Corgan, Henry Rollins, Dave Grohl) handled the vocals. Among metalheads, Iommi is something of a guitar god, due in part to the fact that he plays spectacularly despite having lost the tips of two right fingers in a welding accident at age 17. His hero was the great jazz guitarist Django Reinhardt, who also lost two fingers and yet continued to play. In mid-2001 it was announced that all original members were writing material for a new Black Sabbath album.

Black Star/Mos Def/Talib Kweli

Formed 1996, Brooklyn, NY

Mos Def (b. Dante Smith, Dec. 11, Brooklyn), voc.; Talib Kweli (b. Talib Kweli Green, Oct. 3, Brooklyn), voc.

1998—Mos Def & Talib Kweli Are Black Star (Rawkus).

Mos Def solo: 1999—Black on Both Sides (Rawkus).

Talib Kweli & Hi Tek: 2000—Reflection Eternal—Train of Thought (Rawkus).

During a time when the success of Sean Combs, Jay-Z, and Master P seemed to pull the curtain over socially conscious rap music, Black Star summoned the spirit of the Native Tongues movement and brought organic hip-hop back to the mainstream. Combining B-boy sensibility and African-American academics, the duo consisting of Mos Def and Talib Kweli began spreading its message of racial and social transcendentalism at the Lyncist Lounge—an underground, open-mike forum for unsigned MCs in New York.

Mos Def first presented his rhythmically precise flow onstage at the Lyncist Lounge in 1992, along with artists like Mobb Deep, Foxy Brown, and the Notorious B.I.G. Mos Def and Kweli also came together at the club, and after appearing individually on various compilations and 12-inch singles, formed Black Star—the name deriving from Marcus Garvey's Black Star Line of boat service to Africa. Their debut album, Mos Def & Talib Kweli Are Black Star (#53 pop, #13 R&B, 1998), was filled with poetry about self-determination and political injustice. In the ensuing two years, both Mos Def and Kweli received critical acclaim for their solo releases. In 2000, the two members of Black Star also founded the Hip-Hop for Respect Foundation (HHFRF), a nonprofit organization dedicated to motivating the entertainment industry to become more involved in philanthropy. To raise money for HHFRF, Mos Def and Kweli enlisted a roster of artists including RZA, De La Soul, Pras, and Rah Digga to create a maxi-single that paid tribute to the killing of West African immigrant Amadou Diallo, who was gunned down by four New York City police officers outside his home in the Bronx in 1999. At the end of 2000, Mos Def performed in Manhattan with his Jack Johnson side project, which featured Parliament-Funkadelic's Bernie Worrell and Living Colour's Doug Wimbish and Will Calhoun.

Although its lineup has changed often over a 27-year career ("Duckie" Simpson is the only constant), Black Uhuru has remained true to its fierce Rastafarian politics and haunting vocal harmonies. The group's most popular period coincided with Michael Rose's membership, when the vocal group was backed by Jamaica's finest instrumentalists, with songs made distinctive by "Puma" Jones' descant and melodies that suggest Hebrew cantillation.

The original (and mid-'90s) Uhuru (Swahili for "freedom") was formed by Duckie Simpson with Garth Dennis and Don Carlos. They played clubs around Jamaica but failed to attract much local attention despite their Top Cat single "Folk Songs." Dennis and Carlos quit soon after (Dennis to join the Wailing Souls), and Simpson brought Errol Nelson and Rose to Uhuru. Their next singles, "Natural Mystic" and "King Se Lassie," found their way to England in 1977, and U.K. distributor Count Shelly issued their first album there.

Nelson left the group to join the Jays, and Simpson and Rose recorded some singles as a duo. After cutting a couple of songs with producer Lee "Scratch" Perry, they teamed with drummer Sly Dunbar (an old friend of Rose) and his partner Robbie Shakespeare. Uhuru's "Observe Life" was the first single Sly and Robbie produced and the first issued on their Taxi label. Simpson and Rose were then joined by Sandra "Puma" Jones, a Southern-born American with a master's degree from Columbia University who had come to Jamaica as a social worker. Her only professional experience had been as a dancer and backup singer with Ras Michael and the Sons of Negus. With Sly and Robbie the trio recorded its best-known singles, "General Penitentiary," "Guess Who's Coming to Dinner," "Plastic Smile," "Abortion" (which was anti- and was banned in Jamaica), and "Shine Eye Gal." Showcase followed. After its release, New York City radio station WLIB sponsored Uhuru's first appearance outside Jamaica, a concert at Hunter College, and Island Records signed the group to its Mango subsidiary. Sinsemilla (Black Uhuru's American debut) and Red were recorded in Jamaica with Sly and Robbie and their Taxi All-Stars (Keith Richards added his guitar to the former).

Rose's move to New York at the time of 1982's Chill Out was reflected in the album's urban subject matter. Island tried to build on its success by remixing Anthem for American listeners. Although it won a Grammy for Best Reggae Album, Rose was unhappy with the band's direction and left soon afterward, he has remained active, releasing numerous singles and albums, including Proud (1990), Be Yourself (1996), and Bonanza (1999).

Junior Reid replaced Rose on Brutal, and dance-music specialist Arthur Baker joined Sly and Robbie in the production booth. Jones left before the recording of Positive (she died of cancer in 1990) and was briefly replaced by Janet Reid. In late 1987 original members Dennis and Carlos joined Simpson onstage during a Jamaican awards show. They decided to make this impromptu reunion permanent, recording the Grammy-nominated Now. Ice-T added contemporary hip-hop elements to "Tip of the Iceberg" on 1992's Iron Storm.

By 1995, old animosities (mostly over money) were reignited and Uhuru split yet again. But Dennis and Carlos continued to tour using the Black Uhuru name and in 1997 were taken to court by Simpson, who claimed the exclusive right to the Black Uhuru trademark. Simpson prevailed, and he premiered the latest version of Black Uhuru, with Jenifah Nyah Connally and Andrew Bees, on March 21, 1998, in Negril, Jamaica.

Rubén Blades

Born July 16, 1948, Panama City, Panama
1979—Bohemio y Poeta (Fania) 1980—Maestra Vida, Primera

Parte; Maestra Vida, Segunda Parte 1982—El Que la Hace la Paga 1984—Mucho Mejor; Buscando America (Elektra) 1985—Escenas 1986—Crossover Dreams; Doble Filo (Fania) 1987—Agua de Luna (Elektra) 1988—Antecedente; Nothing but the Truth 1990—Y Son del Solar . . . Live! 1991—Caminando (Sony Discos International) 1992—Amor y Control 1996—La Rosa de los Vientos 1999—Tiempos.

Panamanian singer Rubén Blades is as much a political activist as he is a singer and actor. As one of the premier performers of salsa music, he is an innovator who has broadened the genre's appeal far beyond its Latin-American base.

Son of a police officer and an actress mother, Blades was influenced as a child by his maternal grandmother, a Rosicrucian vegetarian who exposed him early to American films. Rock & roll also affected him; when he joined his brother's band in 1963, he sang in English. The Canal Zone riots of 1964, however, checked his romance with stateside culture, and he began delving into salsa, the Afro-Cuban music powered by horns and percussion. While playing with local bands, he worked on a law degree at the University of Panama, he took time off to make an album in New York City with Latin musician Pete Rodríguez but returned to finish his studies.

In 1974, after a stint as an attorney for the Bank of Panama, Blades moved to New York. Four years later he became the songwriter/vocalist for the Willie Colon Combo. The pair released Siembra, one of salsa's most popular albums, and for Fania, the major salsa label. Colon produced Blades' first records. In 1982 Blades formed his own band, Seis del Solar. Signing him as its first Latin artist, Elektra released Buscando America, an album that stirred controversy among salsa punts for its use of synthesizers and rock-inflected instrumentation. In addition, its lyrics, inspired by Blades' friend, Colombian author Gabriel García Márquez (One Hundred Years of Solitude), were somber, poetic, and political, a sharp departure from salsa's traditionally escapist themes. With 1985 came Escenas, featuring a duet with Linda Ronstadt, throughout the '80s Blades continued to record for both Fania and Elektra, for the latter releasing Nothing but the Truth, his English-language singing debut.

Blades had also been busy at other pursuits. Immediately after his Elektra debut, Blades enrolled at Harvard, where he earned a master's degree in international law. In 1985 he starred in the salsa film Crossover Dreams, drawing notice for his acting and, in the process, helping to raise the profile of salsa. Subsequent roles in forgettable fare (Critical Condition, Fatal Beauty) didn't seem to affect his acting career, and he regained credibility with television roles and parts in such films as Waiting for Salazar, The Milagro Beanfield War, Mo' Better Blues, and The Two Jakes. For the movies When the Mountains Tremble, Caminos Verdes, and Q&A, Blades composed scores.

All along, Blades remained active in politics. In 1992 he launched Papa Egoro, a Panamanian political party dedicated to social justice. The next year, he announced his temporary retirement from music and acting in order to pursue the Panamanian presidency in 1994, he lost that race

As the '90s progressed, Blades continued to expand artistically, starring in Paul Simon's 1998 Broadway musical The Capeman, receiving a Grammy (his third) for La Rosa de los Vientos, and in 1999 releasing Tiempos, considered by some critics to be his finest work.

Bobby "Blue" Bland is one of the patriarchs of modern soul singing, his distinctively grainy vocal style drawing on gospel and blues. Raised in Memphis, he joined a gospel ensemble, the Miniatures, in the late '40s. He later met guitarist B.B. King and joined the Beale Streeters, an informal group of Memphis blues musicians that included King, Johnny Ace, Roscoe Gordon, and Willie Nix. But not until 1954 (after working as King's chauffeur) did he land his first recording contract, when an executive of Duke Records heard him sing at a Houston talent show.

His first successful single, "It's My Life, Baby," was released in 1955. He played one-nighters around the country accompanied by his band, led by tenor saxophonist Bill Harvey and trumpeter/arranger Joe Scott. Members of the band, under the pseudonym Deadric Malone, wrote or cowrote most of Bland's material. His band was bigger and brassier than most current blues bands, and anticipated the rich sound of '60s soul music while harking back to big-band jazz.

Since 1957, when "Farther Up the Road" was a #5 R&B hit, Bland has had over 30 R&B Top 20 singles, including "I'll Take Care of You" (#2, 1959), "I Pity the Fool" (#1, 1961), "Don't Cry No More" (#2, 1961), "Turn On Your Love Light" (#2, 1961), and "That's the Way Love Is" (#1, 1963).

Most of Bland's records enjoyed only modest success in the pop market, only three singles ever made the pop Top 30. In the mid-'60s Bland adopted a slicker, more upbeat style, but his career stalled until Duke Records was taken over by ABC-Dunhill in 1972. Dunhill paired him with producer Steve Barri (the Four Tops), who guided Bland back to a bluesier vocal style while giving him contemporary material by Leon Russell and Gerry Goffin, as well as new material by Deadric Malone. His California Album and Dreamer introduced him to white audiences and proved to be the most popular LPs of his career.

While he never achieved the wide recognition of BB King (with whom he toured and collaborated on two LPs, Together and Together Again), he had a considerable influence on modern soul music. He continues to record and tour internationally. In 1992 he was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. In 1997 he was the recipient of the Recording Academy's coveted Lifetime Achievement Grammy. In 1998 he received a Lifetime Achievement Award from the Blues Foundation. He remains a vital performer.

Dave Alvin solo: 1987—Romeo's Escape (Epic) 1991—Blue Blvd (HighTone) 1993—Museum of Heart 1994—King of California 1996—Interstate City: Dave Alvin and the Guilty Men Live 1998—Blackjack David 2000—Public Domain—Songs From the Wild Land.

The Blasters led the early-'80s American roots music revival, performing styles from rockabilly and country to blues and R&B. Brothers Phil and Dave Alvin (whose father was a labor organizer) grew up in the L.A. suburb of Downey listening to the music of Big Joe Turner, T-Bone Walker, Jimmy Reed, and Elvis Presley. The brothers played in various bands and in 1979 they formed the Blasters, named after bluesman Jimmy McCracklin's Blues Blasters.

The group struggled for gigs around L.A. until championed in 1980 by the likes of X's John Doe, rockabilly pioneer "Wildman" Ray Campi, and the Go-Go's. (The Blasters would perform a similar service to East L.A.'s Los Lobos in the early '80s.) When the Blasters' first album, American Music, caused a buzz on the underground scene, the L.A. punk label Slash signed the band. The following year The Blasters reached #36 on the album chart. By then, the Alvins' longtime hero, New Orleans R&B saxophonist Lee Allen, was a full-time member (along with fellow saxman Steve Berlin), which he remained until his death in 1995.

After a live EP in 1982, the Blasters tried to branch out on the critically acclaimed Non Fiction, with songs that broke from the rockabilly mold and explored themes of working-class alienation. For Hard Line the Blasters attempted a commercial crossover, enlisting John Mellencamp, who wrote and produced one song ("Colored Lights"). Los Lobos' David Hidalgo, and Elvis Presley's former early backup singers, the Jordanaires. But the band's momentum was soon shaken after a combative performance in Montreal by the abrupt departure of songwriter/guitarist Dave Alvin, who immediately joined X [see entry]. (He had already appeared on an album by X's short-lived acoustic-country alter ego, the Knitters.) He was with X for two years, long enough to appear on the band's 1987 album. See How We Are (for which he wrote "4th of July"), before focusing on a solo career. Alvin's replacements in the Blasters included, among others, Hollywood Fats (until his death in 1987) and then Smokey Hormel (Tom Waits, Beck). In the years since, the band continued to tour sporadically while Phil Alvin returned to graduate school, where he took a master's degree in mathematics and artificial intelligence, later pursuing a Ph.D. in these subjects at UCLA.

By the mid-'80s Dave Alvin had become active in L.A.'s burgeoning spoken-word performance scene, appearing on three spoken-word compilation albums and eventually publishing two books of his poetry. For director Allison Anders' (Gas, Food, Lodging) first film, Border Radio, Dave made a cameo appearance and composed the soundtrack music, released by Enigma Records in 1987. (Some of that same music surfaced again in Oliver Stone's Wall Street.) Alvin also wrote and produced music for John Waters' Cry-Baby (1990).

Phil Alvin has also maintained an active, if less visible, solo career, beginning with Un "Sung Stories", a traditionalist album that features the very untraditionalist Sun Ra's Arkestra on three songs. With original bassist John Bazz, Phil enlisted the newest version of the Blasters for some tracks on his 1994 solo album and ensuing performances. (The entire original lineup did one reunion show at an L.A. benefit in the early '90s, but Dave has otherwise been steadfast in his refusal to rejoin—even on a part-time basis—the band he helped create.)

Dave Alvin's solo career began with 1987's Romeo's Escape, which mixed new compositions with older songs originally written for the Blasters and X. But it was with 1994's King of California and, later, Blackjack David that critics finally began praising Alvin's once-ragged vocals as much as his already acclaimed songwriting. In addition to releasing several solo albums, Dave joined the Pleasure Barons, a Who's Who of roots-oriented players (led by the late Country Dick Montana of the Beat Farmers) that at various times included John Doe, Mojo Nixon, and postpunk country singer Rosie Flores. (The band released one live recording.) He also has produced several albums, among them rockabilly legend Sonny Burgess' Tennessee Border (1992), three albums by the Derailers, and a 1994 Merle Haggard tribute, Tulare Dust, to which he also contributed a track. In 2000 Alvin reunited with Doe and Exene Cervenka in the Knitters for selected club shows, while continuing his solo career on the road and in 2001 Alvin won Best Traditional Folk Album for his Public Domain.

Carla Bley

Born Carla Borg, May 11, 1938, Oakland, CA
 1972—Escalator Over the Hill (JCOA) 1974—Tropic Appetites (Watt) 1975—13 and 3/4 1977—Dinner Music 1978—European Tour 1977 1979—Musique Mecanique 1981—Social Studies (ECM) 1982—Carla Bley Live! 1984—Heavy Heart (Watt) 1985—I Hate to Sing; Night-Glo 1988—Duets 1989—Fleur Carnivore 1991—The Very Big Carla Bley Band 1993—Go Together 1994—Big Band Theory 1995—Songs With Legs 1996—The Carla Bley Big Band Goes to Church 1998—Fancy Chamber Music 1999—Are We There Yet? 2000—Carla Bley 4 x 4.

Composer Carla Bley has experimented with free jazz, punk rock, big bands, orchestras, and forms and groupings of her own. But while many of her pieces are tricky and eccentric, they are rarely less than tuneful, and her gift for bittersweet parody has earned her companions with Kurt Weill. Bley plays keyboards and sax, but she is best known for her tunes, her arrangements, and the bands she has conducted.

The daughter of a piano teacher and choir director, she began composing at age nine. After she moved to New York in the late '50s, her works were performed by pianists George Russell and Paul Bley (whom she married) and later by vibraphonist Gary Burton (who has done an entire album of Bley's pieces entitled Dreams So Real) and Charlie Haden's Liberation Music Orchestra (which reunited in 1982). She began performing in 1964, when she and her second husband, trumpeter Michael Mantler, formed the Jazz Composers Orchestra, which featured Cecil Taylor, Pharoah Sanders, and others.

With lyricist Paul Haines, she began working on Escalator Over the Hill in 1968. To record it she assembled an unlikely assortment of musicians including Linda Ronstadt, Jack Bruce, John McLaughlin, Gato Barbieri, and Don Cherry and Charlie Haden from Ornette Coleman's quartet. Since then she has continued to use both jazz and rock musicians. Tropic Appetites featured singer Julie Tippetts (who as Julie Driscoll was part of Brian Auger's Tinnity). Dinner Music used R&B session players Stuff, and Nick Mason's Fictitious Sports (1981), which was released under Pink Floyd drummer Mason's name, used her band along with British progressive rockers, including Chns Spedding. In 1975, for six months, she played alongside Mick Taylor in the Jack Bruce Band. In 1977 she formed the Carla Bley Band, which has included NRBO pianist Terry Adams, Soft Machine bassist Hugh Hopper, Mothers of Invention keyboardist Don Preston, and Modern Lovers drummer D Sharpe. Bley has been active in the dissemination of new music, beginning in 1964, when she was a charter member of the Jazz Composers Guild (with Cecil Taylor, Sun Ra, and others), a cooperative to promote avant-garde music. In 1966 Bley and Mantler founded JCOA (Jazz Composers Orchestra Association) Records. Six years later, they began the New Music Distribution Service, which (until its demise in 1990) handled hundreds of small independent jazz, classical, and rock labels, including Bley and Mantler's own Watt Records. Mantler moved back to Europe in 1991, divesting himself of Watt Records; Karen Mantler, his daughter with Bley, was one of Watt's original recording artists. She now records for Virgin/EMI in addition to playing organ in her mother's band.

Through the '80s and '90s, Bley's output and workload increased. She contributed arrangements to Ballad of the Fallen and Dreamkeeper by Charlie Haden's Liberation Orchestra and three Hal Willner projects: Lost in the Stars, That's the Way I Feel Now, and Amacord Nino Rota. She also played on the Golden Palominos' Drunk With Passion and Vision of Excess. In addition to making duet recordings with bassist Steve Swallow (Duets, Go Together), Bley continued to experiment with ensembles of various sizes. In 1995, her Big Band Theory was nominated for a Grammy for Best Jazz Big Band Album; at the end of the '90s, she assembled 4 x 4, a group consisting of four horns and a four-piece rhythm section. As ever, her stylistic range remains virtually encyclopedic and her audience international.

Mary J. Blige

Born Mary Jane Blige, Jan. 11, 1971, Bronx, NY
 1992—What's the 411? (Uptown/MCA) 1993—What's the 411? The Remixes 1994—My Life (MCA) 1997—Share My World 1998—Tour 1999—Mary.

In 1992 Mary J. Blige became a top pop diva by appealing to older fans with her soul sensibility and maintaining youthful credibility with her hip-hop savvy. Blige was born in the Bronx but spent her early years in Savannah, Georgia, where she sang in a Pentecostal church. Her family moved to suburban Yonkers, New York, where Blige continued to sing. Her first demo (recorded at a karaoke studio in a shopping mall) was a version of Anita Baker's "Caught Up in the Rapture," which eventually got her signed by Andre Harrell to Uptown Records.

Blige's debut, What's the 411? (#6 pop, #1 R&B, 1992), mixed her affinity for classic soul (she covered Chaka Khan's "Sweet Thing") with a contemporary urban edge. The album includes cameos by rappers Grand Puba, Heavy D, C.L. Smooth, De La Soul's P.A. Pasemaster Mase, and EPMD's Erick Sermon. Blige first charted with "You Remind Me" (#29 pop, #1 R&B, 1992), from the film Strictly Business, but her debut album's single "Real Love" (#7 pop, #1 R&B, 1992) made Blige one of the biggest crossover artists of the year. It also helped earn her the tag "queen of hip-hop soul." In 1993 a remix album of What's the 411? was released and the "Sweet Thing" single peaked at #28 on the pop charts. Blige's 1994 album, My Life, reached #7 (#1 R&B) and yielded a #6 single, "Be Happy."

In 1995 Blige and the Wu-Tang Clan's Method Man (see Wu-Tang Clan entry) had a Grammy-winning smash hit with a medley of Ashford and Simpson songs, "I'll Be There for You/You're All I Need to Get By" (#3 pop, #1 R&B). The track was mixed by frequent Blige collaborator and budding hip-hop kingpin Sean Combs [see entry]. In 1996 Blige's "Not Gon' Cry" (#2 pop, #1 R&B) was featured in the film adaption of the Terry McMillan novel Waiting to Exhale. The single also appeared on Share My World (#1 pop, #1 R&B, 1997). The album yielded seven R&B hits, including "It's On" (#8), featuring R. Kelly, and found Blige's music stressing the soul side of her hip-hop/soul hybrid.

In 1999 Blige sang on the R&B hits of Kirk Franklin and George Michael and released Mary, her sixth and most pop-leaning album. Focusing less on hard times and heartache than its predecessors, the record features uplifting music and explores themes of spirituality and self-worth. It also sports a sweeping supporting cast, including everyone from Aretha Franklin and Babyface to Eric Clapton and Elton John. "All That I Can Say" (#6 R&B) was written and produced by hip-hop diva Lauryn Hill [see the Fugees entry]; "Sincenty" (#72 R&B), a track showcasing rappers Nas and DMX [see entries], was left off the album at the last minute. In interviews Blige has said that the projected second volume of Mary will be a more hip-hop-oriented affair.

Blind Faith

Formed 1969, London, Eng.

Steve Winwood (b. May 12, 1948, Birmingham, Eng.), kybds., gtr., voc.; Eric Clapton (b. Mar. 30, 1945, Ripley, Eng.), gtr., voc.; Ginger Baker (b. Peter Baker, Aug. 19, 1939, Lewisham, Eng.), drums; Rick Grech (b. Nov. 1, 1946, Bordeaux, Fr.; d. Mar. 17, 1990), bass, violin.
1969—Blind Faith (Atco).

Blind Faith's already famous personnel stayed together for one album and one arena-circuit tour before splitting up. Eric Clapton and Ginger Baker had been two thirds of Cream [see entry], and Steve Winwood had led (and would return to) Traffic [see entry]. Rick Grech was from Family [see entry], which had been considerably more popular in Britain than in the U.S. The first rock "supergroup" debuted before 100,000 fans in London's Hyde Park on June 7, 1969, and began a sold-out American tour in July before its one and only album had been released. The LP was recorded in such haste that side two consisted of just two songs, one of them a 15-minute jam entitled "Do What You Like." Nevertheless, Blind Faith did include two classics: Winwood's "Can't Find My Way Home" and Clapton's "Presence of the Lord." Its jacket, featuring a prepubescent nude girl, was deemed controversial in the U.S. and was replaced by a photograph of the band. (A later U.S. reissue bore the original cover.)

Clapton and Winwood went on to highly successful solo careers. Grech's post-Blind Faith résumé included Baker's Air Force, Traffic, the Crickets, and KGB, a mid-'70s supergroup (far less super than Blind Faith, however) that included Mike Bloomfield, Carmine Appice, and Barry Goldberg. Grech died in 1990 of a brain hemorrhage.

Formed 1992, Poway, CA

Tom Delonge (b. Dec. 13, 1975), voc., gtr.; Mark Hoppus (b. Markus Allen Hoppus, Mar. 15, 1972, Ridgecrest, CA), voc., bass; Scott Raynor, drums.

1993—Fly Swatter EP (Rapido) 1994—Buddha (Kung Fu)
1995—Cheshire Cat (Cargo) 1996—Wasting Time EP (Rapido)
1997—Dude Ranch (Cargo) 1998—Dick Lips EP (- Raynor; + Travis Barker [b. Travis Landon Barker, Nov. 14, 1975], drums)
1999—Enema of the State (MCA) 2000—The Mark, Tom and Travis Show 2001—Take Off Your Pants and Jacket.

Blink-182 continued the unexpected '90s journey of pop-punk into the mainstream. The trio emerged from Southern Californian skate-punk culture with a high-energy stage show heavy with slapstick and fart jokes. But like the slightly older Green Day, closer study revealed hook-filled rock songs obsessed with breakup and loneliness, even occasionally delving into such topics as teen suicide ("Adam's Song").

Mark Hoppus grew up in the California desert town of Ridgecrest before moving to Washington, DC, when his parents divorced. A fan of the Cure and the Descendents, Hoppus played bass in a high school garage band. Meanwhile, Tom Delonge grew up riding skateboards near San Diego and picked up his first guitar at church camp. They met in 1991 while Hoppus was attending college near San Diego, and with drummer Scott Raynor they later formed a band, at first simply called Blink. When an Irish band with the same name threatened a lawsuit, it was changed to Blink-182.

Early shows featured wet T-shirt and wet pants contests. The band slowly built a young, devoted following with indie recordings and an endless series of performances at various clubs and festivals. Major labels took notice in 1997 with the fast-selling indie release Dude Ranch (#67), which included the modern rock hit "Dammit (Growing Up)" (#11). Raynor was then fired from the band and replaced by Travis Barker (Aquabats). The band signed to MCA, releasing the Top 10 triple-platinum album Enema of the State (#9, 1999). It included the hits "All the Small Things" (#6) and "What's My Age Again" (#58). Band members also appeared briefly in the teen comedy American Pie. The band's next release was a live album, The Mark, Tom and Travis Show (#8, 2000), which yielded one single, "Man Overboard," that had only moderate success. Take Off Your Pants and Jacket (#1, 2001) took Blink-182 to the top of the album chart for the first time.

Formed 1968, England

Original lineup: Mick Abrahams (b. Apr. 7, 1943, Luton, Eng.), gtr., voc.; Jack Lancaster, saxes, flute; Andy Pyle, bass; Ron Berg, drums.

1969—Ahead Rings Out (A&M) 1970—Getting to This 1993—(lineup: Abrahams; Dave Lennox, kybds.; Graham Walker, drums; Mike Summerland, bass) Lies (Viceroy).

Mick Abrahams quit Jethro Tull [see entry] after one album to form Blodwyn Pig. A blues guitarist in the British style of Eric Clapton and Peter Green, he made Blodwyn Pig more blues-based than Jethro Tull. Like Ian Anderson, Jack Lancaster was influenced by Raahsaan Roland Kirk and played alto and soprano sax simultaneously a la Raahsaan. Pig's debut album was a distinctly British meeting of rock, blues, and jazz. Abrahams left the group after recording the second album (another U.K. Top 10), while the remaining members of Pig enlisted guitarist Peter Banks (formerly of Yes) and guitarist/vocalist Larry Wallis (later of UFO) to take his place. The second lineup never recorded, and they disbanded in December 1970.

In 1970 Abrahams formed Womnet, which never recorded; the following year he formed the Mick Abrahams Band, which continued in a blues vein with a hint of country. This group recorded two albums in 1971 and 1972. Disillusioned with the music business, Abrahams quit and drove a truck, all the while playing sessions and recording an instructional guitar record, Have Fun Learning Guitar With Mick Abrahams (1974). In 1974 Abrahams, Lancaster, and Pyle hooked up with former Jethro Tull drummer Clive Bunker in place of Ron Berg, but nothing came of it, and Blodwyn Pig broke up again. Lancaster went on to become a producer.

In 1988 Abrahams, also a financial consultant, once again re-formed Blodwyn Pig, with Bunker, Pyle, and Bruce Boardman, Bernie Hetherington, and Dick Heckstall-Smith (Graham Bond, John Mayall, Colosseum). Originally put together for a single appearance at a friend's club, this group, with a few changes, continued playing live into the '90s. They recorded All Said and Done, which was released only in Europe in 1991. Blodwyn Pig saw its next U.S. release in 1993. Pyle has put in time with Savoy Brown, the Kinks, and Chicken; Berg, too, was a member of Savoy Brown, as well as Network.

Deborah Harry (b. July 1, 1945, Miami, FL), voc.; Chris Stein (b. Jan. 5, 1950, Brooklyn, NY), gr., voc.; Billy O'Connor, drums; Fred Smith (b. Apr. 10, 1948, New York), bass.

1975—(– O'Connor; – Smith; + Clem Burke [b. Nov. 24, 1955, New York], drums; + Gary Valentine [b. Dec. 24], bass; + Jimmy Destri [b. Apr. 13, 1954], kybds.) 1976—Blondie (Private Stock) (– Valentine) 1977—Plastic Letters (+ Frank Infante, bass, gr.; + Nigel Harrison [b. Apr. 24, 1951, Stockport, Eng.], bass; Infante switched to guitar) (Chrysalis) 1978—Parallel Lines 1979—Eat to the Beat 1980—Autoamerican 1981—The Best of Blondie 1982—The Hunter (group disbands) 1994—The Platinum Collection (Chrysalis/EMI)

1995—Remixed Remade Remodeled 1998—(group re-forms: Harry; Stein; Burke; Destri; + Leigh Fox, bass; + Paul Carbonara, gr.) 1999—No Exit (Beyond); Live.
 Deborah Koo solo: 1981—KooKoo (Chrysalis) 1986—Rockbird (Geffen) 1989—Def, Dumb & Blonde (Sire) 1993—Debravation.
 Jimmy Destri solo: 1982—Heart on a Wall (Chrysalis).
 Checquered Past (Burke and Harrison with Steve Jones, others): 1984—Checquered Past (EMI, U.K.).

Blondie started as an ironic update of trashy '60s pop. By the end of the '70s it was far and away the most adventurous and commercially successful survivor of the New York punk scene, with three platinum albums (Parallel Lines, Eat to the Beat, and Autoamerican) and an international recognition factor for bleached-blond lead singer Deborah Harry, new wave's answer to Marilyn Monroe. Blondie's repertoire, most of it written by Harry and boyfriend Chris Stein, was always on the melodic side of punk and grew increasingly eclectic, trademarked mostly by Harry's deadpan delivery.

Born in Miami, Harry was adopted at age three months by Richard and Catherine Harry. She grew up in Hawthorne, New Jersey, and after graduating from high school moved to Manhattan. Harry joined a folk-rock band, the Wind in the Willows, which released one album for Capitol in 1968; she worked as a beautician, a Playboy bunny, and a barmaid at Max's Kansas City. In the mid-'70s she became the third lead singer of a glitter-rock band, the Stilettoes, which also included future Television bassist Fred Smith. Stein, a graduate of New York's School of Visual Arts, joined the band in October 1973, and he and Harry reshaped it, first as Angel and the Snakes, then as Blondie.

By 1975 the band was appearing regularly at CBGB, home of the burgeoning punk underground. Its first single, "X Offender," was independently produced by Richard Gottferrer and Marty Thau, who sold it to Private Stock. The label released Blondie's debut, also produced by Gottferrer, in December 1976. The group expanded its cult following to the West Coast with shows at L.A.'s Whisky-a-Go-Go in February 1977 and opened for Iggy Pop on a national tour. A few months later, they made their British concert debut. In July Gary Valentine (who wrote "[I'm Always Touched by Your] Presence Dear," a 1978 U.K. Top 10 hit) left the band to form his own trio, Gary Valentine and the Know, which broke up in spring 1980. In early 1978 Blondie's "Denis" hit #2 in the U.K.

After one album for Private Stock and some legal wrangling, Blondie signed with Chrysalis in October 1977. Mike Chapman, a veteran of glitter pop, produced Parallel Lines, which slowly made its way into the Top 10, breaking first in markets outside the U.S. The disco-style "Heart of Glass" hit #1 in April 1979 and established the group with a platinum album. Blondie maintained its popularity and dabbled in black-originated styles, collaborating with Eurodisco producer Giorgio Moroder for the American Gigolo soundtrack ("Call Me," #1, 1980), covering the reggae tune "The Tide Is High" (#1, 1980), and writing a rap song, "Rapture" (#1, 1981), on Autoamerican (#7, 1980). Harry also did the rounds as a celebrity, including an endorsement of Gloria Vanderbilt designer jeans in 1980.

As the group's success continued, there were reports that Stein and Harry were asserting more control; by 1981 some Blondie backing tracks were played by session musicians under Stein's direction. Burke produced the New York band Colors, and Destri released a solo album, Heart on a Wall, in 1982. In 1981 Harry released her solo KooKoo (#25). Produced under the direction of Chic's Bernard Edwards and Nile Rodgers, KooKoo went gold.

Harry also began acting, appearing off-Broadway in Tea-neck Tanzi: The Venus Flytrap (1983), in the films Union City (1979), Videodrome (1982), and John Waters' Hairspray (1988), in the television series Wiseguy, and in Showtime's Body Bags.

Early in 1982 Infante brought suit against the group, claiming they were out to destroy his career by excluding him from group meetings, rehearsals, and recording sessions. The suit was settled out of court and Infante remained in the band. However, by late 1982, following a disastrous tour (Blondie was never known as a great live act), the group quietly disbanded.

Harry and Stein's planned vacation from the music business stretched to a couple of years after he was felled by a rare genetic illness called pemphigus. By 1987, their romantic relationship had ended. Harry's comeback momentum was again stalled in the mid-'80s by legal problems with the group's label, Chrysalis. Rockbird (#97, 1986) drew critical raves, but neither it nor her subsequent releases have approached Blondie's in sales or acclaim, although she has had major hits in the U.K. ("French Kissin' in the U.S.A.," #8, 1986, and "I Want That Man," #13, 1989). She sang a duet with Iggy

Pop, "Well, Did You Evah!," on the AIDS benefit album Red Hot + Blue. Harry collaborated with New York underground group the Jazz Passengers and appeared on their 1996 album Individually Twisted (32 Records).

Harrison and Burke joined a group called Chequered Past, which included ex-Sex Pistol Steve Jones. Later Harrison supervised the music for several feature films, including Repo Man, before becoming an A&R man for Capitol and Interscope. In the early '90s Burke became one of the Romantics and worked as a session musician with the Plimsouls, Dramarama, and Mark Owen. Stein continued producing acts for his Animal Records label, and Destri began producing.

In 1998 Harry, Burke, Stein, and Destri reunited and recorded No Exit (#18, 1999), Blondie's seventh studio album. No Exit, which contains an appearance by rapper Coolio on the title cut and yielded the poppy "Maria" (#82), helped ring in a new generation of Blondie fans. In early 1999 the band launched a U.S. tour—its first in over 15 years—and became inspired to record a live album. Meanwhile, ex-members Infante and Harrison filed a lawsuit in the summer of 1998 over the use of the Blondie name and due royalties. In a separate legal case, Blondie sued former label EMI for breach of contract, claiming that EMI refused to pay the group proper royalties for albums recorded from 1977 to 1982—a payment plan agreed upon in 1996. These lawsuits remained unresolved as of this writing.

Bloodstone

Formed 1962, Kansas City, MO

Willis Draffen Jr. (b. Kansas City), voc., gtr.; Charles Love, voc., gtr.; Charles McCormick, bass, voc.; Harry Williams Jr. (b. Tupelo, MS), perc., voc.; Roger Durham (b. 1946; d. 1973), perc., voc.

1973—Natural High (London); Unreal (—Durham) 1974—I Need Time; Riddle of the Sphinx 1975—Train Ride to Hollywood 1976—Do You Wanna Do a Thing?; Lullaby of Broadway (Decca) 1979—Don't Stop (Tamla) 1981—(—McCormick; + Ron Wilson [b. Los Angeles, CA], kybds., voc.; + Ronald Bell [b. CA], perc., voc.) 1982—We Go a Long Way Back (T-Neck) 1985—Greatest Hits (CBS).

Bloodstone's pop music blended soul vocal harmonies with funk and Hendrix-inspired guitar flash. The five original members were high school classmates in Kansas City, where they formed an a cappella group, the Sinceres, in 1962. In 1968 they spent a year as a nightclub act in Las Vegas, then moved on to L.A. There they decided to learn to play instruments themselves. They reappeared as Bloodstone in 1971, with a succession of drummers (including Edward Summers, Darryl Clifton, and Melvin Webb) as associate members. On the advice of their manager, they moved to England, where in 1972 they teamed up with English producer Mike Vemon (John Mayall, Ten Years After, Savoy Brown) for their first five albums. Bloodstone's first single, "Natural High," went gold, reaching #4 on the R&B chart and #10 pop in 1973. The group followed it with a series of soul hits, including "Never Let You Go" (#7 R&B, 1973), "Outside Woman" (#34 pop, #2 R&B, 1974), "That's Not How It Goes" (#22 R&B, 1974), "My Little Lady" (#4 R&B, 1975), "Give Me Your Heart" (#18 R&B, 1975), and "Do You Wanna Do a Thing" (#19 R&B, 1976).

In 1975 Bloodstone produced and appeared in a feature movie entitled Train Ride to Hollywood for which it also wrote the soundtrack. Among the songs covered in this musical comedy were "Toot Toot Tootsie" and "As Time Goes By," and like all of the band's albums since Unreal, the soundtrack also contained versions of oldies like "Sh-Boom" and "Yakety Yak."

Al Kooper (b. Feb. 5, 1944, Brooklyn, NY), kybds., voc.; Steve Katz (b. May 9, 1945, New York), gtr., voc.; Fred Lipsius (b. Nov. 19, 1944, New York), alto sax, piano; Jim Fielder (b. Oct. 4, 1947, Denton, TX), bass; Bobby Colomby (b. Dec. 20, 1944, New York), drums; Dick Halligan (b. Aug. 29, 1943, Troy, NY), kybds., trombone, flute; Randy Brecker (b. Nov. 27, 1945, Philadelphia, PA), trumpet, fluegelhorn; Jerry Weiss (b. May 1, 1946, New York), trumpet, fluegelhorn.

New York], kybds.; —Doyle; + Jerry Fisher [b. 1943, Dekalb, TX], voc.) New Blood (—Katz; —Winfield; + Tom Malone, trumpet, fluegelhorn, trombone, saxes) 1973—No Sweat (—Fielder; —Soloff; —Marini; —Malone; + Ron McClure, bass; + Tony Klatka, trumpet; + Bill Tillman, saxes, flute, clarinet; + Jerry LaCroix, voc., sax, flute, harmonica) 1974—Mirror Image (—LaCroix; —Fisher; + Clayton-Thomas; + Joe Giordanni, trumpet, fluegelhorn) 1975—New City (—Wadenius; —McClure; —Giordanni; + Danny Trifan, bass; + Mike Stern, gtr.; + Forrest Buchtell, trumpet; + Don Alias, perc.) 1976—More Than Ever (—Colomby; —Alias; + Roy McCurdy, drums) 1977—Brand New Day (ABC) 1980—(lineup continues to fluctuate, with only Clayton-Thomas remaining) Nuclear Blues 1991—Live & Improvised (Columbia).

Founder Al Kooper conceived Blood, Sweat and Tears as an experiment in expanding the size and scope of the rock band with touches of jazz, blues, classical, and folk music. When Kooper was forced out of the band soon after its eclectic debut, Child Is Father to the Man, BS&T became increasingly identified as a "jazz-rock" group, although its music was essentially easy-listening R&B or rock with the addition of brass.

Kooper formed BS&T after leaving the Blues Project in 1967 [see entry]. The nucleus of the original band was Steve Katz, also of the Blues Project; Jim Fielder, who had played with the Mothers of Invention and Buffalo Springfield; and Bobby Colomby, who had drummed behind folksingers Odetta and Enc Andersen. The horn players were recruited from New York jazz and studio bands. Child Is Father featured songs by Harry Nilsson, Tim Buckley, Randy Newman, Gerry Goffin, and Carole King, along with Kooper originals and arrangements by Fred Lipsius for brass, strings, and studio effects. The band nearly broke up when Kooper, Randy Brecker, and Jerry Weiss left (Brecker to join the Thad Jones–Mel Lewis Band). Regrouping under Katz and Colomby, and fronted by David Clayton-Thomas (who had sung with a Canadian blues band, the Bossmen), BS&T entered a period of immense popularity. Blood, Sweat & Tears featured arrangements of music by French composer Erik Satie and jazz singer Billie Holiday, as well as by Laura Nyro, Steve Winwood, and others. It was the #1 album for seven weeks in 1969, sold over 3 million copies, and spawned three gold singles: "You've Made Me So Very Happy," "Spinning Wheel," and "And When I Die," each of which hit #2.

In 1970 the U.S. State Department sent the band on a goodwill tour of Yugoslavia, Romania, and Poland. Blood, Sweat & Tears 3 duplicated the Blood, Sweat & Tears mix of styles and was almost as popular. The album went to #1, and two singles, "Hi-De-Ho" and "Lucretia MacEvil," hit the Top 30. But interest in the group began to wane, and 4, which contained almost all original material, barely made the Top 10. In 1971 "Go Down Gamblin'" was its last hit. By the time Clayton-Thomas left for a solo career in 1972, BS&T's place on the charts had been filled by similarly styled bands such as Chicago, Chase, and Ides of March. Katz left the next year, first to join the short-lived American Flyer and then to an A&R position at Mercury Records.

BS&T became regulars in Las Vegas, with ever-changing personnel recruited largely from big bands like Maynard Ferguson's, Woody Herman's, and Doc Severinsen's. Vocalist Jerry LaCroix appeared between his tenures with Edgar Winter's White Trash and Rare Earth, while guitarist Mike Stern later played with Miles Davis' early-'80s band. Clayton-Thomas' return in 1974 briefly boosted BS&T's popularity, but Columbia dropped the group, and Colomby, the last original member, left in 1976. He continued to influence BS&T as producer of Brand New Day and, with Clayton-Thomas, as co-owner of the band's name and catalogue. He then moved on to a career in A&R for several labels, as well as TV reporting. Since 1975 the live act has been billed as Blood, Sweat and Tears Featuring David Clayton-Thomas.

Born Barry Moore, May 23, 1955, Newbridge, Ire.

1988—Luka Bloom (Mystery, U.K.) 1990—Riverside (Reprise)

1992—The Acoustic Motorbike 1994—Turf 1999—Salty Heaven (Shanachie).

The kid brother of Insh folk star Christy Moore, Barry Moore chose a professional alias that combined the surname of a character from James Joyce's Ulysses with a reference to the protagonist of a Suzanne Vega song. Likewise, the themes addressed in Luka Bloom's music, a Celtic-flavored folk-rock hybrid driven by the singer's vigorous "electro-acoustic" guitar work, have revealed a fascination with both Insh and American culture.

The youngest of six children, Bloom began touring European folk clubs in the mid-'70s. Chronic tendinitis eventually forced him to develop a guitar style that relied more on strumming than finger-picking. After recording three albums as Barry Moore (now out of print), playing briefly in a rock band called Red Square, and spending time in New York City, the singer moved to Washington, DC, in 1988, having renamed himself Luka Bloom. He soon landed a regular gig at a Greenwich Village pub as well, and spent several months commuting to New York once a week. That experience, and subsequent stints opening for Hothouse Flowers and the Pogues on their American tours, influenced the writing on his sparsely produced major-label debut album. Released in 1990, Riverside featured song titles like "Dreams in America" and "An Irishman in Chinatown." Bloom returned to his native country, where he wrote and recorded The Acoustic Motorbike, which includes a lyrical cover of New York-based rapper L.L. Cool J's "I Need Love." For Turf Bloom re-created the sound of his live performances by recording the album in a studio set up with a stage, P.A., and lights, and for four songs, even an audience (although no one was allowed to clap). In 1995, at the age of 40, Bloom began taking singing lessons, sessions he maintained for two years while he started work on Salty Heaven. Unlike his previous efforts, this album was lushly produced and featured string arrangements and keyboard playing by Rod Argent of the Zombies and Argent.

Michael Bloomfield

Born July 28, 1944, Chicago, IL; died Feb. 15, 1981, San Francisco, CA

1969—It's Not Killing Me; The Live Adventures of Mike Bloomfield and Al Kooper (with Al Kooper) 1973—Try It Before You Buy It; Trumvirate (with Mill Valley Session) (Polydor)

1977—If You Love These Blues, Play 'Em As You Please (Guitar Player); Analine (Takoma); Count Talent and the Originals (Clouds); Michael Bloomfield (Takoma) 1980—Between the Hard Place and the Ground 1981—Cruisin' for a Bruisin'; Living in the Fast Lane (Waterhouse) 1983—Bloomfield (Columbia)

1994—Don't Say That I Ain't Your Man!: Essential Blues 1964–1969 (Legacy).

As a teenager living on Chicago's North Shore, Michael Bloomfield ventured downtown to seek out the patriarchs of

Michael Bloomfield

Chicago blues—Muddy Waters, Albert King, and others—and learned their guitar techniques firsthand. Playing Chicago blues and folk clubs with singer Nick Gravenites and harmonica player Charlie Musselwhite in the early '60s, he attracted the attention of Paul Butterfield, whose band he joined in 1965 [see entry]. Bloomfield played electric guitar on Dylan's "Like a Rolling Stone" and later that year on Highway 61 Revisited.

He left the Butterfield band after recording a second album with them and formed the Electric Flag with Gravenites, but quit after their first album [see entry]. Thereafter he devoted himself mainly to studio work and solo ventures, including Super Session with Al Kooper and Trumvirate with John Hammond Jr. (John Paul Hammond) and Dr. John (Mac Rebennack). Bloomfield's last shot at stardom came in 1975 with KGB, an attempt by MCA Records to create a supergroup with Bloomfield, keyboardist Barry Goldberg, bassist Rick Grech, drummer Carmine Appice, and singer Ray Kennedy. After one album, Bloomfield abandoned the group and the corporate music world. He supported himself by scoring pornographic movies. His previous movie soundtrack credits included Medium Cool, Steelyard Blues, and Andy Warhol's Bad. In 1975 he returned to recording solo albums, releasing eight in the six years before his death from an accidental drug overdose. If You Love These Blues, Play 'Em As You Please, a blues guitar "sampler" produced by Guitar Player magazine, was nominated for a Grammy Award in 1977.

Kurtis Blow

Born Kurt Walker, Aug. 9, 1959, New York, NY
 1980—Kurtis Blow (Mercury) 1981—Deuce 1982—Tough
 1983—Party Time? 1984—Ego Trip 1985—America
 1986—Kingdom Blow 1988—Back by Popular Demand
 1994—The Best of Kurtis Blow.

Kurtis Blow's "The Breaks" (#87 pop, #4 R&B, 1980) was one of the first records to popularize rap outside the form's native New York City. A graduate of Fiorello H. LaGuardia High School of Music & Art and Performing Arts, Blow was a disco DJ before he made records. He started out working at a Harlem disco in 1976, blatantly copping rhymed lines from an originator of rap, DJ Hollywood (Anthony Holloway). Later he worked with one of the masters of instrumental track editing, Grandmaster Flash (Joseph Saddler). In 1979, while he was working on his first single, "Christmas Rappin'," the Sugar Hill Gang's "Rapper's Delight" rocketed up the charts; a Mercury A&R rep heard what Blow was up to and signed him to an initial two-single deal. "Christmas Rappin'" was released at the end of the year and became—with "Rapper's Delight" and the Fatback Band's "King Tim III"—one of the first rap records on the market. It sold almost 400,000 copies, "The Breaks" sold over 600,000 copies nationwide. By the end of 1980, Blow was performing around the country with his partner Davy D (David Reeves) at the turntables. In 1981 he toured Europe.

Blow's subsequent albums varied little. He was admired by a number of young rappers, including Run (Joe Simmons) of Run-D.M.C., who as a teenager had worked for Blow. Run-D.M.C. repaid him by doing a guest rap on Ego Trip's "8 Million Stones." By the time of 1988's Back by Popular Demand, Blow's lighthearted style was passé. In the early '90s, Blow began promoting and performing at rap shows featuring the genre's pioneers.

In 1995 he was hired as a DJ for an L.A. radio station, and in 1997 he produced a three-volume anthology for Rhino Records titled Kurtis Blow Presents the History of Rap, which gathered highlights of hip-hop's growth. The rapper also returned to the R&B singles chart in 1997 with a remake of "The Breaks" (#58 R&B) with newcomer Nadanuf. Blow gave acting a shot in the summer of 2000 and starred in Echo Park—a musical about rap music's formative years—at New York City's Apollo Theatre.

Blue Cheer

 Dickie Peterson (b. 1948, Grand Forks, ND), voc., bass; Paul Whaley, drums; Bruce "Leigh" Stephens, gtr.
 1968—Vincebus Eruptum (Philips); Outside Inside (– L. Stephens; + Randy Holden, gtr.) 1969—New! Improved! (– Whaley; – Holden; + Norman Mayell [b. 1942, Chicago, IL], drums; + Bruce Stephens [b. 1946], voc., gtr.; + Ralph Burns Kellogg, kybds.) Blue Cheer 1970—(– B. Stephens; + Gary Yoder, gtr.) The Original Human Beings 1971—Oh! Pleasant Hope (group disbanded) 1985—(group re-forms: Peterson; Whaley; + Tony Rainier, gtr.) 1986—Louder Than God: The Best of Blue Cheer (Rhino) 1989—The Beast Is Back (Megaforce) (– Whaley).

Blue Cheer appeared in spring 1968 with a thunderously loud remake of Eddie Cochran's "Summertime Blues" that many regard as the first true heavy-metal record. One of the first hard-rock power trios, the group was named for an especially high-quality strain of LSD. Its manager, Gut, was an ex-Hell's Angel.

After moving to San Francisco, the band was taken under the wing of an enthusiastic DJ, Abe "Voco" Kesh of underground KMPX-FM. He aired a three-song tape of Blue Cheer, leading to a contract with Philips Records. "Summertime Blues" reached #14 while the trio's first album, Vincebus Eruptum, hit #11 and remains something of a heavy-metal landmark. None of the group's subsequent five albums had nearly the same impact, however, and in 1971 Peterson, the lone original member left, broke up the band.

Leigh Stephens, who now raises Thoroughbreds in California, recorded two solo albums, another with the band Silver Metre, and two more with Bruce Stephens; he too has released a solo album, 1982's Watch That First Step. Peterson has twice put together new versions of Blue Cheer. In 1979 and 1985. The second attempt, which included Whaley and guitarist Tony Rainier, son of an original Blue Cheer roadie, produced an album, The Beast Is Back. With Peterson still at the helm but Whaley gone, Blue Cheer has put out two more LPs in Europe.

Blue Öyster Cult

 Eric Bloom (b. Dec. 1, 1944), gtr., voc.; Albert Bouchard (b. May 24, 1947, Watertown, NY), drums, voc.; Joe Bouchard (b. Nov. 9, 1948, Watertown), bass, voc.; Allen Lanier (b. June 25, 1946), kybds., synth., gtr.; Donald "Buck Dharma" Roeser (b. Nov. 12, 1947), lead gtr.
 1972—Blue Öyster Cult (Columbia) 1973—Tyranny and Mutation 1974—Secret Treaties 1975—On Your Feet or on Your Knees 1976—Agents of Fortune 1977—Spectres 1978—Some Enchanted Evening 1979—Mirrors 1980—Cultosaurus Erectus 1981—Fire of Unknown Origin (– A. Bouchard; + Rick Downey, drums) 1982—Extraterrestrial Live 1983—Revolution by Night 1985—(– Downey; + Tommy Zvoncheck, kybds.; + Jimmy Wilcox, drums) 1986—Club Ninja (– Lanier; – J. Bouchard; – Zvoncheck; – Wilcox; + Jon Rogers, bass) 1987—(+ Ron Riddle, drums) 1988—Imaginos 1990—Career of Evil: The Metal Years 1991—(– Riddle; + Chuck Bürgi, drums) 1994—Cult Classic (Herald) 1995—Workshop of the Telescopes (Columbia) (– Rogers; + Danny Miranda, bass; – Bürgi) 1997—(+ Bobby Rondinelli, drums) 1998—Heaven Forbid (CMC); Super Hits (Columbia) 2000—Don't Fear the Reaper: The Best Of.
 Buck Dharma solo: 1982—Flat Out (Portrait).

Semisatiric exponents of the high-decibel apocalypse, Blue Öyster Cult forged an unlikely alliance between teen tastes and critical appeal and were a major heavy-metal band from the mid-'70s through the '80s. The group goes back to 1967, when future rock critic R. Meltzer and future Cult producer Sandy Pearlman, students at the State University of New York at Stony Brook, decided to organize a band. Along with Allen Lanier, Donald Roeser, and Albert Bouchard, they formed Soft White Underbelly (a name the Cult still uses for club dates). Vocalist Meltzer was replaced by Les Bronstein, with whom they recorded one unreleased LP for Elektra, and several vocalists followed before Eric Bloom joined in 1969. With Bloom, the group's name changed to Oaxaca. By then, Bouchard's brother Joe had joined the band. They recorded another unreleased LP before changing the group's name from the Stalk-Forrest Group to Blue Oyster Cult.

They signed with Columbia in late 1971, and their debut album was released a few months later. There followed several years of extensive touring as Alice Cooper's opening act. Their show—featuring lasers, flash pots, and Buck Dharma's guitar solos—built a small but loyal following that paved the way for their 1976 commercial breakthrough with the platinum LP Agents of Fortune and its #12 hit single "(Don't Fear) the Reaper," a Buck Dharma composition. Agents also featured vocals and songwriting from Patti Smith, who was then Lanier's girlfriend. The Cult's performances have been captured on three live LPs: On Your Feet or on Your Knees (their second gold album), Some Enchanted Evening, and Extraterrestrial Live.

The band's dark imagery is symbolized by its logo, the ancient symbol of Cronos, the Titan god who ate his son the Grim Reaper. A good deal of BOC's success and image can be credited to its longtime manager and occasional songwriter and producer Pearlman. The group has also enjoyed the support of rock writers like Meltzer, who has also written songs for the band. In 1980 it coheadlined with Black Sabbath on the Black and Blue Tour.

Although "Burnin' for You" was a Top 40 hit and frequently aired video clip, the album it came from, Fire of Unknown Origin, was the group's last gold record. Subsequent studio albums—Revolution by Night, Club Ninja, and Imaginos—came less frequently and had decreasing commercial impact. Dropped by Columbia in 1987, the group disbanded, then promptly got back together in 1988—though by Cult Classics (which featured rerecorded versions of BOC's chestnuts) the Bouchard brothers had left. Anchored by the core of Bloom, Lanier, and Buck Dharma, BOC would spend a decade touring but unable to record a proper full-length studio album. The band finally secured a new US label and released Heaven Forbid, on which science-fiction author John Shirley contributed lyrics to several songs.

Blues Image

Formed 1966, Tampa, FL
Malcolm Jones (b. Cardiff, Wales), bass; Mike Pinera (b. Sep. 29, 1948, Tampa), gtr.; Joe Lala (b. Tampa), drums, perc.; Manuel Bertematti, drums.

1969—Blues Image (Atco) 1970—Open; Red, White, and Blues Image.

Tampa-based Blues Image was one of the first groups to experiment with Latin-tinged rock and is best remembered for its 1970 #4 hit, "Ride Captain Ride." Open contained Blues Image's lone smash hit. The quintet disbanded two years later, with some of the members joining Manna in 1972. Lead guitarist Mike Pinera's career itinerary took him to Iron Butterfly [see entry], Ramatam, the New Cactus Band, and Thee Image. After releasing solo albums in 1978 and 1979 Isia and Forever, he played behind Alice Cooper [see entry]. Conga player Joe Lala became an in-demand session player; among those he's backed are Stephen Stills in Manassas; Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young; Neil Young; Jackson Browne; Joe Walsh; and the Souther-Hillman Furay Band.

Blues Magoos

Ralph Scala (b. Dec. 12, 1947, IL), kybds., voc.; Ronnie Gilbert (b. Apr. 25, 1946, Bronx), bass, voc.; Peppy Castro (b. Emil Thielhelm, June 16, 1949), gtr., voc.; Geoff Daking (b. Dec. 8, 1947, DE), drums; Mike Esposito (b. 1943, DE), gtr.

1966—Psychedelic Lollipop (Mercury) 1967—Electric Comic Book Basic Blues Magoos (group disbands) 1969—(group reforms: Castro; Eric Kaz [b. 1946, Brooklyn, NY], kybds.; Roger Eaton, bass; Richie Dickon, perc.) Never Goin' Back to Georgia (ABC) 1970—(– Eaton; + various) Gulf Coast Bound 1992—Kaleidoscope Compendium: The Best of the Blues Magoos (Mercury).

A lightweight blues-rock band known to wear bell-bottoms trimmed with neon-filled plastic tubes, the Blues Magoos were popular at the height of psychedelia. They signed with Mercury in mid-1966 and released Psychedelic Lollipop (#21), which featured the gold single "We Ain't Got Nothin' Yet" (#5, 1967). They played the Fillmores and opened tours for Herman's Hermits and the Who. In 1969, a few months after they disbanded, Castro put together a halfhearted new version of the band (which included Eric Kaz) before joining the Broadway cast of Hair. He later played in the soft-rock group Barnaby Bye with brothers Billy and Bobby Alessi, as well as Wiggy Bits and Balance. The latter band had a #22 hit in 1981, "Breaking Away."

The Blues Project

Danny Kalb, gtr., voc.; Roy Blumenfeld, drums; Andy Kulberg (b. 1944, Buffalo, NY), bass, flute; Steve Katz (b. May 9, 1945,

New York), gtr., harmonica, voc.; Tommy Flanders, voc.; Al Kooper (b. Feb. 5, 1944, Brooklyn, NY), kybds., voc.
 1966—Live at the Cafe Au Go Go (Verve/Forecast) (- Flanders)
Projections 1967—Live at Town Hall (group disbands)
 1968—Planned Obsolescence 1969—Best of the Blues Project (group re-forms: Kalb; Blumenfeld; + Don Kretmar, bass, sax); Lazarus (Capitol) 1972—(+ Flanders; + David Cohen [b. 1942, Brooklyn], piano; + Bill Lussenden, gtr.) Blues Project (group disbands) 1973—[group re-forms: Kalb; Blumenfeld; Kulberg; Katz; Kooper] Reunion in Central Park (MCA) 1989—The Best of the Blues Project: "No Time Like the Right Time" (Rhino).

The Blues Project, along with the Paul Butterfield Blues Band, helped start the blues revival of the late '60s. The group was formed in early 1965 with folk, bluegrass, and pop musicians. Danny Kalb, formerly one of Dave Van Ronk's Ragtime Jug Stompers, and Roy Blumenfeld, a jazz fan, had discussed playing folk and country blues on electric instruments and drums. Blumenfeld brought in Andy Kulberg, who had studied modern jazz theory at the New York University School of Music, and Kalb rounded up guitarist Artie Traum and folksinger Tommy Flanders. Traum dropped out during rehearsals, and Steve Katz, who had played with the Ragtime Jug Stompers and Jim Kweskin's Even Dozen Jug Band, replaced him. The final addition was keyboardist Al Kooper (one of the Royal Teens), fresh from Bob Dylan's Highway 61 Revisited sessions. The group made its debut at Greenwich Village's Cafe Au Go Go in summer 1965, toured the East Coast, traveled to San Francisco in spring 1966, then played campus shows all the way back to New York.

They made their debut album in May 1966. Flanders then left for a solo career and recorded Moonstone Verve in 1969. The Project continued as a quintet, which did three open-air concerts in Central Park in the summer of 1966 and gigs as backup band for Chuck Berry.

Projections yielded the FM standbys "I Can't Keep From Crying" and the instrumental "Flute Thing" but the Blues Project's popularity was limited to New York and scattered college towns. Chief arranger and songwriter Kooper left the group after a second live album had been recorded in the summer of 1967. Kalb mysteriously disappeared, and the group soon disbanded. Katz joined Kooper in Blood, Sweat and Tears [see entry]; Kalb later returned to session work; and Kulberg and Blumenfeld went to California to form Seatrain. Planned Obsolescence was pieced together from recordings the Project had made as a quintet in 1967.

Kalb revived the Blues Project in 1971. Blumenfeld joined him and brought in Seatrain alumnus Kretmar. Lazarus sold no better than previous Project releases. The eponymously titled followup found Flanders again singing with the group, which now included pianist David Cohen, once of Country Joe and the Fish, and guitarist Bill Lussenden. The next year, Kooper reunited the original lineup—minus Flanders—for a concert in Central Park, documented on the live Reunion. There have been periodic reunion concerts since, continuing up into the early '90s. Kulberg and guitarist Chris Michie collaborated on soundtrack music for PBS documentaries, independent feature films, TV commercials, and such shows as Starksy and Hutch. Kulberg, who settled in San Francisco, also won a local drama critics award for his 1985 stage musical, The Dead End Kid. Kalb continues to live in New York City, where he performs sporadically and teaches guitar.

Blues Traveler

Formed 1987, Princeton, NJ

John Popper (b. Mar. 29, 1967, Cleveland, OH), voc., harmonica, Chandler Kinchla (b. May 29, 1969, Hamilton, Can.), gtr.; Brendan Hill (b. Mar. 27, 1970, London, Eng.), drums; Bobby Sheehan (b. June 12, 1968, NJ; d. Aug. 20, 1999, New Orleans, LA), bass.

1990—Blues Traveler (A&M) 1991—Travelers & Thieves 1993—Save His Soul 1994—four 1996—Live From the Fall 1997—Straight On Till Morning 1999—(+ Sheehan) 2000—(+ Tad Kinchla [b. Feb. 21, 1973, Princeton], bass; + Ben Wilson [b. Nov. 17, 1967, Chicago, IL], kybds.).

John Popper solo: 1999—Zygoté (A&M) 2001—Bridge.

Like Phish and Widespread Panic, Blues Traveler emerged in the early '90s as part of a new vanguard of jam bands in the tradition of the Grateful Dead and the Allman Brothers. Early on, the band's reputation was built on relentless touring, marathon sets, and the explosive harmonica solos of oversized frontman John Popper.

Blues Traveler came together in Princeton, where the Cleveland-born Popper formed the Blues Band with fellow high school students Brendan Hill, Bobby Sheehan, and Chan Kinchla. After graduation, the quartet moved to New York City, where they adopted the name Blues Traveler and became fixtures on the area club circuit. Famed concert promoter Bill Graham agreed to manage them and helped them secure a contract with A&M in 1989. Relentless touring helped push the band's self-titled debut to #136 in early 1991. Travelers & Thieves, released later that year and featuring a guest turn by Gregg Allman on the epic jam "Mountain Cry," went to #125.

In 1992, Popper founded the H.O.R.D.E. (Horizons of Rock Developing Everywhere) festival as a means to unite with like-minded, jam-oriented bands for outdoor summer shows. The H.O.R.D.E. fest would soon rival the alternative Lollapalooza festival, attracting an eclectic array of performers ranging from Beck to Neil Young. Blues Traveler's own touring momentum was slowed temporarily in 1992 when Popper was injured in a motorcycle accident, but they soon returned to the road with the frontman performing in a wheelchair.

After the success of Save His Soul (#72, 1993), A&M began to focus on the still-unconquered radio market. "Run-Around," the bouncy first single from four (#8, 1995), introduced Blues Traveler to the mainstream. The song went to #8, set up a second hit single ("Hook," which went to #23), and helped push sales of four over the 6-million mark. "Run-Around" also earned the band a Grammy in 1995 for Best Rock Performance by a Duo or Group with Vocal.

Wary of alienating its veteran fans, Blues Traveler chased four with Live From the Fall (#46, 1996), a double-disc live set that bypassed the two hits in favor of lengthy jams. Their next studio album, 1997's Straight On Till Morning, went to #11 but stalled at platinum.

In the summer of 1999, the then dangerously overweight Popper was hospitalized for chest pains and had to undergo emergency angioplasty. He survived, began a strict diet and exercise regimen, and was fit to tour behind his first solo album, Zygote, in the fall. He and the band were dealt a heavier blow, though, when Bobby Sheehan died of an accidental drug overdose that August. In the midst of their mourning, the remaining band members decided to carry on, with Chan Kinchla's younger brother Tad coming on board to play bass and a fifth member, Ben Wilson, joining on keyboards. While working on a new studio album for release in 2001, the band released a four-song, downloadable EP, Decisions of the Sky—A Traveler's Tale of Sun and Storm, on its Web site.

Blur

Formed 1989, Colchester, Eng.

Damon Albarn (b. May 23, 1968, London, Eng.), voc.; Graham Coxon (b. Mar. 12, 1969, Rinteln, Ger.), gtr.; Alex James (b. Nov. 21, 1968, Bournemouth, Eng.), bass; Dave Rowntree (b. May 8, 1964, Colchester), drums.

1991—Leisure (SBK/Food) 1993—Modern Life Is Rubbish

1994—Parklife 1995—The Great Escape

(Virgin/Food/Parlophone) 1997—Blur (Virgin) 1999—13 (Virgin/Food) 2000—Blur: The Best Of.

2000—The Golden D.

Early on, Blur epitomized the Brit-pop movement of the '90s. Frontman Damon Albarn's lyrics recalled the wry character sketches of the Kinks' Ray Davies, and the band affected an unabashedly British pop sound on its first four albums. By the end of the decade, however, Blur had refashioned itself in the mold of American bands Pavement and Sonic Youth.

Albarn, the son of an author/art professor and a theatrical stage designer, met guitarist Graham Coxon, a self-taught musician whose father played in an army band in school in Colchester in 1980. The pair collaborated on some demos before heading off to different art colleges—Albarn to study acting, Coxon to pursue art. They met up again at a party on behalf of Albarn's band Circus, which featured drummer Dave Rowntree, a classically trained percussionist. Coxon introduced Albarn to his school friend Alex James, and when Circus folded, the four began recording demos and performing club gigs in late 1989 under the name Seymour (after a J.D. Salinger character). EMI-distributed Food Records signed them in 1990, whereupon they changed their name to Blur and debuted with the Top 50 British single "She's So High." "There's No Other Way" fared even better, and Leisure, released a year later, went to #2 on the U.K. album chart. The followup, Modern Life Is Rubbish, peaked at #17, but 1994's chart-topping Parklife, featuring the hit "Girls and Boys," cemented Blur as British superstars and won the band four BRIT Awards, including Best Group and Best Album. By the time Blur released 1995's The Great Escape, it was locked in a battle of the bands with a new contender to the Brit-pop throne, working-class heroes Oasis. The U.K. press made front-page news out of each band's bid for #1 with their new singles, and Blur's "Country House" beat out Oasis' "Roll With It" by a narrow margin. It was the #1 Oasis album (What's the Story) Morning Glory, however, that "won" in the end—earning the Manchester band bragging rights as the biggest new band in the U.K. and significant stateside success, while The Great Escape stalled on the U.S. chart at #150.

Blur's U.S. breakthrough came in 1997 with "Song 2," a hard-rock blitzkrieg from its self-titled fifth album (#61, 1997). The song's exuberant "woo-hoo!" chorus made it a favorite at sporting events, though the band turned down the U.S. military's bid to use it at the unveiling of the new Stealth bomber. Blur was heavily informed by the group's love of American lo-fi rockers Pavement and bore little in common with the clean, theatrical pop sound on which it had built their British following. They went even further off the track with the William Orbit-produced 13 (#80, 1999), though the album kicked off with a lush ballad, "Tender." Albarn had recently split with girlfriend Justine Frischmann of Elastica, and many of 13's songs were mined from the ashes of their eight-year relationship.

Despite a handful of side projects (two lo-fi solo albums by Coxon, and Albarn's score [in collaboration with Michael Nyman] to the movie Ravenous), Blur came out of its first decade in one piece.

Conspicuously absent from many histories of rock & roll are the Bobbettes, the first female vocal group to have a #1 R&B hit and a pop Top 10 hit (#6), 1957's "Mr. Lee." What makes this feat even more noteworthy is that the young women were all between the ages of 11 and 14, and they not only sang but wrote it as well, along with 10 other songs they recorded.

The girls began singing together at Harlem amateur nights (including the famed Apollo Theatre) with three other girls under the name the Harlem Queens in 1955. Within two years, they had a manager, three fewer members, a new name, and their first hit. The song was written about one of their fifth-grade schoolteachers, Mr. Lee, whom they did not like, a fact made quite clear by their 1960 hit "I Shot Mr. Lee." Although their debut hit was their only pop Top 40 entry, they continued to record consistently through 1966, and sporadically through 1974. They also provided backup vocals for Clyde McPhatter, the Five Keys, and Ivory Joe Hunter. Although several later singles grazed the lower reaches of the chart—"Have Mercy, Baby" and "Dance With Me, Georgie"

(both 1960) and "I Don't Like It Like That. Part 1" (1961)—the quintet was no doubt hampered by frequently label-hopping (eight from 1957 to 1962). They sang backup on Johnny Thunder's #4 1962 hit "Loop De Loop" and "Love That Bomb" for the film Dr. Strangelove, but except for the enduring interest and respect of doo-wop aficionados, their later releases went unnoticed.

 Kurt Neumann: 2000—Shy Dog (Oarfin).

The title of BoDeans' debut album, Love & Hope & Sex & Dreams, alludes to the Rolling Stones song "Shattered," and to promote it, Llanas, Neumann, Griffin, and Hoffman went by the stage names Sammy, Beau, Bob, and Guy BoDean, à la the Ramones. Both bands have strongly influenced BoDeans' bracing guitar rock; the band's wistful pop sensibility, however, is evocative of Buddy Holly and the Everly Brothers. Chief songwriters Sam Llanas and Kurt Neumann, whose plangent harmonies are a key feature of the band's sound, met in high school in Waukesha, Wisconsin. In Milwaukee they hooked up with drummer Guy Hoffman, who left the band in 1987. Subsequent drummers have included Bo Conlon (on the road), Danny Gayol (on Black and White and the double-disc live set Joe Dirt Car), honorary BoDean Kenny Aronoff of John Mellencamp fame (on Home, Go Slow Down, and on the road), and Nick Kitsos (on Blend). Keyboardist Susan Julian also toured with the band briefly and appeared on Home.

Throughout most of their career, BoDeans won critical praise and amassed a loyal cult following. The group had a taste of Top 40 popularity when the producers of the hit television series Party of Five selected the catchy "Closer to Free," from Go Slow Down, as the show's theme song; the weekly exposure caused the tune to rise to #16 on the pop singles chart in 1996. The band hoped that history would repeat itself with its cover of the Beatles' "I've Just Seen a Face," the theme to Jennifer Love Hewitt's Party of Five spin-off, Time of Your Life (1997), but neither the series nor the song caught on.

While continuing to tour together as BoDeans, the founding members recorded side projects in the late '90s. Llanas formed the band Absinthe with former BoDeans drummer

Hoffman and guitarist/bassist Jim Eannelli; BoDeans drummer Kitsos appeared on Absinthe's self-released 1998 album as well. Oarfin Records released Neumann's solo disc, Shy Dog, in 2000.

Angela Bofill

Born 1954, New York, NY
 1978—Angie (GRP) 1979—Angel of the Night 1981—Something About You (Arista) 1983—Too Tough; Teaser 1988—Intuition (Capitol/EMI) 1993—Wanna Love Somebody (Jive) 1996—Love in Slow Motion (Cachet/Shanachie).

Pop-jazz singer Angela Bofill grew up in the Bronx, the daughter of a French-Cuban father (a former bandleader) and a Puerto Rican mother. At age 10 she began studying piano and viola, and a few years later began writing her own songs. In high school she sang in the All-City Chorus and after hours with a group called the Puerto Rican Supremes. By graduation day she was singing on the Latino club circuit with the Group, Ricardo Morrero's popular salsa band. Meanwhile she studied voice (she has a four-octave range) at the Hartford Conservatory and the Manhattan School of Music. She developed an interest in jazz through friendships with Herbie Hancock, Joe Zawinul, and Flora Purim. After earning her music degree she was hired by the Dance Theater of Harlem as a singer, dancer, composer, and arranger. She also wrote and performed a jazz suite premiered at the Brooklyn Academy of Music and sang with jazz masters Dizzy Gillespie and Cannonball Adderley and with the reggae group Inner Circle.

Through flutist Dave Valentin of the Group, she met Dave Grusin and Larry Rosen of GRP Records, who signed her to a seven-year contract in 1978. Her debut was a best-selling jazz album and a promising soul and pop debut "This Time I'll Be Sweeter" made #23 on the R&B singles charts. Her second album moved her closer to widespread popularity, charting at #10 R&B.

It was two years before she made another record. In the interim she settled a royalty dispute with GRP by transferring her contract to Anista. She also toured North America, South America, and Asia. Her 1981 album was produced by Narada Michael Walden. She produced half of Too Tough herself.

Tommy Bolin

Born 1951, Sioux City, IA; died Dec. 4, 1976, Miami, FL
 1975—Teaser (Nemperor) 1976—Private Eyes (Columbia) 1989—The Ultimate . . . (Geffen).

Guitarist/songwriter Tommy Bolin played in several hard-rock bands before dying of a drug overdose in 1976. Bolin dropped out of high school in Sioux City in 1968 and drifted to Denver. There he joined Zephyr, a quintet fronted by a woman singer named Candy Givens. Its eponymously titled debut album cracked the Top 50 in 1969. Next Bolin played in a group called Energy.

In 1971 Joe Walsh left the James Gang. Two years later, when his replacement, Dominic Troiano, quit the band, Walsh recommended Bolin. In addition to playing guitar, Bolin wrote much of the material on Bang (1973) and Miami (1974). Though best known for hard rock, he was a versatile musician, playing jazz-rock fusion on Billy Cobham's 1973 LP Spectrum. Bolin went from the James Gang to filling Ritchie Blackmore's shoes in Deep Purple in 1975. For the next two years he recorded both with that group (Come Taste the Band contained seven of his songs) and on his own: His first solo album, Teaser, came out in 1975. Bolin also appears on Deep Purple's Last Concert in Japan (a 1977 U.K. release) and When We Rock, We Rock, and When We Roll, We Roll (1978). After Purple disbanded in summer 1976, the guitarist returned to his solo career. Private Eyes came out shortly before Bolin's death. His body was found in a Miami hotel room.

Michael Bolton

Born Michael Bolotin, Feb. 26, 1953, New Haven, CT
 1983—Michael Bolton (Columbia) 1985—Everybody's Crazy
 1987—The Hunger 1989—Soul Provider 1991—Time, Love and Tenderness 1992—Timeless (The Classics)
 1993—The One Thing 1995—Greatest Hits 1985–1995
 1996—This Is the Time—The Christmas Album 1997—All That Matters 1998—My Secret Passion: The Arias (Sony Classical) 1999—Timeless (The Classics), vol. 2 (Columbia).

Not since Barry Manilow has a singer/songwriter at once inspired such enduring enthusiasm among fans and such chronic irritation among critics as Michael Bolton. Crooning love ballads to a largely female adult-contemporary audience, Bolton reached his pop peak in the late '80s and early '90s.

Bolton became infatuated with soul music at an early age, listening to records by Ray Charles and Marvin Gaye. He took up the saxophone at seven, began playing guitar at 11, and by his early teens was singing with the Nomads, a local bar band. The Nomads were signed to Epic Records when Bolton was 15 but were dropped after two singles. Two more record deals later—one as a solo artist, one with a hard-rock outfit called Blackjack—Bolton was still struggling, now with a wife and three children to support.

In 1982 he signed a solo deal with Columbia. Bolton's eponymously titled first album for the label peaked at #89 in 1983; that same year, though, Laura Branigan took a song he had cowritten, "How Am I Supposed to Live Without You," to #12. Soon afterward, superstars as diverse as Barbra Streisand, Kenny Rogers, and Kiss recorded Bolton's tunes, while he established relationships with such successful songwriters as Diane Warren, Eric Kaz, and Barry Mann and Cynthia Weil, who would later contribute and collaborate on material for Bolton's own albums. In 1987 the singer cracked pop's Top 20 with "That's What Love Is All About" (#19), cowritten by Kaz. The following year, Bolton reached #11 with a cover of Otis Redding's "(Sittin' on) The Dock of the Bay," which Redding's widow pronounced her favorite rendition of the song. Bolton's next album, Soul Provider, shot to #3, and included Bolton's own #1 version of Branigan's hit. In 1990 two other tracks, "How Can We Be Lovers" and "When I'm Back on My Feet Again," made #3 and #7 respectively. The next year's Time, Love and Tenderness topped the charts and generated hit singles with the title track (#7) and a #1 rendering of Percy Sledge's "When a Man Loves a Woman." The album's #4 single "Love Is a Wonderful Thing," which Bolton cowrote with Andrew Goldmark, caused some trouble for the singer. In 1994 a federal jury found that his song borrowed significantly from the Isley Brothers' 1966 composition of the same name, and ordered that the Isleys receive 66 percent of the single's royalties, an amount estimated at $5.4 million.

In 1992 Bolton released an album of covers, Timeless (The Classics), which followed its predecessor to #1 and produced a #11 single with the Bee Gees' "To Love Somebody." Also that year, the singer scored a #12 duet with saxophonist Kenny G, "Missing You Now." The One Thing peaked at #3 and yielded the #6 hit "Said I Loved You . . . But I Lied." By this time, Bolton had divorced and was regularly pictured in the tabloids with glamorous girlfriends, including actresses Ashley Judd and Nicolette Sheridan.

After releasing a greatest-hits compilation, Bolton sought unconventional collaborations, teaming up with both country star Wynonna (Judd's sister) and opera legend Plácido Domingo for duets on This Is the Time—The Christmas Album (#11, 1996). (He also embarked on a tour with Wynonna in 1998.) More changes followed in 1997 and 1998, amidst the release of two albums back-to-back, the pop All That Matters and the classical My Secret Passion: The Arias. The former included an Oscar-nominated, #1 Adult Contemporary hit "Go the Distance" (#24, 1997) from the Disney animated film Hercules, while the latter was a more surprising move. Inspired by performing a duet with Luciano Pavarotti at a benefit concert, Bolton studied opera for two years, an interest that culminated in a classical album that received lukewarm reviews.

In addition to Bolton's musical change of pace, 1997 saw the publication of the singer's children's book, The Secret of the Lost Kingdom, and a major change in physical appearance when he cut his trademark long blond hair short for the first time in 30 years. In 1999 Bolton returned to the tried and true with another album of covers, Timeless (The Classics), vol. 2, which includes a version of Marvin Gaye's "Sexual Healing."

Graham Bond

Born Oct. 28, 1937, Romford, Eng.; died May 8, 1974, London, Eng.

1965—The Sound of '65 (Columbia, U.K.) 1966—There's a Bond Between Us 1968—Mighty Graham Bond (Pulsar, U.K.); Love Is the Law Solid Bond (Warner Bros.) 1970—Solid Bond 1971—Holy Magick (Vertigo, U.K.) 1972—This Is Graham Bond (Philips, U.K.) 1974—We Put Our Magick on You (Mercury).

Along with Alexis Korner and John Mayall, Graham Bond was a pioneer of British R&B. Initially a jazz musician, Bond earned his early reputation in the late '50s playing alto sax with the Don Rendell Quintet. He left Rendell in 1962 to join Korner's R&B-rock band, Blues Incorporated. His discovery of the electric organ as a blues instrument led him to quit the group in 1963 and, with drummer Ginger Baker and bass player Jack Bruce, to form the Graham Bond Organisation, to which guitarist John McLaughlin was later added. When McLaughlin left the band in 1964 to join Brian Auger's Trinity, Bond replaced him with saxophonist Dick Heckstall-Smith, also late of Blues Incorporated. After Bruce's 1965 departure for Mayall's Blues Breakers, Bond employed a succession of bassists. In late summer Baker left, emerging three months later with Bruce and Eric Clapton in Cream. Shortly thereafter the Graham Bond Organisation collapsed. An album of the group's work was released in the U.K. in 1984.

Bond tried working as a solo act but was forced to take on session work. After reuniting with Ginger Baker in 1970 in Baker's short lived supergroup Air Force, Bond collaborated with lyricist Pete Brown on Two Heads Are Better Than One (1972).

He married British singer Diane Stewart, with whom he shared a fascination for the occult (he claimed to be the son of renowned Satanist Aleister Crowley). Together they formed Holy Magick. After that marriage failed, Bond formed Magus in 1973 with British folksinger Carolanne Pegg. The group broke up within the year because of Bond's financial mismanagement. He also had drug problems. After suffering a nervous breakdown, Bond spent a month in the hospital in 1973. At the time that he died, he had been trying to revive his career. His body was discovered under the wheels of a stationary train.

Gary "U.S." Bonds

Born Gary Anderson, June 6, 1939, Jacksonville, FL 1960—Dance Till Quarter to Three (Legrand); Twist Up Calypso 1961—Greatest Hits of Gary U.S. Bonds 1981—Dedication (EMI) 1982—On the Line Certified Soul (Rhino) 1990—Best of Gary U.S. Bonds.

An early-'60s hitmaker with a rough, expressive voice, Gary "U.S." Bonds had his career revived in 1981 by fan Bruce Springsteen. As a young street-corner doo-wop singer named Gary Anderson, Bonds caught the attention of Norfolk, Virginia, music business jack-of-all-trades Frank Guida, who signed him to his Legrand Records. With Guida as producer, they released some of the most exuberant R&B singles of the day. Their first national release in late 1960, "New Orleans," was credited by Guida to one "Gary U.S. Bonds"; Anderson was not consulted. When the single became a hit, Anderson found himself with a new identity. For the next two years Bonds had a string of hits—"School Is Out" (#5, 1961), "Dear Lady Twist" (#9, 1962), "Twist, Twist Senora" (#9, 1962)—that peaked with the May 1961 release of his #1 hit "Quarter to Three." Though Bonds recorded for Legrand through the mid-'60s, his last chart single of the decade was "Copy Cat" in 1962.

Bonds doggedly continued playing one-nighters as a lounge act until 1978, when Bruce Springsteen—of whom Bonds had never heard—showed up and jammed with him. Springsteen (who often climaxed his concerts with "Quarter to Three") later proposed making a comeback album. Dedication, produced by Springsteen's guitarist Steve Van Zandt, was a hit in 1981, and the Springsteen-penned "This Little Girl Is Mine" was a #11 single that same year—Bonds' first hit in nearly 20 years. A 45 produced by Springsteen and Van Zandt, "Out of Work," hit #21 in 1982. Bonds remains active on the touring circuit.

Bone Thugs-N-Harmony

Flesh-N-Bone solo: 1996—T.H.U.G.S.—Trues Humbly United Gatherin' Souls (Mo Thugs).

Krayzie Bone solo: 2000—Thug on Da Line (Loud).

Childhood friends (Steven and Stanley Howse are brothers) who grew up in Cleveland, Ohio's impoverished Northeast Side, the members of Bone Thugs-N-Harmony were self-professed teenage drug dealers who adopted their group identity—pairing nicknames with the surname Bone—in 1992 as an act of fraternal solidarity. After Layzie Bone was shot (nonfatally) in the head, the group decided to turn one of its chief leisure activities, rapping, into a new profession. In late 1993, the group took a Greyhound bus to L.A., and four months later won a telephone audition with former N.W.A member and Ruthless Records head Eazy-E. Nothing came of the call, but when the group learned that the rapper was performing in Cleveland, it returned home and met Eazy-E backstage after a show. Immediately impressed by the group's blend of street-corner harmonies and hardcore rap, he signed the act and produced its double-platinum debut 1994 EP, Creepin' on ah Come Up (#12 pop, #2 R&B). Eazy-E died of complications from AIDS the following March, and the following August Bone Thugs-N-Harmony's first full-length album E. 1999 Eternal (#1 pop, #1 R&B, 1995), was released, selling more than 4 million copies. Its Grammy-winning track, "Tha Crossroads" (#1 pop, #1 R&B, 1996), became an unintentional elegy for the group's mentor and the fastest-rising single since the Beatles' "Can't Buy Me Love" in 1964, reaching the top in two weeks. Subsequently, the group released The Art of War (#1 pop and R&B, 1997), a quadruple-platinum double disc, and BTNHResurrection (#2 pop, #1 R&B, 2000).

The Bongos

Formed 1980, Hoboken, NJ

Richard Barone (b. Oct. 1, 1960, Tampa, FL), gtr., voc.; Frank Giannini (b. Aug. 6, 1959, Morristown, NJ), drums, voc.; Rob Norris (b. Apr. 1, 1955, New York, NY), bass, voc.

1982—Drums Along the Hudson (PVC) (+ James Mastro [b. James Mastrodimos, Dec. 9, 1960, Springfield, OH], gtr., voc.) 1983—Numbers With Wings EP (RCA) 1985—Beat Hotel.

Richard Barone/James Mastro: 1983—Nuts and Bolts (Passport).

Richard Barone solo: 1987—Cool Blue Halo (Passport) 1990—Primal Dream 1993—Clouds Over Eden (Mesa) 1997—Between Heaven and Cello (Line, Ger.) 2000—The Big Three. James Mastro with the Health and Happiness Show: 1993—Tonic (Bar/None) 1995—Instant Living 1999—Sad and Sexy (Cropduster).

Hoboken, formally a sleepy Hudson port town best known as Frank Sinatra's birthplace, became a major pop center in the early '80s, spurred by the fresh, literate, guitar-based pop of the Bongos. Although they were formed after the breakup of an early Hoboken band, the Bongos were initially popular in England, where they released several singles and took part in a "New York in London" concert with the Bush Tetras, Raybeats, Fleshtones, and dB's, recorded and later released as Start Swimming.

Drums Along the Hudson, a compilation of their British singles, was released to rapturous reviews. James Mastro, who had played in Richard Lloyd's post-Television band, was added to flesh out the live sound and stayed on. A 1982 tour with the B-52's brought them to the attention of RCA, who released an EP, Numbers With Wings, and Beat Hotel, but the records fizzled commercially. Mastro departed and was briefly replaced by ex-Voidoid Ivan Julian before the band called it quits.

Barone recorded the live Cool Blue Halo (1987), trying out a cello-based chamber-pop sound. In Primal Dream (1990) and Clouds Over Eden (1993) he expanded that sound in a studio context. He continues to record for a German label. James Mastro also used strings in his first solo project, Strange Cave. In 1991 he formed the Health and Happiness Show (named after a Hank Williams radio program) with former Feelies and Richard Lloyd drummer Vincent Denunzio. The group has released three albums of neo-rootsy rock. In 1992 Razor & Tie reissued the Bongos' catalogue.

Bon Jovi/Jon Bon Jovi

Formed 1983, New Jersey

Jon Bon Jovi (b. John Francis Bongiovi Jr., Mar. 2, 1962, Perth Amboy, NJ), voc.; Richie Sambora (b. Richard Stephen Sambora, July 11, 1959, Perth Amboy), gtr.; David Bryan (b. David Bryan Rashbaum, Feb. 7, 1962, Edison, NJ), kybds.; Alec John Such (b. Nov. 14, 1956, Yonkers, NY), bass; Tico Torres (b. Hector Torres, Oct. 7, 1953, New York, NY), drums.

David Bryan solo: 1992—Netherworld (Moonstone) 2000—Lunar Eclipse (Rounder).

Like an American Def Leppard, Bon Jovi used good looks and good hooks, toned-down aggression, and pumped-up production to forge the pop-metal alloy that made it one of the dominant mainstream rock bands of the late '80s.

As a working-class teenager, John Bongiovi showed little interest in school, preferring to sing with his friend David Rashbaum in local bands. Cousin Tony Bongiovi, owner of New York City's Power Station recording studio, let John sweep floors there and record demos with such musicians as Aldo Nova and members of Bruce Springsteen's E Street Band. The nucleus of the Bon Jovi band played clubs to support local radio play for one demo, "Runaway." PolyGram won a record label bidding war (reportedly signing only John Bongiovi, with the rest of the band as his employees) and had Bongiovi de-ethnicize the spelling of his last name (Rashbaum dropped his surname, too). After seeing Bon Jovi at a New Jersey club, Sambora auditioned and replaced Dave Sabo (later of Skid Row).

Bon Jovi's self-titled debut album (#43, 1984) yielded hits in "Runaway" (#39, 1984) and "She Don't Know Me" (#48, 1984). Tony Bongiovi then sued the band, claiming he had helped develop its sound; Jon called his cousin's influence "slim to none" but settled out of court. 7800° Fahrenheit (#37, 1985) went gold, with minor hit singles in "Only Lonely" (#54, 1985) and "In and Out of Love" (#69, 1985).

Bon Jovi then made two crucial marketing moves: bringing in composer Desmond Child (former leader of the '70s New York club band Rouge, he also wrote for Aerosmith, Cher, and Kiss) as a song doctor, and basing the next album's content on the opinions of New York and New Jersey teenagers for whom they played tapes of over 30 possible songs. The resulting selections formed Slippery When Wet (#1, 1986), which sold over 12 million copies, with the help of straightforward performance videos that showcased the videogenic band. Hit singles included "You Give Love a Bad Name" (#1, 1986), the anthemic "Livin' on a Prayer" (#1, 1986)—both of which Child cowrote—and “Wanted Dead or Alive” (#7, 1987).

The Slippery formula was followed for New Jersey (#1, 1988), which sold over 7 million copies and contained the hits “Bad Medicine” (#1, 1988), “Born to Be My Baby” (#3, 1988), “I’ll Be There for You” (#1, 1989), “Lay Your Hands on Me” (#7, 1989), and “Living in Sin” (#9, 1989). In the midst of a 1989 tour Jon Bon Jovi married his high school sweetheart Dorothea Hurley in Las Vegas (they have two children). Sambora went out with Cher for a while, and Bon Jovi backed her on some tracks of her 1989 Heart of Stone album. In 1994 Sambora married actress Heather Locklear. Later in 1993 Bon Jovi played the Soviet Union in the Moscow Music Peace Festival—arranged as part of a community-service sentence on Bon Jovi’s manager Doc McGhee, who in 1988 had pleaded guilty to drug-smuggling charges from a 1982 arrest.

After 18 months of touring, the band members went separate ways. Jon Bon Jovi’s Blaze of Glory (#3, 1990)—for the movie soundtrack of the Western Young Guns II (in which he had a bit part), recorded with Jeff Beck, Elton John, Little Richard, and others—yielded hits in the title track (#1, 1990) and “Miracle” (#12, 1990) and earned Oscar and Grammy nominations. Bon Jovi ended a year of breakup rumors with a Tokyo concert on December 31, 1991. The band then recorded Keep the Faith (#5, 1992), which had hit singles in the title track (#27, 1993) and “Bed of Roses” (#10, 1993). Bon Jovi’s 1994 anthology, Cross Road (#8), yielded the hit single “Always” (#4, 1994).

In 1995 the band released These Days (#9), which yielded one Top 40 hit, “This Ain’t a Love Song” (#14). After a full-scale world tour, the band went on hiatus. Jon Bon Jovi took a role in the 1995 film Moonlight and Valentino (and continued to act throughout the ‘90s, also appearing in Ed Burns’ No Looking Back and the World War II submarine adventure U-571). He also released his first official, nonsoundtrack solo album, Destination Anywhere (#31, 1997). In 1998 Sambora released his second solo album, Undiscovered Soul. The band regrouped in 1999 to record a track, “Real Life,” for the EdTV soundtrack, and the following year released Crush (#9, 2000), with the hit single “It’s My Life” (#33, 2000).

Karla Bonoff

Born Dec. 27, 1952, Los Angeles, CA
 1977—Karla Bonoff (Columbia) 1979—Restless Nights
 1981—Wild Heart of the Young 1988—New World (Gold Castle) 1999—All My Life: The Best of Karla Bonoff (Legacy).

Songwriter Karla Bonoff has written some of Linda Ronstadt’s most effective ballads, including “Someone to Lay Down Beside Me.” Bonoff began playing Monday-night hoots at the Troubadour folk club near her family’s West L.A. home when she was 16. After briefly attending UCLA in the late ‘60s, she was part of Bryndle, a short-lived group that included Wendy Waldman and Andrew Gold. The band recorded an unreleased album for A&M. A few years later, Bonoff was introduced to Ronstadt by Bryndle’s bassist (and longtime Bonoff associate) Kenny Edwards. Ronstadt included “Lose Again,” “Someone to Lay Down Beside Me,” and “If He’s Ever Near” on her album Hasten Down the Wind. Bonoff’s first solo album was released in late 1977. It sold respectably, but she was mercilessly compared to Ronstadt, and she took two years to assemble a second album.

Wild Heart of the Young yielded a Top 20 hit in “Personally” (#19, 1982), but Bonoff then retreated behind the scenes and focused on composing. Her songs were recorded by Bonnie Raitt and Nicolette Larson; Bonoff briefly returned to recording to contribute tracks for the ‘80s films About Last Night... and Footloose. In 1990 she wrote three songs for Ronstadt’s Cry Like a Rainstorm, Howl Like the Wind, one of them, “All My Life,” won Ronstadt and Aaron Neville a Grammy for Best Pop Vocal Duo. In 1993 Wynonna Judd topped the country charts with a recording of Bonoff’s “Tell Me Why” (for which Bonoff also played guitar and sang backup). The following year Bonoff contributed two songs to the soundtrack of the film 8 Seconds. In 1995, 25 years after the band’s ill-fated association with A&M, a rekindled Bryndle released its self-titled debut album. Bonoff continues to perform with the band as well as on her own.

The Bonzo Dog Band

Roger Ruskin Spear (b. June 29, 1943, Wormwood Scrubbs, Eng.), kazoo, Jew’s harp, various other musical and nonmusical toys; Rodney Slater (b. Nov. 8, 1944, Lincolnshire, Eng.), saxes; Vivian Stanshall (b. Mar. 21, 1943, Shillingford, Eng.; d. Mar. 5, 1995, London), voc., trumpet, ukulele; Neil Innes (b. Martin Stafford Ash, Feb. 8, 1942, Bridgewater, Eng.), perc. 1967—Gorilla (Liberty) 1968—(- Bohay-Nowell; - Spoons; + Dennis Cowan [b. May 6, 1947, London], bass) Urban Spaceman 1969—Tadpoles 1970—Keynsham (United Artists) (group disbands) 1971—(group re-forms: Stanshall; Innes; Cowan; + Bubs White, gtr.; + Andy Roberts, gtr., fiddle; + Dave Richards, bass; + Dick Parry, flute; + Hughie Flint [b. Mar. 15, 1942, Eng.], drums) 1972—Let’s Make Up and Be Friendly 1990—Best of the Bonzo Dog Band (Rhino); Bestiality of the Bonzo Dog Doo-Dah Band (Liberty).

Originally the Bonzo Dog Dada Band, the group was the brainchild of art-college classmates Roger Spear and Rodney Slater, and its express purpose was to do to music—especially the jazz and popular music of the ‘20s and ‘30s—what Dadaists Marcel Duchamp and Tristan Tzara had respectively done to art and poetry: give it a good kick in the pants. Early versions of the group contained about 30 members, mostly fellow art students. By the time they began performing in pubs in 1965—the Dada in their name changed to Doo-Dah—they had been reduced to fewer than a dozen. Within a year they were playing clubs and had broadened their act to include parodies of musical styles, surrealist sight gags, and comic skits in the punning, non-sequitur style of the popular British TV comedy series The Goon

Show. Their stage setup was cluttered with Spear's collection of useless gadgets, machines, mannequins, and robots.

They cut two singles for Parlophone before signing with Liberty in 1967. Gorilla included gag advertisements and radio interviews sandwiched between parodies of Prohibition-era jazz, Tony Bennett, Rodgers and Hammerstein, and Elvis Presley (most of the material written by Viv Stanshall or Neil Innes). It was Innes' interest in electronic music, rock, and drugs that lent subsequent LPs the psychedelic touches epitomized by "I'm the Urban Spaceman," a Top 5 1968 British hit written by Innes and produced by one Apollo C. Vermouth, a.k.a. Paul McCartney. The Bonzos appeared in Magical Mystery Tour, singing a Presley takeoff titled "Death Cab for Cutie."

Despite growing popularity, the Bonzos broke up in 1970. Larry Smith, Vernon Bohay-Nowell, and Sam Spoons joined Bob Kerr's Whoopee Band, an outfit similar to the early Bonzos. Slater quit show business to become a government social worker. Innes and Cowan formed a group called World and made an album called Lucky Planet before Innes briefly joined McGuinness Flint. Stanshall, with Dennis Cowan, Spear, and former Bonzo roadie "Borneo" Fred Munt (as percussionist and saxophonist), formed the Big Grunt. Spear left to put together the Kinetic Wardrobe, in which he was backed by a band of robots. He toured Britain and the Continent opening for the Who in the early '70s. Stanshall led several other groups—the Human Beans, Gerry Atnc and His Aging Orchestra, Viv and His Gargantuan Chums—boasting Eric Clapton and Keith Moon and John Entwistle of the Who as sidemen on occasional singles.

In 1971 Stanshall, Innes, and Cowan revived the Bonzo Dog Band—or at least the name—for one album, Let's Make Up and Be Friendly. In spite of contributions from Smith and Spear, old Bonzo fans did not take well to the new band, which ultimately split up. Spear returned to his Kinetic Wardrobe. Smith toured twice in 1974, supporting Elton John and Eric Clapton. Innes has released solo albums (including 1973's How Sweet to Be an Idiot) and worked primarily as a composer for British television, most notably Monty Python's Flying Circus and Rutland Weekend Television with Python's Eric Idle. In 1977 he and Idle wrote, directed, and performed in The Rutles, a television special spoofing the Beatles. Innes played the John Lennon character, Ron Nasty.

Stanshall's voice graced a number of commercials. He also announced on Mike Oldfield's Tubular Bells, David Bowie's Peter and the Wolf, and his own BBC show, Viv Stanshall's Radio Flashes. He released several solo albums and contributed lyrics to Steve Winwood's first two solo LPs. In 1991 he staged a show, Rawlinson Dogends, at London's Bloomsbury Theatre. Included in the backing band were ex-Bonzos Spear and Slater. Bonzo's final single, recorded during a one-off 1987 reunion, was finally released a year later. Stanshall died in a fire at his London home in 1995.

James Booker

Born Dec. 17, 1939, New Orleans, LA; died Nov. 8, 1983, New Orleans

1976—Junco Partners (Island, U.K.) 1981—New Orleans Piano Wizard: Live! (Rounder) 1982—Classified Resurrection of the Bayou Maharajah; Spiders on the Keys.

Although James Booker had only one hit, his keyboards on hits by Joe Tex, Fats Domino, Bobby Bland, Lloyd Price, and Junior Parker and his unpredictable temperament made him a New Orleans legend. A child piano prodigy, the son of a minister and brother of gospel singer Betty Jean Booker, he made his first recordings for Imperial Records, working with Dave Bartholomew, when he was 14. He also recorded for the Ace and Duke labels and toured with Joe Tex, Shirley and Lee, Huey Smith's Clowns (impersonating the road-weary Smith), and the Dovells.

In the late '50s Booker's already high value as a session musician rose when he became the first notable New Orleans R&B musician to play the organ. His R&B organ instrumental "Gonzo" hit #3 on the national R&B chart and made the pop Top 50 in 1960. He continued to work as a session musician and sideman with B.B. King, Little Richard, and Wilson Pickett, among others, into the mid-'60s, when he was sidelined by drug problems and a jail term. He began working again around 1968, most notably with Fats Domino, Dr. John, Ringo Starr, and the Doobie Brothers. He toured Europe in 1977 (the Rounder live album was recorded in Zurich that year), then returned to regular engagements in New Orleans. The Clash covered his "Junco Partner" on its 1980 album Sadist! In 1983 Booker died of a heart attack.

Booker T. and the MG's

Booker T. Jones (b. Nov. 12, 1944, Memphis), organ; Lewis Steinberg (b. Sep. 13, 1933), bass; Al Jackson (b. Nov. 27, 1935, Memphis; d. Oct. 1, 1975, Memphis), drums; Steve Cropper (b. Oct. 21, 1941, Willow Springs, MO), gr.

Set* 1970—McLemore Avenue 1971—Melting Pot 1973—Star Collection (Warner Bros.) 1974—Greatest Hits 1975—Memphis Sound 1976—Union Extended; Time Is Tight (– Jackson; + Willie Hall [b. Aug. 8, 1950], drums) 1977—Universal Language (Asylum) 1992—(lineup: Dunn; Cropper; Jones; + Steve Jordan, drums) 1994—(+ James Gadson, drums) That's the Way It Should Be (Columbia) (– Jordan; – Gadson; + Steve Potts [b. Nov. 12, 1953, Memphis], drums). Steve Cropper solo: 1969—Jammed Together (Stax) 1970—With a Little Help From My Friends (Volt) 1982—Night After Night (MCA).

As the rhythm section of the Stax Records house band, Booker T. and the MG's were principal architects of the lean, punchy Stax sound. Though they had some instrumental hits on their own, they did invaluable backup work on hits by other Stax and Atlantic performers like Otis Redding, Sam and Dave, Wilson Pickett, Albert King, Eddie Floyd, and Rufus and Carla Thomas. Booker T. Jones was a teenage multi-instrumental prodigy who joined the Stax organization in 1960 as a saxophonist. Jamming with Mar-Keys guitarist Steve Cropper led to the formation of the MG's (Memphis Group) and to the recording of "Green Onions." The single went to #3 (and gold) in 1962. Several minor hits followed, including "Hip Hug-Her" (#37, 1967), a cover version of the Rascals' "Groovin'" (#21, 1968), "Soul-Limbo," (#17, 1968), and two 1969 film soundtrack hits, "Hang 'Em High" (#9) and "Time Is Tight" (#6). The best-known version of the band was comprised of Jones, Cropper, Jackson, and Dunn. Having written much of the MG's material, Cropper also has credits on Wilson Pickett's "In the Midnight Hour," Eddie Floyd's "Knock on Wood," Sam and Dave's "Soul Man," Otis Redding's "(Sittin' on) The Dock of the Bay," and at least 20 other Stax-Volt hits. He produced, among others, Redding. In 1969 he opened his own Memphis studio, TMI. Among his extra-MG's projects were Jammed Together with Albert King and Roebuck Staples, and a solo album, With a Little Help From My Friends, with Leon Russell, Buddy Miles, Jim Keltner, Carl Radle, the Bar-Kays, the Memphis Horns, and the MG's. In 1975, with the MG's disbanded, Cropper moved to L.A., where he resumed his session career by playing with Rod Stewart, Art Garfunkel, and Sammy Hagar.

The MG's proper were a very informal assemblage and played together only intermittently, partly due to Jones' frequent absences while completing his music major at Indiana University. Often limited to working only when Jones was available on weekends and vacations, the group eventually broke up in 1971. Soon afterward Jones began working as a producer (for Rita Coolidge, Bill Withers, Willie Nelson [on Stardust], among others), as a session player, and as a solo vocal performer. Jackson also returned to session work, notably for Al Green. In 1973 he joined Dunn in a short-lived MG's reunion. A reunion album was in the planning stages two years later when Jackson was shot and killed in his home by a burglar. Former Bar-Kays drummer Willie Hall took his place in reunion sessions with Jones, Cropper, and Dunn between 1975 and 1978. In 1977 Jones, Cropper, and Dunn toured with Levon Helm's RCO All Stars. Since then Cropper and Dunn have been active as freelance musicians and producers, joining the Blues Brothers in 1978, while Jones has worked on his solo career. He had a disco hit with his 1982 A&M single "Don't Stop Your Love."

Through the '80s the members were actively involved in dozens of projects. Cropper continued producing such artists as John Prine, Poco, Jeff Beck, Tower of Power, and José Feliciano. Through the late '80s and early '90s, Cropper, Dunn, and Potts also worked a side job as the Blues Brothers Band.

The MG's reunited for a 1990 tour, with Anton Fig (session musician and member of Paul Shaffer's band on David Letterman's late-night TV talk show) on drums. The group was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1992. That year they were the house band for the Bob Dylan tribute show at Madison Square Garden. In 1993 they played backup for Neil Young's tour. Following their induction, the members began playing together and finding an enthusiastic audience. They decided to reconvene on a more permanent basis. In 1994 they released their first album in 17 years, That's the Way It Should Be with drummer Steve Jordan (who'd preceded Fig in the Letterman band and had played with Keith Richards). The MG's remain a sporadically active live attraction, now featuring the late Al Jackson's nephew, Steve Potts, on drums.

The Boomtown Rats/Bob Geldof

Formed 1975, Dun Laoghaire, Ire.

Bob Geldof (b. Oct. 5, 1954, Dublin, Ire.), voc.; Johnny Fingers (b. Ire.), kybds.; Pete Briquette (b. Ire.), bass; Simon Crowe (b. Ire.), drums; Gerry Cott (b. Ire.), gtr.; Garry Roberts (b. Ire.), gtr. 1977—The Boomtown Rats (Mercury) 1979—A Tonic for the Troops (Columbia); The Fine Art of Surfacing 1981—(—Cott) Mondo Bongo 1983—Ratrospective 1985—In the Long Grass 1997—Great Songs of Indifference: The Best of Bob Geldof & the Boomtown Rats.

Bob Geldof solo: 1986—Deep in the Heart of Nowhere (Atlantic) 1988—The Vegetarians of Love 1993—The Happy Club (Polydor).

Irish new wavers, the Boomtown Rats were full-fledged pop stars in Britain and Europe while being virtually ignored in the U.S., where none of their four albums even cracked the Top 100. By the mid-'80s, the group was overshadowed by the high-profile humanitarian activities of its lead singer, Bob Geldof, who was nominated for a Nobel Peace Prize, before putting his music career on indefinite hold.

Originally called the Nightlife Thugs, they changed their name to the Boomtown Rats after a gang in Woody Guthrie's Bound for Glory. They moved to London (and into a communal house in Chessington) in 1976. Their stage show attracted attention for Johnny Fingers, who was known for wearing pajamas, and the Mick Jagger-David Bowie posturings of frontman Bob Geldof (who had previously worked as a meat worker, bulldozer operator, photographer, and Melody Maker correspondent).

While most of London's punk bands were sneering at rich, selfish rock stars, Geldof announced his ambition to become one. The first Rats single, "Looking After No. 1," hit #11 in England in August 1977 (the first new-wave single to be playlisted by the BBC), and the media discovered Geldof's willingness to utter controversial opinions on virtually any subject. The Rats' first album (recorded in Germany and released in England in late 1977) did well in the U.K. With A Tonic for the Troops ("She's So Modern") the group established a pattern of critical raves but poor sales in the U.S. In Britain its success continued, by early 1981 the Rats had nine consecutive Top 15 singles, among them two #1s: "Rat Trap" (1978) and "I Don't Like Mondays" (1979). The latter became a controversial, minor U.S. hit (#73, 1980). It was based on the case of a 17-year-old San Diego girl named Brenda Spencer, who randomly shot 11 passersby (killing two) on Monday, January 29, 1979, and explained her actions by saying, "I don't like Mondays." The single was banned by some radio stations and prompted a lawsuit by the girl's parents, who claimed it created adverse pretrial publicity.

The '80s found the Rats continuing to tour internationally and release records, such as 1981's Mondo Bongo and the reggae single "Banana Republic." It was their last British Top 10 single, although through 1984 a number of records charted, including "The Elephant's Graveyard," "Never in a Million Years," "House on Fire," "Tonight," and "Drag Me Down."

In 1982 Geldof played the lead role of Pink in a film of Pink Floyd's The Wall. Moved by news coverage of the Ethiopian famine, Geldof and Ultravox's Midge Ure cowrote "Do They Know It's Christmas," which was recorded in a single 24-hour session by an ad hoc group called Band Aid that included Boy George, Paul McCartney, George Michael, Phil Collins, Paul Young, Sting, and members of Duran Duran, Spandau Ballet, U2, and Kool and the Gang. Within 10 days the song sold over 2 million copies, hitting #1 on the U.K. chart in 1984 (it went to #3 in December of the following year, and remained the biggest-selling single in the history of British pop until surpassed by Elton John's 1997 tribute to Princess Diana, "Candle in the Wind 1997.") All proceeds went directly to famine relief, and in January 1985 Geldof toured Africa to see for himself that the food was being distributed. Later that month, he addressed the group of American performers gathered by Michael Jackson, Quincy Jones, and Lionel Richie to record a similar benefit record, "We Are the World" under the group name U.S.A. for Africa. U.S.A. for Africa—which included Bob Dylan, Bruce Springsteen, Ray Charles, Tina Turner, Diana Ross, the Jacksons, Cyndi Lauper, Paul Simon, Stevie Wonder, Willie Nelson, Huey Lewis, and Geldof—raised $40 million. Geldof later remarked, "We Are the World" sounds too much like the Pepsi generation." In a characteristically blunt appraisal of the resulting rash of benefit records, Geldof described them as artistically "awful."

On July 13, 1985, over 1.5 billion people tuned in to watch Live Aid, a 16-hour-long star-studded concert that was broadcast via satellite from London's Wembley Stadium and Philadelphia's JFK Stadium. Among the performers were Madonna, Paul McCartney, Queen, Phil Collins, David Bowie, Led Zeppelin (with Phil Collins and Tony Thompson sitting in for the deceased John Bonham), Power Station (with Michael Des Barres), Duran Duran, U2, Judas Priest, Black Sabbath, and the Boomtown Rats. All told, the shows and the resulting album raised about $120 million. In November of that year, Columbia Records canceled the Boomtown Rats' U.S. record deal. The group broke up in 1986. Geldof went on to become a familiar face, pictured with Mother Teresa and other world leaders. In June 1986 Queen Elizabeth II awarded him with an honorary knighthood, making him Sir Bob Geldof, KBE (Knight Commander of the British Empire), because he is an Irish citizen he is not, as has been published, referred to as Sir Bob. That year saw the publication of his critically well-received, best-selling autobiography, Is That It? (He has said that he accepted the offer to write his book only because the advance covered his debts.) Geldof, who often admitted that becoming an institution overnight has at times overwhelmed him, stated in 1990, "I never said we were going to stop world poverty or world hunger. [The function] was to raise the issue to the top of the political agenda, and we did that." Geldof remains involved in world affairs; most recently, he lobbied for the debt relief of poor countries.

Geldof's recording career has been on hold since the release of his last solo album in 1993—as a recording artist, wide commercial appeal had always eluded him anyway. He was chairman of Planet 24 Productions, which produced, among others, the popular U.K. morning television program The Big Breakfast. He later cashed in his stake in Planet 24 for £5 million. Since 1998 he's also been a DJ on the London radio station XFM. Geldof's name was in the news when his wife, television personality Paula Yates, left him for INXS' singer Michael Hutchence in 1995. Geldof and Yates were divorced the following year. Paula Yates died in September 2000, leaving behind the three daughters she had with Geldof and Tiger Lily, her daughter by Hutchence (who died in 1997). In 2000 Geldof, who had custody of his daughters at the time of Yates' death, was awarded temporary custody of Tiger Lily.

Debbie Boone

Born Sep. 22, 1956, Hackensack, NJ
 1977—You Light Up My Life (Curb/Warner Bros.) 1978—Midstream 1979—The Promise 1980—Love Has No Reason 1990—The Best Of (Curb).

Debbie Boone had one of the longest-running #1 hit singles—10 weeks—with "You Light Up My Life" in 1977. One of singer Pat Boone's four daughters, Debbie began performing with her sisters in 1969 as the Boone Girls. They toured with their father and recorded for the Lamb & Lion label. In 1977 producer Mike Curb persuaded Debbie to record solo. The song he chose for her, "You Light Up My Life," the theme song from a movie, won an Oscar for Best Song and resulted in Boone winning three Grammy Awards, including that year's Best New Artist.

Boone retired to start a family; she married Gabriel Ferrer, the son of singer Rosemary Clooney and actor José Ferrer. She wrote an autobiography that chronicled her teenage "rebelliousness" and her life with Christ, titled Debbie Boone... So Far. She returned to performing in 1982, when she starred in the play Seven Brides for Seven Brothers, a hit around the country, which closed within weeks of its Broadway debut. Boone's recent musical work is in the contemporary Christian and children's music veins. In 1990 she starred in a revival of The Sound of Music. Later in the decade she exorcized her inner bad girl by playing Rizzo in the stage production of Grease and by portraying a hired killer on an episode of the short-lived television show Baywatch Nights.

Pat Boone

Born Charles Eugene Boone, June 1, 1934, Jacksonville, FL
1962—Pat Boone's Golden Hits (Dot) 1990—Greatest Hits
(Curb) 1997—In a Metal Mood: No More Mr. Nice Guy (Hip-O).

Singer Pat Boone was easily the most commercially successful of the white '50s teen idols, with a string of 38 Top 40 hits, among them several cleaned-up, hit cover versions that out-sold the arguably superior versions by the original artists: Little Richard's "Tutti Frutti" (#12, 1956) and "Long Tall Sally" (#8, 1956), Ivory Joe Hunter's "I Almost Lost My Mind" (#1, 1956), the Five Keys' "Gee Whittakers!" (#19, 1955), and Joe Turner's "Chains of Love" (#10, 1956).

Boone claims to be a descendant of early American frontier hero Daniel Boone. He attended high school in Nashville, where he lettered in three varsity sports, served as student body president, and was elected the school's most popular boy. Following his graduation, he married country & western star Red Foley's daughter, Shirley. In the early '50s he attended David Lipscomb College in Nashville before transferring to North Texas State. There he won a local talent show, which led to an appearance on the Ted Mack program and then Arthur Godfrey's amateur hour, where Boone became a regular for a year. By mid-decade he had begun recording some mildly successful singles for Nashville's Republic Records. In February 1955 he released his first single for Dot Records, "Two Hearts, Two Kisses." By the end of the year he had his first of dozens of hits for the label, a relaxed cover of Fats Domino's "Ain't That a Shame," which hit #1.

Over the next seven years Boone made 54 chart appearances, including many two-sided hits, and became one of the all-time biggest-selling pop singers. His Top 10 hits for Dot included "At My Front Door (Crazy Little Mama)" (#7, 1955), "I'll Be Home" (#4, 1956), "Friendly Persuasion" (#5, 1956), "Don't Forbid Me" (#1, 1957), "Why Baby Why" (#5, 1957), "Love Letters in the Sand" (#1, 1957), "April Love" (#1, 1957), "A Wonderful Time Up There" (#4, 1958), "Moody River" (#1, 1961), and "Speedy Gonzales" (#6, 1962). At his peak he was considered a rock & roller—a parent-approved alternative to Elvis, Jerry Lee Lewis, and Chuck Berry in white buck shoes. He starred in 15 films, including Bernardine and April Love (both 1957) and State Fair (1962). From 1957 to 1960 he had his own television series, The Pat Boone—Chevy Showroom on ABC.

Boone did not have another Top 40 single after 1962, but he continued to record for Dot through the late '60s, then for a series of other labels, including Capitol, MGM, Motown, and Warner Bros. subsidiary Curb (on which he released covers of "Oh Boy!" and "Rip It Up" in 1981), until the early '80s. His later recording projects included "Let Me Live," which became the anthem for the antichoice movement.

At the height of his popularity, Boone became an author, penning a series of tomes full of wholesome teen advice:

Twixt Twelve and Twenty: Between You, Me and the Gatepost; and The Care and Feeding of Parents. In 1981 he published Pray to Win. He has also performed with Shirley and their four daughters, Cherry, Lindy, Debby, and Laury. In 1977 Debby became a star in her own right, and Cherry later revealed her problems with an eating disorder, which she discussed in her book Starving for Attention.

Pat, who began hosting a nationally broadcasted Christian radio program in 1983, is also active in a number of charitable and religious causes, including the Easter Seals Society. The Israeli Tourism Department made him Christian Ambassador to Israel, and he has written and recorded music encouraging better Christian-Jewish relations. In 1994 he appeared in the title role of a Branson, Missouri, production of The Will Rogers Follies.

Three years later Boone, 62 at the time, resurfaced on the album chart sporting black leather, a dog collar, a deep tan, and temporary tattoos. The jovial In a Metal Mood (#125), on which he imposed big-band arrangements on songs by Led Zeppelin, Metallica, and Van Halen, caused a minor media stir. He was subsequently dismissed from his Trinity Broadcasting Network program Gospel America.

1976—Boston (Epic) 1978—Don't Look Back

Early 1980s—(— Goudreau; — Sheehan; — Hashian) 1986—Third Stage (MCA) (group disbands, Scholz leads various lineups) 1994—Walk On 1995—(+ Delp).

Barry Goudreau solo: 1980—Barry Goudreau (Portait) 1984—(with Orion the Hunter) Orion the Hunter.

RTZ (Goudreau and Brad Delp): 1992—Return to Zero (Giant).

In 1976 sonic-rock group Boston had the fastest-selling debut album in rock. Boston was a slightly altered version of tapes guitarist Tom Scholz had made in his 12-track basement studio, characterized by what he calls "power guitars, harmony vocals, and double-guitar leads." Scholz had a master's degree in mechanical engineering from MIT and was a senior product designer for Polaroid Corporation who made music during his off-hours. Eventually the tapes attracted the interest of Epic Records, which signed Scholz and a band of local musicians, Boston. Upon signing, the band recut some tracks on the West Coast with producer John Boylan, but its 1976 debut was essentially Scholz's basement tapes. It sold 11 million copies and spawned three Top 40 singles—"More Than a Feeling" (#5, 1976), "Long Time" (#22, 1977), and "Peace of Mind" (#38, 1977). Boston went almost directly to the arena circuit on tour.

Two years later Don't Look Back (#1, 1978) presented the Boston formula virtually unchanged and sold a comparatively disappointing 6 million copies. Less-than-sellout concert crowds suggested that audience interest was flagging. This time the group took eight years to record a followup. Barry Goudreau, who'd released a solo album in 1980, quit in 1982 to form Onion the Hunter, which issued a Top 60 LP in 1984.

By the time Third Stage appeared in 1986, only Scholz and singer Brad Delp remained. The loss of the others hardly mattered, as Delp's soaring vocals and Scholz's guitar defined the Boston sound. The album lodged at #1 for four weeks and produced hit singles in "Amanda" (#1, 1986), "We're Ready" (#9, 1986), and "Can't Cha Say (You Believe in Me)/Still in Love" (#20, 1987). And then another long wait, during which Scholz fended off lawsuits. In 1989 Goudreau sued Scholz for allegedly damaging his musical career; the two reached an out-of-court settlement. The following year Scholz won his seven-year legal battle against CBS, which had sued him for allegedly renegeing on his contract with the label. Scholz countersued, claiming the company owed him millions in back royalties. A jury sided with the guitarist, and CBS was ordered to release his money.

In addition to selling millions of records, Scholz invented the Rockman, a paperback-sized guitar amplifier with headphones. Shortly after winning the CBS suit, he built a new studio and began work on Boston's fourth album. Released in 1994, Walk On included only Scholz from the original lineup.

In 1991 Delp and Goudreau formed a short-lived band called RTZ and released Return to Zero, which featured the single "Until Your Love Comes Back Around" (#26, 1992). By 1995 Delp had rejoined Scholz in a new, dual-vocalist incarnation of Boston. The band's 1997 Greatest Hits (#47) collection includes three new songs, among them a rock arrangement of "The Star-Spangled Banner." As of 1998 Goudreau was backing bluesy singer Lisa Guyer.

A consummate musical chameleon, David Bowie created a career in the '60s and '70s that featured his many guises: folksinger, androgyne, alien, decadent, blue-eyed soul man, modern rock star—each one spawning a league of imitators. His late-'70s collaborations with Brian Eno made Bowie one of the few older stars to be taken seriously by the new wave. In the '80s, Let's Dance (#1, 1983), his entrée into the mainstream, was followed by attempts to keep up with current trends. In the '90s, this meant embracing grunge, industrial rock, rap, and dance music. While these experiments were greeted with varying degrees of artistic and commercial success, Bowie remains one of the more restless and venture-some classic rock survivors.

David Jones took up the saxophone at age 13, and when he left Bromley Technical High School (where a friend permanently paralyzed Jones' left pupil in a fight) to work as a commercial artist three years later, he had started playing in bands (the Konrads, the King Bees, David Jones and the Buzz). Three of Jones' early bands—the King Bees, the Manish Boys (featuring session guitarist Jimmy Page), and Davey Jones and the Lower Third—each recorded a single. In 1966, after changing his name to David Bowie (after the knife) to avoid confusion with the Monkees' Davy Jones, he recorded three singles for Pye Records, then signed in 1967 with Deram, issuing several singles and The World of David Bowie (most of the songs from that album, and others from that time, are collected on Images).

On these early records, Bowie appears in the singer/songwriter mold; rock star seemed to be just another role for him. In 1967 he spent a few weeks at a Buddhist monastery in Scotland, then apprenticed in Lindsay Kemp's mime troupe. He started his own troupe, Feathers, in 1968. American-born Angela Barnett met Bowie in London's Speakeasy and married him on March 20, 1970. Son Zowie (now Joey) was born in June 1971; the couple divorced acrimoniously in 1980. After Feathers broke up, Bowie helped start the experimental Beckenham Arts Lab in 1969. To finance the project, he signed with Mercury. Man of Words, Man of Music included "Space Oddity," its release timed for the U.S. moon landing. It became a European hit that year but did not make the U.S. charts until its rerelease in 1973, when it reached #15.

Marc Bolan, an old friend, was beginning his rise as a glitter-rocker in T. Rex and introduced Bowie to his producer, Tony Visconti. Bowie mimed at some T. Rex concerts, and Bolan played guitar on Bowie's "Karma Man" and "The Prettiest Star." Bowie, Visconti, guitarist Mick Ronson, and drummer John Cambridge toured briefly as Hype. Ronson eventually recruited drummer Michael "Woody" Woodmansey, and with Visconti on bass they recorded The Man Who Sold the World, which included "All the Madmen," inspired by Bowie's institutionalized brother, Terry. Hunky Dory (#93, 1972), Bowie's tribute to the New York City of Andy Warhol, the Velvet Underground, and Bob Dylan, included his ostensible theme song, "Changes" (#66, 1972, rereleased 1974, #41).

Bowie started changing his image in late 1971. He told Melody Maker he was gay in January 1972 and started work on a new theatrical production. Enter Ziggy Stardust, Bowie's projection of a doomed messianic rock star. Bowie became Ziggy, Ronson, Woodmansey, and bassist Trevor Bolder became Ziggy's band, the Spiders From Mars. The Rise and Fall of Ziggy Stardust and the Spiders From Mars (#75, 1972) and the rerelease of Man of Words as Space Oddity (#16, 1972) made Bowie the star he was portraying. The live show, with Bowie wearing futuristic costumes, makeup, and bright orange hair (at a time when the rock-star uniform was jeans), was a sensation in London and New York. It took Aladdin Sane (#17, 1973) to break Bowie in the U.S. Bolan and other British glitter-rock performers barely made the Atlantic crossing, but Bowie emerged a star. He produced albums for Lou Reed (Transformer and its hit "Walk on the Wild Side") and Iggy and the Stooges (Raw Power) and wrote and produced Mott the Hoople's glitter anthem "All the Young Dudes."

In 1973 Bowie announced his retirement from live performing, disbanded the Spiders, and sailed to Paris to record Pin Ups (#23, 1973), a collection of covers of mid-'60s British rock. That same year, the 1980 Floor Show, an invitation-only concert with Bowie and guests Mananne Faithfull and the Troggs, was taped for broadcast on the TV program The Midnight Special. Meanwhile, Bowie worked on a musical adaptation of George Orwell's 1984 but was denied the rights by Orwell's widow. He rewrote the material as Diamond Dogs (#5, 1974) and returned to the stage with an extravagant American tour. Midway through the tour, Bowie entered Philadelphia's Sigma Sound Studios (then the capital of black music) and recorded the tracks that would become Young Americans (#9, 1975). The session had a major effect on Bowie, as his sound and show were revised. Bowie scrapped the dancers, sets, and costumes for a spare stage and baggy Oxford trousers; he cut his hair and colored it a more natural blond. His new band, led by former James Brown sideman Carlos Alomar, added soul standards (e.g., Eddie Floyd's "Knock on Wood") to his repertoire. David Live (#8, 1974), also recorded in Philadelphia, chronicles this incarnation.

"Fame," cowritten by Bowie, John Lennon, and Alomar, was Bowie's first American #1 single (1975). Bowie moved to L.A. and became a fixture of American pop culture. He also played the title role in Nicolas Roeg's The Man Who Fell to Earth (1976). Station to Station (#3, 1976), another album of "plastic soul" recorded with the Young Americans band, portrayed Bowie as the Thin White Duke (also the title of his unpublished autobiography). His highest charting album, Station to Station contained his second Top 10 single, "Golden Years" (#10, 1975). Bowie complained life had become predictable and left L.A. He returned to the U.K. for the first time in three years before settling in Berlin, where he lived in semiseclusion, painting, studying art, and recording with Brian Eno. His work with Eno—Low (#11, 1977), "Heroes" (#35, 1977), Lodger (#20, 1979)—was distinguished by its appropriation of avant-garde electronic music and the "cut-up" technique made famous by author William S. Burroughs. Composer Philip Glass wrote a symphony incorporating music from Low in 1993.

Bowie revitalized Iggy Pop's career by producing The Idiot and Lust for Life (both 1977) and toured Europe and America unannounced as Pop's pianist. He narrated Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra's recording of Prokofiev's Peter and the Wolf and spent the rest of 1977 acting with Marlene Dietrich and Kim Novak in Just a Gigolo. The next year, he embarked on a massive world tour. A second live album, Stage (#44, 1978), was recorded on the U.S. leg of the tour. Work on Lodger was begun in New York, continued in Switzerland, and completed in Berlin.

Bowie settled in New York to record the paranoid Scary Monsters (#12, 1980), updating "Space Oddity" in "Ashes to Ashes." One of the first stars to understand the potential of video, he produced some innovative clips for songs from Lodger and Scary Monsters. After Scary Monsters, Bowie turned his attention away from his recording career. In 1980 he played the title role in The Elephant Man, appearing in Denver, in Chicago, and on Broadway. He collaborated with Queen on 1981's "Under Pressure" and provided lyrics and vocals for "Cat People (Putting Out Fire)" (#67, 1982). Giorgio Moroder's title tune for the soundtrack of Paul Schrader's remake of Cat People. His music was used on the soundtrack of Christiane F. (1982) (he also appeared in the film). Also that year, Bowie starred in the BBC-TV production of Brecht's Baal, and as a 150-year-old vampire in the movie The Hunger.

In 1983 Bowie signed one of the most lucrative contracts in history and moved from RCA to EMI. Let's Dance (#4, 1983), his first album in three years, returned him to the top of the charts. Produced by Nile Rodgers with Stevie Ray Vaughan on guitar, the album was a slick revision of Bowie's soul-man posture. It contained three Top 20 singles—"Let's Dance" (#1, 1983), "China Girl" (#10, 1983), and "Modern Love" (#14, 1983)—which were supported with another set of innovative videos; the sold-out Serious Moonlight Tour followed. Bowie's career seemed to be revitalized.

What first seemed like a return to form actually ushered in a period of mediocrity. Without Nile Rodgers' production savvy, Bowie's material sounded increasingly forced and hollow; his attention alternated between albums and film roles. Tonight (#11, 1984) had only one hit, "Blue Jean" (#3, 1984). Bowie and Mick Jagger dueted on a cover of Martha and the Vandellas' "Dancing in the Street" (#7, 1985) for Live Aid. Although Never Let Me Down (#34, 1987), with Peter Frampton on guitar, was roundly criticized, it made the charts with "Day In, Day Out" (#21, 1987) and the title song (#27, 1987). Bowie hit the road with another stadium extravaganza, the Glass Spiders Tour; it was recorded for an ABC-TV special.

Bowie had scarcely better luck in his acting career. Into the Night (1985), Absolute Beginners (1986)—a Julien Temple musical featuring some Bowie songs—Labyrinth (1986), The Linguini Incident (1992), and Twin Peaks—Fire Walk With Me (1992) were neither critical nor commercial successes.

Bowie set about reissuing his earlier albums on CD. Sound + Vision (#97, 1989), a greatest-hits collection, revived interest in Bowie's career; the set list for the accompanying tour was partially based on fan response to special phone lines requesting favorite Bowie songs. Bowie claimed it would be the last time he performed those songs live. Later reissues, with previously unreleased bonus tracks, brought the Ziggy-era Bowie back onto the charts.

Bowie formed Tin Machine in 1989. The band included Bowie discovery Reeves Gabrels on guitar and Hunt and Tony Sales, who had worked with Bowie on Iggy Pop's Lust for Life album and tour in the '70s. Although Bowie claimed that the band was a democracy, Tin Machine was perceived as Bowie's next project. The group debuted with a series of club dates in New York and L.A. Tin Machine's eponymous album (#28, 1989) was a rougher, more guitar-oriented collection than any of Bowie's previous albums. A second album, Tin Machine II (#126, 1991), lacked the novelty of the debut and was quickly forgotten.

In 1992 Bowie married Somali model Iman. Black Tie White Noise (#39, 1993), which Bowie called his wedding present to his wife, received generally positive reviews but failed to excite the public. For a followup, Bowie reunited with Brian Eno to create Outside—The Nathan Adler Diaries: A Hyper Cycle, a concept album of sorts that did not create much in the way of sales, although Bowie did tour the States with Trent Reznor's Nine Inch Nails opening. The Buddha in Suburbia is the music from the British television show of the same name. Lenny Kravitz appears on guitar.

Bowie celebrated his 50th birthday in January 1997 with a sold-out gig at Madison Square Garden, where he was joined onstage by Lou Reed, the Cure's Robert Smith, Smashing Pumpkins' Billy Corgan, Frank Black, the Foo Fighters, and Sonic Youth.

In early 1997 Bowie was again on the cutting edge—in this time in the financial world. In a complicated transaction that was definitely a first, something called Bowie Bonds were offered for sale. These asset-backed bonds (in this case the assets are the royalties on Bowie's songs recorded prior to 1990) allowed Bowie to collect $55 million. The sale of the bonds came on the eve of the release of Earthling, which incorporated the recently hip musical stylings of drum-and-bass into a basically rock sound. By the end of the year a Reznor remix of the last song on the CD, "I'm Afraid of Americans," was receiving video and radio airplay. Into the edgy song (cowritten with Eno) Reznor inserted some keyboard and guitar textures and an urgent rap by Ice Cube. Hours (1999) was not a particularly well-received album but was notable for expanding Bowie's early and enthusiastic advocacy of the Internet. The entire album was available for download weeks before its official release and contained a song available only online.

Bow Wow Wow

Formed 1980, London, Eng.

Annabella Lwin (b. Myant Myant Aye, ca. 1966, Rangoon, Burma), voc.; Matthew Ashman (b. 1960, London; d. Nov. 21, 1995, London), gtr.; Dave Barbarossa (b. Eng.), drums; Leigh Gorman (b. Eng.), bass.

1981—See Jungle! See Jungle! Go Join Your Gang Yeah! City All Over! Go Ape Crazy! (RCA) 1982—Last of the Mohicans; I Want Candy; 12 Original Recordings (Capitol) 1983—When the Going Gets Tough, the Tough Get Going (RCA) (group disbands) 1997—(group re-forms: Lwin; Gorman; + Dave Calhoun, gtr.; + Eshan Khadaroo, drums).

Annabella Lwin solo: 1986—Fever (RCA).

After manager/entrepreneur Malcolm McLaren assembled the Sex Pistols, he followed up with Bow Wow Wow. He discovered Annabella Lwin (from a reportedly aristocratic Burmese family, she had arrived in England a refugee at the age of five) when she was 14, working in a dry cleaner's. Although she didn't sing, she had the look, and he installed her in front of Matthew Ashman, Dave Barbarossa, and Leigh Gorman, whom he had separated from Adam and the Ants. The key to the group's sound was Barbarossa's percussion, a pounding tom-tom beat derived from Burundi ritual music

(and the essence of Adam's Antmusic). With Annabella's girlish squeal, Bow Wow Wow's songs (mostly written by McLaren and the instrumentalists) were a heady concoction of African rhythms, Balinese chants, surf instrumentals, and New Romantic pop melodies.

EMI released "C30, C60, C90 Go!" in fall 1980, and the song entered the U.K. Top 30 despite EMI's refusal to promote it because it allegedly advocated home taping. The group's next release was one of the first commercial recordings to be released on tape but not on vinyl. Your Cassette Pet was a 20-minute, eight-song cassette packaged to resemble a pack of Marlboro cigarettes and became the first tape to place on the British singles chart. Songs like "Sexy Eiffel Towers" helped to win headlines suggesting that McLaren was promoting child pornography. EMI dropped Bow Wow Wow after issuing its second single, "W.O.R.K.," in 1981.

"W.O.R.K." became a best-selling import single in the U.S., and Bow Wow Wow signed with RCA. Just before a planned U.S. tour, Annabella's mother instigated a Scotland Yard investigation of alleged exploitation of a minor for immoral purposes. A magistrate granted permission to leave England only when McLaren and RCA promised not to publish a photograph of Annabella as the nude woman of Manet's painting Déjeuner sur l'Herbe or to promote her as a "sex kitten." A 1982 EP containing the minor hit "I Want Candy," produced by Joan Jett's producer/manager Kenny Laguna, used the Déjeuner sur l'Herbe photo on its jacket after all. Later albums moved away from the Burundi beat and toward heavy metal. Bow Wow Wow eventually booted Lwin from the group; she recorded one solo LP in the mid-'80s that went nowhere. After a hiatus from show business, she returned in summer 1994 with a single, "Car Sex." Guitarist Matthew Ashman surfaced in 1988 with the Chiefs of Relief, a band that included former Sex Pistols drummer Paul Cook. In the '90s, Ashman worked as a session player before he succumbed to complications arising from diabetes. Barbarossa found mid-'90s success with the electronic pop band Republica. In 1997 Gorman and Lwin enlisted two new recruits for a revived Bow Wow Wow, which toured the U.S. and issued a live/remix album.

The Box Tops

Alex Chilton (b. Dec. 28, 1950, Memphis), voc.; Bill Cunningham (b. Jan. 23, 1950, Memphis), kybds., bass; Gary Talley (b. Aug. 17, 1947), gtr., bass; John Evans, organ; Danny Smythe, drums. 1967—The Box Tops "The Letter"/"Neon Rainbow" (Bell) 1968—Cry Like a Baby (Stateside) (—Evans; —Smythe; + Tom Boggs [b. July 16, 1947, Wynn, AK], drums; + Rick Allen [b. Jan. 28, 1946, Little Rock, AK], organ, bass) Super Hits; Non-Stop 1969—Dimensions 1970—1970 (Ardent); The Best of the Box Tops; Soul Deep (Arista) (—Cunningham; + Swain Scharfer, piano; + Harold Cloud, bass) (group disbanded) 1982—Greatest Hits (Rhino) 1998—(original group reunites) Tear Off! (Last Call).

The Box Tops came out of Memphis in the late '60s with a string of blue-eyed soul hits. Young Alex Chilton's raw lead vocals sparked million-selling singles "The Letter" (#1, 1967) and "Cry Like a Baby" (#2, 1968). Their success was partially due to producer/writer Dan Penn, who later released a solo album that was a Box Tops soundalike. As was later evidenced by Chilton's recordings with Big Star [see entry], the gravely delivery Penn had him employ on Box Tops records was not Chilton's natural voice. (Chilton later attributed the sound to lack of sleep and too much booze.)

The band toured infrequently, and its lineup was unstable: John Evans and Danny Smythe quit the group at the height of its success to return to college and avoid the draft. After several albums for Bell and minor hits like "Sweet Cream Ladies" (#28, 1969), the Box Tops disbanded in 1970, and Chilton soon joined Big Star. Guitarist Talley has remained in music as a country and R&B sessionman in Memphis. Into the late '90s, Chilton occasionally performed with the Box Tops for oldies shows. The five original Box Tops reunited in Memphis to make Tear Off! (1998), an album bolstered by the Memphis Horns and a selection of vintage tunes previously unrecorded by the band, plus the obligatory remake of "The Letter."

Tommy Boyce and Bobby Hart

Tommy Boyce (b. Sep. 29, 1939, Charlottesville, VA; d. Nov. 23, 1994, Nashville, TN); Bobby Hart (b. Feb. 18, 1939, Phoenix, AZ).

1967—Test Patterns (A&M) 1968—I Wonder What She's Doing Tonight; Which One's Boyce and Which One's Hart?; It's All Happening on the Inside 1995—The Songs of Tommy Boyce and Bobby Hart (Varèse Sarabande).

One of the top songwriting teams of the mid-'60s, Boyce and Hart teamed up to write "Last Train to Clarksville," "Valleri," and "(I'm Not Your) Steppin' Stone" for the Monkees and songs for Paul Revere and the Raiders. They began working together in the early '60s and their "Come a Little Bit Closer," a hit in 1964 for Jay and the Americans, led to a songwriting contract with Screen Gems. They wrote most of the material for the made-for-TV Monkees. In May 1967 they began recording as a duo and a few months later enjoyed pop success with "I Wonder What She's Doing Tonight" (#8, 1967) and "Alice Long (You're Still My Favonte Girlfriend)" (#27, 1968). They toured nightclubs through the late '60s. In 1975 they teamed up with ex-Monkees Davy Jones and Mickey Dolenz for an album and tour.

In the late '70s Boyce moved to London for a while and produced hits for British '50s revivalist bands Showaddywaddy and Darts. On November 23, 1994, Boyce shot himself at his Nashville, Tennessee, home.

Hart, with Austin Roberts, wrote the country hit "Over You" by Lane Brody (it was heard in the film Tender Mercies and was nominated for an Academy Award in 1983); in 1985 he cowrote New Edition's R&B hit "My Secret," and in 1988 cowrote Robbie Nevil's hit "Dominoes." The duo has to its credit more than 300 compositions and sales of more than 42 million records.

Eddie Boyd

Born Nov. 25, 1914, Coahoma County, MS; died July 13, 1994, Helsinki, Fin.
1967—Eddie Boyd and His Blues Band (Decca) 1968—1936
South Rhodes (Epic); Eddie Boyd Live (Storyville) 1974—
Legacy of the Blues, vol. 10 (GNP).

Guitarist/keyboardist/singer Eddie Boyd was responsible for the 1952 #1 R&B hit "Five Long Years." Half brother of Memphis Slim and first cousin of Muddy Waters. Boyd was born on a plantation in Coahoma County, Mississippi, where he worked until he ran away from home in 1928. He taught himself to play the guitar and keyboards and began touring the Mississippi bar and juke-joint circuit during the early '30s. In 1936 he moved to Memphis, where he worked in Beale Street bars.

In 1937 he formed his first group, the Dixie Rhythm Boys, with whom he toured Tennessee and Arkansas before moving to Chicago in 1941. Quickly embraced by the South Side blues circles, he worked through the mid-'40s with Memphis Slim, Sonny Boy Williamson, and his cousin Waters. He made his first recordings (with Williamson) for the Victor/Bluebird label around 1943 and recorded for several labels over the years, including Chess Records from 1952 to 1957. He gave Chess two R&B Top 10 hits—"24 Hours" and "Third Degree"—in 1953.

By the start of the '60s Boyd was recording for small independent labels, but a blues and R&B resurgence led him to Decca in 1965. From the mid-'60s on, he frequently toured Europe with rock artists like John Mayall and recorded for various European labels. He lived in London, Paris, Finland, and other foreign locations. By 1971 he had made Helsinki his permanent home. He remained active both in recording and club work (which included occasional trips back to the U.S.) until shortly before his death.

Boy George: See Culture Club

Boyz II Men

Formed 1988, Philadelphia, PA
Wanya "Squirt" Morris (b. July 29, 1974), voc.; Michael "Bass" McCary (b. Dec. 16, 1972), voc.; Shawn "Slim" Stockman (b. Sep. 26, 1973), voc.; Nathan "Alex Vanderpool" Morris (b. June 18, 1972), voc.
1991—Cooleyhighharmony (Motown) 1993—Christmas Interpretations 1994—II 1995—The Remix Collection 1997—Evolution 2000—Nathan Michael Shawn Wanya (Universal).

The teenage hip-hop/harmony quartet Boyz II Men became an overnight sensation in 1991 upon release of its 3-million-selling debut album. With nostalgic nods to '50s, '60s, and '70s vocal groups—from Frankie Lymon and the Teenagers to the Temptations to the O'Jays—the Boyz' first hit, "Motownphilly," climbed to #3 on the pop chart (#4 R&B). The group's musical and visual style was described in ROLLING STONE as "distinctive, nonthreatening, and video friendly."

The group met and began singing its sugary sweet harmonies together at the High School for the Creative and Performing Arts in Philadelphia. In 1989 they gained an important fan in Michael Bivins (of New Edition and Bell Biv DeVoe), who helped them land a record deal. The quartet's massive success in turn helped breathe new life into Motown Records, which had fared poorly through the '80s.

Cooleyhighharmony is divided into a dance side and a ballads side. Followup singles from the album included "It's So Hard to Say Goodbye to Yesterday" (#2 pop, #1 R&B, 1991) and "Uhh Ahh" (#16 pop, #1 R&B, 1991). In 1992 the group toured with Hammer. The group returned in 1994 with the 7-million-selling smash II (#1 pop and R&B, 1994) and became the third act in the rock era to succeed itself on the singles chart at #1 (after Elvis Presley and the Beatles), with the hits "I'll Make Love to You" and "On Bended Knee."

By 1997 the group's members founded the Stonecreek Recordings label. That year the label released the debut by Uncle Sam, which included songwriting and backing vocals by Boyz II Men. The group also released its next album of new material, Evolution (#1 pop and R&B, 1997), which spawned two hit singles, "4 Seasons of Loneliness" (#1 pop, #2 R&B, 1997) and "A Song for Mama" (#7 pop, #1 R&B, 1997). A Spanish-language version of the album was also released. Boyz II Men enjoyed a hit single with 1999's "I Will Get There" (#32 pop, #23 R&B), from the soundtrack to the children's animated feature The Prince of Egypt.

The group left Motown for Universal, and in 2000 returned with Nathan Michael Shawn Wanya, but one of the biggest-selling R&B acts of the '90s found itself on a new musical landscape populated by the likes of 'N Sync and the Backstreet Boys—male vocal groups trading in the same multipart harmonies and weepy ballads the Boyz once rode to the top of the charts.

Billy Bragg

Born Steven William Bragg, Dec. 20, 1957, Barking, Essex, Eng.
1986—Talking With the Taxman About Poetry (Elektra) 1987—Back to Basics 1988—Help Save the Youth of America; Workers Playtime 1990—The Internationale EP 1991—Don't Try This at Home 1996—William Bloke 1998—Mermaid Avenue (with Wilco) 1999—Reaching to the Converted (Rhino) 2000—Mermaid Avenue, vol. 2 (with Wilco) (WEA/Elektra).

Billy Bragg is a true working-class hero: an irrepressible socialist troubadour whose anthems of love and politics have transcended the usual ghettoizations of folk and punk troublemakers. The singer, songwriter, and guitarist got his inimitable Cockney accent growing up in an industrial suburb of London. He left school at 16 and became a punk rocker, forming his first band, Riff Raff, with childhood friend Wiggy in 1977. They released a few singles and one EP before disbanding in 1981. Discouraged, Bragg joined the army, but bought his way out after three months.

He began playing solo gigs around England before signing with a tiny British indie Bragg's debut, Life's a Riot With Spy vs. Spy, went to #30 on the U.K. charts in 1984. (His first three British records were compiled for U.S. release on Back to Basics.) It featured "A New England," whose chorus of "I don't want to change the world . . . I'm just looking for another girl" introduced Bragg's continuing effort to balance a political call-to-arms with the search for loving arms. (In 1985 Kirsty MacColl made "A New England" a #7 U.K. hit.) Bragg has called Thatcherism in general and the British miners' strike in particular the catalyst for his political conversion; he played several benefits for miners in 1984–85.

With Brewing Up With Billy Bragg, the "Big-Nosed Bard of Barking" began to reach college-radio audiences in the U.S. and garner international press. Talking With the Taxman About Poetry, featuring such classic tunes as "Levi Stubbs' Tears," solidified his standing as a moving and witty songwriter. In 1986 Bragg helped found Red Wedge, a collective of musicians that toured the U.K. to promote the British Labour Party. He has also toured extensively in the U.S., as well as the Soviet bloc and Latin America, supporting the causes of such political groups as ACT UP, Committee in Solidarity with the People of El Salvador, and Democratic Socialists of America. Live, Bragg is both an endearing entertainer and an effective speechmaker.

In 1988 Bragg had a #1 U.K. hit with a cover of the Beatles' "She's Leaving Home," a duet he recorded with Cara Tivey for a benefit album (although it was probably airplay of "With a Little Help From My Friends" by Wet Wet Wet, the other side of the single, that propelled sales). In 1989 he reactivated the label Utility to nurture new acts and released The Internationale, a seven-track disc whose liberation songs showed that the singer didn't consider leftist politics buried beneath the Berlin Wall's rubble. Bragg also began pursuing more commercial musical directions, releasing a dance track ("Won't Talk About It") with Beats International on the 1990 album Let Them Eat Bingo, and recording Don't Try This at Home with a band, full production, and such guests as Kirsty MacColl, R.E.M.'s Peter Dinklage, and ex-Smiths guitarist Johnny Marr. The track "Sexuality," a dance hit in England, was a celebration of active and diverse lovemaking in the age of AIDS.

Bragg became a father in 1993, at which point he cut back on touring and recording, although he did write music for several films, including Mad Love. He also emerged as a social and political commentator in the popular British press, airing his leftist views on BBC Radio and in the music magazine New Musical Express. In 1996 Bragg returned to the studio and released William Bloke, an uncharacteristically humorless album dominated by brooding ballads.

Meanwhile Woody Guthrie's daughter Nora asked Bragg to set some of her father's unrecorded lyrics to music, for which the Englishman enlisted the help of American roots rockers Wilco [see entry]. Wry, sexy, and above all fun, the critically acclaimed album that resulted, Mermaid Avenue, breathed new life into Guthrie's legacy and helped introduce his music to a new generation of listeners. The album—its title is a reference to the Coney Island street on which Guthrie lived when he wrote the lyrics—also featured cameos from singer Natalie Merchant and blues guitarist Corey Harris. (A second volume of tracks was released in 2000.)

In 1999 Bragg assembled Reaching to the Converted, a collection of odds and ends, all of them previously unavailable in the U.S. The album included Bragg's smash version of "She's Leaving Home," plus covers of "Walk Away Renee," the McCargle sisters' "Heart Like a Wheel," and the Smiths' "Jeane."

Brand Nubian/Grand Puba

Formed 1990, New Rochelle, NY

Lord Jamar (b. Lorenzo DeChalus, Sep. 17, 1968, Bronx, NY), voc.; Sadat X (b. Derek Murphy, Dec. 29, 1968, New York, NY), voc.; Grand Puba Maxwell (b. Maxwell Dixon, Mar. 4, 1966, Bronx), voc.; DJ Alamo, DJ.

1990—One for All (Elektra) (– Maxwell; – Alamo; + Sincere Allah [b. Terence Perry, June 5, 1970, New Rochelle], voc.) 1993—In God We Trust (– Allah) 1994—Everything Is Everything 1998—Foundation.

Grand Puba solo: 1992—Reel to Reel (Elektra) 1995—2000. Sadat X solo: 1996—Wild Cowboys (Loud/RCA).

Brand Nubian arrived on the hip-hop scene of the early '90s as one of the more outspoken advocates of the Five Percent Nation, an Islamic offshoot that considers whites "devils" and maintains that only 5 percent of the black population will serve as enlightened spiritual leaders. The group's didactic lyrics mostly center on Islamic themes.

Founded by Grand Puba Maxwell, who had rapped with the nonreligious group Masters of Ceremony in the late '80s, Brand Nubian mixes supple, laid-back rhythms with the singsong delivery of Puba and Lord Jamar. When the former departed in the fall of 1991 for a solo career, taking DJ Alamo with him, Jamar took over as lead rapper.

Aside from receiving positive critical notice, One for All reached #34 on the R&B chart (#130 pop, 1991) and produced the minor R&B hit singles "Wake Up" (#92, 1991) and "Slow Down" (#63, 1991), which borrowed a sample from Edie Brickell and New Bohemians' "What I Am." In God We Trust (#12 pop, #4 R&B, 1993) fared much better and included the hit "Punks Jump Up to Get Beat Down" (#42 R&B, 1992), which reached #2 on Billboard's rap singles chart. Everything Is Everything followed in 1994 with an increasing emphasis on the glorification of money and cars. Four years passed before Brand Nubian returned with Foundation and music that maintained the Nation of Islam philosophy but had grown more reflective with age. Guests on the album included Busta Rhymes and Common.

Grand Puba's solo debut, Reel to Reel (#28 pop, #14 R&B, 1992), though stylistically similar to Brand Nubian's music, featured less of the Five Percenter doctrine. Puba's single "360° (What Goes Around)" (#68 pop, #30 R&B, 1992) took its main sample from Gladys Knight and the Pips' "Don't Burn Down the Bridge." Puba also appeared on Sadat X's solo debut, 1996's Wild Cowboys, a concept album that compared the Old West with the Bronx today.

Brandy

Born Rayana Norwood, Feb. 11, 1979, McComb, MS 1994—Brandy (Atlantic) 1998—Never S-a-y Never.

Guided by parents who moved from Mississippi to California when she was four, the pop vocalist and actress known as Brandy was raised to be a show-business kid (as was her younger brother Willie Norwood Jr., who performs as the singer Ray-J). Schooled in a church youth choir directed by her father, Brandy got her first professional break at age 12, when she joined the R&B group Immature as a backup singer. Two years later, she signed a recording contract with Atlantic, which released her debut, Brandy (#20 pop, #6 R&B, 1994). The album sold more than 4 million copies, yielding the hit singles "I Wanna Be Down" (#6 pop, #1 R&B, 1994) and "Baby" (#4 pop, #1 R&B, 1995) that dressed up Brandy's wholesome adolescent diva image—reminiscent of a younger Whitney Houston—in smooth, pop-soul production that gave her gospel-inspired vibrato room to roar. Two Grammy nominations followed, as did another hit, "Sittin' Up in My Room" (#12 pop, #2 R&B, 1995), from the film soundtrack Waiting to Exhale. "Missing You," featuring Brandy along with Tamia, Gladys Knight, and Chaka Khan (#25 pop, #10 R&B, 1996), from the film Set It Off, was also a hit.

Brandy's spirited homegirl-next-door persona translated quickly to TV, where the sitcom Moesha was developed for her, debuted in 1996, and became the first hit for the fledgling UPN (United Paramount Network). The show revolved around the experiences of Brandy as a smart, responsible teenage girl growing up in a middle-class home in South Central L.A. Brandy also won the lead in ABC's version of Rodgers and Hammerstein's Cinderella in 1997. The following year Never S-a-y Never (#2 pop, #2 R&B, 1998) was released, featuring six songs that she had cowritten. These included the huge hit "The Boy Is Mine" (#1 pop, #1 R&B, 1998), a duet with Monica [see entry], which earned the duo a Grammy for Best Rhythm & Blues Performance by a Duo or Group with Vocal. The song's video implied there was a rivalry between the two, but Brandy and Monica denied this. Later that year, Brandy made her big-screen debut in the teen slasher sequel I Still Know What You Did Last Summer, in which she added some mild spice to her image: She exposed her navel, uttered a swear word, and had her first Hollywood make-out scene.

Laura Branigan

Born July 3, 1957, Brewster, NY
1982—Branigan (Atlantic) 1983—Branigan 2 1984—Self Control 1985—Hold Me 1987—Touch 1990—Laura Branigan 1993—Over My Heart 1995—The Best of Branigan.

In 1982 Laura Branigan's "Gloria" peaked at #2 on the pop chart and began a run of hits that, for a few years, made Branigan's plaintive alto a radio staple. After singing in her choir, performing in high school musical productions, and recording an album with a hippie rock band called Meadow, Branigan attended the American Academy of Dramatic Arts in Manhattan, then found work touring Europe as a backup singer in Leonard Cohen's band. Eventually, she came to the attention of Sid Bernstein, who had promoted the Beatles' first U.S. appearance and managed the Rascals and the Bay City Rollers. Bernstein helped Branigan land an audition with Atlantic Records chairman Ahmet Ertegun, who signed the singer to his label.

Branigan, her solo debut, featured "Gloria," originally an Italian song, which had been rewritten with English lyrics. The following year, Branigan 2 solidified her success with two more hit singles: "Solitaire" (#7, 1983) and the Michael Bolton-copenned "How Am I Supposed to Live Without You" (#12, 1983). In 1984 the title track to a third album, Self Control, gave Branigan her last Top 10 song to date (#4). In the mid- to late '80s, Branigan focused on acting, landing starring roles in two minor films. On her 1993 album, Over My Heart, Branigan sang some of the songs' lyrics in Spanish and in a South African dialect. Her 1995 greatest-hits package featured a cover of Donna Summer's "Dim All the Lights."

Brave Combo

Formed 1979, Denton, TX

Lyle Atkinson, bass, tuba; Dave Cameron, drums; Carl Finch (b. Nov. 29, 1951, Texarkana, AK), gr., kybds., accordion; Tim Walsh, sax, clarinet, flute.

The brainchild of University of North Texas art student and accordionist Carl Finch, Brave Combo was formed with a singular purpose: to destroy people's misconceptions about what's cool to like in music. A potent mixture of polka and other genres—conjunto, salsa, merengue, cha cha, ska, zydeco, and rumba, among others—played with superior musicianship, Brave Combo's witty, adventurous albums have made them critical and cult heroes, influencing bands such as 3 Mustaphas 3 and Camper Van Beethoven.

Originally releasing albums on its own Four Dots label, the band forged an alliance with Rounder Records in 1986 to widen its audience. After an initial tour of mental institutions, Brave Combo had its music heard on the National Public Radio shows Prairie Home Companion and Fresh Air, in the movie True Stories (directed by David Byrne), at the Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade, and at festivals around the world. Finch has also produced the recordings of other artists, ranging from conjunto legend Santiago Jiménez to singer/songwriter Sara Hickman, and backed up cult artist Tiny Tim on his final album, Girl, in 1996. Kiss of Fire was a special collaboration between Lauren Agnelli (ex-Washington Squares) and Brave Combo, under suggestion of Carl Finch, to re-create "the feeling of an old Parisian cabaret show." In 1999 Polkasonic won a Grammy for Best Polka Album.

Toni Braxton

Born Oct. 7, 1968, Severn, MD

1993—Toni Braxton (LaFace) 1996—Secrets 2000—The Heat.

One of a new generation of R&B stars to emerge in the '90s, and a flagship artist for the Atlanta-based LaFace Records production team of Kenneth "Babyface" Edmonds and Antonio "L.A." Reid, vocalist Toni Braxton rocketed to success with her self-titled #1 pop and R&B 1993 debut. It sold more than 8 million copies, scored a half-dozen hit singles—"Another Sad Love Song" (#7 pop, #2 R&B, 1993), "Breathe Again" (#3 pop, #4 R&B, 1993), "Seven Whole Days" (#1 R&B, 1993), "You Mean the World to Me" (#7 pop, #3 R&B, 1994), "I Belong to You" (#28 pop, #6 R&B, 1994), and "How Many Ways" (#35 pop, #11 R&B, 1994)—and won the artist three Grammy Awards, including one for Best New Artist.

The daughter of a Maryland Pentecostal minister, Braxton studied piano and joined her siblings in church choirs. Once she reached high school, Braxton convinced her strict parents to let her sing in a band, which they later forced her to quit. In the late '80s, she formed a singing group with her sisters. As the Braxtons, they recorded a 1990 single for Ansta that was little heard but did catch the ears of Edmonds and Reid, who were taken with Toni Braxton's smoky alto and gave her a contract in 1991. (Her sisters, who would later record an album as the Braxtons, toured with Braxton as backup vocalists.) Braxton's second album, Secrets (#2 pop, #1 R&B), was released in 1996, producing a #1 Grammy-winning single, "You're Making Me High." Other hits followed: "Unbreak My Heart" (#1 pop and R&B, 1996) and "I Love Me Some Him" b/w "I Don't Want To" (#19 pop, #9 R&B, 1997). The album sold nearly as well as her debut, eventually pushing total sales of both recordings to more than 16 million copies combined. Despite this and a major tour with smooth jazz saxophonist Kenny G., Braxton filed for bankruptcy in 1998, reporting a $3.9 million debt. That September, she started a four-month stint as Belle in Disney's Broadway musical Beauty and the Beast. Her relationship with pro football player Curtis Martin ended, but she found new romance with Keri Lewis of the R&B group Mint Condition. In 2000 Braxton released The Heat (#2 pop, #1 R&B), which sold 2 million copies and was driven by the single "He Wasn't Man Enough" (#2 pop, #1 R&B, 2000), which won a Grammy for Best Female R&B Vocal Performance. Other singles from the album were "Just Be a Man About It" (#32 pop, #6 R&B, 2000) and "Spanish Guitar" (#75 R&B, 2000).

Formed 1969, Los Angeles, CA

David Gates (b. Dec. 11, 1940, Tulsa, OK), voc., gtr., kybds.; James Griffin (b. Memphis, TN), voc., gtr.; Robb Royer, kybds. 1969—Bread (Elektra) (+ Mike Botts [b. Sacramento, CA], drums) 1970—On the Waters 1971—Manna (- Royer; + Larry Knechtel [b. Bell, CA], kybds.) 1972—Baby I'm-a Want You; Guitar Man 1973—The Best of Bread 1974—The Best of Bread, vol. 2 1977—Lost Without Your Love 1996—Retrospective (Rhino).

David Gates solo: 1973—First (Elektra) 1975—Never Let Her Go 1979—Goodbye Girl 1994—Love Is Always Seventeen (Discovery).

Black Tie (James Griffin): 1986—When the Night Falls (Bench).
The Remingtons (James Griffin): 1991—Blue Frontier (BNA)
1993—Aim for the Heart.

Bread's mellow pop rock was an early-'70s model for the "adult contemporary" sound. Led by guitarist and songwriter David Gates, the nucleus of Bread was made up of studio players who had been working as Pleasure Faire before they made their first album for Elektra in 1969. Their second album gained them the first of several gold singles, "Make It With You," a #1 hit in the summer of 1970. Buoyed by its success, they permanently added drummer Mike Botts (studio musician Jim Gordon had handled percussion on their first album) to play live concerts. Hits like "It Don't Matter to Me" (#10, 1970), "I" (#4, 1971), "Baby, I'm-a Want You" (#3, 1971), "Everything I Own" (#5, 1972), and "Guitar Man" (#11, 1972) continued until the group broke up in 1973. After three years together Bread had earned six gold albums. Thereafter, Gates had hit singles with "Never Let Her Go" (#29, 1975) and "Goodbye Girl" (#15, 1978). Bread re-formed in late 1976 to release its seventh gold album and a single, "Lost Without Your Love" (#9, 1977), and disbanded once again.

Gates and Griffin's legal battle over the rights to the Bread name dragged on from the late '70s to 1984, during which time a judge prohibited the group from recording, performing, or collecting royalties until the case was resolved. In 1994 Gates released his first album in more than 13 years. He remains active in music, usually working out of his home studio and performing his own and Bread songs at solo shows.

Gates, Griffin, Botts, and Knechtel re-formed Bread in 1997 for a 25th-anniversary tour.

Griffin teamed up with Billy Swan and ex-Eagles Randy Meisner in Black Tie, then founded the Remingtons, who released two country albums in the early '90s. Knechtel retired from music but returned to recording (including a 1979 New Age album, Mountain Moods) and touring (with Elvis Costello). Botts has written commercial jingles and children's music.

The Breeders: See Pixies

Eddie Brickell and New Bohemians

Formed 1985, Dallas, TX

Eddie Brickell (b. Mar. 10, 1966, Oak Cliff, TX), voc., gtr.; Kenny Withrow (b. Apr. 13, 1965), gtr.; Brad Houser (b. Sep. 7, 1960), bass; Wes Burt-Martin (b. May 28, 1964), gtr.; Matt Chamberlain (b. Apr. 17, 1967, San Pedro, CA), drums; John Bush, perc. 1988—Shooting Rubberbands at the Stars (Geffen) 1990—Ghost of a Dog.

Eddie Brickell solo: 1994—Picture Perfect Morning (Geffen).

Eddie Brickell and New Bohemians' relaxed, improvisational blend of rock, jazz, folk, and reggae suited its bohemian image. The band's 1988 debut single, "What I Am," was a #7 pop hit. Frontwoman Brickell made a reluctant star, shy and a bit awkward, especially onstage, but her endearingly off-beat soprano, with its subtle jazz inflections, charmed critics and fans alike, as did the trippy ingenuity of her lyrics, which drew on subjects ranging from the tragic Andy Warhol protégée Edie Sedgwick to the need for simplicity in expression addressed by "What I Am."

Brickell joined New Bohemians in 1985, after catching the band's gig in a Dallas bar. An art student at the city's Southern Methodist University, Brickell had dabbled in songwriting but was intimidated by the prospect of singing live. That night, though, a shot of Jack Daniel's gave her the courage to join the band onstage for an improvised jam. A couple of weeks later, Brickell and local guitarist Kenny Withrow were enlisted as full-time band members.

The group quickly developed a strong following and was signed to Geffen Records in late 1986. Recording sessions were plagued by delays and tensions between the band and producer Pat Moran. Shooting Rubberbands at the Stars was finally released in fall of 1988. Supported by the success of "What I Am" and the second single, "Circle" (#48, 1989), the album reached #4 and was named one of the best albums of the year by ROLLING STONE. A second effort, Ghost of a Dog, peaked at #32 and yielded no major hit singles, but a romantic relationship with Paul Simon kept Brickell's name in the press. Brickell married Simon in May 1992 and gave birth to their son in December; their daughter was born in 1995. The band had dissolved, and Brickell went solo, writing and performing acoustic guitar on all the songs for Picture Perfect Morning (1994), which was produced by her husband and Roy Halee and featured such guests as Dr. John, Barry White, and Art and Cyril Neville. Since then, she has chosen a quiet family life over the spotlight. New Bohemians drummer Matt Chamberlain carved out a successful niche for himself as a session player; he has recorded with such artists as Tom Amos, Fiona Apple, Melissa Ethendge, Peter Gabriel, Macy Gray, and Chris Isaak.

Brinsley Schwarz

Brinsley Schwarz, gtr., voc., sax; Nick Lowe (b. Mar. 25, 1949, Woodbridge, Eng.), bass, voc., gtr.; Billy Rankin, drums; Bob Andrews (b. June 20, 1949), kybds., bass, voc.

1970—Brinsley Schwarz (Capitol); Despite It All (Liberty, U.K.) (+ Ian Gomm [b. Mar. 17, 1947, London, Eng.], gtr.) 1972—Silver Pistol (U.A., U.K.); Nervous on the Road 1973—Please Don't Ever Change 1974—New Favourites; Original Golden Greats 1978—15 Thoughts of Brinsley Schwarz 1979—Brinsley Schwarz (Capitol).

Brinsley Schwarz was not successful outside the early-'70s English pub circuit, but the later successes of its members have given the group semilegendary status.

Overzealous promotion almost nipped the band in the bud when a planeload of UK journalists was flown to the States to witness its Fillmore East debut and returned with tales of overpromotion that hounded the band until its death. Brinsley Schwarz's good-time aura and country-flavored rock—a back-to-basics attitude in the wake of psychedelia—attracted ardent followers in England, but major success eluded it. The group's last album, New Favourites, was produced in 1974 by Dave Edmunds. After its release, Nick Lowe [see entry] teamed up with Edmunds to form Rockpile, but not before he and Ian Gomm cowrote "Cruel to Be Kind," which eventually became Lowe's biggest U.S. hit (#12, 1979). Gomm himself scored an American hit in 1979 with "Hold On" (#18). Bob Andrews and Brinsley Schwarz earned subsequent kudos in the Rumour, primarily backing Graham Parker and later Garland Jeffreys. In 1979 Capitol released a Brinsley Schwarz double-album compilation.

David Bromberg

Born Sep. 19, 1945, Philadelphia, PA

1972—David Bromberg (Columbia); Demon in Disguise 1974—Wanted Dead or Alive 1975—Midnight on the Water 1976—How Late'll Ya Play 'Til? (Fantasy) 1977—Best: Out of the Blues (Columbia); Reckless Abandon (Fantasy) 1978—Bandit in a Bathing Suit; My Own House 1980—You Should See the Rest of the Band 1989—Sideman Serenade (Rounder).

As a virtuoso on guitar, mandolin, fiddle, and other stringed instruments, David Bromberg was a folk-rock mainstay through the '70s. He grew up in Tarrytown, New York, and studied at Columbia University before becoming part of the mid-'60s Greenwich Village folk scene. He began playing sessions regularly in the late '60s and has since appeared on more than 90 albums, including ones by Bob Dylan, Ringo Starr, Tom Paxton, Chubby Checker, Sha Na Na, Carly Simon, and Phoebe Snow. Bromberg's eclecticism embraces blues, jazz, rock, bluegrass, country, and old-timey traditional music. He began releasing solo albums in 1972. By 1976 he had formed the David Bromberg Band, which toured extensively worldwide. In 1978 and 1979 he toured with fellow Fantasy Records artist Ralph McTell. But in mid-1980, following the accidental death of a band member, Bromberg retired from performing in order to spend more time with his family and began studying the craft of violin making in Chicago. He continues to play the occasional gig and has also become a leading collector and international dealer of violins.

The Brooklyn Bridge

Johnny Maestro (b. John Mastrangelo, May 7, 1939, Brooklyn, NY), voc.; Fred Ferrara (b. 1945), voc.; Mike Gregorio (b. 1947), voc.; Les Cauchi (b. 1945), voc.; Tom Sullivan (b. 1946), musical director; Carolyn Woods (b. 1947), organ; Jim Rosica (b. 1947), bass; Jim Macioce (b. 1947), gtr.; Artie Cantanzarita (b. 1949), drums; Shelly Davis (b. 1950), trumpet, kybds.; Joe Ruvio (b. 1947), sax.

1969—Brooklyn Bridge (Buddah); The Second Brooklyn Bridge.

The Del-Satins, a longstanding vocal quartet with which Johnny Maestro (formerly of the Crests) sang, and the Rhythm Method, a seven-piece band led by Tom Sullivan, joined forces to become the Brooklyn Bridge after they met as rivals in a Long Island talent contest in 1968. They had their first hit with a Jim Webb song originally recorded by the 5th Dimension, "Worst That Could Happen" (#3, 1969). "Blessed Is the Rain," "Your Husband—My Wife," and "Welcome Me Love" (all 1969) grazed the Top 40. The group charted its last single in 1970 but continued to record. By 1975, when they signed with Private Stock, the group had been trimmed to a quintet with Maestro still leading. They continued playing throughout the New York–New Jersey metropolitan area and appearing at nostalgia shows. In the '90s Maestro and Ferrara (an ex-Del Satin) continued to live on Long Island and play with revised lineups of the Brooklyn Bridge.

Garth Brooks

Born Troyal Garth Brooks, Feb. 7, 1962, Tulsa, OK

1989—Garth Brooks (Capitol) 1990—No Fences 1991—Ropin' the Wind 1992—Beyond the Season (Liberty); The Chase (Capitol) 1993—In Pieces 1994—The Hits 1995—Fresh Horses 1997—Sevens 1998—Double Live; The Limited Series 1999—Garth Brooks in . . . the Life of Chris Gaines; Garth Brooks & the Magic of Christmas.

The most stunning success story of the early-'90s contemporary country music boom was that of Garth Brooks. Blending rock and country influences, he is a singer/songwriter whose style owes as much to the influence of James Taylor as it does to George Jones. In performance, Brooks' high-energy stage show reflects his admiration for theatrical rock bands such as Queen and Kiss. Having sold more than 100 million albums since 1989, Brooks has easily outdistanced his competition, becoming the top-selling solo artist in history. By 1992, Brooks was a household name, and he represented a new breed of straight-talking country music heroes, defending homosexuals in song ("We Shall Be Free" from 1992's The Chase) and talking to Barbara Walters on national television about his past marital infidelity.

Brooks' mother had been a singer before marrying his father, a working-class draftsman. Both parents had children by former spouses; Brooks was the younger of two they had together. Brooks learned to play guitar and sing with his mother and joined a band during high school. His primary interest was sports, though, and he attended Oklahoma State University on a track scholarship. Only after graduating did Brooks devote himself to music. He briefly moved to Nashville in 1985 but found little luck there. After moving back to Oklahoma, marrying, and saving some money, Brooks decided to give Nashville another try. His persistence paid off when a Capitol Records talent scout spotted the singer in a club and signed him.

Released in 1989, Brooks' self-titled debut album peaked at #2 on the country albums chart and spawned four Top 10 country singles: "Much Too Young (To Feel This Damn Old)" (#8 C&W, 1989), "If Tomorrow Never Comes" (#1 C&W, 1989), "Not Counting You" (#2 C&W, 1990), and "The Dance" (#1 C&W, 1990). No Fences outdid its predecessor, reaching #1 on the country chart and #3 on pop and generating four #1 country hits: "Friends in Low Places" (1990), "Unanswered Prayers" (1990), "Two of a Kind, Workin' on a Full House" (1991), and "The Thunder Rolls" (1991). The video for the last single got flak from Country Music Television and the Nashville Network for its graphic depiction of domestic violence, a subject Brooks addressed in the song. But VH1 supported Brooks, thus heightening his crossover appeal to pop audiences, and No Fences became the biggest-selling country album of all time.

Brooks' winning streak continued with 1991's Ropin' the Wind, the first album in history to enter both Billboard's pop and country albums charts at #1. This time, there were three chart-topping country singles—a cover of Billy Joel's "Shameless" (1991) and 1992's "What's She Doing Now" and "The River"—as well as "Rodeo" (#3 C&W, 1991) and "Papa Loved Mama" (#3 C&W, 1992). Later in 1992 a Christmas album, Beyond the Season, shot to #2 on the pop and country albums charts. Before the year was out, the singer topped both those charts again with The Chase, which yielded "We Shall Be Free" (#12 C&W, 1992), "Somewhere Other Than the Night" (#1 C&W, 1992), "Learning to Live Again" (#2 C&W, 1993), and "That Summer" (#1 C&W, 1993).

Brooks' In Pieces surprised no one by debuting at #1 on the pop and country charts, and produced two 1993 #1 country singles: "Ain't Going Down (Till the Sun Comes Up)" and "American Honky-Tonk Bar Association." The Hits peaked at #1 on both pop and country charts in 1994. Hit singles of 1994 included "Standing Outside the Fire" (#3 C&W) and "One Night a Day" (#7 C&W). With such a massive sales record, the same success was expected of 1995's Fresh Horses, which included the #1 country singles "She's Every Woman" and "The Beaches of Cheyenne," as well as "It's Midnight Cinderella" (#5), "The Change" (#19), and a cover of Aerosmith's "The Fever" (#23). Fresh Horses was no slouch at #2 on the pop albums chart with 4 million copies sold, but the fact that it didn't quite hit the top slot and sold millions less than its predecessors made the driven Brooks consider the disc a disappointment. Although he'd said in interviews that he'd quit the music business when his fans stopped buying his albums, this setback wasn't nearly enough to push him into retirement. Still, when he was named Favorite Artist of the Year at the 1996 American Music Awards, he declined the honor, saying he didn't feel he deserved it.

In 1997 Brooks returned with a new album, Sevens (#1 pop and country) and a strong marketing campaign. Preceded by a free concert for 250,000 people in New York's Central Park in August 1997, which was broadcast live on HBO, the original release of Sevens was a limited-edition run of 777,777 copies offered as collectibles. The ploy worked, the special-edition copies sold out in a week, and the disc was well on its way to outselling Fresh Horses. Sevens contained its share of country hits: the #2 songs "In Another's Eyes," a duet with Trisha Yearwood, and "She's Gonna Make It," plus the #1 tracks "Longneck Bottle" and "Two Piña Colodas." The following year, Brooks' label continued its savvy marketing efforts, first broadcasting a live-via-satellite concert to Wal-Mart's nationwide to promote his live album, then releasing a box set, The Limited Series, containing his first six studio albums, each with a previously unreleased track, then discontinuing the manufacture of those six individual discs. The label's plan was for each title to be reissued, with higher-quality sound, on the 10th anniversary of its original release; meanwhile, the only available option was the higher-priced compilation.

Satisfied that his career was back on track, Brooks moved on to an elaborate multimedia project that entailed the creation of an alter ego. Taking on the persona of Chris Gaines, a fictional Australian alternative-rock star with a goatee, Brooks recorded an album with producer Don Was that posed as Gaines' greatest hits and encompassed styles from new wave to R&B. The concept album, as well as two TV specials, served as an introduction to a supposed future film, The Lamb, in which Brooks would star as Gaines. A daring idea (albeit subject to ridicule by critics), the Chris Gaines album peaked at #2 on the pop chart, selling 1.1 million copies (though country fans shunned it).

The Brothers Johnson

George Johnson (b. May 17, 1953, Los Angeles), gtr., voc.;

Louis Johnson (b. Apr. 13, 1955, Los Angeles), bass, voc.
 1976—Look Out for #1 (A&M) 1977—Right on Time
 1978—Blam! 1980—Light Up the Night 1981—Winners
 1982—Blast! (The Latest and the Greatest) 1984—Out of Control 1988—Kick It to the Curb.
 Louis Johnson solo: 1981—Passage (A&M).

George and Louis Johnson began playing music together when they were seven and eight years old, respectively. They put together their first group, the Johnson Three + 1, with older brother Tommy on drums and cousin Alex Weir (later a member of the Brothers Johnson Band) on rhythm guitar. They worked their way up from school dances to opening L.A. shows for such acts as the Dells, David Ruffin, and Bill Medley, among others. Bobby Womack produced their first single, "Testify." George had just graduated from high school when Billy Preston invited him to join his band, the God Squad, as lead guitarist. When Preston's bass player abruptly left in the middle of a tour, George persuaded Preston to hire Louis. In their two years with Preston, the Johnsons contributed several songs to his albums, including his 1974 hit single "Struttin'" (#22 pop, #11 R&B).

The brothers left Preston in 1975 and spent almost a year writing songs, rehearsing, and recording demo tapes. That same year Quincy Jones hired the Johnsons for a tour of Japan. He later recorded four Johnson compositions on his Mellow Madness (#16, 1975) and, having signed the duo to an A&M recording contract of their own, produced their first four albums. Look Out for #1 sold over a million copies, with two hit singles, "I'll Be Good to You" (#3 pop, #1 R&B, 1976) and "Get the Funk Out Ma Face" (#30 pop, #4 R&B, 1976). Right on Time went gold three days after its release and platinum three months later. "Strawberry Letter 23" (a Shuggie Ous song) was a hit single (#5 pop, #1 R&B, 1977) and "O," the Brothers' tribute to Jones, was awarded the 1977 Grammy for Best Instrumental. With the eight-piece Brothers Johnson Band, George and Louis toured the U.S., Europe, and Japan in 1977.

A departure from the nonstop dance format of their first two albums, Blam! contained the Johnsons' first ballad and "Ride-O-Rocket," a song written for them by Ashford and Simpson. The U.S. tour in support of that album took them to 80 cities. After a year's vacation, they returned to the charts in 1980 with Light Up the Night (#5 pop, #1 R&B) and its hit single "Stomp!" (#7 pop, #1 R&B). Their first self-produced album, 1981's Winners, was their first LP to sell fewer than a million copies, but it did deliver a #11 R&B single, "The Real Thing." Their last R&B Top 20 hits were "Welcome to the Club" (1982) and "You Keep Me Coming Back" (1984).

In 1989 the Brothers Johnson appealed to A&M principals Jerry Moss and Herb Alpert to release them from their contract, which they did. In 1997 "Strawberry Letter 23" was resurrected by director Quentin Tarantino, who featured the tune in his high-profile film Jackie Brown. As of 2000 George Johnson was touring under the Brothers Johnson name—though his retired brother Louis was nowhere to be seen.

Arthur Brown

Born June 24, 1942, Whitby, Eng.

1968—The Crazy World of Arthur Brown (Atlantic) 1972—Galactic Zoo Dossier (Polydor) 1973—Kingdom Come (Track, U.K.); The Journey (Polydor) 1975—Dance With Arthur Brown (Gull).

The eccentric Arthur Brown had one U.S. hit. "Fire" (#2, 1968). A trailblazer of theatrical rock, he capped his performances by igniting what appeared to be his hair (actually a metal helmet) and so became the rage in London during the summer of 1967. Pete Townshend gave him a record deal with the Who's Track label, but Brown proved unable to repeat his initial success. By 1969 his band, the Crazy World of Arthur Brown (which included drummer Carl Palmer, later of Emerson, Lake and Palmer and Asia, and keyboardist Vincent Crane of Atomic Rooster), had broken up.

Brown subsequently attempted several comebacks. From 1970 to 1974 he fronted Kingdom Come an electronic rock band (and one of the first to employ a drum machine). After departing that group he toured the Middle East and upon returning to England studied meditation. He played a small role in the Who's Tommy movie in 1975. The Who connection continues to this day. In 1989 Pete Townshend convened the Who to cut "Fire" for his solo LP The Iron Man.

Brown moved to Austin, Texas, in 1980 and toured occasionally with a group he called the Even Crazier World of Arthur Brown. He's recorded a number of albums for small labels, including Brown, Black, and Blues (Blue Wave Records), with former Mothers of Invention drummer Jimmy Carl Black, then Brown's partner in a housepainting company.

Bobby Brown

Born Robert Baresford Brown, Feb. 5, 1969, Boston, MA 1986—King of Stage (MCA) 1988—Don't Be Cruel 1989—Dance!... Ya Know It! 1992—Bobby 1993—Remixes in the Key of B 1997—Forever 2000—Greatest Hits.

After leaving the popular kiddie-funk vocal group New Edition in 1986, Bobby Brown found even greater success as a solo artist. The singer's bad-boy charisma and sexually charged dance moves thrilled female fans, and the hook-laden songs and buoyant New Jack Swing arrangements on his albums suited his breezily confident delivery to a tee.

Brown's first solo album, 1986's King of Stage, produced the #1 R&B hit "Girlfriend," but his pop crossover came with 1988's Don't Be Cruel. Brown enlisted the fledgling writer/producers who would soon emerge as giants in the hip-hop and R&B communities: Antonio "L.A." Reid and Kenneth "Babyface" Edmonds helped craft most of the album's material, and Teddy Riley collaborated with Brown on the singer's first #1 pop single, "My Prerogative" (1988). The album also topped the pop chart, and Brown enjoyed five more Top 10 pop hits in 1988 and 1989: "Don't Be Cruel" (#8 pop, #1 R&B, 1988), "Roni" (#3 pop, 1989), "Every Little Step" (#3 pop, #1 R&B, 1989), "On Our Own" (#2 pop, #12

R&B, 1989), and "Rock Wit'cha" (#7 pop, #3 R&B, 1989). A remix album, Dance!... Ya Know It!, reached #9 on the pop chart and #7 on R&B. In 1990 Brown had another #1 pop single, a duet with Glenn Medeiros called "She Ain't Worth It."

Meanwhile, rumors of drug abuse were tainting Brown's good fortune. When he married pop superstar Whitney Houston in 1992, cynics assumed that both singers were trying to alleviate image problems. (It had been rumored that Houston was a lesbian.) Houston appeared on Brown's 1992 album, Bobby, on the duet "Something in Common." Bobby became a #2 pop album and topped the R&B chart; it also spawned the hits "Humpin' Around" (#3 pop, #1 R&B, 1992) and "Good Enough" (#7 pop, #5 R&B, 1992). In 1993 Houston and Brown—who had fathered three children with a previous girlfriend—welcomed a daughter, Bobbi.

After participating in a 1996 New Edition reunion tour and its accompanying '96 album, Home Again, Brown released Forever (#61 pop, #15 R&B) in 1997. But it was for his numerous run-ins with the law that Brown remained in the public eye: He was arrested in 1995 for allegedly assaulting a tourist at a Disney World nightclub (the charges were later dropped); the following year he received two years probation for kicking a security guard at a West Hollywood hotel. In 1998 Brown spent five days in jail on a drunk-driving charge. Two years later, he returned to the slammer for 75 days, this time for violating his probation from the drunk-driving conviction.

Charles Brown

Born Sep. 13, 1922, Texas City, TX; died Jan. 21, 1999, Oakland, CA 1952—Mood Music (Aladdin) 1961—Sings Christmas Songs (King) 1962—Million Sellers (Imperial) 1963—The Boss of the Blues (Mainstream) 1964—Great Charles Brown Will Grip Your Heart (King) 1965—Ballads My Way (Mainstream) 1971—Blues n' Brown (Jewel) 1975—Charles Brown (Bulldog) 1979—Sunny Land (Route 66) 1986—One More for the Road (Blueside) 1990—All My Life (Bullseye Blues) 1992—Driftin' Blues: The Best of Charles Brown (EMI); Someone to Love (Bullseye Blues) 1993—Song for Christmas/Driftin' Blues 1994—Just a Lucky So and So; Cool Christmas Blues (Rouder) 1995—Walkin' in Circles (Night Train); These Blues (Verve) 1996—Honeydripper 1998—So Goes Love 1999—In a Grand Style.

A highly influential singer of the prerock era, Charles Brown was a master of "ballad blues," the smooth, jazz-inflected vocal music whose better-known exponent was Nat "King" Cole. Prompted by his uncle and grandmother to study the raw blues of Big Maceo and Leroy Carr and the sophisticated style of Art Tatum, Brown learned to play the piano as a child. He graduated with a degree in chemistry, and his first job was teaching high school chemistry; he also worked in a chemical factory.

His musical career began with a move to L.A. in 1943, when he filled the pianist's spot in Johnny Moore's Three Blazers. He first recorded in 1945 when, after winning a talent contest for playing Rachmaninoff, he was given studio time by Philo Records. His "Driftin' Blues," released as a single by Three Blazers, introduced his sound—so smoky and elegant that it became known as "cocktail blues," despite its bleak undercurrents. Its vocals also revealed Brown's influences—Robert Johnson, Louis Jordan, and Frank Sinatra among them.

In 1948 Brown went solo and throughout the early '50s penned wistful R&B hits: "Trouble Blues" (#1, 1949), "Black Night" (#1, 1951), "Seven Long Days" (#2, 1951), "Hard Times" (#7, 1952). He recorded his classic "Merry Christmas Baby" (covered in the '60s by Otis Redding and Elvis Presley, and in the '80s by Bruce Springsteen) in 1947, and in 1960 he released "Please Come Home for Christmas," which entered the Christmas charts for 10 consecutive seasons and was later recorded by the Eagles. These holiday songs are perhaps his best known. In 1962 Sam Cooke refashioned Brown's "I Want to Go Home" into "Bring It On Home to Me," one of Cooke's biggest hits. While Brown continued to perform in small venues, he also supported himself by working as a janitor. He enjoyed a career renaissance through the '90s that began when he toured with Bonnie Raitt in 1990. He remains best known as a songwriter whose compositions have been recorded by B.B. King, Fats Domino, and Bruce Springsteen, and as a stylist on whom the early Ray Charles, among numerous others, patterned his singing technique. Brown died of congestive heart failure in 1999; singer and minister Solomon Burke presided at the funeral.

Clarence "Gatemouth" Brown

Born Apr. 18, 1924, Vinton, LA

1974—Clarence "Gatemouth" Brown Sings Louis Jordan (Black and Blue) 1975—Gate's on the Heat (Barclay); Down South in Bayou Country 1976—Bogalusa Boogie Man 1978—Blackjack (Music Is Medicine) 1979—San Antonio Ballbuster (Charly) 1982—Alright Again! (Rounder) 1983—One More Mile; The Original Peacock Recordings 1986—Real Life; Pressure Cooker (Alligator) 1989—Standing My Ground 1991—No Looking Back 1993—Just Got Lucky (Evidence) 1995—The Man (Verve) 1996—Long Way Home 1997—Gate Swings 1999—American Music, Texas Style (Blue Thumb).

Although blues singer/guitarist Clarence "Gatemouth" Brown has had only one chart single during his career, his mix of blues and country marks him as a Texas original. Born in Louisiana, he grew up in Orange, Texas. His father was a musician who taught him to play the guitar when he was five; by age 10 he could play the fiddle and mandolin as well, and in ensuing years he picked up the drums, bass, and harmonica. Nicknamed by a teacher for his big voice, "Gatemouth" Brown began singing at an early age.

In the early '40s he was a drummer for the Brown Skin Models. After serving in the Army Corps of Engineers, he returned to show business after World War II, working in big bands in San Antonio. He made his solo debut in 1945 when he sat in for an ill T-Bone Walker. That show introduced him to club owner Don Robey, who signed him to a management contract that bound him for the next 20 years. Robey sent Brown to L.A. in 1947 to record for Aladdin Records. In 1949 Brown was the first to record for Robey's own company, Peacock Records; that same year he cut "Mary Is Fine," his only hit. Either under his own name or as D. Malone, Robey took songwriter's credit on many of Brown's compositions; Brown's bitter "You Got Money" was written about Robey. Between 1947 and 1960 Brown recorded more than 50 sides for Peacock, including "Pale Dry Boogie" and "Okie Dokie Stomp."

He spent most of the '50s leading two bands, a 23-piece black orchestra and a smaller group of white musicians. This arrangement allowed him to play both all-black clubs and white establishments. His style combined elements of country, jazz, blues, and Cajun music, and has influenced guitarists as diverse as Albert Collins, Frank Zappa, Roy Buchanan, and Guitar Slim.

Brown broke free of Robey sometime between 1959 and 1964. He continued touring and recording (for several labels, including Chess) and worked for a while as a deputy sheriff in New Mexico. By 1971 he was performing again and building a following in Europe, especially in France, where he enjoyed great popularity and recorded for French companies such as Black and Blue, Barclay, and Blue Star. He appeared at numerous jazz festivals throughout the years. His half brother, James "Widemouth" Brown, was also a singer and died in 1971.

After a U.S. State Department-sponsored tour of East Africa, Brown settled in New Orleans and recorded his first domestically released album, Blackjack. In 1979 he recorded Makin' Music with country star Roy Clark. Alright Again! won a Best Blues Grammy in 1982. Brown continued touring extensively and, in 1988, again sponsored by the State Department, played Honduras and Nicaragua.

As of 2000, Brown has been nominated for seven Grammys. He has also received various W.C. Handy Awards and a Pioneer Award from the Rhythm & Blues Foundation. He was inducted into the Blues Foundation Hall of Fame in 1999. His recent work explores the union of roots music and big band sounds.

Dennis Brown

Born Feb. 1, 1957, Kingston, Jam.; died July 1, 1999, Kingston 1972—Super Reggae and Soul Hits (Trojan) 1975—Just Dennis 1978—Visions of Dennis Brown (Lightning); Westbound Train (Third World) 1979—Words of Wisdom (Laser); Live at Montreux; Wolf and Leopards 1980—Spellbound 1981—Foul Play (A&M) 1982—Love Has Found a Way 1989—Visions (Shanachie); Words of Wisdom 1990—Slow Down 1991—Over Proof; Victory Is Mine (RAS) 1992—Blazing (Shanachie); Friends for Life 1993—Cosmic Force (Heartbeat) 1994—Light My Fire 1995—Temperature Rising (VP); Nothing

Like This (RAS) 1996—Milk and Honey; Could It Be (VP) 1999—Tribulation (Heartbeat); Stone Cold World (VP); Bless Me Jah (RAS) 2000—May Your Food Basket Never Empty; Let Me Be the One (VP).
With Gregory Isaacs: 1984—Judge Not (Shanachie) 1989—No Contest (Music Works) 1994—Blood Brothers (RAS).

The most prominent exponent of the romantic style of reggae known as "lovers rock," singer Dennis Brown began his career in Jamaican and other West Indian tourist clubs when he was nine. In his teen years, he became a protégé of Jamaican bandleader and producer Bryon Lee, and by the mid-'60s he was recording regularly for such producers as Coxsone Dodd, Derrick Harnot, and Joe Gibbs. He had a string of Jamaican hits in the late '60s and '70s—including "No Man Is an Island" (1968), "Silhouettes" (1968), "Baby Don't Do It" (1971), "Look of Love" (1971), "Things in Life" (1972), and "Money in My Pocket" (1972)—mostly conventional pop love songs set to reggae rhythms. In 1979 he rerecorded "Money in My Pocket" for issue in the U.K., it reached #14 on the British charts and launched Brown's international popularity. That year he toured Europe, and in 1980 he signed with A&M, his first major label. He toured North America, poised to reach the pop market with such numbers as "Foul Play" and "If I Ruled the World," both of which were given some airplay on black stations. This period also yielded two modest pop chart hits in the U.K., "Love Has Found Its Way" (#47, 1982) and "Halfway Up Halfway Down" (#56, 1982).

In 1983 Brown returned to expand his American following by recording with KC and the Sunshine Band but ended up alienating the fans he had. His collaborations with Gregory Isaacs, however, reestablished his credibility. He remained popular in Jamaica, working with producers King Jammy and Gussie Clark. In America, Brown signed with the world music specialist Shanachie in 1987 and appeared on the Reggae Sunsplash Tour in 1991. Brown succumbed to respiratory ailments in 1999; a memorial celebration featuring numerous reggae luminaries was held on the one-year anniversary of his death. Brown's posthumously released Let Me Be the One (2000) was nominated for a Grammy, as was 1995's Light My Fire.

Foxy Brown

Born Inga Fung Marchand, Sep. 6, 1979, Brooklyn, NY
1996—Ill Na Na (Violator/Def Jam) 1999—Chyna Doll (Def Jam) 2001—Broken Silence.
With the Firm (Nas, Escobar, AZ, and Nature): 1997—The Album (Aftermath/Interscope).

Taking her stage name and a strong dose of attitude from a tough, streetwise heroine played by Pam Grier in a '70s "blaxploitation" film, Foxy Brown began attracting notice as a guest rapper on hip-hop hits before she was 17. She performed on tracks by Jay-Z, Nas, Toni Braxton, and L.L. Cool J, whose producers invited her to rap over "I Shot Ya" after she won a 1994 talent show in her native Brooklyn. Brown's accomplishments as a guest artist prompted a major-label bidding war, and in 1996 her debut album, Ill Na Na (#7 pop, #2 R&B), was released with the hits "Get Me Home" (#42 pop, #10 R&B, 1996) and "I'll Be" (#7 pop, #5 R&B, 1997). The album flaunted Brown's provocative sexuality, a sometimes controversial stance she shared with another ribald luxury-obsessed female MC, estranged friend Lil' Kim. The next year, Brown joined fellow rap artists Nas, AZ, and Nature in the hip-hop supergroup the Firm, which released The Album (#1 pop, #1 R&B, 1997). She was also featured as part of the R&B/hip-hop Smokin' Grooves summer package tour. In 1999 Brown's second album, Chyna Doll (#1 pop, #1 R&B), was released, boasting blunt, autobiographical lyrics on such tracks as "I Can't" (#61 R&B, 1997). Broken Silence addressed the difficulties Brown had faced following her stardom in the '90s.

"Soul Brother Number One," James Brown was perhaps the best known and clearly the most successful black artist of the '60s and early '70s; his polyrhythmic funk vamps virtually reshaped dance music. With some 800 songs in his repertoire, the astonishingly prolific Brown has influenced a wide range of contemporary artists from every genre—rock, soul, jazz, R&B, and hip-hop. And his adamant refusal to conform to anyone's vision other than his own bolstered his icon status.

Brown was born into poverty in the rural South around the time of the Depression (some records give his birth date as 1928; he claims it is 1933). As a child, he picked cotton, shined shoes, danced for pennies in the streets of Augusta, Georgia, and stole. Convicted of armed robbery at age 16, he spent three years in a juvenile detention institution. While incarcerated, Brown made the acquaintance of Bobby Byrd, who performed with his family gospel group at the institution. Byrd's family eventually helped obtain Brown's release by taking the youngster in and getting him a job. Brown tried semi-professional sports, first as a boxer, then as a baseball pitcher, but a leg injury ruined his chances of going pro. In the meantime, Byrd and Brown had put together a gospel group, which performed under a succession of different names at the Mount Zion Baptist Church, in Toccoa, Georgia, and at auditoriums in the area. Byrd and Brown sang duets, with three or four other members singing background vocals and harmonies. After seeing a rock & roll show featuring Hank Ballard and the Midnighters, Fats Domino, and others, Brown and Byrd left gospel music behind, transforming the group (Johnny Terry, Sylvester Keels, and Floyd Scott) into the Flames. Each Flame sang, danced, and played an instrument or two—Brown's were piano and drums. Byrd also played keyboards and shared vocals; he would remain Brown's sideman off and on during the next three-plus decades.

From a base in Macon, Georgia, the Flames had been touring the South for two years when Ralph Bass, head of Federal Records, signed them in 1956. Their first single, "Please, Please, Please," a big hit in Georgia and adjacent states, eventually sold a million copies. Subsequent releases in the same gospel-influenced yet distinctly rougher R&B style made Brown a regional star until "Try Me" became a national hit in 1958, charting #1 in R&B, #48 in pop.

By this time, Brown had become the de facto leader of the group, now called the Famous Flames. Guided by Universal Attractions director Ben Bart, Brown created the James Brown Revue, complete with opening acts, his own emcee, and a stage band—the James Brown Band. The show was precisely choreographed, with Brown pumping his hips, twisting on one foot, and doing splits as the troupe executed their own intricate steps. Night after night, he would feign collapse and be helped from the stage, only to stop, throw off the cape, and start all over again. Despite its predictability, the gimmick never lost its power to bring fans to their feet. Sweating off a purported seven pounds a night, and breaking box-office records in every major black venue in America, Brown earned the nickname "Mr. Dynamite" and the title "The Hardest Working Man in Show Business."

As Brown's band became one of the tightest in the field, Brown wanted to showcase them on his recordings. Federal, however, refused to let him use them in the studio, so he arranged for the band to record for another company as Nat Kendrick and the Swans. The resulting instrumental hit, "Mashed Potatoes," persuaded Federal's parent company, King, to take over Brown's contract and to sign up the James Brown Band both for Brown's sessions and as a separate act. From then on, Brown concentrated on pared-down, jump-and-shout dance music ("Think," "Night Train"). If a new song made the concert crowd dance, he would record it that night, often in one take.

Simultaneously, Brown was sending such raw, emotive R&B ballads as "Bewildered" (#8 R&B, #40 pop, 1961), "I Don't Mind" (#4 R&B, #47 pop, 1961), and "Lost Someone" (#2 R&B, #48 pop, 1961) up the charts. Brown's Live at the Apollo, recorded in Harlem in 1962 and patterned after Ray Charles' live In Person, sold a million copies, unprecedented for a black music album. In 1963, frustrated by King's failure to reach into the white market, Brown and Bart formed Fair Deal Productions, "Out of Sight," which Fair Deal released through Smash Records, hit #1 R&B, #24 pop.

Brown's revised contract with King in 1965 gave him complete artistic control. He revamped his band under the leadership of Nat Jones, and with his "Papa's Got a Brand New Bag," became a world-class force in popular music. Disposing of the conventional verse and chorus structure, eliminating even chord progressions, he distilled his sound to its essence: rhythm and, more specifically, "the 1." "Brand New Bag" topped the R&B chart, as did "I Got You (I Feel Good)" and "It's a Man's, Man's, Man's World." After Alfred "Pee Wee" Ellis replaced Jones as bandleader, Brown continued to score with "Cold Sweat," "I Got the Feelin'," "Say It Loud, I'm Black and I'm Proud," "Give It Up or Turn It A-Loose," and "Mother Popcorn"—which were all Top 20 (many of them Top 10) pop hits. Concurrently, he recorded instrumental albums (a total of 11 between 1961 and 1971) that never attained great commercial success but, featuring his organ and piano work, continued his rhythmic explorations (tracks from the best of these can be found on the 1993 anthology, Soul Pride).

The late '60s found James Brown a cultural hero, "Soul Brother Number One." As a black man of wealth, independence, and influence, he was a symbol of self-determination and triumph over racism. He took that responsibility seriously. Songs such as "Say It Loud," "Don't Be a Drop-Out," and "I Don't Want Nobody to Give Me Nothing (Open Up the Door I'll Get It Myself)" contained direct social messages. He sponsored programs for ghetto youth, spoke at high schools, invested in black businesses, performed for troops in Vietnam, and went on television after the April 4, 1968, assassination of Martin Luther King Jr. to plead for calm—a service for which he was ceremoniously thanked by Vice President

James Brown

Hubert Humphrey. In Boston, where he was scheduled to perform after rioting had broken out in several cities, city authorities feared violence. Brown's decision to televise the concert live locally was credited with helping to maintain the peace.

In late 1969 Brown faced the mutiny of his celebrated '60s band, which included saxophonist Maceo Parker and trombonist Fred Wesley. Brown enlisted hot young instrumentalists who, with his nurturing, continued to develop the sound that would be called funk. The youngbloods, who as the new band were dubbed the JB's, included brothers William "Bootsy" and Phelps "Catfish" Collins, whose distinctive bass and lead guitar playing, respectively, ushered in a new sound in soul music. The Collinses left after a year, later joining George Clinton's Parliament/Funkadelic organization [see entry]. Key '60s band members saxophonist St. Clair Pinckney and guitarist Jimmy Nolan, as well as Parker and Wesley, eventually returned, but the only consistent member was drummer John "Jabo" Starks, who originally joined in 1965.

The JB's were then led by Wesley, who with Brown began creating music that was even less formal than before, as the instrumental sections dug into funk grooves. Brown, dubbing himself "Minister of New New Super Heavy Funk," mixed sociopolitical messages and stream-of-consciousness phrasing with an undeniable beat.

Brown had been managing himself since the death of his manager in the late '60s, and in 1971 he had signed with an international record company, Polydor, and sold it his entire back catalogue. His records—"Hot Pants" (#15, 1971), "Make It Funky" (#68, 1971), "Talking Loud and Saying Nothing" (#27, 1972), "Get on the Good Foot" (#18, 1972), "The Payback" (#26, 1974), "My Thang" (#29, 1974), and "Papa Don't Take No Mess" (#31, 1974)—continued to sell by the millions. Though R&B chart-toppers, they increasingly failed to crack the pop Top 20, on which softer rock, highly polished R&B ballads, and the first hints of disco dominated.

Around 1975 Brown's popularity began to wane. Because of financial difficulties, Brown was forced to sell his three black radio stations and his jet. The Internal Revenue Service claimed he owed $4.5 million in back taxes; a manager said Brown was part of a payola scandal; Brown's son Teddy had died in a car crash in 1973; and his second marriage ended. Young record buyers favored heirs like the Ohio Players, Kool and the Gang, and the Parliament-Funkadelic Thang (which now employed Wesley and Parker).

He was welcomed to Africa and Japan as a star, and at home he continued to work. When disco peaked in the late '70s, he promoted himself as "The Original Disco Man," which he was. When "It's Too Funky in Here" reached #15, it was called a "comeback." With a cameo role in the 1980 movie The Blues Brothers, Brown introduced his soul-church preaching to a new generation. Returning to American stages that year, he drew much of his audience from the white punk-funk faction, for whom he was the essence of polyrhythmic minimalism. In 1980 he recorded "Rapp Payback (Where Iz Moses?)," an homage to his earlier singles "Brother Rapp" and "The Payback," which prefigured the enormous influence he would come to have on the incipient rap scene. The single, a British dance hit (#39 U.K., 1981), helped activate a James Brown resurgence there. Finding himself label-less in the early '80s, Brown recorded the album Bring It On! for his own Augusta Sound label.

In 1984 Brown joined with rapper Afrika Bambaataa on "Unity," released on New York rap label Tommy Boy. By this time, his music had been claimed as the virtual basis for hip-hop beats; among others, Kool Moe Dee and Eric B. & Rakim scored hits by sampling Brown's rhythms, and his 1969 recording "Funky Drummer" (featuring drummer Clyde Stubblefield) began appearing in myriad versions on rap and pop records. The rappers also borrowed poses from Brown's persona—street-savvy, self-contained, defiant. With Brown inducted as a charter member into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1986, his revival was bolstered by "Living in America," the theme song to Rocky IV. Recorded at the request of director Sylvester Stallone, the single (#4, 1986), included on the album Gravity (with guest stars Alison Moyet and Steve Winwood), won a Grammy in 1987 for Best R&B Performance. In 1989 Brown (with writer Bruce Tucker) published an autobiography, James Brown: The Godfather of Soul.

In 1988, however, Brown's career ground to a halt. When his fourth wife, Adrienne, reported beatings, Brown was charged with assault with intent to murder and aggravated assault and battery. He surrendered to Aiken County, South Carolina, authorities near his 60-acre home in May and was released on bond. Then followed a year of bizarre legal troubles during which Adrienne, after her own arrest for alleged possession of PCP, first announced that she would file for legal separation, then relented and also withdrew the assault charges. Adrienne was arrested again for PCP possession and for arson. In September, as rumors circulated about his own PCP abuse and problems with the IRS, Brown allegedly threatened a group of people with a shotgun and then engaged in an interstate car chase with police that ended in his receiving a six-year sentence in a work-release program.

Paroled in 1991 after serving two years of his sentence—during which he was visited by the Reverend Al Sharpton, Jesse Jackson, and Republican stalwart Lee Atwater but ignored by the music industry and most of his old friends—Brown returned to work with a pay-per-view television concert and a new album. With Star Time, a four-CD retrospective (later chosen by ROLLING STONE as Reissue of the Year), the best of Brown's catalogue was freshly available, and the singer's stature was unassailable.

The late '90s were difficult for Brown personally. His wife died in January 1996, two days after undergoing cosmetic surgery. Two years later, the singer—then in his 60s—was arrested for possession of drugs and firearms. He continued making music, however, releasing I'm Back in 1998, his first studio album in four years.

Roy Brown

Born Sep. 10, 1925, New Orleans, LA, died May 25, 1981, Los Angeles, CA

N.A.—The Blues Are All Brown (Bluesday); Roy Brown Sings 24 Hits (King); Roy Brown and Wynonie Harris 1973—Hard Times (Bluesway) 1976—Hard Luck Blues (King) 1978—Good Rocking Tonight (Route 66); Laughing but Crying 1979—Cheapest Price in Town (Faith) 1982—Good Rockin' Tonight (Quicksilver).

Blues shouter Roy Brown had a major impact on early rock & roll. He wrote and recorded the jump-blues "Good Rocking Tonight" in 1947, and it became a #13 R&B hit the following year, Elvis Presley recorded it at one of his 1954 Sun Records sessions and also had a hit. Throughout the late '40s and '50s, Brown enjoyed over a dozen Top 10 R&B hits, including "Long About Midnight" (#1, 1948), "Boogie at Midnight" (#3, 1949), "Cadillac Baby" (#6, 1950), and "Hard Luck Blues" (#1, 1950).

Brown's big-band backups helped shape the New Orleans sound (Fats Domino, Allen Toussaint), his stage shows with his band, the Mighty Men, foreshadowed modern rock theatrics. B.B. King, Bobby "Blue" Bland, and others have cited Brown's singing as an influence. Brown was still playing frequent club dates when he died of a heart attack in 1981. Three years later Robert Plant and the Honeydrippers had a Top 25 hit with Brown's "Rockin' at Midnight."

Ruth Brown

Born Jan. 30, 1928, Portsmouth, VA

1959—Late Date With Ruth Brown (Atlantic); Miss Rhythm Along Comes Ruth (Philips); Gospel Time (Lecton) 1976—Sugar Babe (President) 1982—The Soul Survives (Flair) 1988—Have a Good Time (Fantasy) 1989—Blues on Broadway; Miss Rhythm (Greatest Hits and More) (Rhino) 1993—The Songs of

My Life (Fantasy) 1996—Rockin' in Rhythm: The Best of Ruth Brown (Rhino) 1997—R+B=Ruth Brown (Bullseye Blues) 1999—A Good Day for the Blues.

Known as "Miss Rhythm," Ruth Brown was, arguably, the biggest female R&B star of the '50s, briefly rivaling Dinah Washington as the era's leading black woman singer. In its early days, her label Atlantic Records was known as "the House That Ruth Built." As a teenager she sang in her church choir, then worked with jazz big bands in the '40s. She signed with the fledgling Atlantic in 1948 and recorded more than 80 songs for the label before 1962, making her its most prolific and best-selling act of that period. At first her hits were confined to the R&B charts, which she topped with "Teardrops From My Eyes" (1950), "5-10-15 Hours" (1952), "(Mama) He Treats Your Daughter Mean" (1953, recorded with a band led by Ray Charles), and "Oh What a Dream" and "Mambo Baby" (both 1954). In 1956 she began performing in disc jockey Alan Freed's rock & roll shows and attracting a white youth audience. "Lucky Lips"—written by Jerry Leiber and Mike Stoller—made #25 on the pop chart in 1957, followed the next year by "This Little Girl's Gone Rockin'" (#24 pop). Her last R&B Top 10 hit, "Don't Deceive Me," appeared in early 1960.

In 1961 Brown left Atlantic for Philips. She had a couple of minor hits on that label, then retired. In the '70s she reemerged to record for Cobblestone and President, and, later, Fantasy, where her records featured jazz and blues stylings. Brown costarred in the 1986 off-Broadway musical Staggerlee, and in 1989 earned a Tony Award for her role in Broadway's Black and Blue. She appeared in the John Waters film Hairspray (1988). She was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1993.

One of the many stories in her award-winning autobiography, Miss Rhythm, (1996), traces her long battle to recover decades-old royalties from Atlantic Records. That situation led to the establishment of the Rhythm & Blues Foundation, which is supported by recording companies and issues grants to pioneering performers.

Highlights of the 1997 album R+B=Ruth Brown include two duets: "I'm Gonna Move to the Outskirts of Town" with Bonnie Raitt and "False Friend Blues," a reunion with Amos Milburn who had backed Brown on her very first demo. In 1999 she won a Blues Foundation Lifetime Achievement Award. A Good Day for the Blues was nominated for a Grammy.

Jackson Browne

Born Oct. 9, 1948, Heidelberg, W. Ger.

1972—Jackson Browne (Asylum) 1973—For Everyman 1974—Late for the Sky 1976—The Pretender 1978—Running on Empty 1980—Hold Out 1983—Lawyers in Love 1986—Lives in the Balance 1989—World in Motion (Elektra) 1993—I'm Alive 1996—Looking East 1997—The Next Voice You Hear: The Best of Jackson Browne.

Singer/songwriter Jackson Browne's introverted, finely observed songs made him one of the most influential West Coast songwriters. Browne's first songs infused domestic sagas with a sense of romantic doom, making lovers into heroes. In the '80s Browne focused more sharply on the sociopolitical, but in 1993 returned to more personal themes with I'm Alive.

Jackson Browne

Browne's family moved to Southern California when he was young, and in his late teens he played guitar with an embryonic version of the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band, which later performed his songs. He spent the winters of 1967 and 1968 in Greenwich Village, where he backed Tim Buckley and Nico; she did an early cover of Browne's "These Days." By 1969 he had begun to establish a reputation as a songwriter, and in the next few years Tom Rush, the Byrds, Bonnie Raitt, Linda Ronstadt, and others performed his songs, and he toured as an opening act for Laura Nyro and Joni Mitchell. Browne's solo debut album produced a hit with "Doctor My Eyes" (#8, 1972) and eventually went gold. He cowrote the Eagles' first hit, "Take It Easy."

With each album Browne's following grew. Jackson Browne (#53, 1972) went gold; For Everyman (#43, 1973) and Late for the Sky (#14, 1974) went platinum. The Pretender became his first Top 10 album; its sense of despair derived in part from the suicide of his first wife, Phyllis, in 1976, two and a half years after the birth of their son, Ethan. A 1977 tour produced Running on Empty (#3, 1978), a live concept album about touring featuring new material recorded onstage, in hotel rooms, and on the tour bus, including hits in the title track and a remake of "Stay" (#20, 1978). Hold Out (1980) went to #1 in its first week of release. Browne's 1983 album, Lawyers in Love (#8), introduced many of the sociopolitical themes he would continue to explore in Lives in the Balance (#23, 1986) and World in Motion (#45, 1989). Though Lawyers, boosted by the Top 20 title track, hit #8, it did not go platinum.

In 1993 Browne returned to matters of the heart with I'm Alive (#40), on which he worked with long-time collaborator and coproducer Scott Thurston (Don Was also produced two tracks). The album generated unusually careful media scrutiny, coming as it did after Browne's highly publicized breakup with actress Daryl Hannah. Browne took a three-year leave from the studio before coming back with Looking East (#36, 1996), on which he blended his political voice with his more introspective outlook. The album failed to generate much interest, though, and the following year Browne commemorated his quarter-century of recording with the release of a best-of collection.

Browne continues to tour internationally and has been active in numerous organizations devoted to social change, including MUSE (Musicians United for Safe Energy), Amnesty International, and the Christic Institute. He has produced albums for Warren Zevon, his former guitarist David Lindley, Native American poet John Trudell, and high school friend Greg Copeland, as well as Nicaraguan group Guardabarranco. He has collaborated with fellow West Coast songwriters, including J.D. Souther, Lowell George, Valene Carter, and the Eagles.

Brownsville Station was formed by Michael Lutz and Cub Koda through a chance meeting at a local music store. The band spent most of its 10 years together earning a reputation as an energetic live rock act on the arena circuit. Its 1973 hit single "Smokin' in the Boys' Room" reached #3 in January 1974. Like much of their material, "Smokin' " was written by Koda. After the group disbanded in June 1979, Koda began a solo career, distancing himself from Brownsville's big rock sound, his albums mixed lo-fi rockabilly, blues, and R&B. In addition, Koda became a respected music journalist, writing liner notes for more than 60 CD collections, contributing to Goldmine, and coauthoring the book Blues for Dummies. Koda died in 2000 of complications from kidney failure.

Koda's former band mates are still involved in music. Lutz teaches and writes music, and played with Ted Nugent in the '80s and '90s. Henry Weck co-owns a recording studio. In

Jack Bruce

Born John Symon Asher Bruce, May 14, 1943, Glasgow, Scot. 1969—Songs for a Tailor (Atco) 1970—Things We Like 1971—Harmony Row 1972—Jack Bruce at His Best (Polydor) 1974—Out of the Storm (RSO) 1977—How's Tricks 1980—I've Always Wanted to Do This (Epic) 1982—Truce (Chrysalis) 1989—Willpower (Polydor); A Question of Time (Epic) 1993—Somethin' Else (CMP) 1994—Cities of the Heart 1995—Monkjack 1996—The Jack Bruce Collector's Edition 2001—Shadows in the Air (Sanctuary).

With BBM (Bruce, bass, cello, voc.; Ginger Baker [b. Peter Baker, Aug. 19, 1939, Lewisham, Eng.], drums, perc.; Gary Moore [b. Apr. 4, 1952, Belfast, Ire.], gtr., voc.): 1994—Around the Next Dream (Virgin).

The punchy bass riffs and urgent tenor vocals Jack Bruce lent to Cream were widely imitated by the heavy-metal bands that followed. Although Bruce's virtuosity and arty inclinations led him to make jazzy, complex music after he left Cream, he has returned periodically to hard rock.

At age 17 he won a scholarship to the Royal Scottish Academy of Music for cello and composition but dropped out after three months to play jazz in Glasgow. He moved to London in his late teens and played with British R&B pioneers Alexis Korner and Graham Bond. In 1965 he left the Graham Bond Organisation, whose drummer was Ginger Baker for John Mayall's Bluesbreakers, a band that included guitarist Eric Clapton. After a brief stint in Manfred Mann, Bruce joined Clapton and Baker in forming Cream in 1966 [see entries]. The three virtually invented a hard-rock trio style—complete with extended improvisations in which Bruce's bass chased Clapton's guitar—before breaking up in 1968. Most of Cream's hit singles were written by Bruce and lyricist Pete Brown.

After Cream's breakup Bruce divided his efforts between fusion, hard rock, and an ambitious, eccentric folk-rock-classical hybrid style of songwriting he tried on Songs for a Tailor, Harmony Row, and Out of the Storm. Among the songs on those albums, "Theme for an Imaginary Western" became a hit for Mountain. Bruce's first post-Cream group, Jack Bruce and Friends, included jazz guitarist Larry Coryell and Jimi Hendrix Experience drummer Mitch Mitchell. In 1970 and 1971 Bruce was a member of the Tony Williams Lifetime [see entry], the pioneering fusion band that also included guitarist John McLaughlin. Bruce's Things We Like was a jam session with McLaughlin, Dick Heckstall-Smith, and other British progressive jazzmen. Bruce also appeared (as vocalist) with McLaughlin on Carla Bley's 1972 Escalator Over the Hill, and in 1979 he toured with McLaughlin and Mahavishnu Orchestra alumni Billy Cobham and Stu Goldberg.

On the hard-rock side, Bruce put together a power trio with Mountain's Leslie West and Corky Laing, which released albums in 1972, 1973, and 1974 [see Mountain entry]. He appeared on Frank Zappa's Apostrophe 17 in 1974, and in

Following a European tour with a 13-piece Latin-jazz-rock orchestra, Bruce recorded A Question of Time, which mirrored his growing interest in world music and reunited him with Cream drummer Ginger Baker. Somethin' Else (with lyrics by Peter Brown) featured Eric Clapton, Dick Heckstall-Smith, and Clem Clempson, while Cities of the Heart, recorded live at a 1993 show, featured Baker, Clempson, and former P-Funk/Talking Heads keyboardist Bernie Worrell. In 1994 Bruce and Gary Moore (who was a replacement guitarist on a Bruce tour) recorded Around the Next Dream with Baker, and then Bruce put down his bass to team up with Worrell on 1995's Monkjack, a collection of jazz compositions for piano and organ.

Eclectic as always, Bruce joined Peter Frampton, Procol Harum's Gary Brooker, and Bad Company's Simon Kirke for a tour as Ringo Starr's backing band, the All-Stars, in 1997; he was an All-Star again in 2000. His 2001 album, Shadows in the Air, featured guests Vernon Reid, Dr. John, and Clapton.

1999—A Part, and Yet Apart (DGM) 2001—The Sound of Surprise.

After distinguishing himself with Yes, King Crimson, and Genesis, Bill Bruford became a jazz-rock bandleader and made fusion music with the same crisp angularity and tasteful smarts that marked his drumming. Bruford supported his more adventurous work by returning periodically to the big-rock arena, with U.K. in 1979, a re-formed Crimson in 1981, fellow ex-Yes-men Jon Anderson, Rick Wakeman, and Steve Howe in 1989, and a full Yes reunion in 1991 [see entries].

After Crimson disbanded in 1974 Bruford took sundry odd jobs: on the obscure 1975 all-star album Flash Fearless vs. the Zorg Women (with Alice Cooper, the Who's John Entwistle, and Jim Dandy Mangrum of Black Oak Arkansas, among others); on 1975 albums by Yes' Chris Squire (Fish Out of Water) and Steve Howe (Beginnings) and British folk rocker Roy Harper (HQ); and on 1976 albums by American progressive rockers Pavlov's Dog (At the Sound of the Bell) and space rockers Absolute Elsewhere (In Search of Ancient Gods). In 1976 Bruford toured with Genesis—at the request of drummer Phil Collins, who was replacing departed frontman/vocalist Peter Gabriel—then formed the British jazz-rock band National Health with ex-Hatfield and the North keyboardist Dave Stewart. In 1977 Bruford recruited Stewart, ex-Soft Machine/Tony Williams Lifetime/Gong guitarist Allan Holdsworth (a major influence on Eddie Van Halen), and Americans Jeff Berlin (bass) and Annette Peacock (vocals), to record Feels Good to Me. Rather than play drum solos, Bruford, who wrote all the songs, played the serpentine melodies on vibes.

After guesting on Peacock's 1978 album X-Dreams, Bruford formed U.K., with ex-Crimson band mate John Wetton on bass and vocals, ex-Roxy Music/Frank Zappa keyboardist/violinist Eddie Jobson, and Holdsworth. Bruford left after one album and tour to form his eponymous jazz-rock band, dissolving it only when Robert Fripp re-formed King Crimson in 1981. In that band Bruford played electronic drum pads, made by English inventor Dave Simmons, which were fed with sampled or synthesized sounds. When Crimson disbanded again, the Simmons drums keyed the approach of Earthworks, in which Bruford tapped out repeated keyboardlike melodies and chordal harmonies to back the boppish lines of Iain Ballamy and Django Bates (two rising stars of the British jazz scene who were half Bruford's age). In between Crimson and Earthworks, Bruford recorded two solo albums with ex-Yes/Moody Blues keyboardist Patrick Moraz (1983's Music for Piano and Drums, 1985's Flags); in 1987 he recorded (Clouds About Mercury) and toured with ECM guitarist David Torn, and played drums and percussion with the New Percussion Group of Amsterdam on the album Go Between.

In the '90s, Bruford joined Jon Anderson and Steve Howe on 1993's Symphonic Music of Yes, and played on Steve Hackett's 1997 Watcher of the Skies: Genesis Revisited. Upper Extremities, his jazz-rock side project with Crimson bassist Tony Levin, featured the Miles Davis-inspired trumpet playing of Chris Botti (who later worked with Sting). But Bruford also traded his signature metallic rimshot for a softer wooden snare on If Summer Had Its Ghosts (featuring Ralph Towner of Oregon and jazz bassist Eddie Gomez), then sat out the 1999–2000 edition of King Crimson [see entry] to lead the new all-acoustic Earthworks.

Peabo Bryson

Born Apr. 13, 1951, Greenville, SC
 1976—Peabo (Bang) 1977—Reaching for the Sky (Capitol)
 1978—Crosswinds 1979—We're the Best of Friends (with Natalie Cole) 1980—Paradise; Live and More (with Roberta Flack) (Atlantic) 1981—I Am Love (Capitol); Turn the Hands of Time 1982—Don't Play With Fire 1983—Born to Love (with Roberta Flack) 1984—Straight From the Heart (Elektra); The Peabo Bryson Collection (Capitol) 1985—Take No Prisoners (Elektra) 1988—Positive 1991—Can You Stop the Rain (Columbia) 1994—Peabo Bryson 1997—Peace on Earth (Angel) 1999—Unconditional Love (Private Music/Windham Hill) 2000—Super Hits (Columbia).

Peabo Bryson grew up on a farm in South Carolina, sang in a church choir, and joined his first group, Al Freeman and the Upsetters, as a harmony singer at age 14. His first professional group was Mose Dillard and the Tex-Town Display, with whom he sang from 1968 to 1973, touring the U.S., the Caribbean, and Vietnam. The group recorded on the Curtom and Bang labels. Bang president Eddie Biscoe encouraged Bryson to write and sing his own material, and in 1970 he signed a solo contract with Bang and moved to Atlanta, where he worked as a staff producer before recording his solo debut album. He had his first hit as guest vocalist with Michael Zager's Moon Band, whose "Do It With Feeling" made the R&B Top 30 in 1976. On his own he placed three singles in the R&B Top 30: "Underground Music" (#22 R&B, 1976), "Just Another Day" (#27 R&B, 1977), and "I Can Make It Better" (#23 R&B, 1977).

He signed with Capitol in 1977, and his next album, Reaching for the Sky, included R&B hit singles in the title song (#6, 1978) and "Feel the Fire" (#13, 1978). Crosswinds boasted a #2 R&B single, "I'm So Into You" (1978). In 1979 Bryson toured with Natalie Cole; their studio collaborations yielded an album, We're the Best of Friends, and two R&B hit singles: "Gimme Some Time" (#8 R&B, 1979) and "What You Won't Do for Love" (#16 R&B, 1980). Later in 1980, after charting R&B Top 20 with Michael McDonald's "Minute by Minute," he joined Roberta Flack for a concert tour and a live album that gave the duo a hit R&B single, "Make the World Stand Still" (#13 R&B, 1980). In 1983 the pair had a bigger hit with "Tonight, I Celebrate My Love" (#16 pop, #5 R&B) from Born to Love (#25 pop, #8 R&B, 1983).

The next year Bryson's "If Ever You're in My Arms Again" (#10 pop, #6 R&B, 1984) became the first of a series of crossover hits, culminating in two hit duets from Disney animated films Beauty and the Beast ("Beauty and the Beast" with Celine Dion, #9 pop, 1992) and Aladdin ("A Whole New World [Aladdin's Theme]" with Regina Belle, #1 pop, #21 R&B, 1992); both earned Oscars for Best Song. Bryson's recordings have appeared on the classical (The King and I, with Lea Salonga) and contemporary jazz (Kenny G's Breathless, featuring Bryson singing "By the Time This Night Is Over") charts. But by the end of the '90s, Bryson's smooth style had lost a bit of its appeal. After a 1997 Christmas album, the singer found himself without a record label. He then signed with Private Music/Windham Hill, which released Unconditional Love (#75 R&B) in 1999. Despite its relative lack of commercial success, the album yielded two Grammy-nominated songs, the title track and "Did You Ever Know."

Roy Buchanan

Born Sep. 23, 1939, Ozark, AR; died Aug. 14, 1988, Fairfax, VA
 1972—Roy Buchanan (Polydor) 1973—Roy Buchanan Second Album 1974—That's What I Am Here For; In the Beginning 1975—Rescue Me; Live Stock 1976—A Street Called Straight (Atlantic) 1977—Loading Zone 1978—You're Not Alone 1980—My Babe (Waterhouse) 1985—When a Guitar Plays the Blues (Alligator) 1986—Dancing on the Edge 1988—Hot Wires 1992—Sweet Dreams: The Anthology (Polydor) 1993—Guitar on Fire: The Atlantic Sessions (Rhino).

Blues guitarist Roy Buchanan was considered a musician's musician in the '70s for his impeccable Telecaster leads. Among his fans were Jeff Beck, Eric Clapton, and Robbie Robertson. The son of a Pentecostal preacher, Buchanan grew up in Pixley, California, and was a proficient guitarist by age nine. At 15 he ran away to L.A. and came under the tutelage of R&B great Johnny Otis. The guitarist toured and recorded with rockabilly star Dale Hawkins ("Suzy Q") for three years before joining Ronnie Hawkins. He moved to the Washington, DC, area, and in the mid-'60s did East Coast session work. In 1968 he formed the Soundmasters and worked clubs on the Eastern Seaboard regularly for the next several years.

A 1971 ROLLING STONE article inspired some interest in Buchanan, as did a PBS documentary called The Best Unknown Guitarist in the World. He claimed the Rolling Stones had asked him to replace Brian Jones in 1969, but he had turned them down. In 1972 Buchanan signed his first solo recording contract. He toured and released albums steadily to a cult audience throughout his life, which ended in a Virginia jail cell. An intoxicated Buchanan was arrested on the street by police responding to a phone call from his wife. When deputies went to check on him an hour later, they found the 48-year-old father of seven hanging by his own shirt.

Lindsey Buckingham: See Fleetwood Mac

The Buckingham

Formed 1965, Chicago, IL
 Carl Giammarese (b. Aug. 21, 1947, Chicago), gtr.; Dennis Tufano (b. Sep. 11, 1946, Chicago), gtr., harmonica; Nick

Fortune (b. Nicholas Fortuna, May 1, 1946, Chicago), bass; Jon-Jon Poulos (b. Mar. 31, 1947, Chicago; d. Mar. 26, 1980), drums; Dennis Miccolis, kybds.

1967—Kind of a Drag (U.S.A.) (- Miccolis; + Marty Grebb [b. Sep. 2, 1946, Chicago], kybds.) Time and Charges (Columbia) 1968—Portraits; In One Ear and Gone Tomorrow 1969—Greatest Hits (- Grebb; + John Turner, kybds.) 1970—(group disbands) 1980—(group re-forms: Tufano; Giammarese; Fortuna; + John Cammelot, kybds.; + Tom Scheckel [b. Nov. 19, 1954, Chicago], drums) 1985—(- Tufano) A Matter of Time (Red) 1991—Mercy, Mercy, Mercy: A Collection (Legacy).

In 1967 the Buckingham's rock-with-horns sound made them a staple of Top 40 radio, with five Top 20 hits. The group came together in 1965 when Carl Giammarese and Nick Fortune of the Centunes teamed up with Dennis Tufano and Jon-Jon Poulos of the Pulsations. Adding Dennis Miccolis on keyboards, the new Pulsations auditioned for a Chicago variety show, All Time Hits. Informed that the program's producers were looking for a British-style group, they changed their name to the Buckingham's and passed the audition. Four singles on two local labels failed to chart, but "Kind of a Drag"—with its polite horns and cheesy organ—rocketed to #1 in February 1967. The group signed with Columbia Records, which paired it with producer/manager James Guercio. Through the end of the year, the Buckingham's monopolized the airwaves with "Lawdy Miss Clawdy" (#41), "Don't You Care" (#6), "Mercy, Mercy, Mercy" (#5), "Hey Baby (They're Playing Our Song)" (#12), and "Susan" (#11). But as predicted by the title of a 1968 Buckingham's LP, In One Ear and Gone Tomorrow, the quintet's appeal mysteriously vanished. It broke up in 1970, by which time producer Guercio was perfecting the brass-rock sound with the group Chicago. Tufano and Giammarese recorded as a duet for Ode Records in 1973, while keyboardist Marty Grebb formed the Fabulous Rhinestones. Poulos died of a drug overdose in 1980 at age 32. That year Tufano, Giammarese, and Fortune revived the band, and they have continued to play the oldies circuit. By 1985 Tufano had departed to pursue acting.

Jeff Buckley

Born Jeffrey Scott Buckley, Nov. 17, 1966, Anaheim, CA, died May 29, 1997, Memphis, TN
 1993—Live at Sin-é EP (Columbia) 1994—Grace 1998—Sketches for My Sweetheart the Drunk 2000—Mystery White Boy.

Possessed of a striking, multioctave voice and a passion for high drama in his performances, Jeff Buckley emerged out of New York's avant-garde music scene in 1994 with Grace, an album that would garner him international critical acclaim and a devoted cult fan base. Three years later, just shy of his 31st birthday and the recording of his second album, he drowned in a freak accident.

Throughout his life, Buckley was haunted by the shadow of a famous father he never really knew, singer/songwriter Tim Buckley [see entry] (who also died young, of a heroin overdose at age 28). Buckley met his father only once, spending a week with him when he was eight. He was closer to his stepfather Ron Moorhead, an auto mechanic who helped inspire Buckley's pursuit of music by giving him his first Led Zeppelin album. Growing up in Southern California, Buckley was known as Scotty Moorhead until his mother, Mary Guibert, divorced her second husband.

After performing in a handful of cover bands throughout high school and attending the Los Angeles Musicians Institute, Buckley moved to New York City in 1990. He went back to L.A. after seven months, then returned to somewhat reluctantly participate in a Tim Buckley tribute concert at Brooklyn's St. Ann's Church in 1991; his buzz-winning performance led to a relocation to New York in 1992 and a short stint performing in the band Gods and Monsters with former Captain Beefheart guitarist Gary Lucas. He soon left the group to focus on a solo career and took up residence at the tiny cafe Sin-é in the East Village. His eclectic performances—which revealed as much of an affinity for Edith Piaf as Zeppelin—led to a contract with Columbia Records in 1993. Live at Sin-é, a four-song EP, was released while Buckley assembled a band to record his full-length debut, Grace (#149, 1994).

Featuring Buckley originals such as "Last Goodbye" as well as a cover of Leonard Cohen's "Hallelujah," Grace sold only modestly but was warmly received by critics. He would tour behind the album for nearly three years. In mid-1996 Buckley began recording demos for his second album—to be titled My Sweetheart the Drunk—with producer Tom Verlaine (of Television fame). He intended to record the album itself with Grace producer Andy Wallace in Memphis, Tennessee, where Buckley had recently relocated. On May 29, 1997—the night he was expecting his band to arrive from New York—Buckley and a friend were en route to a rehearsal space when they decided to take a break alongside the bank of the Wolf River channel of the Mississippi River. After Buckley waded into the water fully clothed and began swimming, he was sucked under by a wake created by a passing boat; his body was spotted six days later by a riverboat passenger.

Following his death, Buckley's mother began to work closely with Columbia on all affairs concerning his posthumous releases. The first was Sketches for My Sweetheart the Drunk (#64, 1998), a double-disc set featuring the Verlaine-produced studio sessions and a selection of unfinished songs that Buckley had recently recorded on four-track. The live album Mystery White Boy followed in 2000, along with the DVD/VHS release Jeff Buckley—Live in Chicago.

Tim Buckley

Born Feb. 14, 1947, Washington, DC; died June 29, 1975, Santa Monica, CA

1967—Tim Buckley (Elektra); Goodbye and Hello 1969—Happy Sad 1970—Blue Afternoon (Straight); Lorca (Elektra)

1971—Starsailor (Warner Bros.) 1972—Greetings From L.A. 1974—Look at the Fool (DiscReet); Señorita 1990—Dream Letter (Live in London, 1968) (Retro) 2001—Morning Glory: The Tim Buckley Anthology (Rhino).

Tim Buckley was a highly respected singer/songwriter throughout the late '60s. His professional career began in the early '60s when he played frequently with bassist Jim Fielder (later of Buffalo Springfield and Blood, Sweat and Tears) and attracted the attention of Frank Zappa's manager Herb Cohen, who got him a deal with Elektra in 1966. (Buckley later signed with Cohen's Straight Records.) His second album, Goodbye and Hello, was produced by the Lovin' Spoonful's Jerry Yester.

Buckley began exploring avant-garde jazz and later recorded in Swahili. After several label switches, he tried funky, danceable material in the mid-'70s, without success. On June 29, 1975, Buckley died of a heroin and morphine overdose; according to a coroner's inquest testimony, he had snorted what he believed was cocaine. The man who owned the house where he died was later convicted of involuntary manslaughter. Buckley's son, Jeff, who barely knew his father, launched his own career in the early '90s and also tragically died young.

Buckwheat Zydeco Story: A 20-Year Party* (Tomorrow) 2001—
Down Home Live!

Born in the heart of the bayou, Buckwheat Zydeco blends a love for Creole culture with an ability to rock out, a combination that has made him a popular exponent of zydeco. Playing organ and piano since the age of nine (he was nicknamed after a Little Rascals character—a moniker he considers racist but has stuck with), he led his own R&B band, Buckwheat and the Hitchhikers, in 1971. From 1976 to 1978 he played keyboards with zydeco master Clifton Chenier, which inspired in him a newfound appreciation of his ethnic roots and led him to play the accordion.

In 1979 Buckwheat formed Ils Sont Partis and released a string of well-received independent releases. On a Night Like This, which featured Buckwheat's interpretations of songs by Bob Dylan, the Blasters, and Booker T. and the MG's, as well as his own compositions, was embraced by critics and nominated for a Grammy. Further widening his popularity, Buckwheat has opened shows for U2 and Robert Cray, toured with Eric Clapton (who played on Taking It Home), and worked with Keith Richards (he appears on the Stone's Talk Is Cheap) and Los Lobos' David Hidalgo (who produced Where There's Smoke There's Fire). Buckwheat's music has been featured in the films The Big Easy, The Waterboy, and Casual Sex?

True to his heritage, Buckwheat forbids his music to be classified as "Cajun" and speaks frequently about the racism that kept zydeco music off the air for years while its white counterpart (Cajun) was popularized. In 1999 he formed his own Tomorrow Recordings label, reissuing Trouble, his 1997 album for Atlantic. He also released The Buckwheat Zydeco Story: A 20-Year Party, a multilabel anthology that spans his entire career, and Down Home Live!

Buffalo Springfield

Formed 1966, Los Angeles, CA

Neil Young (b. Nov. 12, 1945, Toronto, Can.), voc., gtr.; Stephen Stills (b. Jan. 3, 1945, Dallas, TX), voc., gtr.; Richie Furay (b. May 9, 1944, Dayton, OH), voc., gtr.; Dewey Martin (b. Sep. 30, 1942, Chesterville, Can.), voc., drums; Bruce Palmer (b. 1946, Liverpool, Can.), bass.

1967—Buffalo Springfield (Atco); Stampede (unreleased) (– Palmer; + Ken Koblun, bass; – Koblun; + Jim Fielder [b. Oct. 4, 1947, Denton, TX], bass; – Young; + Doug Hastings, gtr.)
Buffalo Springfield Again (Atco) (– Fielder; – Hastings; + Young; + Jim Messina [b. Dec. 5, 1947, Maywood, CA], bass) 1968—Last Time Around 1969—Retrospective 1973—Buffalo Springfield 2001—Boxed Set (Rhino/Reprise Archives).

During its brief and stormy lifetime, Buffalo Springfield broke ground for what became country rock. After the band's dissolution, several members found success in Poco; Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young; Loggins and Messina; and as solo artists.

Furay and Stills had played together, as had Canadians Young and Palmer, before the four hooked up in L.A. in 1966 to form Buffalo Springfield (named after a steamroller). Originally called the Herd, they added Martin on drums and vocals.

After a stint as the house band at the Whisky-a-Go-Go and touring with the Byrds, Springfield inked a deal with Atlantic and released its first album in 1967. Stills' "For What It's Worth" (#7, 1967) gave the group its biggest hit. By the time of its second album, Springfield was a major group coming apart at the seams. After Palmer was deported (following a drug bust) and producer Jim Messina was added on bass, and amid persistent squabbling between Stills and Young (who quit in May 1967, only to rejoin four months later), the group disbanded in May 1968. When Last Time Around was released later that year, each of the members was on his own. Martin kept the band's name alive with hired musicians and then had an abortive solo career. Stills and Young were successful in the '70s with CSN&Y [see entry] and solo work. Short-term bassist Jim Fielder joined Blood, Sweat and Tears [see entry], while Messina and Furay formed Poco [see entry] with pedal-steel guitarist Rusty Young, who had played on Springfield's final album; Messina went on to the duo Loggins and Messina [see entry]. Later in the '80s, Furay became a pastor for a Christian fellowship. In 1997 Buffalo Springfield was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame; Young did not attend the ceremony The long-awaited Buffalo Springfield box set was finally released in 2001.

Singer/songwriter Jimmy Buffett is known for humorous chronicles of a laid-back seafaring life; his philosophical outlook is encapsulated in tunes like "Why Don't We Get Drunk (and Screw)" and "My Head Hurts, My Feet Stink and I Don't Love Jesus." In addition to releasing popular albums, Buffett has built a small Florida-based financial empire, written several best-selling books, and become a leading environmentalist.

Raised in the Deep South, Buffett attended Auburn University and then the University of Southern Mississippi, majoring in journalism (he later worked as a Billboard reporter). He moved to Nashville in the late '60s, intent on becoming a country singer. His first album, 1970's Down to Earth, sold 324 copies. Barnaby Records then temporarily misplaced the master tape of his second album before its release. By 1972 Buffett had left both Nashville and a failed marriage, moving to Key West. There he helped to support himself by smuggling a little marijuana from the Caribbean. He signed to ABC-Dunhill, and his 1973 release, A White Sport Coat and a Pink Crustacean, found Buffett developing his drunken-sailor persona. Although he'd had a Top 30 hit with 1974's "Come Monday," Buffett's commercial breakthrough came in 1977 with the platinum Changes in Latitudes, Changes in Attitudes (#12) and its hit single, "Margaritaville" (#8).

During that period Buffett toured infrequently, spending most of his time living on his 50-foot ketch Euphoria II. He frequently docked at Montserrat, where his 1979 LP Volcano was recorded. He formed the first version of his Coral Reefer Band in 1975. Buffett scored and acted in the 1974 film Rancho Deluxe, and appeared in the 1977 movie FM. His 1981 Coconut Telegraph album inspired a fan-club newsletter of the same name, which has maintained a worldwide subscriber base of "Parrot Heads"—Buffett's fans rival the Grateful Dead's in their enthusiasm for their hero.

The 1985 compilation Songs You Know by Heart (subtitled Jimmy Buffett's Greatest Hit(s) in self-mocking reference to the fact that "Margaritaville" was his only major pop hit) sold 2 million copies; 1992's Boats Beaches Bars & Ballads also went platinum. By that time Buffett had established a Margaritaville empire, including a record label and Margaritaville Store and Cafe outlets in Key West, New Orleans, Orlando, and Charleston. He wrote three best-selling books: Tales From Margaritaville, a collection of short stories; the novel Where Is Joe Merchant?; and the memoir A Pirate Looks at Fifty, which made Buffett only the sixth author ever to top both the fiction and nonfiction lists. He has also coauthored two children's books, The Jolly Mon and Trouble Dolls, with his daughter, Savannah Jane. In 1993, 1994, and 1995 Forbes magazine included Buffett on its list of highest-paid entertainers. The singer spends some of his time and money on various charities, especially the ones supporting environmental issues—he crusades on behalf of Florida's endangered manatees and created the SFC Chantable Foundation in 1995. Buffett continued to pick up steam all through the '90s, performing to sell-out crowds, his albums becoming more successful than ever—he hit the Top 10 with Fruitcakes (#5, 1994), Barometer Soup (#6, 1995), Banana Wind (#4, 1996), and Beach House on the Moon (#8, 1999). Secure in his success, Buffett collaborated with Herman Wouk on a musical adaptation of Wouk's novel Don't Stop the Carnival. The show briefly ran in Miami in 1997, and Buffett released an album of songs from that production the following year. In 1999 Buffett, ever the entrepreneur, launched his own independent label Mailboat Records (the first release was a live album recorded in Nantucket), and Radio Margaritaville, an online radio station.

The Buggles

Trevor Horn (b. July 15, 1949, Hertfordshire, Eng.), bass, voc.; Geoffrey Downes (b. Eng.), kybds.

1980—Age of Plastic (Island) 1982—Adventures in Modern Recording (Epic).

The electropop "Video Killed the Radio Star," written by Horn, Downes, and Bruce Wooley, was a huge international hit in 1979, #1 in the U.K. and in the Top 40 in the U.S. On August 1, 1981, it was the first video ever aired by MTV and soon proved itself a piece of musical prophesy.

Keyboardist Downes and vocalist Horn viewed themselves more as producers than rock stars. Following "Video Killed the Radio Star," the duo had three more U.K. hits, including "The Plastic Age" in 1980. After producing Yes' Tormato, they shocked the music world by joining the band in March 1980 [see Yes entry]. They appeared on Drama and Yes' 1980-81 tour. Following Yes' 1981 breakup, Downes joined Asia [see entry]. Horn went on to become a successful producer for many hit groups, including Frankie Goes to Hollywood and ABC, as well as Band Aid's "Do They Know It's Christmas."

Eric Burdon

Born May 11, 1941, Newcastle upon Tyne, Eng.
 Eric Burdon and War: 1970—Eric Burdon Declares War (Polydor)
 1971—The Black Man's Burdon (MGM) 1976—Love Is All Around (ABC).
 Eric Burdon solo: 1971—Guilty (MGM) 1974—Ring of Fire (Capitol); Sun Secrets 1975—Stop 1978—Survivor (Polydor) 1988—Wicked Man (GNP).
 Eric Burdon/Brian Auger Band: 1993—Access All Areas (SPV, Eur.).

Eric Burdon's rudely emotive vocals kept him on the charts through the British Invasion (as frontman for the Animals), psychedelia (as a solo act), and early-'70s funk (with War). He grew up in working-class Newcastle and went to art school, where he studied graphics and photography and was introduced to blues records. Unable to find a job, he became a musician and joined the Alan Price Combo in 1962, which became the Animals [see entry]. With their success, Burdon took to drinking, womanizing, and shooting his mouth off, experiences that no doubt shaped a later song entitled "Good Times."

By 1967 Burdon had been converted to flower power. He traded his denims for a Nehru jacket and moved to California. After the 1969 double album, Love Is, Burdon announced his retirement. In late 1969 Burdon heard a funk band called Night Shift, they became War and backed him on his 1970 hit "Spill the Wine" (#3) and their debut album, Eric Burdon Declares War. After a second album together, Burdon became exhausted on a 1971 European tour, and War went on without him [see War entry].

Since then Burdon has remained active, recording solo albums and making an album with blues legend Jimmy Witherspoon (Guilty) in 1971 and an Animals reunion album, Before We Were So Rudely Interrupted, in 1977. ABC put out material recorded in 1970 by Burdon and War on a 1976 album, Love Is All Around. During the late '70s Burdon appeared in several European movies, and in 1981 he starred in and composed the soundtrack for a German film titled Come Back. In 1983 the original Animals lineup re-formed for an album and tour, and three years later Burdon published his autobiography, I Used to Be an Animal, but I'm All Right Now.

In 1990 Burdon formed a touring band with ex-Doors guitarist Robbie Krieger and appeared in the TV show China Beach. In 1991 Burdon formed a band with veteran British jazz-rock keyboardist Brian Auger, they released a 1993 album, Access All Areas, recorded live in California and released only in Europe. Burdon's name turned up in the press that year after he made repeated, ultimately unsuccessful, requests that Scotland Yard investigate the death of his friend Jimi Hendrix. The '90s saw Burdon touring as the leader of both the I-Band and the New Animals.

Solomon Burke

Born 1936, Philadelphia, PA
 1962—Solomon Burke (Apollo); Solomon Burke's Greatest Hits (Atlantic) 1963—If You Need Me 1964—Rock 'n Soul 1965—The Best of Solomon Burke 1967—King Solomon 1968—I Wish I Knew 1969—Proud Mary (Bell) 1971—Electronic Magnetism (MGM) 1972—Cool Breeze soundtrack; We're Almost Home 1973—Get Up and Do Something 1974—I Have a Dream (ABC/Dunhill) 1975—Music to Make Love By (Chess) 1977—Back to My Roots; Greatest Hits (Atlantic) 1981—Take Me, Shake Me (Savoy); Sidewalks, Fences and Walls (Infinity) 1984—Soul Alive! (Rouner) 1986—A Change Is Gonna Come 1989—The Best of Solomon Burke (Atlantic) 1992—Home in Your Heart: The Best of Solomon Burke (Rhino/Atlantic) 1993—Soul of the Blues (Black Top) 1994—Solomon Burke Live at the House of Blues 1997—The Definition of Soul (Pointblank/Virgin).

With his big, powerful voice and fervent but controlled emotionality, Solomon Burke was a pioneer of soul music in the early '60s. By the age of nine he was a preacher and choir soloist for his family's Philadelphia church, the House of God for All People. At 12 he began hosting his own gospel radio show, Solomon's Temple, and touring the gospel circuits billed as the "Wonder Boy Preacher." In 1955 he began recording both religious and secular music for Apollo and Singular before signing with Atlantic in 1960.

At Atlantic Burke made some of the first soul records by setting his gospel "preaching" style in song forms borrowed from R&B, rock & roll, and other secular music. His second Atlantic release, "Just Out of Reach (of My Two Open Arms)," was a country & western song, and it became his first hit when it reached #7 R&B in 1961. Burke called his big-beat dance songs "rock 'n' soul music" and won crossover popularity with "Cry to Me" (#44 pop, #5 R&B, 1962), "If You Need Me" (#37 pop, #2 R&B, 1963), "You're Good for Me" (#49 pop, #8 R&B, 1963), "Got to Get You off My Mind" (#22 pop, #1 R&B, 1965), and "Tonight's the Night" (#28 pop, #2 R&B, 1965). He had two more R&B Top 20 records on Atlantic, including "Keep a Light in the Window" and "Take Me (Just as I Am)" in 1967. He was a primary influence on Mick Jagger, who covered Burke's "You Can Make It If You Try," "Everybody Needs Somebody to Love," and "Cry to Me" on early Rolling Stones albums. Burke was also covered by Otis Redding ("Down in the Valley").

In 1969 he moved to Bell and hit with a cover of John Fogerty's "Proud Mary" (#45 pop, #15 R&B, 1969). In the '70s Burke recorded with uneven results for MGM, Dunhill, and Chess, but did enjoy a couple of R&B hits, including "Midnight and You" (#14 R&B, 1974) and "You and Your Baby Blues" (#19 R&B, 1975). In 1981 he toured with the Soul Clan, which included Don Covay, Wilson Pickett, Ben E. King, and Joe Tex. That year he also returned to his gospel roots, releasing the Grammy-nominated Take Me, Shake Me. He made his film debut in The Big Easy (1987). For a time, Burke owned a West Coast chain of mortuaries (several of his kids remain in the family business). He is the father of 21 and a great-grandfather. He continues to tour and record while remaining active in the church. Burke was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 2001.

T Bone Burnett

Born John Henry Burnett, Jan. 14, 1948, St. Louis, MO
 1972—The B-52 Band & the Fabulous Skylarks (UNI) 1980—Truth Decay (Takoma) 1982—Trap Door EP (Warner) 1983—Proof Through the Night 1984—Behind the Trap Door EP (Demon, U.K.) 1986—T Bone Burnett (Dot) 1988—The Talking Animals (Columbia) 1992—The Criminal Under My Own Hat.

T Bone Burnett is a critically acclaimed singer/songwriter whose own projects have been eclipsed by his work as a producer for such artists as Elvis Costello, Roy Orbison, the BoDeans, Los Lobos, Counting Crows, Jimmie Dale Gilmore, Gillian Welch, and the Wallflowers.

Burnett grew up in Fort Worth, Texas, where he absorbed the area's rich tradition of blues, Tex-Mex, and R&B. Fore-shadowing his later fame, Burnett opened his own studio and opted for producing blues records over attending college. By the early '70s Burnett had relocated to L.A., where he produced a record for Delbert McClinton and Glen Clark and recorded his first solo album.

After teaming up with singer/songwriter and Bob Dylan cronie Bob Neuwirth and moving to the East Coast, Burnett found himself in the right place at the right time. Recruiting musicians for his Rolling Thunder Revue in 1975, Dylan tapped Burnett to be one of his guitarists. When the tour ended, Burnett and two other Rolling Thunder members, Dave Mansfield and Steve Soles, formed the Alpha Band. After three eccentric eclectic, but unsuccessful albums (1977's Alpha Band and Spark in the Dark and 1978's Statue Makers of Hollywood), the Alpha Band split up and Burnett went solo.

Burnett, who reportedly influenced Dylan's conversion to Christianity, weaves themes of personal religiosity throughout his work. His nimble wordplay and highly crafted songwriting caught the attention of the rock community if not the public; Pete Townshend and Richard Thompson were among the guest musicians on Proof Through the Night. Despite critical kudos and vocal support from rock heavyweights—Mark Knopfler and Bono are avid Burnett admirers—Burnett has remained more a cult figure. None of his own albums has ever gone gold.

As a producer, though, Burnett is responsible for some of the most highly regarded albums of the late '80s and '90s. Burnett's flair for roots rock comes through on Los Lobos' first two albums, . . . And a Time to Dance and How Will the Wolf Survive?; the BoDeans' debut, Love & Hope & Sex &

Dreams; and Marshall Crenshaw's Downtown. On Elvis Costello's King of America, Burnett revamped Costello's sound by mating him with American musicians and emphasizing an earthier approach. During this period, Burnett also produced a contemporary Christian singer named Leslie Phillips, who soon after changed her name to Sam Phillips and turned to secular music making. Burnett continued producing her and, in 1989, they married. Two years before Roy Orbison's death, Burnett produced the music for the all-star collaborative video that featured Orbison with Bruce Springsteen, Jackson Browne, k.d. lang, Tom Waits, and a host of acolytes. His other production credits include Costello's Spike, Counting Crows' 1993 debut, August and Everything After, Sam Phillips' Martinis & Bikinis and Omnipop (It's Only a Flesh Wound Lambchop); Bruce Cockburn's Dart to the Heart, Jimmie Dale Gilmore's Braver New World, and Gillian Welch's Revival. Next to the Counting Crows album, Burnett's most commercially successful producing project was the Wallflowers' 1996 effort, Bringing Down the Horse, an album that went multiplatinum, collected two Grammys, and made Bob Dylan's son Jakob a star in his own right.

In 1997 Burnett wrote new music for Sam Shepard's play Tooth of Crime (Second Dance) and is planning to release the soundtrack on Nonesuch in 2001 along with a new solo album. He also scored and produced the Depression-era-themed soundtrack to the Coen brothers' film O Brother, Where Art Thou? (2000). The LP, featuring Emmylou Harris, Ralph Stanley, Alison Krauss, and others, became a Top 20 album (#13). He had previously produced soundtracks for the films Stealing Beauty (1996) and The Horse Whisperer (1998). Burnett directed a special all-star concert version of the soundtrack at Nashville's Ryman Auditorium, which was filmed by documentary filmmaker D.A. Pennebaker (Bob Dylan's Don't Look Back), plans were in the works for the concert's release on CD and video.

Billy Burnette

Born May 8, 1953, Memphis, TN
 1971—Billy Burnette (Columbia/Entrance) 1979—Billy Burnette (Polydor); Between Friends 1980—Billy Burnette (Columbia) 1981—Gimme You 1993—Coming Home (Capricorn) 2000—Are You With Me Baby (Freefalls Entertainment).
 Bekka and Billy: 1997—Bekka and Billy (Almo Sounds).

Son of Dorsey Burnette, nephew of Johnny Burnette, and cousin of Rocky Burnette, Billy Burnette moved from Memphis to L.A., where he made his recording debut at age seven with "Hey Daddy." His second record, "Just Because We're Kids," was written by Dr. Seuss (Theodor Seuss Geisel), produced by Herb Alpert, and released on A&M Records when he was 11 years old. During his early teen years he recorded for Warner Bros., made TV appearances, and—at age 13—toured the Far East with the Brenda Lee show. He moved to Memphis in 1972, where he started playing guitar and writing songs; the next year he began an apprenticeship with producer Chips Moman (Elvis Presley, Aretha Franklin), who produced his first solo album. He also toured with Roger Miller.

Burnette spent most of the '70s leading his father's band, playing guitar, and singing with Delaney Bramlett. His songs have been recorded by Charlie Rich, Loretta Lynn, Conway Twitty, Irma Thomas, Ray Charles, Jerry Lee Lewis, the Everly Brothers, Charley Pride, Glen Campbell, Gary Stewart, Tammy Wynette, and Levon Helm. He made two country albums in 1979, but it was not until after his father died that year that he began playing rock & roll. His first Columbia album contained remakes of "Tear It Up" and "Honey Hush," two rockabilly numbers made famous by his father's Rock 'n' Roll Trio.

In 1987 Burnette joined Fleetwood Mac, replacing Lindsey Buckingham; he appears on Behind the Mask. He left the group in January 1993, shortly before the release of his Capricorn debut, Coming Home, but returned to Fleetwood Mac for its 1994 tour. In 1997 Burnette and Bekka Bramlett (the daughter of Delaney and Bonnie Bramlett, who replaced Stevie Nicks in Fleetwood Mac's mid-'90s lineup) collaborated on the Bekka and Billy album. In 2000 Burnette re-emerged as a solo act with Are You With Me Baby.

Dorsey Burnette

Born Dec. 28, 1932, Memphis, TN; died Aug. 19, 1979, Canoga Park, CA

1963—Dorsey Burnette (Capitol) N.A.—Dorsey Burnette (Dot); Dorsey Burnette's Greatest Hits (Era); Tall Oak Tree 1977—Things I Treasure (Calliope).

Dorsey Burnette played bass in brother Johnny Burnette's pioneering rockabilly group, the Rock 'n' Roll Trio. Following their brief fling with stardom in 1955–56, he moved with his brother from Memphis to L.A. They wrote a number of successful tunes for Rick Nelson ("Believe What You Say," "It's Late"), and each enjoyed moderate solo success in the early '60s. Dorsey's hits on Era Records included "Tall Oak Tree" (#23, 1960). From 1968 until his death in 1979 from a heart attack, he was a popular mainstream country artist, charting 10 C&W singles. In 1973, after some 20 years in the music business, he was named the year's most promising newcomer by the Academy of Country Music. He died six years later.

Johnny Burnette

Born Mar. 25, 1934, Memphis, TN; died Aug. 1, 1964, Clear Lake, CA

1975—The Very Best of Johnny Burnette (United Artists) 1976—Tear It Up (Solid Smoke) 1979—Stars of Rock 'n' Roll, vol. 1 (MCA) 1981—Johnny Burnette's Rock and Roll Trio and Their Rockin' Friends From Memphis (Rock-a-billy).

With his brother Dorsey, Johnny Burnette was a mid-'50s rockabilly pioneer and had some solo success in the early '60s. A guitarist/singer/songwriter, with Dorsey he put together the Rock 'n' Roll Trio along with guitarist Paul Burlison (who released his first solo album in 1981 on a small Memphis label). They had a couple of minor hits like "Train Kept a-Rollin'," distinguished by Burlison's breakthrough fuzz guitar riff, but disbanded in late 1957.

Johnny and Dorsey moved to L.A., where they cowrote several hits for Rick Nelson, among others. In 1958 Johnny got a solo contract with Liberty Records, for which he cleaned up his sound and image. He had the biggest hit of his career in November 1960 as a teen idol with the million-selling "You're Sixteen" (#8). With a couple of lesser hits in 1961, Johnny had his last taste of rock glory. He was plotting a comeback when he drowned in a boating accident in 1964.

Rocky Burnette

Born June 12, 1953, Memphis, TN

1979—Son of Rock 'n' Roll (EMI) 1980—Rocky Burnette.

After 26 years in the shadow of his father, Johnny, and uncle Dorsey Burnette, Rocky—the self-proclaimed "Son of Rock 'n' Roll"—came into his own with a #8 hit single, "Tired of Toein' the Line." He began writing songs in his early teens and at age 14, three years after his father's death, became a songwriter with the Acuff-Rose publishing company. His songs were recorded by several minor country singers. After finishing college, where he studied film and religion, Rocky made some unreleased recordings for Curb Records. In January 1979, broke after leaving Curb, he traded the rights to a couple of his songs for the studio time to record "Clowns From Outer Space," which he sent to EMI in London. EMI released it as a single. Its B side, "Tired of Toein' the Line," was written in less than half an hour. EMI put it on the A side. It hit first in Europe and Australia, making the British chart in 1979, before crossing to America the following year. To date, that was his first and last hit, although he had a single, "Three Flags," that appeared on the lower reaches of the country chart in 1990. More recently Rocky Burnette has toured with longtime family associate Paul Burlison, who originally served as the guitarist in Johnny Burnette's Rock 'n' Roll Trio back in the '50s.

Burning Spear

Born Winston Rodney, Mar. 1, 1945, St. Ann's Parish, Jam.

1975—Marcus Garvey (Island) 1976—Garvey's Ghost (Mango); Man in the Hills 1977—Dry and Heavy; Live (Island) 1979—Harder Than the Best 1980—Hail H.I.M. (Tammi) 1981—Social Living 1982—Farover (Heartbeat) 1983—Fittest of the Fittest 1984—Resistance; Reggae Greats (Mango) 1986—People of the World (Slash) 1988—Mistress Music 1989—Live in Paris: Zenith '88 1990—Mek We Dweet (Mango); 100th Anniversary 1992—Jah Kingdom; The Original (SonicSoul) 1993—The World Should Know (Heartbeat) 1994—Living Dub, vol. 1; Living Dub, vol. 2;

Burning Spear

Love and Peace: Burning Spear Live 1995—Rasta Business
 1996—Chant Down Babylon (Island) 1997—Living Dub,

Calling Rastafari; Living Dub, vol. 4.

In a career remarkable for its consistency of both quality and subject matter, Winston Rodney, a.k.a. Burning Spear, concerns himself with oppression—black Jamaicans' heritage of slavery—and mystical transcendence through Rastafarianism. His stark, hypnotic reggae is for the most part far removed from thoughts of love or sex or marijuana, the staples of pop reggae.

Rodney, Burning Spear's sole member since 1977, was born in St. Ann's Parish, the same neighborhood in which Bob Marley and '30s black leader Marcus Garvey were born, and continues to live in the northern hill region of Jamaica. He formed Burning Spear with bass vocalist Rupert Willington in the late '60s (Burning Spear was the name given to Kenyan leader Jomo Kenyatta.) In 1969 the two cut their first single for Clement "Sir Coxson" Dodd. Second tenor Delroy Hines joined soon after, and Spear became a vocal trio in the popular Jamaican style, with a repertoire based on traditional songs and chants dating from slave times. They were not particularly popular, and between 1971 and 1974 the group virtually disappeared.

In 1974, however, a runaway hit single on Lawrence "Jack Ruby" Lindo's Fox label, "Marcus Garvey," was heard all over Jamaica, followed by "Slavery Days." Dodd released three five-year-old singles—"Swell Headed," "Foggy Road," and "Ethiopians Live It Out"—and Britons as well as Jamaicans snapped them up, along with other singles and two import albums, Burning Spear and Rocking Time.

Marcus Garvey and its dub remix, Garvey's Ghost (which featured guitarist Earl "Chinna" Smith, bassist Robbie Shakespeare, drummer Leroy "Horsemouth" Wallace, and keyboardist Tyrone Downie), were released in the U.S. When Willington and Hines left Burning Spear in 1977, Rodney continued to record solo. He appeared in the film Rockers (made in 1977, released in the U.S. in 1980) in concert footage, and in an interview in the documentary Reggae Sunsplash (1980). While Rodney's brand of traditional reggae has fallen out of favor in his homeland, he tours the U.S. regularly with his own highly regarded band. By the '90s, Rodney's persistence had paid off, as Burning Spear returned to reggae's forefront with a series of albums recorded for the Heartbeat label, including the popular Living Dub series and Calling Rastafari, which was awarded the 1999 Grammy for Best Reggae Album.

Rodney still lives in Jamaica, where he teaches cultural history at the Marcus Garvey Youth Club, which he founded.

Bush

Formed 1992, London, Eng.

Gavin Rossdale (b. Oct. 30, 1967, London), voc., gtr.;
 Nigel Pulsford (b. Apr. 11, 1964, Newport, Wales), gtr.; Dave Parsons (b. July 2, 1965, Uxbridge, Eng.), bass; Robin Goodridge (b. Sep. 10, 1965, Crawley, Eng.), drums.
 1994—Sixteen Stone (Trauma/Interscope) 1996—Razorblade Suitcase 1997—Deconstructed 1999—The Science of Things.

Propelled by a steady stream of hook-laden hit singles and frontman Gavin Rossdale's pinup good looks, Bush emerged as one of the most successful modern-rock acts of the mid-'90s. The band's 1994 debut album, Sixteen Stone, sold nearly 6 million copies in the U.S., despite the band being widely dismissed by critics and virtually ignored in its native England.

The son of a doctor, Rossdale grew up in an upper-class section of North London. An early interest in soccer (he tried out for London's Chelsea team as a teenager) gave way to music shortly after he graduated from high school, when he threw himself into the city's club culture and wound up fronting a number of unsuccessful bands in the mid-'80s. Discouraged, he moved to L.A. in 1991 and found work as a music video production assistant, but he was back in London within six months and in 1992 connected with guitarist Nigel Pulsford, a veteran of the indie band King Blank. A shared love of the Pixies brought them together under the name Future Primitive, which evolved into Bush with the addition of drummer Robin Goodridge and bassist Dave Parsons, an alum of Transvision Vamp.

Unable to secure an English record deal, Bush signed with the Disney-owned Hollywood Records in the States, though that deal fell through shortly after the completion of its first album. It was picked up by the Interscope-distributed Trauma, which released Sixteen Stone in late 1994. The album climbed all the way to #4 the following year and spawned five successive Modern Rock radio hits—"Everything Zen," "Little Things," "Comedown," "Glycerine," and "Machinehead." In the span of a year, Bush had graduated from opening club gigs to headlining arenas. Curiously, while Sixteen Stone was selling millions of copies in the U.S., Bush's grunge-inspired guitar rock hardly registered on the British radar amid the prevailing sounds of Brit pop and electronica. Meanwhile, American critics promptly wrote the band off as grunge carpetbaggers, particularly indebted to Nirvana. The band's decision to record its second album with producer Steve Albini—who had been at the helm on Nirvana's In Utero—didn't help deflect the comparisons. Nevertheless, Razorblade Suitcase (1996) debuted at #1 and went triple platinum on the strength of the singles "Swallowed" (#27 Hot 100 Airplay) and "Greedy Fly" (#41 Hot 100 Airplay). The following year, Bush released Deconstructed (#36), a collection of remixes by the likes of Tricky, Goldie, and Jack Dangers of Meat Beat Manifesto.

Although Rossdale's budding romantic relationship with No Doubt frontwoman Gwen Stefani helped keep him in the spotlight, Bush's momentum was somewhat slowed by a $40 million breach-of-contract lawsuit filed against it by Trauma in early 1999. The label claimed that the band was withholding its third studio album and shopping around for a new deal. The matter was resolved after a few months with the band signing a new multiyear contract with the label. Bush premiered some of its new material to an enthusiastic crowd at Woodstock '99, but when The Science of Things was finally released in late 1999, the gold album peaked at #11. The moderately electronica-tinged lead single, "The Chemicals Between Us," went to #67.

Kate Bush

Born July 30, 1958, Bexleyheath, Eng.

1978—The Kick Inside (Capitol); On Stage (EMI America); Lionheart 1980—Never for Ever 1982—The Dreaming 1983—Kate Bush EP 1985—The Hounds of Love 1986—The Whole Story 1989—The Sensual World (Columbia) 1993—The Red Shoes 1999—This Woman's Work: Anthology 1979-90 (EMI, U.K.).

British singer/songwriter Kate Bush's idiosyncratic style has proved immensely popular in her homeland and around the world. Her debut single, "Wuthering Heights," hit #1 in the U.K. a month after its release in January 1978 and went on to become the year's best-selling single there and in Australia (only Abba was more popular in Western Europe). But except for "Running Up That Hill" (#30, 1985), Bush has yet to achieve the same broad popularity in the U.S., though her albums, particularly her later, more mature works, have been critically well received. Nonetheless, she has proved a major influence on artists such as Sinéad O'Connor, Jane Siberry, Björk, Tom Amos, and Dolores O'Riordan of the Cranberries.

Bush was something of an art-rock prodigy. The daughter of a British physician, Bush began playing the piano at the age of 11. She had been writing songs for two years when family friends told Dave Gilmour of Pink Floyd about the 16-year-old's four-octave range and interest in the supernatural. Gilmour financed the demo tape that got her signed to EMI. Because of her age and developing talent, she spent the next two years studying music, dance, and mime and writing the songs for her first album, recorded in 1977 under the supervision of Gilmour and producer Andrew Powell (Pink Floyd, Alan Parsons, Cockney Rebel). The album was preceded by the release of "Wuthering Heights." The song's runaway success also spurred sales of the Emily Brontë novel. Pat Benatar covered the song on Crimes of Passion.

The Kick Inside went to the U.K. Top 10, and two singles—"The Man With the Child in His Eyes" (#85, 1987) and "Wow," from Lionheart—made the Top 20. Bush's double EP of concert recordings also cracked the Top 10. She sang on Peter Gabriel's eponymous 1980 album, and her elaborately theatrical self-produced The Dreaming, which entered the U.K. chart at #3, shows his influence. Soon thereafter she constructed a state-of-the-art studio in her home, where she records. A known perfectionist, Bush uses the studio as an instrument, much the way Brian Wilson did, and her recordings evince a range of influences and styles, from Celtic to Middle Eastern music, and a mastery of rock and pop idioms, from lavish ballads to hard rockers.

Her next release, The Hounds of Love (#30 U.S., #1 U.K., 1985) featured her biggest U.S. single, "Running Up That Hill," as well as two other U.K. Top 20 singles, "Cloudbusting" and the title track. Her 1986 retrospective album and video, The Whole Story, was another #1 U.K. hit. With The Sensual World, Bush returned to literature for her inspiration, namely James Joyce's Molly Bloom, on whose soliloquies in Ulysses Bush based the title track's concept. This Woman's Work is a box set.

After a four-year hiatus, Bush returned with the ambitious (some critics thought confused) The Red Shoes, its title taken from the 1948 Michael Powell film (which was based on a Hans Christian Andersen tale) about a young ballerina. Bush, who had long been directing her own evocative videos, wrote, directed, and costarred (with performance artist-mime master Lindsay Kemp and actress Miranda Richardson) in her own 50-minute film. After six years without any solo activity, Bush started work on a new album in 1999, as of this writing, it had not yet been released.

The Bush Tetras

Pat Place (b. 1954, Chicago, IL), grt.; Laura Kennedy (b. May 30, 1957, Cleveland, OH), bass; Dee Pop (b. Dimitri Papadopoulos, Mar. 14, 1956, Queens, NY), drums; Cynthia Sley (b. May 3, 1957, Cleveland), voc., perc.
1980—Too Many Creeps EP (99) 1981—Rituals EP (Stiff)
1983—Wild Things cassette (ROIR) (- Kennedy; - Pop)

1989—Better Late Than Never, 1980–1983 cassette 1995—Boom in the Night 1997—Tetrafiled: Rare and Unreleased Recordings (2.13.61) (+ Kennedy; + Pop); Beauty Lies (Tim/Kerr/Mercury).

Emerging from Cleveland's new-wave and New York's no-wave scenes, the Bush Tetras mixed funk, noise, and no-nonsense urban-jungle lyrics. In 1977 James Chance [see entry] enlisted Pat Place for his incipient Contortions. Although she had no musical experience, she played bass, then slide guitar (as a Contortion and sometime member of James White and the Blacks) and developed her atonal slide style. Laura Kennedy and Cynthia Sley, classmates at the Cleveland Institute of Art, were in a performing arts group associated with Pere Ubu and Johnny and the Dicks. Kennedy moved to New York in 1977 to make films. Through a Cleveland acquaintance, Contortion Adele Bertei, she also worked as a roadie for the Contortions. When that band broke up in 1979, she joined rehearsals with Bertei, Place, Pop, and guitarist Jimmy Uliano. Bertei and Uliano dropped out after several months (Bertei went on to form the Bloods) and were replaced by lyricist and intoner Sley, who had been in New York since 1979 designing clothes for Lydia Lunch and Judy Nylon.

The Bush Tetras debuted in New York in early 1980. Their first record, a three-song EP, featured the club hit "Too Many Creeps." It was followed by a four-song EP, Rituals, produced by Topper Headon of the Clash; it appeared on national disco charts early in 1982. The band's other releases from that time include a 1983 live cassette and a 1989 anthology (Boom in the Night from 1995 is essentially the 1989 anthology). In 1983 the band lost momentum as members began dropping out. By the mid-'80s, Sley had formed a new band, Mad Orphan (the name later changed to the Lovelies), with her husband, ex-Voidoid Ivan Julian (the couple later split). In the '90s Sley started the all-women band 1-800-BOXX before calling it quits. Pop formed the group Floor Kiss with his then-wife, ex-John Cale vocalist Deerfrance, later playing drums with a succession of outfits. Kennedy left the music business, and Place turned up in the '90s, playing guitar behind spoken-word artist Maggie Estep.

The Bush Tetras briefly reunited in 1992 to play a handful of shows, then again in 1995. At that point the original lineup decided to record its first proper full-length album. Preceded by a single, "Page 18" b/w "Find a Lie," produced by Henry Rollins, Beauty Lies (which was produced by Nona Hendryx) failed to recapture the band's original energy. The Bush Tetras went their separate ways again in 1998, continuing to pursue an assortment of musical projects.

A distinctive soul singer for over four decades, Jerry Butler has a smooth but soulful style that has earned him his "Ice-man" sobriquet. He and childhood friend Curtis Mayfield defined Chicago soul with the Impressions. Butler, who had a gospel background, moved with his family from Sunflower, Mississippi, to Chicago in 1942. By the time he and Mayfield put together Jerry Butler and the Impressions [see entry] in 1957, Butler was perfecting a delicate, hesitant delivery. The Impressions had their first hit with "For Your Precious Love" (#11 pop, #3 R&B, 1958), cowritten by Butler. Butler went solo shortly thereafter but worked with Mayfield as songwriter and producer for several more years. The team scored its first post- Impressions hit in 1960 with Mayfield's "He Will Break Your Heart" (#7).

Specializing in mellow ballads, Butler continued to score occasional hits. He was the first artist to record "Moon River," the theme song to the popular 1961 film Breakfast at Tiffany's. Although it is Butler's version that appears in the film (and which went to #11 pop, #14 R&B, 1961), Andy Williams was asked to sing on the Academy Awards telecast. Butler also worked with Hal David and Burt Bacharach and scored a hit with "Make It Easy on Yourself" (#20 pop, #18 R&B, 1962). In 1964 he had a pair of hits with Betty Everett [see entry], "Let It Be Me" (#5 pop, #5 R&B) and "Smile" (#42 pop, #42 R&B).

Butler seemed destined to be a middle-of-the-road balladeer, but a move to Philadelphia in 1967 and a series of recordings with writer/producers Kenny Gamble and Leon Huff redefined his style. His two albums with that production team, The Ice Man Cometh (#29 pop, #2 R&B, 1969) and Ice on Ice (#41 pop, #4 R&B, 1969), were among the most highly acclaimed soul works of the period. Other hits from this collaboration include "Never Give You Up" (#20 pop, #4 R&B, 1968), "Hey, Western Union Man" (#16 pop, #1 R&B, 1968), "Are You Happy" (#39 pop, #9 R&B, 1968), "Only the Strong Survive" (#4 pop, #1 R&B, 1969), "Moody Woman" (#24 pop, #3 R&B, 1969), and "What's the Use of Breaking Up" (#20 pop, #4 R&B, 1969). In 1971 Butler and Gene Chandler recorded together. That same year, "Ain't Understanding Mellow," a duet with Brenda Lee Eager, hit #21 pop, #3 R&B. Later in the decade he teamed with Thelma Houston. Butler continued performing, and in 1979 he reunited with Gamble and Huff for Nothing Says I Love You Like I Love You and its followup, The Best Love I Ever Had. In 1980 he founded Fountain Records.

Butler, who has always had an interest in politics, first won an elected office in Chicago in 1985. By 2001, he was serving his fourth four-year term as a Cook County (Chicago) Commissioner. He was inducted with the Impressions into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1991 and received the Rhythm & Blues Foundation's Pioneer Award in 1994 (he subsequently was elected chairman of its board). In 2000 he published his memoir, Only the Strong Survive: Memoirs of a Soul Survivor (cowritten with Earl Smith). He continues to perform.

Paul Butterfield, a white singer and harmonica player who apprenticed with black bluesmen, helped spur the American blues revival of the '60s. The teenage Butterfield ventured into Chicago's South Side clubs, eventually working his way into onstage jams with Howlin' Wolf, Buddy Guy, Otis Rush, Little Walter, Magic Sam, and other blues legends. Butterfield played with University of Chicago classmate Elvin Bishop in bar bands named the Salt and Pepper Shakers and the South Side Olympic Blues Team. In 1963 he formed the Paul Butterfield Blues Band with two former members of Howlin' Wolf's band, Jerome Arnold and Sam Lay, later adding Bishop, Mark Naftalin, and lead guitarist Mike Bloomfield. The group built a strong local following, and its debut album was released in 1965. At that year's Newport Folk Festival, after playing its own set, the Butterfield band backed Bob Dylan for his controversial premiere electric performance. East-West featured extended jams and showed the influences of jazz and Indian music. Bloomfield left to form Electric Flag; Bishop moved to lead guitar.

By 1967 Butterfield had begun the first of many experiments, adding a brass section (including David Sanborn on alto saxophone) and changing his orientation from blues to R&B. He played on Muddy Waters' 1969 album, Fathers and Sons, and after disbanding the Blues Band in 1972, moved to Woodstock, New York. There he formed Butterfield's Better Days with Amos Garrett, Geoff Muldaur, and Ronnie Barron.

Butterfield made an appearance at the Band's Last Waltz concert in 1976, and during the late '70s he toured with Levon Helm's RCO All Stars and with ex-Band bassist Rick Danko in the Danko-Butterfield Band. In early 1980, while recording North-South in Memphis, Butterfield was stricken with a perforated intestine and peritonitis, which forced him to undergo three major operations over the next several years. Butterfield's next—and last—album, The Legendary Paul Butterfield Rides Again, came out in 1986, one year before the 44-year-old musician, an alcoholic, was found dead in his apartment.

Butthole Surfers are perhaps the most perversely confrontational and calculatedly outrageous American postpunk band. Their stage shows have included everything from backdrop projections of auto accidents and sex-change operations to androgynous nude dancers, crude pyrotechnics, and the incessant grossout shenanigans of singer Gibby Haynes. (At an early show he removed the dress he was wearing during a performance and—depending on who tells the story—either simulated sex or had sex with one of the band's dancers.) Though the Butthole Surfers' music combines the noisy, avant-garde tendencies of late '70s no wave with the throbbing, distorted drive of hardcore, much of it is informed by classic, psychedelic rock.

Haynes, whose father hosted a children's TV show in Dallas under the name Mr. Peppermint, met Paul Leary in 1977 while attending San Antonio's Trinity College. Four years later, Haynes, then doing graduate work in accounting, and Leary, son of the business school's dean, formed a band. They became Butthole Surfers when an announcer mistook one of their song titles for their band name. In San Francisco in 1981, the Surfers met the Dead Kennedys' Jello Biafra, who signed them to his Alternative Tentacles label. The band's self-titled first album contained the legendary dada-hardcore anthem "The Shah Sleeps in Lee Harvey's Grave."

Butthole Surfers: King Coffey, Paul Leary, Jeff Pinkus, Gibby Haynes, Theresa Nervosa

Between 1982 and 1985 the Surfers went through a succession of bass players and drummers. They toured constantly, perfecting their bizarre show by adding dancers, sometimes two drummers, and cultivating a hard-core cultish Deadhead-style following. Membership stabilized with the addition of King Coffey on drums in 1983. In 1985 the group signed with Touch and Go, soon becoming the label's best-selling band, and its music got even weirder and more depraved. Haynes' gut-wrenching sleaze and pseudo-Satanic ranting hit an all-time low on such songs as "Lady Sniff" (Psychic ... Powerless ...) and "Sweet Loaf" (Locust Abortion Technician's spoof of Black Sabbath's "Sweet Leaf"), while Leary's inventive lead guitar chugged and meandered around newly added instrumentation such as acoustic guitars, piano, organ, violin, and strange effects, like speeded-up and slowed-down vocals, and tape manipulations. Rembrandt Pussyhorse stands as one of the most "out" psychedelic albums of the postpunk era, featuring snaky, Middle Eastern-style instrumentation and drones, twisted folk melodies, avant-garde improvisation, industrial noise and feedback, and gastrointestinal sounds. Haynes' attempts to shock include deranged laughter, Exorcist-like growls, and lyrics such as "There's a creep in the cellar that I'm gonna let in ... and he really freaks me out when he peels off his skin." After appearing on the first Lollapalooza Tour in 1991, the Surfers signed with Capitol. Two years later the band released its major-label debut, the slightly more accessible Independent Worm Saloon, produced by former Led Zeppelin bassist John Paul Jones. In 1993 Haynes also formed a side band with actor Johnny Depp called P.

The Butthole Surfers' music has received radically mixed reviews, with underground observers generally applauding the envelope-pushing experimentations, and many mainstream rock critics put off by the band's constant arty attempts to shock. Through it all, the group is among the few '80s fringe acts to rise from independent to major-label status with its core audience and sound intact.

In 1996 the more streamlined sound of Electrified (#31) was rewarded with sales of more than 625,000 copies and a high-profile gig on Late Night With David Letterman. And with the accessible single "Pepper," the band had the #1 song on Billboard's Modern Rock Tracks chart, ahead of Smashing Pumpkins, Stone Temple Pilots, and Everclear. But this sudden brush with pop success was followed by a few years of legal troubles. Butthole Surfers recorded a followup in 1997 called After the Astronaut, but became enraged when Capitol provided copies to critics before it was finished. Legal wrangling to exit Capitol left that album unreleased, and the band was unable to record again until a departure was negotiated. By 1999, the band had moved to the SurfDog label, an imprint of Disney's Hollywood Records, and began reworking After the Astronaut. After an ugly break with Touch and Go, the Surfers' back catalogue was reissued on the band's own Latino Bugger Veil label.

The Buzzcocks

Formed 1975, Manchester, Eng.

Howard Devoto (b. Howard Trafford), voc.; Steve Diggle, gtr., bass; John Maher, drums; Pete Shelley (b. Peter McNeish, Apr. 17, 1955), voc., gtr.

1977—Spiral Scratch (New Hormones) (— Devoto; + Garth Smith, bass) 1978—(— Smith; + Steve Garvey, bass) Another Music in a Different Kitchen (UA/I.R.S.); Love Bites 1979—Singles Going Steady (I.R.S.); A Different Kind of Tension 1981—(group disbands) 1993—(group re-forms: Shelley; Diggle; + Tony Barber, bass; + Phil Barker, drums) Trade Test Transmissions (Caroline) 1996—French (I.R.S.); All Set 1999—Modern (Go-Kart) 2000—Time's Up (Mute).

The Buzzcocks were a successful U.K. new-wave singles band during the late '70s, combining Beatlesque romance and melodicism with a buzzsaw guitar attack and blistering punk-rock tempos. They came together at Bolton Institute in 1975 and made frequent London club appearances the following year. Their first recordings, including the four-song EP called Spiral Scratch (widely credited as Britain's first independent-label punk recording), were made with visionary early group leader Howard Devoto. When Devoto left the group in 1977 to form Magazine [see entry], Diggle switched from bass to guitar, and Garth Smith joined. Pete Shelley (who himself left the group in February 1981) became chief vocalist and songwriter. During their second U.S. tour in 1980, they picked up an enthusiastic coterie of followers, but their record sales were disappointing. In mid-1980, displeased with its lack of international success, the group disbanded. Shelley had a British hit on his own with "Homosapien," a sharp turn from the trademark Buzzcocks sound to synth-and-sequencer dance music.

In 1989 Shelley, Diggle, Garvey, and Maher reunited for a U.S. tour. By then, the Buzzcocks were seen as a core influence on modern British pop (as illustrated by the hit remake of their "Ever Fallen in Love" by Fine Young Cannibals in 1987). Four years later, with a new rhythm section—and with Nirvana's Kurt Cobain having told the rock press they were an inspiration—the Buzzcocks recorded a well-received comeback album, Trade Test Transmissions, and toured the U.S. It was the beginning of a renewed career, followed by a 23-cut live set, French, and the studio album All Set—both released in 1996. Though the band failed to tap into the popularity of Green Day and other young acts playing in a style the Buzzcocks helped invent, the quartet returned again in 1999 with Modern.

The Byrds, led by Roger McGuinn, pioneered folk rock and later country rock. With their high harmonies, ringing guitars, and obsession with studio technique, they also became the sonic model for many rock bands, including the Eagles, Tom Petty, and the latter-day Fleetwood Mac.

The band was formed in summer 1964 as the Jet Set and toyed with the name Beefeaters before settling on the Byrds, misspelled à la the Beatles. A few months later, the Byrds were touted as "L.A.'s answer to London." After signing with Columbia in November 1964 they recorded demos released years later as Preflyte. In January 1965 they met Bob Dylan who provided their first hit, the #1 "Mr. Tambourine Man." The single had Dylan's lyrics, a guitar hook, chorus harmonies, and a rock rhythm section: folk rock. Mr. Tambourine Man, released in June 1965, went to #6.

In 1966 the Byrds had a major hit with the anthemic "Turn! Turn! Turn!"—a Bible passage set to music by Pete Seeger. But the Byrds failed to achieve such commercial success for the rest of their existence. By the time Fifth Dimension was released in summer 1966, Gene Clark had left to embark on a solo career. His departure, plus their somewhat avant-garde LP, marked the start of the Byrds' "space rock" phase. The hit single "Eight Miles High" (#14, 1966) from Fifth Dimension solidified their new style. It was also one of the first records to be widely banned because of supposedly drug-oriented lyrics.

Tensions within the band increased and occasionally erupted into onstage fistcuffs. The group managed to stay together long enough to see 1967's Younger Than Yesterday released and to record the countryish followup, The Notorious Byrd Brothers, but by the time the later album hit stores in January 1968, Crosby and drummer Michael Clarke were both gone. Crosby went on to superstardom with Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young, while Clarke joined the Dillard and Clark group. McGuinn and Hillman soldiered on with new drummer Kevin Kelley and International Submarine Band singer/songwriter/guitarist Gram Parsons. Parsons took the Byrds even further into country territory; Sweetheart of the Rodeo, recorded in Nashville and released in the fall of 1968, remains a cornerstone of the country-rock movement that spawned groups like the Eagles and Poco in the '70s and Uncle Tupelo in the '90s.

By October 1968 McGuinn was the only original Byrd remaining, as Parsons and Hillman left to continue their country experiments with the Flying Burrito Brothers. He kept the patchwork Byrds alive through 1973 with a series of partners, most notably guitarist Clarence White, a session veteran of several previous Byrds albums. The various combos toured steadily and put out a series of mildly successful albums, including the double live and studio set Untitled, which contained "Chestnut Mare," one of McGuinn's signature tunes. After 1972's Farther Along however, McGuinn disbanded the group to record a reunion album with Crosby, Clark, Hillman, and Clarke in 1973. Simply titled The Byrds, the album flopped and the name was laid to rest.

McGuinn subsequently embarked on a low-key solo career. In late 1975 and early 1976 he was prominently featured in Dylan's Rolling Thunder Revue. With fellow Revue trouper Mick Ronson producing, he recorded Cardiff Rose. In early 1977 he assembled a new band, wryly dubbed Thunderbyrd, and recorded an album of the same name. By late in the year he was playing occasional dates in tandem with Clark, and the alliance soon expanded to include Hillman as well. In 1979 the three recorded their self-titled debut disc and enjoyed some pop success with "Don't You Write Her Off" (#33, 1979). In 1980 McGuinn and Hillman returned with City, before the band gradually fragmented, and McGuinn took up his solo career again. It was more than 10 years before he released another LP. Back From Rio, with assistance from admirers such as Tom Petty and Elvis Costello, reached #44.

The same month the LP charted, January 1991, the Byrds were inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. McGuinn, Hillman, and Crosby had been at odds with Michael Clarke and Gene Clark for touring using the Byrds name. To prevent them from doing so, in 1989 McGuinn, Hillman, and Crosby had played three dates to establish their legal right to the name. A year later they recorded four songs for inclusion on the four-CD The Byrds anthology. Four months after the Hall of Fame ceremonies, Gene Clark died at age 46; in 1993 Michael Clarke died of liver failure.

Beginning in 1996, Columbia/Legacy began a lavish Byrds reissue series, eventually re-releasing the entire catalogue (minus the reunion album, which had been recorded for Asylum) embellished with multiple bonus tracks, including an entire disc's worth of unissued recordings with Untitled Along with the reissues came the previously unreleased Live at the Fillmore—February 1969. McGuinn, meanwhile, directed his energies toward recording solo versions of obscure folk songs, which he made available as MP3s on the Internet as part of his "Folk Den" Web site.

David Byrne

Born May 14, 1952, Dumbarton, Scot.

1981—The Complete Score From the Broadway Production of "The Catherine Wheel" (Sire) 1985—Music for "The Knee Plays" (ECM) 1986—Sounds From "True Stories" (Sire) 1988—Married to the Mob soundtrack (Reprise) 1989—Rei Momo (Luaka Bop/Sire) 1991—The Forest 1992—Uh-Oh 1994—David Byrne 1997—Feelings 2001—Look Into the Eyeball (Luaka Bop/Virgin).

With Brian Eno: 1981—My Life in the Bush of Ghosts (Sire).

With Ryuichi Sakamoto and Cong Su: 1988—The Last Emperor soundtrack (Virgin Movie Music).

In his work outside Talking Heads [see entry], David Byrne has explored electronics, performance art, and world music. Byrne was born in Scotland but raised in Baltimore where his father was an electronics engineer. Coming from a working-class environment, Byrne felt alienated from the many wealthy students he encountered as an art student at the Rhode Island School of Design. He dropped out after one year but stayed in Providence, playing one-man shows with a ukulele and eventually forming the Artistics (a.k.a. the Autistics) and then Talking Heads.

Byrne's first project outside the Heads, My Life in the Bush of Ghosts, was a collaboration with Heads producer Brian Eno. The resulting collage of electronic music, vocal tapes, and African and other third world rhythms was widely acclaimed as groundbreaking. It ran into controversy when Muslims objected to the track "Qu'ran" for its use of religious text, it was replaced with "Very Very Hungry." This was the first of many times Byrne has been accused by detractors of colonialist appropriation.

Byrne next turned to theatrical collaborations, writing music for the Twyla Tharp dance piece The Catherine Wheel. For Knee Plays, a section of Robert Wilson's epic CIVIL warS, Byrne incorporated text and music based on New Orleans brass bands. In 1986 he wrote, directed, and starred in the film True Stories, a series of vignettes about American eccentrics. He produced and wrote the majority of the songs for the film soundtrack (not the same as the Talking Heads album) and performed two of them. He also composed the soundtrack for the Jonathan Demme film Marned to the Mob (1988). With Ryuichi Sakamoto and Cong Su, he won an Oscar for the soundtrack to The Last Emperor (1988). Byrne has also written soundtracks for two movies by Philip Haas.

In 1988 Byrne's conversion to world music led him to form Luaka Bop Records, which has released, along with Byrne's records, music by Brazilian, Cuban, and Asian artists, as well as the U.K. avant-dance band A.R. Kane and the L.A. rockers Geggy Tah. He also made Cuban records available in the U.S. for the first time since the 1961 boycott. Byrne collaborated with a number of Latin musicians on the Steve Lillywhite-produced Rei Momo, particularly percussionist Milton Cardona, arranger Angel Fernandez, and songwriters Willie Colon and Johnny Pacheco. He was again accused of white privilege when Colon said in Billboard that Byrne had exploited musicians starved for validation. Byrne included many of the album's performers in his 14-piece band on the Rei Momo world tour.

Byrne's film Ilé Aiyé (The House of Life), a documentary about Yoruban dance-music rituals, kicked off the Alive From Off Center series on PBS in summer 1989. He worked with Robert Wilson again on 1991's The Forest, a composition for a full orchestra. Uh-Oh featured more conventional rock songs, with Byrne using the same band on every track—although that band included Meters bassist George Porter Jr., Latin percussionists Hector Rosado and Cafe, and Miami drummer Oscar Salas. A concert film, Between the Teeth, documented the tour.

Byrne formed an all-new band with a more stripped-down sound (Todd Turkisher on drums, Paul Socolow on bass, and Mauro Refosco on mallet instruments and percussion) for David Byrne, which marked a return to the wry, affectless writing style he perfected with Talking Heads. In 1996 Byrne, citing "wrongful use," filed a lawsuit against the members of his former band and Radioactive Records head (and Heads ex-manager) Gary Kurfirst to halt the release of a new, Byrne-less album, No Talking Just Head, and to prevent the musicians' use of the name Heads for a tour. The suit was settled out of court, and plans for both album and tour proceeded. Two years later, Byrne recorded Feelings, which featured collaborations with the British dance-music group Morcheeba and members of Devo. The subsequent tour featured the English avant-classical string group Balanescu Quartet. In the fall of 1998 the singer began a half-year stint as host of the PBS music program Sessions at West 54th. In 1999 he collaborated with the Belgian dance troupe Ultima Vez, composing music for director Wim Vandekeybus's In Spite of Wishing and Wanting: Look Into the Eyeball boasted a variety of influences, including Philly soul, and featured a Byrne composition written in Spanish.

Cabaret Voltaire was one of the earliest electronic industrial-dance groups. Along with Throbbing Gristle and Psychic TV, the trio had a profound influence on the techno, ambient, and industrial styles that came to prominence in the late '80s and early '90s.

Little is known about the members of Cabaret Voltaire, except that in the early '70s, seven teenagers came together in the industrial city of Sheffield, England, and began making tapes of noises to play at parties for laughs. The group was soon whittled down to just Stephen Mallinder, Richard Kirk, and Christopher Watson, who hooked up with the music department at Sheffield Haddam University and gained access to a synthesizer, tape recorders, and other instruments.

Inspired by the dada art movement, the ambient work of Brian Eno, and its industrial environment, Cabaret Voltaire blended the sounds of everyday objects with the textures of musical instruments to create aural collages of noise, beats, and disembodied vocals. They named themselves after the dadaist club formed in Zurich in 1917 by Hugo Ball.

Cabaret Voltaire's early recordings are harsh and abrasive; its first EP contains a distorted version of Lou Reed's "Here She Comes Now." As the group matured during its prolific early-'80s period, it became increasingly interested in Middle Eastern sounds and more accessible dance music; it hit an artistic peak with 1982's 2 X 45.

Watson left the group in 1981 to work in television, and later showed up with the avant-garde Hafler Trio. By the mid-'80s Cabaret Voltaire's music had become slicker, though the group never scored a major hit. In the late '80s it had begun flirting with house music, releasing 12 different mixes of the 1989 single "Hypnotized." In the early '90s Cabaret Voltaire returned to the more ambient sounds of its earlier days, and then disappeared from the scene as mysteriously as the group entered it. Its most recent album of new material was 1994's The Conversation, followed six years later by the archival BBC Recordings 1984–86.

The Cadillacs

Formed 1953, New York, NY

Lineup ca. 1954: Earl Carroll (b. Nov. 2, 1937, New York), lead voc.; Robert Phillips (b. 1935, New York), voc.; La Verne Drake (b. 1938, New York), voc.; Johnny "Gus" Willingham (b. 1937, New York), voc.; James "Poppa" Clark, voc.
1990—The Best of the Cadillacs (Rhino).

A distinguished '50s R&B group whose legend has grown appreciably over the years, the Cadillacs considered uptempo numbers like "Speedo" (sometimes spelled "Speedoo") (#17 pop, 1956; #3 R&B, 1955) their forte, although latter-day fans often prefer their slow ballads.

Originally called the Carnations, the Cadillacs came together in 1953 after a series of informal sing-along sessions in Harlem. A short time later they met manager Esther Navaroo, who persuaded them to change their name to the Cadillacs and helped them record "Gloria," a song she had written (Navaroo received writer's credit for many of the group's releases; it was later revealed that some songs had been written by the group members.) Their stage show included flamboyant attire and tight choreography, a precursor of and influence on the Motown style, not surprising since the Temptations and the Four Tops fell under the tutelage of the Cadillacs' choreographer, Cholly Atkins.

In late 1955 the group released "Speedo," about its happy-go-lucky singer Earl Carroll. The record employed fast scat harmonies and became one of the Cadillacs' few hits, along with "Peek-a-Boo" (#28, 1959) and "What You Bet" (#30 R&B, 1961). Other releases included "Zoom," "Woe Is Me," and "Rudolph the Red-Nosed Reindeer" (1956). In 1957 the group splintered into two singing groups, both calling themselves the Cadillacs. The group that included Carroll released "Jay Walker," "Please Mr. Johnson" (both 1959), and several other singles through 1961. Through 1963 both groups of Cadillacs released records to dwindling public interest.

In 1961 Earl Carroll left to replace Cornell Gunter in the Coasters, with whom he toured through the '70s. Three years later Carroll's new group released "Speedo's Back in Town," a tribute to Speedo recorded live at the Apollo. The Cadillacs continued to run through the '60s. In the early '80s the group re-formed with original members Carroll and Phillips.

J.J. Cale

Born Jean Jacques Cale, Dec. 5, 1938, Oklahoma City, OK
1972—Naturally (Shelter); Really 1974—Okie 1976—Troubadour 1979—Number 5 1981—Shades 1982—Grasshopper (Mercury) 1983—#8 1990—Travelog (Silvertone) 1992—Number 10 1994—Closer to You (Virgin) 1996—Guitar Man 1997—Anyway the Wind Blows—Anthology (PolyGram) 1998—Very Best of J.J. Cale.

Self-described "semiretired," reclusive singer/songwriter J.J. Cale's songs have been covered by artists ranging from Johnny Cash to Captain Beefheart. But his trademark sinuous, bluesy guitar lines and mumbly, near-whispered vocals have been popularized by Dire Straits and Eric Clapton; the latter's versions of "After Midnight" and "Cocaine" have become radio hits.

Cale took up the guitar at age 10. After playing in a succession of Tulsa, Oklahoma, bands (one group included Leon Russell) during high school, he went on the road in 1959 and played in the Grand Ole Opry road company. By the early '60s, he was back in Tulsa playing with Russell, and in 1964 the two moved to L.A. with fellow Oklahoma native Carl Radle (later of Derek and the Dominos). Cale hooked up with Delaney and Bonnie, and by 1965 he was recording on his own, including the first release of "After Midnight." He left Delaney and Bonnie and in 1967 returned to Tulsa.

Radle passed on some of Cale's homemade demo tapes to Denny Cordell, and Cale became one of the first signings of Cordell and Russell's Shelter Records in 1969. Following Clapton's 1970 success with "After Midnight" (#18), Cale recorded Naturally in 1972, from which "Crazy Mama" went to #22. "Magnolia," also on that album, was later covered by Poco and José Feliciano. Throughout the '70s, Cale recorded and toured at a leisurely pace. Cale moved to Mercury Records in 1982, releasing two albums, Grasshopper (#149, 1982) and #8 (1983). Disappointed by their sales, he asked to be released from his contract. He spent the next six years living in a mobile home outside L.A., emerging only for an annual tour.

Cale released two albums on Silvertone, a U.K.-based independent label, Travelog (#131, 1990) and Number 10 (1992). He also produced John Hammond's Got Love If You Want It (1992) and Trouble No More (1994). Closer to You (1994) and Guitar Man (1996) continued Cale's trademark laid-back bluesy songwriting.

John Cale has brought an avant-garde ear to rock & roll ever since he founded the Velvet Underground with Lou Reed in 1966. His work shows a fascination with opposites: lyricism and noise, subtlety and bluntness, hypnotic repetition and sudden change. Even as a student of classical music, he was an extremist: During a recital at the Guildhall School of Music, London, where he was studying theory and composition, he demolished a piano. Cale studied in Britain with composer Humphrey Searle, came to America in 1963 to work with Iannis Xenakis and Aaron Copland under the auspices of a Leonard Bernstein Fellowship, then settled in New York with such radical composers as John Cage and La Monte Young. That year Cale was one of a group of pianists to perform Erik Satie's nearly 19-hour-long "Vexations." Through his association with the Lower Manhattan art community, Cale met Reed, who directed him toward electric instruments and rock & roll and helped conceive the Velvet Underground [see entry], for whom Cale played keyboards, bass, and electric viola.

After two Velvet albums (The Velvet Underground and Nico and White Light/White Heat), Cale left in 1968 for a solo career. In the early '70s he worked as an A&R man for Warner Bros. and Elektra, and as a consultant for Columbia, remixing albums by Barbra Streisand and Paul Revere and the Raiders in quadrophonic sound. On his solo albums of the decade, he used elegant pop (Paris 1919, with Little Feat's Lowell George), hard rock (Fear), Phil Spector/Brian Wilson gloss (Slow Dazzle), minimalism (Church of Anthrax, with fellow La Monte Young pupil Terry Riley), full orchestra (The Acad- emy in Peril), and punk (Sabotage). Lyrically, he displayed equal daring; delivered in a strong baritone, his work ranged from musings about terrorism, espionage, and states of psychological extremity to love songs. His '70s tours, generally featuring guitarist Chris Spedding, were often acts of disturbing theater (recorded at New York's CBGB, Even Cowgirls Get the Blues captured the punk ambience of the period); at one point Cale chopped up a chicken onstage, causing his band members to walk out.

By the next decade Cale had established himself as a producer/collaborator on some 80 albums, ranging from the debut efforts of Iggy Pop and the Stooges, Patti Smith, Jonathan Richman's Modern Lovers, and Squeeze to four albums by former Velvet singer Nico; he also had worked with Brian Eno, Kevin Ayers, Kate and Anna McGarrigle, Nick Drake, and Mike Heron and scored soundtracks for Andy Warhol's Heat and Roger Corman's Caged Heat. While commercial success continued to elude him, he was lauded as one of punk's godfathers, a status he contended against with characteristic irony. His primary interest remained classical music. As the '80s waned he continued producing (Happy Mondays), scoring (the soundtrack for Jonathan Demme's Something Wild with Laurie Anderson and David Byrne), and releasing solo work as various as the almost-pop of Wrong Way Up to "The Falklands Suite," an orchestration of Dylan Thomas poetry that highlighted Words for the Dying.

By 1993 Cale had come full circle: Having, two years earlier, collaborated with Lou Reed on Songs for Drella, a tribute to Velvet Underground mentor Andy Warhol, he teamed with the Velvets on a reunion tour.

On his own, he continued to innovate, releasing in 1996, with help from David Byrne and Velvet drummer Maureen Tucker, Walking on Locusts, featuring a moving tribute to Velvet guitarist Sterling Morrison, and, in 1998, Nico, an elegy for Velvet chanteuse Nico.

Cameo

Larry Blackmon (b. New York), drums, bass, voc.; Tomi Jenkins, voc.; Nathan Leffentian, trumpet, voc.

1977—Cardiac Arrest (Chocolate City) 1978—We All Know Who We Are 1979—Ugly Ego; Secret Omen 1980—Cameosis; Feel Me 1981—Knights of the Sound Table 1982—Alligator Woman (Atlanta Artists) 1983—Style 1984—She's Strange 1985—Single Life 1986—Word Up! 1988—Machismo 1990—Real Men . . . Wear Black 1992—Emotional Violence (Reprise) 1993—The Best of Cameo (Mercury) 1994—In the Face of Funk (Way 2 Funky) 1996—The Best of Cameo, vol. 2 (Mercury); Nasty (Intersound) 1998—Ballads Collection (PolyGram); Greatest Hits 1999—12" Collection & More 2000—Sexy Sweet Thing (Universal/Private Eye).

The brainchild of multi-instrumentalist and songwriter Larry Blackmon, the group Cameo is a confusingly complex net of personal and financial entanglements. By the early '70s the Juilliard-trained Blackmon became leader of the dozen or so musicians and in 1974 changed their name from the New York City Players to Cameo. Viewed as a minor-league Funkadelic (with whom Cameo shared a label and for whom they frequently opened), they were moderately successful, with three Top 10 R&B hits: "I Just Want to Be" (#3 R&B, 1979), "Sparkle" (#10 R&B, 1979), and "Shake Your Pants" (#8 R&B, 1980).

Unhappy with how the band was being treated, and finding the North inhospitable to African-Americans, in 1981 Blackmon moved operations to Atlanta, where he started his Atlanta Artists label. The early albums were unsuccessful, and to save money, the personnel of the band—always a mystery, since Blackmon withheld credit from some musicians—was reduced to a core band of Blackmon, Tomi Jenkins, and Nathan Leftenant. This version of the band produced the spare, ominous, stalking funk of "She's Strange" (#47 pop, #1 R&B, 1984), "Word Up" (#6 pop, #1 R&B, 1986), "Candy" (#21 pop, #1 R&B, 1986), and "Back and Forth" (#50 pop, #3 R&B, 1987).

Stardom gave the always voluble Blackmon license to make outrageous statements, dismissing Steve Winwood and Peter Dinklage as false funk, calling Kool and the Gang plagiarists, and chastising rap musicians for irresponsible attitudes. Cameo also made a striking visual impression, with geometric haircuts and Jean-Paul Gaultier-designed clothes (with Blackmon's oversize red leather codpiece the center of attention). In 1987 Cameo collaborated with Miles Davis on "In the Night."

Blackmon has made a name for himself as a producer; his credits include Bobby Brown's debut. In 1991 he was named vice president of A&R at Warner-Reprise Records, though by 1994 that relationship had ended. By that time, Blackmon and Cameo were no longer reaching the top of the charts but remained a dependable touring attraction (documented on the live Nasty). Will Smith introduced a new generation of listeners to Cameo when he featured the band on his 1997 album, Big Willie Style.

Glen Campbell

Born Apr. 22, 1936, Billstown, AR

1967—Gentle on My Mind (Capitol); By the Time I Get to Phoenix 1968—Hey Little One; A New Place in the Sun; Bobbie Gentry and Glen Campbell (with Bobbie Gentry); Wichita Lineman; That Christmas Feeling 1969—Galveston; Glen Campbell Live 1970—Try a Little Kindness 1971—Glen Campbell's Greatest Hits; The Last Time I Saw Her 1975—Arkansas; Rhinestone Cowboy 1976—The Best of Glen Campbell; Bloodline 1977—Southern Nights 1978—Basic 1979—Highwayman 1980—Somethin' Bout You Baby I Like 1981—It's the World Gone Crazy 1984—Old Home Town (Atlantic America) 1987—Still Within the Sound of My Voice (MCA); The Very Best of Glen Campbell (Capitol) 1988—Light Years (MCA) 1990—Walkin' in the Sun (Capitol Nashville); Greatest Country Hits (Curb); Classics Collection (Capitol Nashville) 1991—Unconditional Love; Show Me Your Way 1992—Wings of Victory 1993—Somebody Like That (Liberty).

Glen Campbell has been a critically respected mainstream country-pop star for more than two decades. A subtle, adept interpreter (as evidenced in such Jimmy Webb compositions as "Wichita Lineman"), Campbell has also been well received by contemporary Christian audiences.

Campbell was one of 12 children in a family where everyone played the guitar and sang. He got his first guitar at age four and left home as a teenager to tour with an uncle, a musician named Dick Bill. In 1960 Campbell moved to L.A., where he became known in country and rock circles and supported himself with session work for Frank Sinatra, Rick Nelson, Johnny Cash, Dean Martin, the Mamas and the Papas, Gene Clark, and several of Phil Spector's groups. In 1965 he played bass or guitar (sources differ) with the Beach Boys for eight months following Brian Wilson's decision not to appear with the band.

Campbell signed with Capitol in 1962 and recorded with occasional and minor success; his 1965 cover of Donovan's "Universal Soldier" entered the Top 50. In 1967 he hit with John Hartford's "Gentle on My Mind" (#39) and became a regular guest on the Smothers Brothers' variety program. His other '60s hits included the Jimmy Webb compositions "By the Time I Get to Phoenix" (#11, 1967), "Wichita Lineman" (#3, 1968), and "Galveston" (#4, 1969). From January 1969 to June 1972 Campbell hosted his own variety show, The Glen Campbell Goodtime Hour. His later hits include "Rhinestone Cowboy" (#1, 1975), Allen Toussaint's "Southern Nights" (#1, 1977), and "Country Boy (You Got Your Feet in L.A.)" (#11, 1976). Over the years, he has also worked in movies (True Grit with John Wayne, Norwood) and has made countless appearances on television, including the syndicated series The Glen Campbell Music Show (1982-83).

Though Campbell's appearances in the pop Top 40 became rare, he toured relentlessly and remained a strong presence on the country and gospel charts during the '80s and '90s. He also spoke freely in interviews about his 1981 baptism. In 1991 he launched a long-running tour that featured John Hartford, Jim Stafford, and Nicolette Larson. The following year he voiced Chanticleer the Rooster in the animated feature film Rock-a-Doodle. In 1994 he published his autobiography, Rhinestone Cowboy. Campbell recently resumed touring after a five-year stint at his own Glen Campbell Goodtime Theatre in Branson, Missouri. He continues to record occasional gospel and Christmas albums. He is also a frequent performer on the golf course, often with his somewhat unlikely pal Alice Cooper.

 Cracker, formed 1990, Richmond, VA: Lowery; Johnny Hickman, voc., gtr.; Davey Faragher, voc., bass; Michael Urbano, drums; Phil Jones, drums, perc.
 1992—Cracker (Virgin) 1993—Kerosene Hat 1996—Golden Age (- Faragher; - Urbano; - Jones; + Bob Rupe, bass; + Charlie Quintana, drums) 1998—Gentleman's Blues (- Quintana) 2000—Garage D' Or.

Camper Van Beethoven introduced an eclectic, often humorous blend of hippie psychedelia, avant-garde improvisation, country-western shadings, pseudo-ethnic sounds, and a hardcore punch to the mid-'80s postpunk scene. What saved the group from novelty status was its genuine talent for making interesting, adventurous music. After its breakup, Lowery went on to greater commercial success in his band Cracker.

Born in San Antonio, Texas, and raised in cities around the globe as an air force brat, CVB leader David Lowery ultimately landed as a teenager in Redlands, California (just outside of L.A.). By 1983 Lowery was studying mathematics at UC Santa Cruz and had begun playing with his first band, Sitting Duck, which experimented with ethnic sounds by way of TV shows and advertisements, and played alongside thrashy punk and psychedelic rock & roll. The earliest version of Camper Van Beethoven grew out of Sitting Duck and included Lowery, Krummenacher, Molla, and guitarist David McDaniel (who actually named the band shortly before leaving). It wasn't until the next year, however, that the Campers began following their eclectic muse in earnest. Lowery had returned to college in Santa Cruz and was soon followed by Krummenacher and Molla. There they met up with local guitarist Greg Lisher and composition student Jonathan Segal.

The band's first album, Telephone Free Landslide Victory, on the arty L.A.-based label Independent Projects, produced the humorous "Take the Skinheads Bowling," which became a cult favorite among college students. The album also featured a slowed-down, violin-drenched version of Black Flag's first single, "Wasted." The album was followed by a string of equally offbeat collections of songs—which featured titles like "ZZ Top Goes to Egypt" and "Joe Stalin's Cadillac"—on which the Campers experimented with everything from Beatlesque tape manipulation and Arabic-like drones to absurdist lyrics and offbeat covers (such as Ringo Starr's "Photograph" and Pink Floyd's "Interstellar Overdrive"). In 1987 the group recorded with the eccentric guitarist Eugene Chadbourne—calling themselves Camper Van Chadbourne—for the tiny indie label Fundamentalist Records. Virgin signed the band in 1988, releasing the more accessible (yet still very offbeat) Our Beloved Revolutionary Sweetheart and Key Lime Pie.

In 1988 Krummenacher, Lisher, and Pedersen took the band's arty quality to their side project, Monks of Doom, and Segal recorded a solo album. Camper Van Beethoven parted ways in 1989, and Lowery took the hooky pop side of the band into his group Cracker. With guitarist and Redlands friend Johnny Hickman, Lowery relocated to Richmond, Virginia, to make music. Coming immediately after Camper's far-out Key Lime Pie, the feisty roots-rock sound of Cracker initially earned denison from alternative circles, as it discarded Camper's violins and strange polyrhythms.

After the first, self-titled album won airplay on college radio with the typically cynical anthem "Teen Angst (What the World Needs Now)," Cracker's followup, Kerosene Hat (#59, 1993), yielded the modern-rock radio hit "Low." It helped propel the album to sales above 1 million. After playing to larger audiences, Cracker reconvened for Golden Age (#63, 1996), which failed to repeat the same lasting commercial success of Kerosene Hat. While Gentleman's Blues (#182, 1998) continued that trend, Lowery became busy as a producer, recording both new pop acts and hardcore bands in his Richmond studio, and coproducing the Counting Crows' This Desert Life.

In 2000 Lowery released both a Cracker retrospective, Garage D' Or, and another retrospective called Camper Van Beethoven Are Dead. Long Live Camper Van Beethoven. The members of both bands then toured together in a roadshow that included sets by Cracker and solo artists Krummenacher, Segal, and Lisher.

European art-rock band Can was one of the first groups to use electronic "treatments" of instruments, and it pioneered an exploratory postpsychedelic-rock style that would later influence Amon Duul, Ash Ra Temple, and the generations of new-wave, techno, experimental postrock, and ambient artists that followed. Can's sound was based on repetitive, trance-inducing rhythms overlaid with atmospheric noise and sudden bursts of distorted electronic effects, with instruments often unrecognizable in the mix.

The debut Monster Movie finds the approach still rather primitive. But when vocalist Malcolm Mooney was taken ill and replaced by Kenji "Damo" Suzuki—who the group discovered singing on the streets of Munich—Irmin Schmidt and Holger Czukay began making full use of their studios with German avant-garde composer Karlheinz Stockhausen. Can expanded its frontiers and sounded more assured on Tago Mago, Ege Bamyasi, Future Days, and Soon Over Babaluma. The music was natural for films, the ensemble scored part of Jerzy Skolimowski's Deep End. Soundtracks collects these and similar commissioned efforts.

In 1976 Can enjoyed a few hit singles abroad with "I Want More" and a version of "Silent Night." With the addition of ex-Traffic members Rosko Gee and Reebop Kwaku Baah, the players' sound got funkier on the well-received Saw Delight.

Can soon went into limbo, with various members splitting off for solo and collaboration LPs. The most prolific was Czukay, whose works include the Brian Eno-ish Movies (1980), On the Way to the Peak of Normal (1982), Der Osten Ist Rot (1984), Rome Remains Rome (1987), and Radio Wave Surfer (1991). Czukay has also worked with Rolf Dammers (Canaxis, 1982), Eurhythmics, David Sylvian (1988's Plight and Premonition, 1989's Flux + Mutability), and Jah Wobble (1981's How Much Are They EP with Liekezeit and 1983's Snake Charmer with the Edge).

In 1986 the post-Johnson lineup reunited to record Rite Time. In 1991, without Czukay, the band contributed a track to the Wim Wenders film Until the End of the World and went back on hiatus. Despite numerous requests to reunite and its immense influence on modern independent acts as varied as England's Stereolab, America's Tortoise, and Finland's Circle, Can has refused to formally regroup. In 1997 Mute Records released Sacrilège, on which artists ranging from Sonic Youth to A Guy Called Gerald remixed Can's classic material. In 1999 the label unveiled a retrospective box set alongside domestic reissues of Can's entire catalogue.

C + C Music Factory

Formed Oct. 1990, New York, NY

Robert Clivillés (b. Aug. 30, 1964, New York), drums, perc., bass; David Cole (b. June 3, 1962, Johnson City, TN; d. Jan. 24, 1995, New York), kybds., bass, voc.; Zelma Davis (b. Aug. 2, 1970, Republic of Liberia), voc.; Freedom Williams (b. Feb. 13, 1966, Brooklyn, NY), voc.

1991—Gonna Make You Sweat (Columbia) 1994—Anything Goes! 1995—Ultimate—Greatest Remixes (Sony Music)

1996—In the Groove 2000—Super Hits (Sony/Columbia).

Freedom Williams solo: 1993—Freedom (Columbia).

In the early '90s as the creative team guiding C + C Music Factory, Robert Clivillés and David Cole personified the reemergence of the producer/songwriter as star in pop music. They also endured clashes with artists who felt that their work within this dance-pop collective hadn't been properly acknowledged.

Clivillés and Cole met in the mid-'80s at a Manhattan nightclub where Clivillés DJ'd while Cole played live keyboards. Before long, they were remixing club hits for the likes of Janet Jackson ("Pleasure Principle"), Natacha Cole ("Pink Cadillac"), and Fleetwood Mac ("Big Love"). The duo next set its sights on making original recordings, using keyboards and a computer to write and arrange material, then recruiting performers to lay down vocals. Their breakthrough came when they assembled the R&B trio Seduction, whose debut album, Nothing Matters Without Love (#36, 1989), produced several hit singles, including "You're My One and Only (True Love)" (#23 pop, #56 R&B, 1989) and "Two to Make It Right" (#2 R&B, 1989).

With C + C Music Factory, Clivillés and Cole brought their own involvement to the fore. The outfit's 1991 debut album, Gonna Make You Sweat, hit #2 on the pop chart and yielded a #1 title track (on the pop and R&B charts) and the #3 single "Here We Go, Let's Rock & Roll" (#7 R&B). The album featured singers Martha Wash and Deborah Cooper and rapper Freedom Williams; but these vocalists were only briefly mentioned in the LP's production notes and liner material. Furthermore, Wash, whose booming soprano had also been the uncredited voice of Seduction and the dance group Black Box (she sang with the Weather Girls [see entry] and Two Tons O'Fun, as well), was conspicuously absent in C + C's popular videos, in which the more lithe, attractive Zelma Davis lip-synched to her vocals.

In 1991 Wash filed two lawsuits against Clivillés and Cole, one charging that she hadn't received ample credit for Sweat, the other protesting her deceptive exclusion from the videos. While still hashing it out with her lawyers, the producers worked with Maniah Carey on her single "Make It Happen" and, in 1992, released a followup album, as Clivillés and Cole Greatest Remixes, vol. 1 (#87, 1992) spawned the #4 single "Things That Make You Go Hmmm . . ." and the dance-club smash "A Deeper Love" (#44), which the team would later produce for Aretha Franklin. Later that year, Williams also sued the team, claiming they had misled him about solo opportunities and withheld royalties (part of Wash's claim, too).

Williams did strike out on his own, releasing Freedom in 1993. Wash settled her differences with Clivillés and Cole, though, and in 1994 C + C Music Factory resurfaced with Anything Goes! featuring Wash, Davis, and the Latin hip-hop/R&B threesome Trilogy. That same year Clivillés and Cole won a Grammy for their production work with Whitney Houston on the soundtrack to The Bodyguard.

In early 1995 Cole died of complications from spinal meningitis at the age of 32. Columbia and its parent label, Sony Music, released three repackaged hit collections under the name C + C Music Factory after Cole's death. Clivillés continued to work behind the scenes, producing several cuts on Wash's second solo album in 1995.

Canned Heat

Bob "Bear" Hite (b. Feb. 26, 1945, Torrance, CA; d. Apr. 5, 1981, Venice, CA), voc., harmonica; Alan "Blind Owl" Wilson (b. July 4, 1943, Boston, MA; d. Sep. 3, 1970, Topanga, CA), gtr., harmonica, voc.; Henry Vestine (b. Dec. 24, 1944, Washington, DC; d. Oct. 20, 1997, Paris, Fr.), gtr.; Frank Cook, drums; Larry Taylor (b. Canned Heat was rare among the American blues-loving bands of the late '60s and early '70s: The group had a few hits. As one critic noted, the musicians were more popularizers than punsts. The 1981 death of cofounder Bob Hite essentially ended Canned Heat's most visible period, but the players have always persevered. They endured Al Wilson's death in 1970 and weathered dozens of personnel shifts (the above chronology lists only the most important ones). Canned Heat has continued under the leadership of Fito de la Parra.

The original Canned Heat evolved out of a jug band that was formed in 1965. Record-collecting blues fanatics Alan Wilson and Bob Hite (nicknamed "Bear" because of his 300-pound frame) changed the group's focus to electric boogie. Though its debut, Canned Heat, sold respectably, its appearance at the Monterey Pop Festival that year attracted more attention. Its second album spawned a #16 hit, Wilson's "On the Road Again," and the band toured Europe. "Going Up the Country" gave it a #11 hit in 1969, and it played the Woodstock Festival in August.

The following year was a watershed, with a worldwide hit cover of Wilbert Harrison's, "Let's Work Together" and an appearance at the Bath Festival in England. But the drug overdose death of Wilson (who was partly blind and subject to severe depression) in late 1970 proved to be a setback from which the band never fully recovered. Larry Taylor and guitarist Harvey Mandel joined John Mayall's band. (Later Mandel would be considered to replace Mick Taylor in the Rolling Stones; he would record a number of albums, as both an artist and a session musician.) The remaining members, with replacements, soldiered on. Prior to Wilson's death, they had backed bluesman John Lee Hooker on Hooker 'n' Heat; in 1989 a latter-day incarnation assisted him again on The Healer. In 1973 the band backed Clarence "Gatemouth" Brown and Memphis Slim on French albums released on the Barclay label.

Canned Heat's electric blues fell out of fashion; by the early '80s the band was playing the California bar circuit. Sometime after Hite's death (he suffered a fatal heart attack) the group drifted, and while 1990's Reheated revived interest, Canned Heat has not made a commercial comeback, though it remains a steadily working band. In the early '90s guitarist Mandel rejoined the group for some live dates, and original members Taylor, Mandel, and Henry Vestine appear on 1994's Internal Combustion. They departed sometime afterward. Since then, Canned Heat has recorded two more albums with longtime manager/producer Skip Taylor. In 1999, several years after the death of Vestine, de la Parra and his new recruits made five trips to Europe and played a number of festivals in the U.S. The drummer also finished his tell-all book about the band, Living the Blues.

Freddy Cannon

Born Frederick Anthony Picariello, Dec. 4, 1939, Lynn, MA 1961—The Explosive Freddy Cannon (Swan) 1962—Freddy Cannon Sings Happy Shades of Blue; Freddy Cannon's Solid Gold Hits; Freddy Cannon at Palisades Park 1964—Freddy Cannon Steps Out 1965—Freddy Cannon (Warner Bros.) 1966—Freddy Cannon's Greatest Hits; Action! 1982—14 Booming Hits (Rhino).

A major star in the early '60s, singer/guitarist/songwriter Freddy Cannon broke big with two million-sellers: "Tallahassee Lassie" (#6, 1959) and an updated version of a 1922 jazz hit, "Way Down Yonder in New Orleans" (#3, 1960). Cannon was discovered in 1957 by a Boston disc jockey, two years later he recorded "Tallahassee Lassie," a song his mother had written.

He toured internationally during the mid-'60s, scoring minor hits regularly. His only other big hit, the Chuck Barris-penned "Palisades Park," was #3 in 1962. That same year he was featured in the British film Just for Fun. In 1965 he had a Top 20 hit with "Action," the theme song from the TV series Where the Action Is. He remained a major performer in the U.K. years after his star had faded in America. In 1960 The Explosive Freddy Cannon became the first LP by an American artist to go to #1 in England. In the '70s he became a promotion man for Buddah Records, but he returned to the charts in 1981 with "Let's Put the Fun Back in Rock 'n' Roll," backed by the Belmonts. He continues to perform.

Captain and Tennille

Daryl Dragon (a.k.a. the "Captain," b. Aug. 27, 1942, Los Angeles, CA), kybds.; Toni Tennille (b. Catheryn Antoinette Tennille, May 8, 1943, Montgomery, AL), voc.
 1975—Love Will Keep Us Together (A&M) 1976—Song of Joy 1977—Come in From the Rain; The Captain and Tennille's Greatest Hits 1978—Dream 1979—Make Your Move (Casablanca) 1980—Keeping Our Love Warm.
 Toni Tennille solo: 1984—More Than You Know (Mirage) 1987—All of Me (Gaia) 1992—Never Let Me Go (Bay Cities) 1998—Tennille Sings Big Band (Honest).

The Captain and Tennille are a husband-and-wife pop duo who debuted on the pop charts with the top-selling single of 1975, a bouncy version of Neil Sedaka's "Love Will Keep Us Together." The single sold over 2.5 million copies and was awarded a Grammy for Record of the Year.

Toni Tennille began singing with her three sisters in their hometown of Montgomery, Alabama. Her father had sung professionally in the '30s, and her mother was a local television talk-show host. Tennille studied classical piano for nine years, and in 1964 she moved with her family to L.A., where she joined the South Coast Repertory Theater. There she cowrote a rock musical entitled Mother Earth, and during the play's run she met Daryl Dragon, a keyboard player in the house band. The son of conductor Carmen Dragon, Daryl plays synthesizer, organ, piano, and vibes, as well as bass. Before he met Tennille, he had also worked with the Beach Boys. When Tennille's play closed in 1971, after three performances, he hired her to tour as a keyboard player with the Beach Boys' band. They were married on November 11, 1975.

In 1974 the two financed and produced a Tennille-penned single, "The Way I Want to Touch You," which was first a regional hit. "Love Will Keep Us Together" followed, and upon its rerelease in 1975 "The Way I Want to Touch You" went to #4. Other hit singles included "Lonely Night (Angel Face)" (#3, 1976), "Muskat Love" (#4, 1976), a cover version of Smokey Robinson's "Shop Around" (#4, 1976), "Can't Stop Dancin'" (#13, 1977), "You Never Done It Like That" (#10, 1978), and "Do That to Me One More Time" (#1, 1979). From mid-1977 on, the duo's misses outnumbered their hits, still they managed to sell over 23 million records throughout their career. During that time Tennille provided backup vocals for Pink Floyd's The Wall and Elton John's "Don't Let the Sun Go Down on Me."

They hosted their own prime-time series on ABC in 1976-77, and in the early '80s Tennille hosted a daytime talk show. The couple moved to Nevada, where Dragon works in his home studio, produces records and film scores, and works on an Internet enterprise. Tennille recorded four albums of standards, made guest appearances on television, and has performed on the musical stage. The duo occasionally performs as Captain and Tennille.

The irregular rhythms, grating harmonies, and earthy, surreal lyrics of Captain Beefheart's songs and his blues-inflected seven-and-a-half-octave vocals (or, depending on who you believe, three-octave; the voice is impressive no matter what) suggest a near-chaotic improvised blend of Delta blues, avant-garde jazz, 20th-century classical music, and rock & roll. Actually, Beefheart's repertoire is a sort of modern chamber music for rock band, since he plans every note and teaches the band their parts by ear. Because it breaks so many of rock's conventions at once, Beefheart's music has always been more influential than popular, leaving its mark on Tom Waits, Sonic Youth, and other avant-garde rock performers.

A child-prodigy sculptor, Don Vliet (who reportedly had his name legally changed to Don Van Vliet by 1964) was noticed at age four by Portuguese sculptor Augustinio Rodriguez, who featured Vliet and his clay animals on his weekly television show for the next eight years. When Vliet was 13, his parents declined their son's scholarship to study art in Europe and moved the family to the California desert communities of Mojave, then Lancaster, where Vliet met the young Frank Zappa. Vliet learned to play harmonica and saxophone and played one show with local R&B band the Omens (who promptly kicked him out) before enrolling in Antelope Valley College in 1959. After one semester, he dropped out and went to Cucamonga, California, with Zappa, intending to form a band, the Soots, and make a film, Captain Beefheart Meets the Grunt People. Both projects fell through, and while Zappa went to Los Angeles to form the Mothers of Invention, Vliet returned to Lancaster and, adopting the Beefheart stage name, formed the first Magic Band in 1964.

A&M signed the group in 1964 and released its version of "Diddy Wah Diddy," which sold enough locally for A&M to commission an album. Label president Jerry Moss rejected the Van Vliet originals as "too negative." After the first in an endless series of Magic Band personnel changes, Beefheart redid the songs and recorded some new ones, on Safe As Milk, which attracted enough interest for the band to tour Europe. Shortly before a scheduled appearance at the 1967 Monterey Pop Festival, guitarist Ry Cooder's abrupt departure forced the group to cancel.

Mirror Man was recorded in November 1967, but Buddah didn't release it until 1970, after Beefheart had left the label. Strictly Personal was recorded in 1968, but radically remixed by producer Bob Krasnow and released on his own Blue Thumb label as the band toured Europe. Van Vliet, disgusted, retired to the San Fernando Valley until Zappa, now in charge of his own Straight Records, promised him complete artistic control over his next recordings. After allegedly composing 28 songs in eight and a half hours (John "Drumbo" French, who transcribed Beefheart's piano parts for the band, says it was more like 60 to 80 hours over several months), Beefheart formed a new Magic Band and recorded Trout Mask Replica over the next year. That album and 1970's Lick My Decals Off, Baby brought Beefheart critical acclaim and, along with his appearance on Zappa's Hot Rats (1969), enough interest for a national tour. The next two albums, marginally more commercial-sounding, reached the lower echelons of the pop charts.

After a two-year hiatus, Van Vliet signed with Mercury and released two openly conventional pop-blues albums, then toured with and dissolved another Magic Band (Harkleroad, Boston, and Tripp formed Mallard, which released two mid-'70s albums; French went on to record O Solo Drumbo, plus albums with Richard Thompson and Henry Kaiser, among others). For a short time, Beefheart appeared as a vocalist with Zappa and the Mothers of Invention, including songs on 1975's Bongo Fury. In 1978 Warner Bros. re-signed him and released Shiny Beast (Bat Chain Puller), hailed by critics as a return to Trout Mask form; Beefheart toured a somewhat more receptive new-wave circuit. Virgin sued to keep Beefheart on its roster (it had British rights to Beefheart since his Mercury period) and won ownership of Doc at the Radar Station and Ice Cream for Crow.

Beefheart's 1980 American and European tours, including a November 1980 appearance on Saturday Night Live, were his most successful to date. But after the release of Ice Cream for Crow, Van Vliet left the music business and retired to the trailer in the Mojave where he'd lived since the mid-'70s with his wife, Jan (he later moved to a house in the Northern California coastal town of Trinidad). Van Vliet devoted himself to painting and in 1985, with the help of New York postmodern painter and Beefheart fan Julian Schnabel, began exhibiting his semiabstract, primitivist canvases (some of which have adorned his album covers) at galleries in America and Europe, some of them selling for as much as $25,000. The only "new" Beefheart music to emerge was previously unreleased live and studio tracks on such reissues as Safe as Milk (1999), and anthologies like I May Be Hungry, The Dust Blows Forward, and especially the five-disc Grow Fins (which also had copious, revelatory liner notes by French detailing the band's little-known history). While there was no official word on Van Vliet's health, he looked and sounded very weak in a 1994 short documentary, Some Yo-Yo Stuff by rock photographer and video director Anton Corbijn.

Mariah Carey

Born Mar. 27, 1970, Long Island, NY
1990—Mariah Carey (Columbia) 1991—Emotions 1992—

MTV Unplugged EP 1993—Music Box 1994—Merry Christmas 1995—Daydream 1997—Butterfly 1998—#1's 1999—Rainbow 2001—All That Glitters soundtrack (Virgin).

With a stunning seven-octave voice that she put through stratospheric gymnastics, Mariah Carey became an overnight star. Her vocal prowess and range drew comparisons to Minnie Riperton and Yma Sumac, but most often to her contemporary Whitney Houston. Yet unlike Houston, Carey cowrote or coproduced her own gospel-inflected, dance-pop songs and ardent ballads. These have found immense popularity: Carey is the best-selling female artist of all time, with more than 140 million albums and singles sold worldwide. She was the only artist to have scored a #1 hit in every year of the '90s, and (at this writing) has had more #1 hits for more weeks at #1 than any other artist in history. In October 1999 she surpassed the Beatles' long-running record of 59 weeks at #1.

Carey was born to a black Venezuelan aeronautics engineer father and an Irish-American opera singer mother who also worked as a voice coach. The couple divorced when Mariah was three, and she moved with her mother to successive towns in suburban Long Island, New York. At 17 she moved to New York City and pursued a career in music while supporting herself as the self-professed "world's worst waitress."

Carey befriended keyboardist Ben Margulies, with whom she began writing songs, and landed backup singing jobs. One, with minor late-'80s dance-music singer Brenda K. Starr, proved crucial when Starr met Columbia Records chief Tommy Mottola at a party and gave him a demo tape of Carey's songs. Mottola reportedly played the tape in his car on his way home, and doubled back to the party to seek out Carey. He signed her and made her career development a top priority. Carey's debut album (#4, 1990) yielded #1 hit singles in "Vision of Love" (1990), "Love Takes Time" (1990), "Somebody" (1991), and "I Don't Wanna Cry" (1991), and brought her Grammy Awards in 1991 for Best New Artist and Best Female Vocalist. Emotions (#1, 1991) continued Carey's roll, with such hits as the title track (#1, 1991), "Can't Let Go" (#2, 1991), and "Make It Happen" (#5, 1992). Unplugged produced a hit cover of the Jackson 5's "I'll Be There" (#1, 1992), which also led to a solo recording deal for Trey Lorenz, the backup singer featured on the single with Carey.

In June 1993 Carey married Mottola, a man 20 years her senior. She then released Music Box (#1, 1993), which promptly yielded the #1 hits "Dreamlover" and "Hero." In fall 1993 she embarked on her first concert tour, for which she received mixed reviews. Her 1994 Christmas album spawned the hit "All I Want for Christmas Is You."

Carey achieved a milestone with the 1995 release of Daydream, which debuted at #1. The first single, "Fantasy," debuted at the top as well. With Daydream, Carey became the first female artist in history to have three albums that each sold more than 8 million copies. The second single, "One Sweet Day," a duet with the Philadelphia R&B vocal group Boyz II Men, also hit #1, holding the spot for a record-setting 16 weeks. A third single, "Always Be My Baby," followed suit, completing the hat trick.

Carey and Mottola divorced in 1997. She released Butterfly (#1, 1997), which asserted a stronger hip-hop flavor and yielded the #1 hits "Honey" (with rappers Ma$e and the Lox) and "My All." #1's collected Carey's 13 chart-topping singles, with four new tracks, including "When You Believe" (from The Prince of Egypt), a duet with Whitney Houston.

The 1999 release of the multiplatinum Rainbow (#2, 2000), which produced a #1 single in "Heartbreaker," capped a decade in which Carey was its biggest-selling female artist. Musically, the singer continued to embrace hip-hop elements, emphasizing samples and inviting such rap stars as Jay-Z, Missy Elliott, Da Brat, and Snoop Dogg to make guest vocal appearances. In early 2001 Carey signed a multi-record, multimillion-dollar deal with Virgin. It was announced her first Virgin release would be the soundtrack to the film All That Glitters, in which Carey played the lead.

Kim Carnes

Born July 20, 1945, Los Angeles, CA
 1972—Rest on Me (A&M) 1975—Kim Carnes 1976—Sailin'
 1979—St. Vincent's Court (EMI) 1980—Romance Dance
 1981—Mistaken Identity 1982—Voyeur; The Best of You
 (A&M) 1983—Cafe Racers (EMI) 1985—Barking at Airplanes
 1986—Light House 1988—A View From the House (MCA)
 1993—Gypsy Honeymoon: The Best of Kim Carnes (EMI).

Singer/songwriter Kim Carnes recorded the top-selling single of 1981, "Bette Davis Eyes." Carnes grew up in suburban L.A. By her early 20s, she was working the city's nightclubs, singing mainly ballads; she was also a member of the New Christy Minstrels. Ballads composed the bulk of several of her albums (including Sailin', produced by Jerry Wexler) from the '70s. Her songs, some of which were cowritten with her husband, Dave Ellingson (who is also a member of her backup band), have been covered by Frank Sinatra, Rita Coolidge, Anne Murray, and Barbra Streisand. The couple's biggest break came when Kenny Rogers recorded their songs on 1980's Gideon. That same year Carnes duetted with Rogers on his hit "Don't Fall in Love With a Dreamer."

In 1978 she signed with Rogers' label, EMI, and gradually began recording rock-oriented material. She had a #10 hit in 1980 with a cover of Smokey Robinson's "More Love." But album sales remained sluggish until 1981's Mistaken Identity and its single, a Donna Weiss/Jackie DeShannon composition, "Bette Davis Eyes" (#1, 1981), which won a Grammy for Record of the Year. Later hits include "Draw of the Cards" (#28, 1981), "Voyeur" (#29, 1982), "What About Me?" (#15, 1984) with Kenny Rogers and James Ingram, and "Crazy in the Night (Barking at Airplanes)" (#15, 1985). Carnes has since become a Nashville-based songwriter, whose work has been covered by various country artists

Mary Chapin Carpenter

Born Feb. 21, 1958, Princeton, NJ
 1987—Hometown Girl (Columbia) 1989—State of the Heart
 1990—Shooting Straight in the Dark 1992—Come On Come On 1994—Stones in the Road 1996—A Place in the World
 1999—Party Doll and Other Favorites 2001—time·sex·love·

An Ivy League-educated singer/songwriter from the Northeast with a reflective, literate style of lyric writing, Mary Chapin Carpenter has always stopped short of mocking the sequined outfits, big hair, and simple romanticism often associated with country divas. Accordingly, Carpenter's music—which incorporates folk and rock textures as well as country—has been embraced by both Nashville and fans of progressive pop.

Carpenter grew up mostly in Princeton, listening to records by Woody Guthrie, the Beatles, and Judy Collins and playing her mother's acoustic guitar. After she graduated from high school in Washington, DC, where her family had moved, her father, a publishing executive, encouraged her to attend an open-mike session at a local bar. Though reluctant at first, the singer soon began performing live on a regular basis, while studying at Brown University, where she earned a degree in American civilization. Carpenter spent weekends and summers performing a mixture of radio hits and rootsy standards in bars. After graduating, she decided to focus more on her own material and moved back to Washington, DC, where she won several local music awards and became a favorite on the local club circuit. In the mid-'80s Carpenter landed a deal with Columbia Records.

Carpenter's debut album was released on Columbia in 1987. The articulate country-folk songs on Hometown Girl impressed critics, but it was her sophomore album, 1989's State of the Heart, that proved Carpenter's commercial potential, spawning two Top 10 country hits: "Never Had It So Good" (#8) and, in 1990, "Quitn' Time" (#7). The Academy of Country Music named Carpenter 1989's Best New Female Vocalist.

The '90s saw Carpenter's star rise even higher. Her 1990 album, Shooting Straight in the Dark, yielded the #1 country single "Down at the Twist and Shout," a hit that won her a 1991 Grammy for Best Female Country Vocal Performance. Come On Come On (1992) reached #6 on the country albums charts, producing seven hit singles and earning the singer another Grammy, for a cheekily sexy track called "I Feel Lucky." That single peaked at #4 on the C&W chart, as did "Passionate Kisses" (written by Lucinda Williams [see entry]), for which Carpenter won her third Best Female Country Vocal Performance Grammy. "He Thinks He'll Keep Her" reached #1 C&W. Carpenter's Stones in the Road (1994) featured such guest musicians as country artists Lee Roy Parnell and Trisha Yearwood, folkie Shawn Colvin, Heartbreaker Benmont Tench, saxophonist Branford Marsalis, onetime R.E.M. producer Don Dixon (on bass), and drummer Kenny Aronoff. The album continued Carpenter's awards streak, netting her fourth consecutive best female country vocal award for "Shut Up and Kiss Me" and that year's Best Country Album Grammy for Stones in the Road.

Carpenter started exploring another creative outlet when she wrote her own essays for the Stones in the Road tour book in 1995. Her ability to write nonfiction prose, along with her social activism, led her to contribute an essay to A Voice of Our Own: Leading American Women Celebrate the Right to Vote, a 1996 book that also featured the writings of First Ladies Rosalynn Carter and Hillary Rodham Clinton, among others. Carpenter became a bona fide author with the publication of a children's book, Dreamland, the same year; it was based on a lullaby she'd written and recorded for a compilation album. The musician didn't forsake the recording world for publishing, however; she also released her sixth album, A Place in the World (#20 pop), in 1996. The album produced more country hits in the Grammy-nominated "Let Me Into Your Heart" (#11) and "I Want to Be Your Girlfriend" (#35).

Carpenter published a second children's book, Halley Came to Jackson—also based on one of her songs—in 1998. Party Doll and Other Favorites, featuring greatest hits, live cuts, and rare tracks from compilations, peaked at #4 on the country album chart in 1999. She returned with her first album of new material in five years with time·sex·love· in 2001.

The Carpenters

Richard Carpenter (b. Oct. 15, 1946, New Haven, CT), voc., kybds.; Karen Carpenter (b. Mar. 2, 1950, New Haven; d. Feb. 4, 1983, Los Angeles, CA), voc., drums.

A popular brother-and-sister team, the Carpenters sold millions of hit records in the early '70s. Richard started taking piano lessons at age 12 and studied classical piano at Yale before the family relocated to Downey, California, in 1963. Richard studied at USC and Cal State at Long Beach. He formed his first group in 1965, a jazz-pop instrumental trio that included younger sister Karen on drums and their friend Wes Jacobs (who later abandoned pop for a seat in the Detroit Symphony) on bass and tuba. The group won a battle of the bands at the Hollywood Bowl and subsequently signed with RCA. Four sides were recorded, but after label executives deemed them not commercially viable, they were never released. In late 1966 the trio broke up. Richard and Karen recruited four Cal State students into the vocal harmony-oriented band Spectrum. They played various Southern California venues to less than ecstatic response and disbanded.

The Carpenter siblings' densely layered, pop-oriented demo tapes eventually caught the attention of Herb Alpert, who signed them to A&M in 1969. They released their first album that November. Originally titled Offering, it was ignored until it was repackaged as Ticket to Ride, on the strength of the moderate success of their Beatles-cover single. Close to You's title track, a Burt Bacharach tune, sold more than a million copies and went to #1 in the U.S. and several other countries. Their hits continued: "We've Only Just Begun" (#2, 1970), "For All We Know" (#3, 1971; it won an Oscar for Best Song in 1970), "Rainy Days and Mondays" (#2, 1971), "Superstar" (#2, 1971; written by Leon Russell), "It's Going to Take Some Time" (#12, 1972), "Hurting Each Other" (#2, 1972), "Goodbye to Love" (#7, 1972), "Sing" (#3, 1973), "Yesterday Once More" (#2, 1973), "Top of the World" (#1, 1973), "Won't Last a Day Without You" (#11, 1974), "Please Mr. Postman" (#1, 1975), and "Only Yesterday" (#4, 1975).

The 1973 LP The Singles 1969–1973 was a bestseller, and the Carpenters were three-time Grammy winners. They hosted a short-lived variety series, Make Your Own Kind of Music, on NBC in 1971. At the request of President Nixon, they performed at a White House state dinner honoring West German Chancellor Willy Brandt on May 1, 1973. They toured internationally through the mid-'70s. Their 1976 tour of Japan was, at the time, the biggest-grossing concert ever in that country. From 1976 to 1980 the pair hosted five ABC television specials. Through the late '70s the Carpenters were noticeably absent from the charts, but returned to the Top 20 in 1981 with "Touch Me When We're Dancing."

On February 4, 1983, Karen Carpenter died in her parents' home of cardiac arrest, resulting from her long struggle with anorexia nervosa. Her story was presented in the highly rated made-for-television movie The Karen Carpenter Story in 1988. The posthumous LP Lovelines drew critical notice for its inclusion of four tracks Karen had recorded for an unreleased 1980 solo album. Richard's solo effort, Time, featured duets with Dionne Warwick and Dusty Springfield yet failed to chart. The followup merely features easy-listening, instrumental revisions of various Carpenters songs.

With time, the duo's saccharine image has receded somewhat, and Karen Carpenter is acknowledged by women rock musicians, including Chrissie Hynde and Madonna, as a pioneer. Sonic Youth, Sheryl Crow, Matthew Sweet, Cracker, and the Cranberries were among the fourteen acts who contributed to the 1994 Carpenters tribute album If I Were a Carpenter. Around the same time that fall, the Karen and Richard Carpenter Performing Arts Center at Cal State University opened in Long Beach, California. Karen Carpenter's eponymous solo debut, recorded in 1979 and 1980 but unreleased until 1996, continued to keep her memory alive. The somewhat mature—but hardly edgy—album found her experimenting with disco and mildly suggestive lyrics.

Joe "King" Carrasco and the Crowns

Formed 1979, Texas

Joe "King" Carrasco (b. Joseph Teutsch, Dumas, TX), gtr., voc.
1980—Joe "King" Carrasco and the Crowns (Hannibal) 1981—Party Safari 1982—Synapse Gap (Mundo Total) (MCA) 1983—Party Weekend 1984—Tales From the Crypt (The Basement Tapes 1979) cassette (ROIR) 1989—Tex-Mex Rock-Roll (tape-only reissue of Joe "King" Carrasco and El Molino's eponymously titled 1978 album) 1990—Royal, Loyal & Live (Rio's Royal Texacali).
Joe King Carrasco y Las Coronas: 1987—Bandido Rock (Rounder).

Calling his music "nuevo wavo," Joe Carrasco blends garage rock (Sam the Sham), Tex-Mex (Doug Sahm), Chicano polkas, and new-wavish intensity into speedy, good-humored party music. Carrasco started playing in West Texas rock & roll bands before he was a teenager. By 1973, when he settled in Austin, he had played with bands such as Salaman, a mariachi outfit, and Shorty y los Corvettes, who had a couple of local Spanish hits. His Chicano colleagues dubbed him "King" Carrasco.

In 1976 he formed his own band, El Molino, with local trumpeter Charlie McBurney, keyboardist Augie Meyers, and saxophonist Rocky Morales. El Molino was popular in Austin and San Antonio, where it recorded Tex-Mex Rock-Roll on Carrasco's Lisa label in 1978. The album found a cult audience in New York and London (Elvis Costello was an early admirer). Carrasco had no takers when he took the album to L.A. in search of a distribution deal, but he moved to the city's Mexican barrio and wrote songs with Sir Douglas Quintet drummer Johnny Perez.

Returning to Austin in 1979, he met Kris Cummings, Mike Navarro, and bassist Brad Kizer. Cummings had studied piano in New Orleans with Huey "Piano" Smith and Professor Longhair, but Carrasco gave her the Farfisa organ that defined the Crowns' trashy sound. They went to New York in late 1979, where their partylike shows, bolstered by Carrasco's antics (wearing cape and crown, leaping from the stage during guitar solos, and wandering as far as his 60-foot cord allowed), won the enthusiastic support of clubgoers and the music press.

They returned to Austin heroes in the spring of 1980 and later that year signed to Stiff Records. Despite some critical kudos, a small loyal following, and a reputation as an exciting live act, Carrasco never achieved widespread popularity. He continued to perform into the '90s.

Jim Carroll

Born Aug. 1, 1950, New York, NY
1980—Catholic Boy (Atco) 1982—Dry Dreams 1983—

I Write Your Name (Atlantic) 1991—Praying Mantis (Giant) 1993—The Best of the Jim Carroll Band: A World Without Gravity (Rhino) 1998—Pools of Mercury (Mercury).

Poet, novelist, and former heroin addict Jim Carroll followed his friend Patti Smith into rock & roll with unexpected results: an almost-charting single, "People Who Died." After two more albums of music, he resumed writing poetry, and his first album of the '90s, Praying Mantis, is one of the earliest full-length spoken-word releases.

Carroll was a prodigy; his first collection of poetry was published when he was 16. In 1970 selections from The Basketball Diaries, his teenage journal of high school, hustling, and heroin, appeared in Paris Review (the complete journal was first published in 1978). A later poetry collection, Living at the Movies, was rumored to have been nominated for a Pulitzer Prize (it was not). In 1974 Carroll moved to Northern California, where he kicked his drug habit and, along with a San Francisco band, began performing rock & roll in area clubs.

On a visit to New York in 1979, he played his demo tape for Earl McGrath, then president of Rolling Stones Records, who arranged a record deal with Atco and produced Catholic Boy. The album featured "People Who Died," a powerful invocation of friends fallen victim to drugs and street life, and drew critical raves. His next two albums were not as well received, and Carroll dismissed his band (which, for Dry Dreams, had included Lenny Kaye) to concentrate on his writing.

Since then he has had four additional books published (The Book of Nods, 1986; Forced Entries: The Downtown Diaries, 1971-1973, 1987; Fear of Dreaming: The Selected Poems of Jim Carroll, 1993; Void of Course: Poems 1994-1997, 1998), written lyrics for Blue Oyster Cult and Boz Scaggs, and occasionally acted. In 1995 he rerecorded "Catholic Boy" with Pearl Jam for the soundtrack to The Basketball Diaries, a film by music video director Scott Kalvert that updated Carroll's memoir to the '90s with lead Leonardo DiCaprio.

Though his singing appearances remain rare and he most often appears publicly to read from his work, Carroll returned to music with 1998's Pools of Mercury. The album (his first music album without the Jim Carroll Band) mixed spoken-word and ambient tracks with straight-up rock & roll and featured musicians Lenny Kaye and Robert Roth.

The Cars

Formed 1976, Boston, MA

Ric Ocasek (b. Richard Otcasek, Mar. 23, 1949, Baltimore, MD), voc., gtr.; Ben Orr (b. Benjamin Orzechowski, Sep. 8, 1947, Cleveland, OH; d. Oct. 3, 2000, Atlanta, GA), bass, voc.; Elliot Easton (b. Elliot Shapiro, Dec. 18, 1953, Brooklyn, NY), gtr.; Greg Hawkes, kybds.; David Robinson (b. Apr. 2, 1953, Boston), drums.

1978—The Cars (Elektra) 1979—Candy-O 1980—Panorama 1981—Shake It Up 1984—Heartbeat City

1985—Greatest Hits 1987—Door to Door 1995—The Cars Anthology: Just What I Needed (Atlantic) 1999—The Cars (Deluxe Edition) (Rhino).

Ric Ocasek solo: 1983—Beatitude (Geffen) 1986—This Side of Paradise 1991—Fireball Zone (Reprise) 1993—Quick Change World 1996—Getchertikitz (Sound Effects) 1997—Troublizing (Columbia).

Ben Orr solo: 1986—The Lace (Elektra).

Greg Hawkes solo: 1983—Niagara Falls (Passport).

Elliot Easton solo: 1985—Change No Change (Elektra).

Ric Ocasek's artful pop songs drove the Cars, the new-wave band with the fastest, most consistent success. Their debut and second albums sold more than 6 million copies worldwide, and each album since (except their final group effort, Door to Door) has sold over a million copies. Although the group initially got the critics' nod for Ocasek's coolly detached stance and the smoothly burnished keyboard- and guitar-laced hooks, in retrospect the Cars were essentially the new-wave model of a Top 40 hit machine. That their off-center pop sensibility found expression in a series of original and frequently aired music videos (especially "You Might Think") made them, for a time, one of America's top bands.

Ocasek and Ben Orr had been partners for nearly a decade before starting the Cars. Ocasek took up the guitar at 10 and immediately began to write songs; he started working as a musician after he'd dropped out of Antioch College and Bowling Green State University. He met Orr—who as a teenager had fronted the house band on a TV rock show, Upbeat—in Cleveland, where Orr worked in a studio as a producer and session musician. After working together in various bands in Cleveland, New York City, Woodstock, and Ann Arbor, they settled in Cambridge, Massachusetts, in the late '70s.

As part of a folk trio, Milkwood, they released an album on Paramount in 1972, with Hawkes as session keyboardist. Ocasek and Orr continued to form bands, while Hawkes worked with Martin Mull and the Boston group Orphan, and wrote music with progressive rockers Happy the Man. In 1974 Easton joined Cap'n Swing, Ocasek and Orr's band at the time, which became popular in Boston but broke up when no recording contract was forthcoming. Hawkes rejoined, and Robinson, formerly of Jonathan Richman's Modern Lovers, DMZ, and L.A.'s the Pop, completed the Cars in late 1976.

After intensive rehearsals in Ocasek's basement, the Cars made some demo tapes, including "Just What I Needed," which became a top requested song on Boston radio station WBCN. Recorded in just two weeks, The Cars yielded three chart singles—"Just What I Needed" (#27, 1978), "My Best Friend's Girl" (#35, 1978), and "Good Times Roll" (#41, 1979)—and went platinum, staying on the charts so persistently that the release of Candy-O recorded early in 1979, was delayed. By 1979 the Cars were on the arena circuit, with "Let's Go" (#14, 1979) and "It's All I Can Do" (#41, 1979). Candy-O went platinum in two months. On Panorama, the Cars toyed with dissonance and odd meters; it went platinum with "Touch and Go" (#37, 1980), while their debut, The Cars, remained on the charts.

In 1981 the Cars also bought Intermedia Studios in Boston and remodeled it as Syncro Sound, where they recorded parts of Shake It Up. That album, with singles "Shake It Up" (#4, 1981) and "Since You're Gone" (#41, 1981), also went platinum. Ocasek, Orr, and Hawkes started solo albums in 1982.

Three years later Heartbeat City launched the hit singles "You Might Think" (#7, 1984), "Magic" (#12, 1984), "Drive" (#3, 1984), and "Hello Again" (#20, 1984). "Drive," which was used as background music to film clips documenting the famine stricken of Africa during the Live Aid concert and telecast, recharted in the U.K.; Ocasek donated the resulting royalties to the Band Aid Trust. The video for the song starred model Paulina Ponzkova, whom Ocasek wed in 1989. The couple's sons, Jonathan and Oliver Orion, were born in 1993 and 1998, respectively.

The Cars' last Top 20 hits were "Tonight She Comes" (#7, 1985) and "You Are the Girl" (#17, 1987). The latter comes from Door to Door, an album recorded as the group was unraveling due to personal conflicts. Ocasek later described it as "a substandard album"; it peaked at #26. A couple of greatest-hits collections were released after the group's 1988 demise, notably the two-CD set The Cars (Deluxe Edition), which included demo versions of early hits and five previously unreleased songs. Throughout the Cars' career Ocasek and Orr shared lead vocals, with Orr singing "My Best Friend's Girl," "Just What I Needed," "Drive," "Let's Go," and "Candy-O." Of the group members' solo efforts, theirs were by far the most popular. Each had a hit single: Ocasek, "Emotion in Motion" (#15, 1986), and Orr, "Stay the Night" (#24, 1987).

Although Ocasek went on to record several more solo albums, including 1997's Troublizing, which featured Greg Hawkes on keyboards, Smashing Pumpkins' Billy Corgan, Hole's (and later Smashing Pumpkins') Melissa Auf Der Maur, and Bad Religion's Brian Baker, he largely concentrated on his producing career. His '90s credits include Weezer's eponymous debut album, Hole's cover of Fleetwood Mac's "Gold Dust Woman" for The Crow: City of Angels soundtrack, as well as albums for cult favorites Black 47, Guided by Voices, and Jonathan Richman.

Orr formed a band called ORR in the mid-'90s. He died in 2000 after battling pancreatic cancer. Guitarist Easton played in the band the Tiki Gods for a time, did session work with Jerry Lee Lewis and Brian Wilson, toured with ex-Creedence Clearwater Revival members Stu Cook and Doug Clifford in Creedence Clearwater Revisited, and worked as a producer. Hawkes contributed keyboards to most of Ocasek's solo albums.

Carlene Carter

Born Rebecca Carlene Smith, Sep. 26, 1955, Nashville, TN
 1978—Carlene Carter (Warner Bros.) 1979—Two Sides to Every Woman 1980—Musical Shapes 1981—Blue Nun
 1983—C'est C Bon (Epic) 1990—I Fell in Love (Reprise)
 1993—Little Love Letters (Giant) 1995—Little Acts of Treason.

A third-generation member of America's preeminent country music family, Carlene Carter is the granddaughter of Mother Maybelle Carter of the Carter Family, and daughter of June Carter Cash and '50s country star Carl Smith. Since she began recording in the late '70s, Carlene Carter evolved from a twangy rocker to a successful country singer/songwriter in the early '90s.

Carter spent her early years in Nashville; her parents divorced and her mother married Johnny Cash when Carlene was 12. As a child, she often traveled with her mother, aunts, and grandmother, who toured as Mother Maybelle and the Carter Sisters. Carter learned to play the piano at six and the guitar at 10, and began singing onstage during her family's shows. After two brief teenage marriages, during which she had two children, Carter appeared sporadically as a member of the Carter Family revue.

In 1978 Carter recorded her first, self-titled album in England, backed by Graham Parker's band, the Rumour. A collection of upbeat, piano-based pop songs, Carlene Carter received some favorable notices but flopped. Her second album, Two Sides to Every Woman, recorded with New York session players, rocked harder, but lacked personality—though Carter herself certainly did not. At a performance in a New York club to support the album, she introduced one of its racier songs with the comment, "If this song doesn't put the cunt back in country, nothing will." Unbeknownst to her, her stepfather and mother were in the audience. The comment briefly caused a family rift, and earned Carter a Playboy award, for Quote of the Year.

In the late '70s Carter married her third husband, British singer/songwriter/producer Nick Lowe [see entry], whose band mates in Rockpile, Dave Edmunds and Billy Bremner, joined him in backing her on her raucous country-rock breakthrough album Musical Shapes (#139, 1980). Though still far from a commercial success, the album won critical raves and broadened Carter's audience.

Disappointing followup albums, Blue Nun and C'est C Bon, as well as personal problems (an ectopic pregnancy that almost killed her and the breakup of her marriage to Lowe), put Carter out of commission in the mid-'80s. The party lifestyle had also taken its toll, and Carter temporarily quit the music business. In 1986 she began touring with the Johnny Cash and June Carter Cash revue. Stating, "It was time to learn about my heritage," Carter dug into her country roots wholeheartedly for the first time, and after two years of performing with her family, she returned to Nashville drug- and alcohol-free and eager to commence her solo career.

In 1990 Carter hit country chart pay dirt with I Fell in Love (#19 C&W), an album ranging from progressive country rock to traditional Appalachian folk and produced by Tom Petty bassist Howie Epstein. The album yielded several C&W hit singles: the title track (#3 C&W, 1990), "Come On Back" (#3 C&W, 1990), "The Sweetest Thing" (#25 C&W, 1991), and "One Love" (#33 C&W, 1991). Little Love Letters (#35 C&W, 1993), again produced by Epstein, with whom Carter was living, featured Heartbreaker keyboardist Benmont Tench, as well as guitarists John Jorgenson, Albert Lee, and NRBO's Al Anderson, who toured with Carter. Anderson and Carter cowrote the album's #3 C&W hit, "Every Little Thing." Little Acts of Treason (#65 C&W, 1995) did not fare as well, and Carter has kept a low profile since.

Clarence Carter

Born Jan. 14, 1936, Montgomery, AL
 1968—This Is Clarence Carter (Atlantic); The Dynamic Clarence Carter 1969—Testifyin' 1970—Patches 1971—The Best of Clarence Carter 1973—Sixty Minutes With Clarence Carter (Fame); Real (ABC) 1975—Loneliness and Temptation 1976—Heart Full of Song 1981—Let's Burn (Venture) 1985—Messin' With My Mind (Ichiban) 1986—Dr. CC 1987—Hooked on Love 1988—Touch of Blues 1990—Between a Rock and a Hard Place 1992—Snatching It Back: The Best of Clarence Carter (Rhino/Atlantic); Have You Met Clarence Carter . . . Yet? (Ichiban) 1996—Carter's Corner (Cee Gee).

Blind singer/guitarist Clarence Carter is best known for his late-'60s hit singles: "Slip Away" and "Patches." His career began as part of Clarence and Calvin and the C and C Boys on the Duke label. In 1965 they joined Rick Hall's Fame Records. Calvin Scott had a car accident shortly afterward and retired, but Carter stayed with Fame, recording solo efforts and playing on sessions. As guitarist of the Mellow Men, he backed Otis Redding, Joe Tex, Solomon Burke, and Gene Chandler. In 1968 he met Candi Staton, whom he later married. Staton had hits as a soul ballad singer in the early '70s and as a disco star in the late '70s. (They divorced after a few years.) Carter had nine R&B hits before he crossed over to the pop chart with 1968's "Slip Away" (#6 pop, #2 R&B) and "Too Weak to Fight" (#13 pop, #3 R&B). He followed up in 1969 with "Snatching It Back" (#4 R&B), "The Feeling Is Right" (#9 R&B), and "Don't Our Thing" (#9 R&B). His 1970 story song "Patches" (#4 pop, #2 R&B) was hailed as an instant classic. Carter signed with ABC in the mid-'70s, but the hits stopped coming for a while. Carter has continued to tour and record. His last hit was from Dr. CC, "Strokin'," a song sufficiently nball to preclude radio play. Nonetheless, it sold 1.5 million copies.

The Carter Family

Formed 1926, Maces Spring, VA
 Alvin Pleasant Carter (b. Apr. 15, 1891, Maces Spring; d. Nov. 7, 1960, Maces Spring), voc.; Sara Dougherty Carter (b. July 21, 1898, Wise County, VA; d. Jan. 9, 1979), voc., gtr., Autoharp, banjo; Maybelle Addington Carter (b. May 10, 1909, Nickelsville, VA; d. Oct. 23, 1978), voc., gtr., Autoharp, banjo.
 1961—The Famous Carter Family (Harmony) 1963—Great Original Recordings by the Carter Family 1964—Keep on the Sunny Side (Columbia) 1965—The Best of the Carter Family 1967—An Historic Reunion 1991—The Carter Family (MCA) 1993—Anchored in Love: Their Complete Victor Recordings 1927–1928 (Rounder); My Clinch Mountain Home: Their Complete Victor Recordings 1928–1929 1996—Sunshine in the Shadows: Their Complete Victor Recordings 1931–1932.

The Carter Family pioneered modern country music by setting folk songs to string-band backup, and were one of the most popular groups in America from 1926 until they disbanded in 1943. After that, A.P. performed sporadically with his children, and Maybelle continued to tour with her daughters through the '50s and '60s. Their songs, which included such standards as "Wildwood Flower," "Wabash Cannonball," "I'm Thinking Tonight of My Blue Eyes," "Will the Circle Be Unbroken," and their radio program theme song, "Keep on the Sunny Side," were immensely popular; the 78 rpm version of "Wildwood Flower" sold more than a million copies.

The group formed in 1926 when A. P. Carter and his wife, Sara Dougherty, were joined by A. P.'s brother Ezra's wife (and Sara's cousin), Maybelle. Each had performed with friends and neighbors and as a group for about a year before they auditioned in Bristol, Tennessee, for Ralph Peer, who had been sent by the Victor label to record local musicians (Jimmie Rodgers was "discovered" by Peer on the same day). The Carter Family was soon recording quite frequently, although it wasn't until they had left Virginia some years later that any of them could stop working day jobs. In 1928 they recorded their biggest hit, "Wildwood Flower."

In 1936 A. P. and Sara were divorced, but the group continued to perform and record and in 1938 moved to Del Rio, Texas, where for the next three years they were regulars on radio station XERA. They then moved to Charlotte, North Carolina, to work for WBT, but shortly after their arrival, A. P. and Sara decided to retire. The original Carter Family had their last radio shows around 1939. The next year Maybelle began working with her daughters June, Helen, and Anita as Mother Maybelle Carter and the Carter Sisters. Meanwhile A. P. and several of his children had formed another group, with whom he performed until his death in 1960. After A. P. died, Maybelle and her daughters adopted the Carter Family name.

The family's influence on latter-day singers and songwriters derives not only from their songs and recordings but also from Maybelle Carter's unique acoustic guitar techniques, particularly what has become known as the "chicken-scratch," or the "Carter" style, which is widely imitated by folksingers. Maybelle and Sara reunited at the 1967 Newport Folk Festival to record An Historic Reunion. Throughout the '60s, Maybelle performed with her daughters in her son-in-law Johnny Cash's revue and later on his television program. She sang the title track on the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band's Will the Circle Be Unbroken in 1971. With the exception of Maybelle's three daughters and of June's daughter, Carlene Carter [see entry], none of the second- and third-generation Carters have achieved wide recognition, although many of them remained active in country music as performers and session musicians. June and Anita Carter each recorded solo albums; June's 1999 album, Press On, was released by an independent alternative-rock label. Helen Carter died on June 2, 1998, and Anita Carter died on July 29, 1999.

Singer/songwriter Peter Case began his career in punk-rock bands but in the mid-'80s went solo and became a folk-rock troubadour. The son of two teachers, Case dropped out of school in 10th grade, got his GED, and studied at State University of New York at Buffalo. One winter he boarded a Greyhound bus, eventually winding up in San Francisco, where he busked on street corners and in coffeehouses, sometimes accompanying Beat poet Allen Ginsberg.

In 1976 Case cofounded seminal West Coast punk band the Nerves with Paul Collins (later of the [American] Beat [see entry]), for whom he played bass. By 1978 he had moved to L.A. and formed the Plimsouls, a power-pop band popular in the local club scene. After a successful indie EP, Elektra subsidiary Planet signed the group, but when The Plimsouls stiffed, it dropped them. The band then released the independent 12-inch "A Million Miles Away," a college-radio hit that brought the band its second major-label deal. Everywhere at Once included that single and a number of other catchy tunes but failed to deliver on sales, despite the band's cameo in the teen flick Valley Girl.

In 1984 Case dissolved the Plimsouls, became a born-again Christian, and started playing solo shows. One night he saw singer/songwriter Victoria Williams performing in a restaurant; the two formed the Incredibly Strung Out Band and married in April 1985 (they divorced in 1989). The critically praised Peter Case, produced by T Bone Burnett and Mitchell Froom, included the college-radio hit "Steel Strings." Case supported the album by opening arenas for Jackson Browne.

Case's second solo album also pleased critics with its strong melodies and wry lyrics; it included contributions from David Lindley, Jim Keltner, and Los Lobos' David Hidalgo. Six Pack of Love saw Case return to his more rocking roots. In 1993 he formed a band including ex-Plimsoul Eddie Munoz. The following year, Case released on Vanguard a collection of folk-blues songs, which he recorded live to two-track in a living-room studio set up by producer Marvin Etzioni (Lone Justice, Toad the Wet Sprocket).

Case has since settled into a groove with Vanguard, releasing three more "rock & roll folksinger" (his term) albums; each of these records features urgent melodies, spare, acoustic-based arrangements, and vivid originals about characters living on society's margins. In 1996 Case also reunited with the Plimsouls for a few live dates, with former Blondie drummer Clem Burke sitting in for Ramirez. The group subsequently released Kool Trash, a studio album that mines much the same vein as their '80s power-pop efforts.

Johnny Cash

Country music patriarch Johnny Cash, the "Man in Black," has walked the line between rock and country since his early days as a rockabilly singer. His songs' characteristic marching bass lines have influenced Waylon Jennings and others, while his deep, quavery bantone growl has become a trademark. A preeminent songwriter, Cash has been courted over the years by rock's elite, beginning with Dylan in the '60s. In 1994 Cash returned to the spotlight, boosted by the support of a whole new generation of fans—many of them alternative-rock aficionados—with the release of the stark (just vocals and acoustic guitar) American Recordings. Ill health slowed Cash down in the late '90s but did not stop his creative output.

The son of Southern Baptist sharecroppers, Cash began playing the guitar and writing songs at age 12. During high school, he performed frequently on radio station KLCN in Blytheville, Arkansas. Cash moved to Detroit in his late teens and worked there until he joined the air force as a radio operator in Germany. He left the air force and married Vivian Liberto in 1954; the couple settled in Memphis, where Cash worked as an appliance salesman and attended radio announcers' school.

With the Tennessee Two—guitarist Luther Perkins and bassist Marshall Grant—he began recording for Sam Phillips' Sun label in 1955. The trio recorded "Cry, Cry, Cry" (#14 C&W, 1955), and followed it with "Folsom Prison Blues" (#5 C&W, 1956). Later in 1956 came Cash's most enduring hit, the million-seller "I Walk the Line" (#17, 1956). At Sun, he was also part of an impromptu gospel sing-along with label mates Elvis Presley, Carl Perkins, and Jerry Lee Lewis that was widely bootlegged as The Million Dollar Quartet and finally released commercially in 1981 (on the U.K. label Charly).

Johnny Cash

Cash moved near Ventura, California, in 1958, signed with Columbia, and began a nine-year period of alcohol and drug abuse. He released a number of successful country and pop hits, among them "Ring of Fire" (#1 pop, #1 C&W, 1963), written by June Carter of the Carter Family and Merle Kilgore. By then, he had left his family and moved to New York's Greenwich Village. Late in 1965 Cash was arrested by customs officials for trying to smuggle amphetamines in his guitar case across the Mexican border. He got a suspended sentence and was fined. After a serious auto accident and a near fatal overdose, his wife divorced him. By then Cash had moved to Nashville, where he became friends with Waylon Jennings. Together they spent what both have described as a drug-crazed year and a half.

But in Nashville, Cash began a liaison with June Carter, who helped him get rid of his drug habit by 1967 and recon-verted him to fundamentalist Christianity. By the time Cash and Carter married in early 1968, they had been working together regularly. They had hit duets with "Jackson" (#2 C&W, 1967), "Long-Legged Guitar Pickin' Man" (#6 C&W, 1967), and versions of Bob Dylan's "It Ain't Me, Babe" (#58 pop, #4 C&W, 1964) and Tim Hardin's "If I Were a Carpenter" (#36 pop, #2 C&W, 1970).

Cash's 1968 live album, At Folsom Prison (#13), became a million-seller in 1968. Bob Dylan invited him to sing a duet ("Girl From the North Country") and write liner notes for Nashville Skyline, and Dylan appeared in the first segment of ABC-TV's The Johnny Cash Show in June 1969. The highly rated series, which lasted two years, developed a reputation as an eclectic showcase of contemporary American music, with guests ranging from Louis Armstrong to Carl Perkins to Bob Dylan. Cash had a 1969 hit with Shel Silverstein's "A Boy Named Sue" (#2), a track from Johnny Cash at San Quentin; his best-selling album, the live LP was #1 for four weeks.

In 1970 Cash performed at the Nixon White House. He and June Carter traveled to Israel in 1971 to make a documentary, Gospel Road. Cash continued to tour and make hits through the '70s, including "A Thing Called Love" (#2 C&W, 1972) and "One Piece at a Time" (#1 C&W, 1976). He also became active in benefit work, particularly on behalf of prisoners, Native American rights, and evangelist Billy Graham's organization.

In 1982 Cash regrouped with fellow surviving Million Dollar Quartet members Carl Perkins and Jerry Lee Lewis to record The Survivors. Three years later Cash hooked up with three other compadres—Kris Kristofferson, Waylon Jennings, and Willie Nelson—to form the Highwaymen, releasing Highwayman in 1985. The Highwaymen performed together sporadically throughout the late '80s and '90s, recording Highwayman 2 in 1990 and Highwaymen: The Road Goes On Forever (produced by Don Was) in 1995.

Cash's 25-year relationship with Columbia Records ended in the mid-'80s, and in 1986 he began a somewhat desultory liaison with Nashville's branch of Mercury Records. By the late '80s, his long streak of country hits had ended, and Cash complained to an interviewer that he'd been "purged" from Nashville, replaced by contemporary "hat acts." He continued to perform constantly, however, usually with a package tour that included his wife and her sisters Helen and Anita Carter, as well as Johnny and June's son, John Carter Cash (other Cash and Carter siblings would sometimes show up too). Throughout these years, Cash turned to acting, in a slew of Western-themed movies and TV shows. He also suffered from health problems and underwent heart surgery as well as drug treatment for an addiction to painkillers.

Already a member of the Nashville Songwriter's Hall of Fame (Cash has more than 400 songs to his credit) and the Country Music Hall of Fame, Cash was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1992. Also that year came the release of the critically acclaimed box set The Essential Johnny Cash. In 1993 he began his return to the forefront with a guest vocal turn on U2's Zooropa; he sang lead vocals on the darkly haunting track "The Wanderer." The following year, Cash was toasted by alt-rock audiences with the release of American Recordings, on the label by the same name, known for its rap and rock artists. Label chief Rick Rubin's production emphasized Cash's brooding, deep vocals, backed by his own simple, but rhythmic acoustic guitar. Featuring, among Cash's own compositions, covers of such artists as Nick Lowe, Leonard Cohen, and Tom Waits, the album's songs veered from Cash's "Redemption" to satanic-rocker Glenn Danzig's "Thirteen." Appearing solo or backed by guitar, bass, and drums, Cash performed in several intimate venues crawling with hipsters. Though the album only reached #110 on the pop charts (#29 C&W), it received airplay on alternative-rock and college radio stations, garnering critical raves.

In 1996 Cash released another well-received album, Unchained, on which he was backed by Tom Petty and the Heartbreakers and covered edgy songs by the likes of Beck and Soundgarden. The album won the Best Country Album Grammy, and Cash also garnered a Lifetime Achievement Award Grammy. Then, after experiencing dizziness and tremors in 1997, Cash was diagnosed with the degenerative nervous disorder Shy-Drager syndrome. He retired from the road and began treatments for his illness. In 1999 he was the subject of a televised tribute (featuring Dylan, U2, Springsteen, and others) and made his first public appearance since his diagnosis. In 2000 Cash's health seemed better, and his doctors were beginning to question if they'd made the right diagnosis. Cash released another critically acclaimed album, American III: Solitary Man, which won a Grammy for Best Contemporary Folk Recording. (It also brought him back to Columbia, which had begun distributing the American label.)

Rosanne Cash

Born May 24, 1955, Memphis, TN

1980—Right or Wrong (Columbia) 1981—Seven Year Ache
1982—Somewhere in the Stars 1985—Rhythm and Romance
1987—King's Record Shop 1989—Hits 1979–1989
1990—Interiors 1993—The Wheel 1996—10 Song Demo
(Capitol) 2001—The Rules of Travel.

The oldest daughter of country music star Johnny Cash and Vivian Liberto, Rosanne Cash began her recording career with a sound that blended Nashville C&W and California country rock. By the '90s, after scoring numerous country hits and divorcing country producer/singer/songwriter Rodney Crowell, she had developed into an eloquent and introspective singer/songwriter, whose troubled personal life was reflected in evocative, pain-wracked compositions.

Though born in Memphis, Cash grew up in Ventura, California, where her parents had moved in 1958; the two divorced in 1966. The day after graduating from high school, she joined her father's touring revue as a wardrobe assistant and later became a backup singer. After three years with the Johnny Cash show, she moved to London in 1976, returning home in 1977 to attend Vanderbilt University in Nashville. Then she moved to Hollywood and enrolled in the Lee Strasberg Theater Institute the next year. She took time off in January 1978 to record a demo produced by Rodney Crowell [see entry], attracting the attention of the Gernan-based Ariola label. She went to Munich to record an album, and although it was never released in the U.S., it persuaded the Nashville branch of Columbia Records to sign her.

Cash and Crowell married in 1979. For a while she played with Crowell's band, the Cherry Bombs, before Columbia released her debut U.S. album, Right or Wrong, which sold surprisingly well despite her inability to tour; she was pregnant. Her 1981 followup, Seven Year Ache, drew critical raves, solid sales, and yielded a #1 country hit with the title tune (two other tracks from the LP hit #1 as well).

Cash continued to score on the country charts: "Ain't No Money" (#4 C&W, 1982), "I Don't Know Why You Don't Want Me" (#1 C&W, 1985), "Never Be You" (#1 C&W, 1985), "Hold On" (#5 C&W, 1986), "Second to No One" (#5 C&W, 1986). By the mid-'80s, though, childbearing had curtailed her touring (she and Crowell have three daughters), and a cocaine dependence landed her in rehab. She sprang back, however, with the eclectic King's Record Shop (#6 C&W, 1987), which featured a remake of her father's "Tennessee Flat Top Box" (#1 C&W, 1987) and marked a healing of her strained relationship with her dad. The album also yielded #1 C&W hits in John Hiatt's "The Way We Make a Broken Heart," "If You Change Your Mind," and "Runaway Train." A longtime Beatles fan, Cash took the group's "I Don't Want to Spoil the Party" to the top of the country charts in 1989.

Self-produced, Interiors (#23 C&W, 1990) was Cash's first album without Crowell at the helm. Her brutally dark take on intimate relationships was reflected throughout and made clear the marital problems that had been hinted at on earlier albums, both in her own songs and those contributed by her husband. Cash began touring the singer/songwriter circuit in the '90s, and as her songs became more personal and her music's sound more stripped down, her country hits stopped coming. In 1992 her marriage ended in divorce. Its painful aftermath and her own self-actualization were the themes of her critically acclaimed album The Wheel (#37 C&W, 1993). Cash's interest in Jungian psychology was apparent in her compositions as well. Always highly critical of the Nashville country star lifestyle, Cash relocated to New York City and began a relationship with guitarist/songwriter/producer John Leventhal (Shawn Colvin), with whom she began collaborating and touring; the couple married in 1995.

After moving to Capitol Records, Cash released the spare 10 Song Demo in 1996. Produced by Leventhal, it featured Cash singing her introspective songs, for the most part backed only by her acoustic guitar or piano. That same year, a book of Cash short stories, Bodies of Water, was published to favorable reviews. She has since published a children's book, Penelope Jane: A Fairy's Tale (in 2000), and edited a book of prose, Songs Without Rhymes, by such songwriters as David Byrne and Suzanne Vega. In early 2001 she returned with her first new album of songs in five years, entitled The Rules of Travel.

David Cassidy

Born Apr. 12, 1950, New York, NY

1972—Cherish (Bell); Rock Me Baby 1974—Cassidy Live 1975—The Higher They Climb (RCA) 1976—Home Is Where the Heart Is 1990—David Cassidy (Enigma) 1992—Didn't You Used to Be (Scotti Bros.) 1998—Old Trick, New Dog (Slamajama).

Early-'70s teen idol and actor David Cassidy is the son of actor Jack Cassidy and actress Evelyn Ward. He moved to Hollywood in 1957 with his mother when his parents divorced. (His father then married actress Shirley Jones, who played Cassidy's mother in the television series The Partridge Family.) During his teens, he played guitar and drums, wrote songs, and acted; his credits include Allan Sherman's Broadway production Fig Leaves Are Falling and guest shots on television's Bonanza and Marcus Welby, M.D.

In fall 1970 he began a four-year run as Keith Partridge on The Partridge Family (inspired by the Cowsills). The Partridge Family's premiere single, "I Think I Love You" (released before the TV series debuted), sold nearly 6 million copies. Several hits followed. Cassidy received royalties from the sales of Partridge Family coloring books, lunch boxes, dolls, comic books, postcards, clothes, books, records, and the show itself [see entry].

His solo recording career began in 1971 with a Top 10 remake of the Association's "Cherish." His several world tours inspired mass hysteria. Cassidy began to disclaim the teen-idol role after a 14-year-old fan named Bernadette Wheeler suffered a fatal heart attack at a London show in May 1974. That year he quit the TV series and in 1975 signed a long-term contract with RCA.

Cassidy's subsequent efforts did little to establish credibility with more mature listeners in the United States. Across the Atlantic, in the UK, it was quite a different story, with Cassidy claiming 10 Top 20 singles there between 1972 and 1985, including two chart-toppers ("How Can I Be Sure" and "Daydreamer" b/w "The Puppy Song"). In 1976 he and Mick Ronson cut a single entitled "Gettin' It On in the Streets" and were supposed to record an album and form a band, none of it ever came to pass.

During 1978–79 he returned to television in a police drama, David Cassidy—Man Undercover, but he never abandoned music. He started in 1983 in Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat on Broadway, and in 1987 he took over Cliff Richard's role in Dave Clark's London musical Time. In 1990 he launched a comeback effort that resulted in his first U.S. Top 30 appearance since 1972, "Lyin' to Myself" (#27, 1990). Seemingly resigned to The Partridge Family legacy (the show found new audiences in syndication and on Nickelodeon), he titled a recent effort Didn't You Used to Be and had another ex-Partridge, comedian/disc jockey Danny Bonaduce, open some of his shows. In 1993 he opened in the New York production of Blood Brothers, a dramatic musical costarring Petula Clark and his half-brother Shaun Cassidy. His autobiography, Come On, Get Happy, was published in 1994. Cassidy remains active in both music and the theater and has headlined in Las Vegas. In early 2000 NBC aired the made-for-television movie The David Cassidy Story.

Shaun Cassidy

Born Sep. 27, 1959, Hollywood, CA

1977—Shaun Cassidy (Warner Bros./Curb); Born Late 1978—Under Wraps 1979—Room Service; That's Rock 'n' Roll—Shaun Cassidy Live 1980—Wasp.

Following in the footsteps of his half brother David Cassidy, Shaun Cassidy was a teen idol in the late '70s. The son of actor Jack Cassidy and actress Shirley Jones, he grew up in Beverly Hills and formed his first rock band at age 11, just after he began writing his own songs. Signed by Mike Curb to the Warner/Curb label in 1975, Cassidy had his first success in Europe, where his photos saturated the teen magazines. His debut single—"Morning Girl," released in January 1976—went Top 20 in most of Europe. His second single, a cover of Eric Carmen's "That's Rock 'n' Roll," expanded his appeal to Australia and later went gold in the U.S. in a 1977 release.

He starred in The Hardy Boys Mysteries TV series from 1977 to 1979. His first U.S. single, a cover of the Crystals' 1963 hit "Da Doo Ron Ron," was released in May 1977 and hit #1; his simultaneously released debut album, Shaun Cassidy, went platinum. "Hey Deanie," another Carmen song, hit #7 in 1978, but followups sank. Like half brother David before him, Shaun tried with little success to make the transition to a serious rocker, his 1980 Wasp was produced by Todd Rundgren and featured versions of songs by David Bowie, Ian Hunter, Peter Townshend, and David Byrne.

He concentrated on acting. Among his television credits are the 1979 television movie Like Normal People, the 1980 series Breaking Away, and, later in the decade, the soap General Hospital. In 1993 he played David Cassidy's twin in the Broadway production of Blood Brothers. Cassidy also created, wrote, and produced several television shows, among them the horror-themed American Gothic (CBS, 1995) and the action series Roar (Fox, 1997).

Jimmy Castor

Born June 22, 1943, New York, NY
 N.A.—Hey Leroy (Smash) 1972—It's Just Begun (RCA); Phase Two 1973—Dimension 3 1974—The Everything Man (Atlantic) 1975—Super Sound (Atco); Butt of Course 1976—E Man Groovin'.

Singer/songwriter/saxophonist Jimmy Castor is best known for "Troglodyte (Cave Man)," a 1972 funk novelty hit, but his career stretches back to the '50s. He assembled his first group, Jimmy Castor and the Juniors (Johnny Williams, Orton Graves, Al Casey Jr.), around 1955. Their "I Promise to Remember" (a Castor original) was a modest New York hit in 1956, but later that year Frankie Lyman and the Teenagers' cover version was a national hit. Castor, a friend of the Teenagers, was asked to sub for Lyman on occasion.

After graduating from New York's High School of Music and Art, Castor dropped out of the music business to study accounting at City College of New York. He reentered the music business in 1962, when he played the sax on Dave "Baby" Cortez's Top 10 hit "Rinky Dink." He then recorded solo for the Winley, Clown, Jet-Set, and Decca labels before forming the Jimmy Castor Bunch (percussionist Leonard Friddle Jr., bassist Douglas Gibson, guitarist Harry Jensen, drummer Robert Manigault, and keyboardist Gerry Thomas) in the mid-'60s. The Bunch recorded for Compass and Capitol before "Hey, Leroy, Your Mama's Callin' You" (#31 pop, 1967; #16 R&B, 1966) was recorded for Smash. "Troglodyte" (#6 pop, #4 R&B, 1972) is Castor's biggest hit to date. Castor left RCA for Atlantic and returned to the Top 20 with a sequel to "Troglodyte," "The Bertha Butt Boogie" (#16 pop, #22 R&B, 1975). His other hits on Atlantic were "Potential" (#25 R&B, 1975), "King Kong Part 1" (#23 R&B, 1975), and "Space Age" (#28 R&B, 1977).

Through the early '80s, Castor continued to record solo, his singles peaking at the nether points of the R&B chart. In 1988 he had an R&B Top 30 hit in a duet with Joyce Sims, "Love Makes a Woman." In the early '90s Castor became a Teenager when he joined the two surviving group members and two other singers in a re-formed lineup of that group.

The Birthday Party combined overdriven, postpunk guitar cacophony with Delta blues influences and the alternately morose and ranting vocals of Nick Cave. After the group imploded in 1983, an entire generation of Australian, English, and American noisemongers began roaming the earth. Since then, the Birthday Party's members, most notably singer/songwriter Cave, have formed an orbit of bands that share both personnel and a dramatically dark sensibility.

The Birthday Party had its beginnings in Melbourne, Australia, where the teenage Cave—a former petty thief and misfit in his hometown—had met Mick Harvey at boarding school. In the mid-'70s the pair formed the Boys Next Door, who released several records in their homeland. Constrained by the provincial Melbourne scene, the band set off for England in 1980, when it changed its name to the Birthday Party. An Australian album from that year was credited to both names. The musicians' intense, assaultive live act and appearances on early supporter John Peel's BBC-1 radio program led to a contract with the U.K. indie label 4AD. In 1982 they released their signature album, Junkyard. Around that time, bassist Tracy Pew (who died from epilepsy-related causes in 1986) was arrested on drug charges; former Magazine bassist Barry Adamson and guitarist Rowland S. Howard's brother, Harry, were among his temporary fill-in replacements. By the end of the year, Pew had returned and drummer Phil Calvert was gone; the latter briefly joined the Psychedelic Furs.

The Birthday Party's violent, sacrilegious subject matter ("Dead Joe," "Big-Jesus-Trash-Can," "The Six Strings That Drew Blood") and dark, brooding attitude caused the U.K. press to somewhat erroneously associate the group with the gothic-rock scene. In 1982 Cave, Harvey, Rowland Howard, and Pew moved to Berlin and recorded another EP, The Bad Seed. (They also collaborated with Lydia Lunch [see entry] on her Honeymoon in Red album.) The followup EP, Mutiny!, proved to be the Birthday Party's final release together. The band unraveled after Harvey quit in 1983.

Cave returned to London. He formed the Bad Seeds with Adamson, Harvey, and Einstürzende Neubauten [see entry] frontman Blixa Bargeld. (Numerous guests have drifted in and out of the ensemble ever since.) A more refined, controlled version of the Birthday Party, the Bad Seeds retained the earlier group's intensity, but Cave added a Leonard Cohen-style romantic gloom. He also unveiled an Elvis obsession, with a cover of "In the Ghetto" on From Her to Eternity, both The Firstborn Is Dead and its initial single "Tupelo" (1985) directly concern Presley. Cave showed his range on 1986's Kicking Against the Pricks, convincingly covering Leadbelly, gospel, Hendrix, and "By the Time I Get to Phoenix." The same year, the Bad Seeds released a double EP of mostly original material, Your Funeral . . . My Trial. Several lineup changes ensued, and Cramps guitarist Kid Congo Powers filled out the sound on Tender Prey.

In the late '80s Cave took time off from music to pursue his literary ambitions. King Ink, a collection of song lyrics, plays, and prose pieces, was published in England in 1988 and eventually made its way to the U.S.; a novel, And the Ass Saw the Angel, hit the shelves the next year. The Southern Gothic fable, filled with Cave's scatologically religious imagery, received generally favorable notices.

The Good Son (1990) was recorded in Brazil with largely acoustic instrumentation, the album has a quiet, mournful intensity. Henry's Dream and Let Love In focus largely on Cave's richly narrative compositions. The subdued playing on 1996's Murder Ballads contrasts its harsh, gruesome theme. This collection of death-obsessed originals and covers boasts duets with Polly Jean Harvey and fluffy pop star Kylie Minogue. The Boatman's Call eases off on the overbearing grimness of its predecessor. On No More Shall We Part, Cave continues his exploration of death experience and the twists and turns of the human heart.

Once the Birthday Party had split, Rowland S. Howard, Harry Howard, and Harvey joined their old Melbourne friend Simon Bonney, who since the late '70s had been leading the group Crime and the City Solution. Accompanied by ex-Swell Maps drummer Eric Soundtracks, they played on several of that band's mid-'80s releases. In 1987 the Howards and Soundtracks left to form the sinister, noirish These Immortal Souls. Rowland Howard, who has also made records with Nikki Sudden, Lydia Lunch, and Einstürzende Neubauten, issued his solo debut in 1999.

Over the years, Cave, Bargeld, and Harvey have dabbled in film scores, crafting the soundtracks to Ghosts . . . of the Civil Dead (1989) and To Have and to Hold (1996). Cave also acted in 1992's Johnny Suede (alongside Brad Pitt) and in a number of Wim Wenders movies.

Chad and Jeremy

Formed ca. 1963, London, Eng.

Chad Stuart (b. Dec. 10, 1943, Eng.), voc., gtr., piano, sitar, tamboura, tablas, banjo, flute; Jeremy Clyde (b. Mar. 22, 1944, Eng.), voc., gtr.

1964—Yesterday's Gone (World Artists) 1965—Chad and Jeremy Sing for You; Before and After (Columbia); I Don't Want to Lose You Baby 1966—The Best of Chad and Jeremy (Capitol); More Chad and Jeremy; Distant Shores (Columbia) 1967—Of Cabbages and Kings 1968—The Ark 1992—Painted Dayglow Smile (Legacy Rock Artifacts Series) 1993—Yesterday's Gone—A Golden Classics Collection (Collectables).

Chad and Jeremy's innocuous soft-rock hits kept them on the charts from 1964 through 1966. Sons of affluent British families, both were well educated (Eton and the Sorbonne, respectively). They met while studying at the Central School of Drama in London, where they began singing folk-based material. In 1964 one of their first singles, "Yesterday's Gone," went to #21 in the U.S.

The pair soon moved to Hollywood and began to rival Peter and Gordon as the world's top folk-rock duo. Chart hits like "A Summer Song" (#7, 1964) and "Distant Shores" (#30, 1966) combined with frequent television appearances (Hullabaloo, The Hollywood Palace) kept them in the public eye. They broke up in late 1966, when Jeremy departed to act in a London stage musical. The two later regrouped and recorded Of Cabbages and Kings, one of the first "concept albums," and The Ark. They ended their partnership in November 1967. Thereafter Clyde resumed his acting career. He has appeared on the London stage, in movies, and in a television miniseries. Stuart served as musical director for The Smothers Brothers Comedy Hour and worked as a musical-comedy composer.

Chairmen of the Board

Formed 1969, Detroit, MI

Original lineup: General Norman Johnson (b. May 23, 1943), voc.; Danny Woods (b. Apr. 10, 1944), voc.; Harrison Kennedy (b. Ontario, Can.), voc.; Eddie Curtis, voc.

1970—Give Me Just a Little More Time (Invictus); In Session 1972—Bittersweet 1973—Greatest Hits 1990—Greatest Hits (HMH/Fantasy) 1995—Success (Surfside).

The Chairmen of the Board is a soul vocal group whose biggest hit was the Holland/Dozier/Holland-produced "Give Me Just a Little More Time" (#3, 1970). The group's leader and main songwriter, General Norman Johnson, grew up in Norfolk, Virginia, where he sang in church choirs as a child. By age 12 he had formed his first group, the Humdingers. During his senior year of high school (1961), Johnson and his group the Showmen recorded his salute to rock & roll, "It Will Stand," for Minit Records.

After several more singles for Minit and later Swan, Johnson left the group to sign with ex-Motown producers Holland/Dozier/Holland's Invictus label. There the Chairmen of the Board was formed, with Johnson; another Showman, Danny Woods; Harrison Kennedy of the Canadian group Stone Soul Children; and Eddie Curtis, an alumnus of Lee Andrews and the Hearts and Huey Smith and the Clowns. Their debut single, "Give Me Just a Little More Time," was followed by several minor hits and "Pay to the Piper" (#13) in 1970. They briefly disbanded the next year but regrouped in 1972. Now billed as General Johnson and the Chairmen of the Board, a trio of Johnson, Woods, and saxman Ken Knox, continues to play and enjoy self-released, local hits in the Southeast. Several of Johnson's songs have been hits for other performers, including Honey Cone ("Want Ads," "Stuck Up," "One Monkey Don't Stop No Show"), Freda Payne ("Bring the Boys Home"), and Clarence Carter ("Patches"). In 1994 Johnson and Joey Ramone duetted on "Rockaway Beach" for the album Godchildren of Soul.

The Chambers Brothers

Formed ca. 1961, Los Angeles, CA

George E. Chambers (b. Sep. 26, 1931, Flora, MS), voc., bass; Willie Chambers (b. Mar. 3, 1938, MS), voc., gtr.; Lester Chambers (b. Apr. 13, 1940, MS), voc., harmonica; Joe Chambers (b. Aug. 24, 1942, Scott County, MS), voc., gtr.

1965—(+ Brian Keenan [b. Jan. 28, ca. 1944, New York, NY; d. ca. mid-'80s], drums) People Get Ready (Vault) 1966—Chambers Brothers Now 1968—Shout! The Time Has Come (Columbia); A New Time, A New Day 1969—Love, Peace and Happiness 1970—Chambers Brothers Live at Fillmore East; Feelin' the Blues (Vault) 1971—A New Generation (Columbia); The Chambers Brothers' Greatest Hits 1972—Oh My God! 1973—Best of the Chambers Brothers (Fantasy) 1974—Unbonded (Avco) 1975—Right Move.

Black gospel/funk/psychedelic innovators, the Chambers Brothers had an enthusiastic following in the late '60s. The four brothers grew up in a poverty-stricken Mississippi sharecropping family and first sang together at the Mount Calvary Baptist Church in Lee County. George, the eldest, was drafted into the army in 1952. Once discharged, he gravitated to south L.A. and was eventually joined by his brothers. They began performing around Southern California as a gospel and folk quartet in 1961.

After their first New York dates in 1965, they became an interracial group with the addition of drummer Brian Keenan and moved toward rock. The group attracted national attention at the 1965 Newport Folk Festival and worked both the psychedelic ballrooms (the Fillmores, Electric Circus) and soul venues like New York's Apollo Theatre. They signed with Columbia in 1967, and the title track from their first album for that label, "Time Has Come Today," became a major hit (#11, 1968). They charted with several more singles, including "I Can't Turn You Loose" (#37, 1968), and LPs (A New Time, A New Day and Love, Peace and Happiness) over the next few years.

The original group broke up in early 1972, with drummer Keenan joining Genya Ravan's band. The Chambers Brothers reunited in 1974 for Unbonded. They continue an on-again, off-again career. In 1980 they supported Mana Muldaur on her Gospel Nights and made commercials for Levi Strauss. Early in 1980 Lester relocated to New York (where he formed a band with ex-Electric Flag bassist Harvey Brooks), and several of the brothers worked on solo careers. Willie and Joe became session players, George sang gospel, and all the brothers belong to an extended-family gospel choir called the Chambers Family Singers. Keenan went on to run his own Connecticut recording studio; in the mid-'80s, he died of an apparent heart attack.

The Champs

Formed 1957, Los Angeles, CA

Original lineup: Dave Burgess (b. Lancaster, CA), gtr.; Dale Norris (b. Springfield, MA), gtr.; Chuck Rio (b. Rankin, TX), sax; Gen Alden (b. Cisco, TX), drums; Bobby Morris (b. Tulsa, OK), bass. 1960—Everybody's Rockin' (Challenge) 1994—Greatest Hits—Tequila (Curb).

The Champs were West Coast sessionmen whose first single, the instrumental "Tequila" (written by Rio), stayed on the charts for 19 weeks, reached #1, eventually sold more than 6 million copies worldwide, and won a Grammy Award for the best R&B record of 1958. Subsequent hits—"Too Much Tequila" (#30, 1960), "Limbo Rock" (#40, 1962), and "Tequila Twist" (#99, 1962)—failed to match the success of "Tequila." Over the years the group underwent numerous personnel changes, including a brief membership by guitarist/vocalist Delaney Bramlett (later of Delaney and Bonnie), before disbanding in 1965. Two other ex-Champs, Jimmy Seals and Dash Crofts, went on to form the Dawnbreakers before they reemerged in 1970 as Seals and Crofts [see entry].

James Chance

Born James Siegfried, Apr. 20, 1953, Milwaukee, WI
1979—Buy the Contortions (with the Contortions) (Ze); Grutzi Elvis EP; Off-White (with James White and the Blacks) 1980—Live aux Bains Douches (with the Contortions) (Invisible, Fr.) 1981—Live in New York (with the Contortions) (ROIR); Sax Maniac (with James White and the Blacks) (Animal/Chrysalis); 1982—Flaming Demons (Ze) 1991—Soul Exorcism (with the Contortions) (ROIR) 1995—Lost Chance.

In the late '70s and early '80s, James Chance's "punk funk"—an edgy, atonal fusion, incorporating funk, free-form jazz, and punk intensity—was a pervasive strain in New York City dance music, with former band mates showing up in many New York dance groups. While Chance is not well known to many of today's music fans, his influence can be felt in the in-your-face aggression of Limp Bizkit and the skronky freedom of David S. Ware and the Boredoms' avant-garde music.

Growing up in suburban Milwaukee, Siegfried started studying piano in the first grade. In high school he became interested in jazz and at age 19 took up the alto sax. He attended the Wisconsin Conservatory of Music but dropped out less than a semester short of receiving his degree. He went to New York in 1976 and studied for a short time with avant-garde saxophonist David Murray.

In 1977 Chance formed the Contortions, whose most famous lineup comprised organist Adele Bertei, guitarist Jody Harris, bassist George Scott III, slide guitarist Pat Place, and drummer Don Christensen. Like Captain Beefheart, he arranged and demonstrated to his musicians the instrumental parts of every song. Contortions concerts—the first of which were given in fall 1977—could be violent experiences: Chance was notorious for diving from the stage and engaging in fistcuffs with spectators.

The first Contortions recordings were the four tracks they contributed to a Brian Eno-produced No New York anthology (Antilles/Island). In 1979 the Contortions dissolved and Chance formed James White and the Blacks. During the recording of Off-White, the Blacks included all the original Contortions except Bertei, who occasionally performed with them as a guest, along with Lydia Lunch and Voidoid Robert Oune. That group also dissolved: Bertei formed the Bloods and Place the Bush Tetras [see entry], while Scott joined Lunch in 8 Eyed Spy, later reuniting with Harris and Christensen in the Raybeats. Chance collaborated with Arto Lindsay (DNA, Lounge Lizards), Bradley Field (Teenage Jesus and the Jerks), and George Scott on a Diego Cortez film soundtrack, Grutzi Elvis (Scott died in 1980 of a heroin overdose.) Chance continued to perform in New York, backed by pickup bands until he relocated in 1980 to Paris, the base from which he toured Europe. The reception and respect accorded him there far exceeded what he received in America. Throughout the '80s, Chance returned periodically to New York, where he played with musicians like trombonist Joseph Bowie (of the Black Arts Group, later founder of Defunkt), avant-garde reedman Henry Threadgill, and guitarists Bern Nix (Ornette Coleman) and Tomas Donker (the Dance).

In 1994 Henry Rollins' label, Infinite Zero, reissued Chance/White's early LPs. Chance moved back to New York and returned to live performances. By the end of the decade, he was fronting Convulsion Cabaret, a punk "supergroup" with Billy Ficca (Television) and Walter Stedding. He also performs as James Chance and His Sardonian Sinfonics. In addition, newer Contortions lineups continue to perform. Most of the '79 band reunited in 1995 and again in 2001.

Gene Chandler

Born Eugene Dixon, July 6, 1937, Chicago, IL
1962—Duke of Earl (Vee-Jay) 1964—Just Be True (Constellation); Greatest Hits 1965—Live! On Stage 1966—The Duke of Soul (Checker) 1967—The Girl Don't Care (Brunswick) 1968—There Was a Time 1969—The Two Sides of Gene Chandler 1970—The Gene Chandler Situation (Mercury) 1971—One & One (with Jerry Butler) 1978—Get Down (Chi-Sound) 1979—When You're #1 (20th Century) 1980—Gene Chandler '80 1981—Here's to Love (Chi-Sound) 1982—I'll Make the Living If You Make the Loving (Worthwhile) 1984—Stroll On With the Duke (Solid Smoke); The Duke of Soul (Chess) 1985—Your Love Looks Good on Me (Fastfire).

A fixture in Chicago soul for over 30 years, balladeer Gene Chandler was raised on the tough South Side and sang doo-wop in street-corner groups before joining the army in 1957. After his discharge in 1960 he joined Chicago's Dukays, who had a minor hit late in 1961 with "The Girl Is a Devil." A&R man Carl Davis, who had discovered the Dukays, renamed Eugene Dixon after Davis' favorite actor, Jeff Chandler, and produced his solo debut, a backward glance at doo-wop style called "Duke of Earl" (#1 pop, #1 R&B, 1962). The single sold a million copies within a month of its November 1961 re-release.

Chandler's string of hits lasted until the early '70s. The best of them were written and arranged by Curtis Mayfield, including "Just Be True" (#19, 1964), "You Can't Hurt Me No More" (#92, 1965), "Nothing Can Stop Me" (#18, 1965), and "What Now" (#40, 1965). The hits slowed after that, though he made several memorable records including his 1968 collaboration with Barbara Acklin, "From the Teacher to the Preacher" (#57), followed by "Groovy Situation" (#12, 1970).

Chandler gave up touring to concentrate on songwriting and production, bought Bamboo Records, and moved it to Chicago. There he produced hits, including Mel and Tim's 1969 "Backfield in Motion," and continued to record throughout the '70s, including a soul hit with Jerry Butler. He also founded Mr. Chand Records and worked for A&M as a producer from 1974 to 1977. In 1976 Chandler was convicted of selling 388 grams of heroin; he served a four-month sentence. A #53 disco hit, "Get Down," returned Chandler to the pop chart in 1979; it went to #11 in the U.K. Similarly "Does She Have a Friend for Me" attracted scant interest stateside but became a Top 30 hit in England. Chandler continues to perform.

The Chantels

Formed 1956, New York, NY

Arlene Smith (b. Oct. 5, 1941, New York), voc.; Lois Harris, voc.; Sonia Goring, voc.; Jackie Landry (d. Dec. 23, 1997), voc.; Rene Minus, voc.

1958—We Are the Chantels (End) 1959—(— Smith; — Harris; + Annette Smith) 1990—The Best of the Chantels (Rhino).

The Chantels were one of the first and most popular of the girl groups. The five girls (all between 14 and 17) had been singing together in their Bronx parochial school choir since childhood. Led by Arlene Smith, the group was named after Saint Francis de Chantelle School, the rival school of their own alma mater, Saint Anthony of Padua. Richard Barrett of the Valentines produced their first singles ("He's Gone," "The Plea"), both Smith compositions that failed to hit. However, in 1958 the Chantels had their biggest success with another Smith song, "Maybe" (#15 pop, #2 R&B), which sold over a million copies. The Chantels' version hit #116 when rereleased in 1969; Janis Joplin covered it that year.

After several more singles—none of them major hits—End dropped them in 1959 and they moved to Carlton Records. By then Smith had quit to pursue a solo career, Harns was in college, and the following Chantels records were often recorded using other singers, including producer Barrett. Nonetheless, "Look in My Eyes" (#14 pop, #6 R&B, 1961) and "Well, I Told You" (#29, 1961) were hits before the group disbanded in 1970.

Smith, who has also worked as a schoolteacher, later attended the Juilliard School of Music. In the early '70s she re-formed the Chantels with new members. The original Chantels reunited for several one-off performances in the '90s, including the 1996 Rhythm & Blues Foundation Awards in Hollywood. The current incarnation, active since 1996, consists of Harns, Goring, and Minus plus new singer Ami Ortiz. Landry was a member until she succumbed to breast cancer in 1997. Smith is now a solo artist.

Harry Chapin

Born Dec. 7, 1942, New York, NY; died July 16, 1981, Jericho, NY

1972—Heads and Tales (Elektra); Sniper and Other Love Songs 1973—Short Stories 1974—Verities and Balderdash 1975—Portrait Gallery 1976—On the Road to Kingdom Come; Harry Chapin's Greatest Stories Live 1977—Dance Band on the Titanic 1978—Living Room Suite 1979—Legends of the Lost and Found 1980—Sequel (Boardwalk) 1985—Anthology of Harry Chapin.

Although singer/songwriter Harry Chapin initially came to fame with his story songs, his true legacy is that of an anti-hunger activist who, years before such public activism became common, was performing over half of his 200 concert dates each year for charitable causes.

The son of a jazz drummer, Chapin sang in the Brooklyn Heights Boys Choir and in his teens he played guitar, banjo, and trumpet in a band with his brothers. After a stint at the Air Force Academy, Chapin spent a semester at Cornell University. He and his brothers began working in Greenwich Village clubs and making documentary films (A documentary he made with Jim Jacobs in the late '60s called Legendary Champions was nominated for an Academy Award.) His brothers left the country in 1964 to escape the draft, and Chapin continued in filmmaking.

He formed his own band, including a cello player, in 1971. Chapin's debut album, Heads and Tales, was released in February 1972 and stayed on the charts for over half a year, peaking at #60 when "Taxi" became a Top 20 single. His 1973 album, Short Stories, produced another solid hit, "W.O.L.D." (#36). Verities and Balderdash became Chapin's first gold album in 1974 on the strength of his #1 "Cat's in the Cradle." His subsequent albums sold respectably through the end of the '70s. His The Night That Made America Famous ran on Broadway for 75 performances and was nominated for two Tony Awards.

Chapin's later backup band included his brother Steve (piano and vocals), who also produced Harry's 1977 LP Dance Band on the Titanic. Another Chapin brother, Tom, has carried on a career of his own as a singer/songwriter and a children's artist.

Chapin was an active lobbyist for various causes and a benefactor of Long Island arts organizations. In 1975 he founded World Hunger Year (WHY) and became a familiar figure on Capitol Hill and other centers of government as he worked tirelessly against hunger. The next year he served as a delegate to the Democratic National Convention and was named one of the Jaycees' 10 Most Outstanding Young Men in America.

Chapin died in a car crash on the Long Island Expressway while driving to a benefit performance. By then he had raised over $5 million for charity. In 1987 he was honored at an all-star Carnegie Hall tribute during which his widow, Sandy (who continues his work), accepted a posthumously awarded Special Congressional Gold Medal on his behalf. An album documenting the event—with performers including Bruce Springsteen, Richie Havens, and Judy Collins—titled Tribute was released in 1990.

Marshall Chapman

Born Jan. 7, 1949, Spartanburg, SC
 1977—Me, I'm Feeling Free (Epic) 1978—Jaded Virgin
 1979—Marshall 1982—Take It On Home (Rounder) 1987—Dirty Linen (Tall Girl/Line Import) 1991—Inside Job (Tall Girl)
 1995—It's About Time . . . Recorded Live at the Tennessee State Prison for Women (Margaritaville/Island) 1996—Love Slave.

Singer/songwriter/guitarist Marshall Chapman, of an anstocratic Southern family, was schooled at Nashville's Vanderbilt University, where she studied French and fine arts and started jamming with country, blues, and rock musicians. Around 1973, after living in France and Boston, she moved back to Nashville. There she waited tables and wrote songs, waiting for the opportunity to sing in local bars. She won the admiration of country stars like Tompall Glaser, Linda Hargrove, Jessi Colter, and Waylon Jennings.

In 1976 she went to L.A., where she was signed by Epic/CBS. Her debut album consisted predominantly of country-flavored songs. "Somewhere South of Macon" got airplay on country stations before it was decided that some of its lines were too sexually suggestive. Other songs—most often "A Woman's Heart (Is a Handy Place to Be)"—were covered by performers such as Colter, Crystal Gayle, Glaser, Olivia Newton-John, and the Earl Scruggs Revue. In concert, however, she fronted a rock & roll trio and drew rock crowds. Despite critical praise, Chapman's records did not sell, and once her third one was released, Epic dropped her. She continued to perform and record with her band, the Love Slaves, and her material was covered by Emmylou Harris, Ronnie Milsap, Conway Twitty, and Jimmy Buffett. It's About Time . . ., her first effort for Jimmy Buffett's Margaritaville label, was recorded on Halloween Eve, 1994, at the Tennessee State Prison for Women. Love Slave is a studio release. In the late 1990s she collaborated with songwriter Matraca Berg on a musical theater work based on the writing of Southern novelist Lee Smith.

Tracy Chapman

Born Mar. 20, 1964, Cleveland, OH
 1988—Tracy Chapman (Elektra) 1989—Crossroads
 1992—Matters of the Heart 1995—New Beginning 2000—Telling Stories.

Quiet and publicity shy, Tracy Chapman at first seemed an unlikely candidate for stardom. Add to that the fact that singer/songwriter Chapman delivered mostly spare, sobering folk-rock songs, and you have perhaps the most astonishing pop music success story of the late '80s and '90s. With her 1988 self-titled debut album, Chapman topped the album charts and entered the ranks of rock's most respected songwriters and live performers. Though her mainstream popularity hasn't remained consistent over the years, she resurfaced in 1996 with the blues-rock smash "Give Me One Reason" and continues to have a dedicated following.

Growing up in a predominantly black working-class neighborhood, Chapman was close to her older sister and single mother and shared their love of music; their tastes ranged from Mahalia Jackson to Neil Diamond. At an early age, she began writing songs and teaching herself to play the guitar. A minority placement scholarship enabled Chapman to attend Wooster, a prestigious prep school, there she became interested in folk-influenced rock music. She then attended Tufts University, majoring in anthropology and African studies while singing and playing guitar at coffeehouses and recording demos at the campus radio station. After hearing her play, Chapman's classmate Brian Koppelman, the son of music industry honcho Charles Koppelman, recommended her to his father. In 1986 Chapman signed a management deal with Charles Koppelman's SBK Publishing; in addition to hooking her up with manager Elliot Roberts (Joni Mitchell, Neil Young), Koppelman helped secure her a contract with Elektra Records.

Produced by David Kershenbaum (Joan Baez, Joe Jackson), Chapman's Elektra debut set her socially conscious songs and rich, emotive alto against sparse acoustic arrangements. Released in spring 1988, the album was critically praised, and Chapman began opening shows for 10,000 Maniacs. By that summer, after a stunning solo performance at a star-studded 70th-birthday tribute to Nelson Mandela at England's Wembley Stadium, Chapman began headlining. The album's sales soared, and one single, "Fast Car," reached #6 ("Talkin' 'Bout a Revolution" and "Baby Can I Hold You" followed at #75 and #48, respectively.) In September Chapman began a six-week international tour with Bruce Springsteen, Sting, Peter Gabriel, and Youssou N'Dour on behalf of Amnesty International. Accompanying herself with only a guitar and rarely addressing the audience, Chapman acquitted herself commendably, though some found her reticence off-putting.

After capping off the year with three Grammys, including Best New Artist, Chapman released Crossroads. Dealing with topics ranging from spirituality to racism in a bluntly realistic manner, the album was hardly a departure. Despite reaching #9, it proved less commercially successful than its predecessor. Infamous by now for her shyness and reluctance to deal with the press, Chapman withdrew for a few years, returning in 1992 with Matters of the Heart, which got mixed reviews and peaked at #53. Her career appeared to be petering out when she released the elegantly melodic and eloquently written New Beginning (#4) in 1995. The following year, "Give Me One Reason," an uncharacteristically simple, sultry love song, leaped to #3 on the pop chart, eventually propelling the album to triple-platinum sales. The single also earned Chapman her fourth Grammy, this one for Best Rock Song of 1996, and was a crowd pleaser on the first Lilith Fair tour in 1997. She returned with Telling Stories (#33, 2000); the title track, subtitled "There Is Fiction in the Space Between," rose to #8 on the Adult Contemporary chart, showing that even after several years out of the public eye, Chapman's soulful acoustic compositions were all that mattered to her fans.

The Charlatans

George Hunter, voc.; Mike Wilhelm, gtr.; Richard Olson, bass; Michael Ferguson, piano; Sam Linde, drums.

N.A.—(Linde; + Dan Hicks [b. Dec. 9, 1941, Little Rock, AR], drums) 1967—(Ferguson; + Patrick Gogerty, piano; + Terry Wilson, drums; Hicks switched to gtr.) 1968—(Hicks; - Hunter; - Gogerty; + Darrel DeVore, piano) 1969—The Charlatans (Philips).

As the original Haight-Ashbury band, the Charlatans remained true to the area's bohemian ethic. They were an amateur group, conceived by draftsman/designer George Hunter, whose main talent was a sense of rock's visual possibilities. Outfitted in Victorian and Old West costumes, they first played for three months at the Red Dog Saloon in Virginia City, Nevada, in the summer of 1965, before returning to the Haight. For this show, Ferguson designed what is generally considered to be the first rock poster ever. Soon they were sharing bills with the Jefferson Airplane and the Grateful Dead (then called the Warlocks) at the Fillmore, Avalon, and other Bay Area venues.

The Charlatans' repertoire remained essentially unchanged throughout their brief career: folk, blues, ballads, and jug-band tunes. MGM signed them, then sold the group to Kama Sutra. They recorded one unreleased album for that label (Kama Sutra did release an unsuccessful single over the group's objections). Reduced to a quartet (Hunter departed in early 1968, as did Dan Hicks to form his Hot Licks [see entry]), the Charlatans finally released their first album in 1969 before disbanding.

Bobby Charles

Born Robert Charles Guidry, Feb. 21, 1938, Abbeville, LA

1972—Bobby Charles (Bearsville) 1995—Wish You Were Here Right Now (Stony Plain) 1998—Secrets of the Heart.

Bobby Charles, discovered by Leonard Chess during a mid-'50s talent search, contributed to the creation of South Louisiana swamp-pop music, a mixture of traditional Cajun, Creole, C&W, and New Orleans R&B. He recorded several sides in New Orleans that garnered some attention when Chess released them in the late '50s; their impact with other artists was more substantial. Several of the songs (among them "See You Later Alligator," "I Don't Know Why I Love You but I Do") were covered by Bill Haley and Clarence "Frogman" Henry respectively. With Fats Domino and Dave Bartholomew, Charles wrote Domino's classic hit "Walkin' on New Orleans."

Charles toured with the Platters, Little Richard, Chuck Berry, and BB. King before retiring from personal appearances in the early '60s. Throughout the decade, though, he recorded for several labels and did promotional work for Chess Records. By the early '70s he was living in Woodstock, New York, where Albert Grossman signed him to Bearsville Records. His much-ballyhooed comeback album, Bobby Charles, included guest appearances by the Band, Dr. John, and other notables, but despite an excellent single—"Small Town Talk" (later covered by Rick Danko of the Band)—the LP failed to find a market, and Charles was soon dropped. He appeared on two Paul Butterfield albums (including Better Days from 1973) and made a rare live appearance at the Band's Last Waltz concert, Thanksgiving Day, 1976. That same year, two of his compositions were covered on Joe Cocker's Sting Ray Wish You Were Here Right Now, issued in 1995, marked Charles' first domestic album in 24 years. Secrets of the Heart, which contains a birthday salute to Fats Domino, proved that Charles' comeback was more than just a one-off affair.

Ray Charles

Born Ray Charles Robinson, Sep. 23, 1930, Albany, GA

1957—Ray Charles (Atlantic) 1958—The Great Ray Charles 1959—What'd I Say; Genius of Ray Charles 1962—Story, vol. 1; Story, vol. 2; Modern Sounds in Country and Western Music (ABC); Modern Sounds in Country and Western Music 2 1963—Story, vol. 3 (Atlantic); The Greatest Ray Charles 1964—Have a Smile With Me (HMV); Great Hits (Atlantic) 1966—Crying Time (ABC-Paramount) 1967—A Man and His Soul 1973—Ray Charles Live (Atlantic) 1977—True to Life 1983—Wish You Were Here Tonight (Columbia) 1984—Do I Ever Cross Your Mind; Friendship 1985—The Spirit of Christmas 1986—From the Pages of My Mind 1987—Ray Charles Live (1958-59); His Greatest Hits (1960-1971), vol. 1 (DCC); His Greatest Hits (1960-72), vol. 2 1988—Greatest Country & Western Hits (1962-65); Greatest Hits (1960-67), vol. 1 (Rhino); Greatest Hits (1960-72), vol. 2; Just Between Us (Columbia) 1989—Anthology (Rhino); Seven Spanish Angels and Other Hits (Columbia) 1990—Would You Believe? (Warner Bros.) 1991—Ray Charles 1954-66 (Time Life Music); The Birth of Soul—The Complete Atlantic Rhythm & Blues Recordings, 1952-59 (Atlantic) 1993—My World (Warner Bros.) 1994—Blues + Jazz (Rhino) 1996—Strong Love Affair (Qwest).

With Milt Jackson: 1958—Soul Brothers (Atlantic) 1962—Soul Meeting 1989—Soul Brothers/Soul Meeting, With Cleo Laine: 1976—Porgy and Bess (RCA).

Singer/composer/pianist Ray Charles virtually invented soul music by bringing together the fervor of gospel, the secular lyrics and narratives of blues and country, the big-band arrangements of jazz, and the rhythms and improvisational possibilities from all of them, making music that was both sophisticated and spontaneous.

He was raised in Greenville, Florida, and started playing the piano before he was five; at six he contracted glaucoma, which went untreated and eventually left him blind. He studied composition (writing music in braille) and learned to play the alto saxophone, clarinet, trumpet, and organ while attending the St. Augustine School for the Deaf and the Blind from 1937 to 1945. His father died when he was 10, his mother five years later, and he left school to work in dance bands around Florida, dropping his last name to avoid confusion with boxer Sugar Ray Robinson. In 1947, with $600 worth of savings, he moved to Seattle and worked as a Nat "King" Cole-style crooner.

Charles made his first single, "Confession Blues," in L.A. and recorded for several independent West Coast labels until he scored a Top 10 R&B hit in 1951 with "Baby Let Me Hold Your Hand" and began a national tour with blues singer Lowell Fulson. Late in 1953 he went to New Orleans and became a pianist and arranger for Guitar Slim (Eddie Jones). Guitar Slim's "The Things That I Used to Do," arranged by Charles and featuring him on piano, sold a million copies, and when Charles returned to recording—leading and arranging for his own band—the earthier style carried over to his own work. Atlantic signed him in 1954, and he made a few conventional recordings in New York; he also assembled a band for label mate Ruth Brown.

"I've Got a Woman," with a seven-piece band fronted by Charles' pounding gospel piano and a new raspy, exuberant vocal sound, became his first national hit (#2 R&B, 1955). Through the decade he appeared regularly on the charts as he synthesized more and more styles and was nicknamed the "Genius." He recorded with Milt Jackson of the Modern Jazz Quartet, sang standards with strings, and expanded his band to a full-scale revue, complete with horns and gospel-style backup singers, the Raelettes.

"What'd I Say" (#6 pop, #1 R&B, 1959), a wild blues/gospel/Latin mix, became Charles' first million-seller. In late 1959 he signed to ABC-Paramount Records and moved into the pop market with "Georgia on My Mind" (#1, 1960) and "Hit the Road, Jack" (#1, 1961). Modern Sounds in Country and Western Music (1962), which included Charles' versions of songs by Hank Williams, Floyd Tillman, and other country songwriters, sold more than a million copies, as did its single, "I Can't Stop Loving You" (#1, 1962).

In 1965 Charles was arrested for possession of heroin and revealed that he had been using it since he was 16. He cleaned up in a California sanatorium and spent a year away from performing. In 1966 he made his motion-picture debut in Ballad in Blue (also known as Blues for Lovers). In it, Charles (playing himself) befriends a blind boy in London; he also performed two of his best-known songs, "What'd I Say" and "I Got a Woman." While his singing remained influential through the '60s (especially for Steve Winwood and Joe Cocker) and he kept making hits—including Ashford and Simpson's "Let's Go Get Stoned" (#31, 1966)—his taste was moving away from rock, although he did appear on Aretha Franklin's Live at Fillmore West (1971).

His albums from the mid-'60s onward have downplayed gospel and blues in favor of jazz standards, pop songs, and show tunes, although his singing remains distinctive. Charles made custom-label deals with ABC (Tangerine Records) and later Atlantic (Crossover), for whom he recorded an album a year. In 1978 he published his autobiography (cowritten with David Ritz), Brother Ray; it became a national bestseller. The following year, his version of "Georgia on My Mind" was named the official song of the State of Georgia. It was later used as the theme song for the hit television series Designing Women. Charles also appeared in the movie The Blues Brothers (1980); he subsequently made guest appearances on the television series St. Elsewhere and Who's the Boss.

In 1982 he recorded another country album, Wish You Were Here Tonight; two years later, he released Friendship (#75, 1985), which included duets with 10 country artists, including Hank Williams Jr., the Oak Ridge Boys, Mickey Gilley, Merle Haggard, Johnny Cash, and Willie Nelson. In 1993 My World reached #145; as of this writing, that was his last album of new material to make the pop albums chart. Still, as a performer, he shows no signs of slowing down. Ironically, Charles became best known to younger listeners through a series of diet Pepsi ads ("You Got the Right One, Baby, Uh-huh!"), which began airing in 1990. He also was featured prominently on USA for Africa's 1985 hit, "We Are the World," in which his vocal interplay with Bruce Springsteen was a prime example of his trademark call-and-response style. In 1986 Charles was not only a recipient of the Kennedy Center Honors but one of the first inductees into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. As of this writing, he has collected a dozen performance Grammy Awards (he also received the 1988 Lifetime Achievement Award), most recently for 1993's "A Song for You," named by President Clinton as his favorite song. In 1993 Clinton presented Charles with a National Medal of the Arts. Charles has received similar awards from countries around the world.

Throughout his career, Charles has been active in a range of political and humanitarian causes. He provided financial support for the Reverend Martin Luther King Jr. and the civil rights movement, he is also a staunch supporter of Israel. In 1984 he performed his version of "America the Beautiful" at the Republican National Convention. Three years later, he formed the (Ray Charles) Robinson Foundation for Hearing Disorders, with a $1 million personal endowment.

Cheap Trick

Formed 1974, Rockford, IL

Robin Zander (b. Jan. 23, 1952 or 1953, Loves Park, IL), voc.; Tom Petersson (b. Tom Peterson, May 9, 1950, Rockford), bass; Rick Nielsen (b. Dec. 22, 1946, Rockford), grt.; Bun E. Carlos (b. Brad Carlson, June 12, 1951, Rockford), drums.

Robin Zander solo: 1993—Robin Zander (Interscope).

The aggressively marketed, hard-touring, self-caricaturing rock group Cheap Trick worked its way up to platinum sales with a blend of Beatles-style pop and a cartoonish stage act, which played Rick Nielsen's exaggerated mugging and guitar gymnastics against Robin Zander's teen-idol looks and rich, powerful voice.

In 1961 Nielsen, then in his teens, began playing locally in Rockford, Illinois, utilizing his ever-increasing collection of rare and valuable guitars. His band, the Phaetons, became the Boyz, then the Grm Reapers, and finally Fuse in 1967 with the addition of bassist Tom Petersson. One album for Epic in 1968 was generally ignored. Frustrated Fuse, which by then included college dropout Bun E. Carlos on drums, moved to Philadelphia in 1971. As Sick Man of Europe, they enlisted ex-Nazi vocalist Robert "Stewkey" Antoni, but the group soon disbanded. After a year in Europe, Nielsen and Petersson returned to Rockford, reunited with Carlos, and a few months later asked folkie vocalist Zander to join the group they named Cheap Trick. Midwestern booking agent Ken Adamany, who'd played in one of Steve Miller's high school bands, became their manager. Adamany encouraged them to develop their stage show, and Cheap Trick toured incessantly over the next several years, playing an average of 250 shows a year, opening for Kiss, the Kinks, Santana, Boston, and others.

Cheap Trick's early releases were only moderately successful in the U.S.: its 1977 debut sold 150,000 copies, while In Color and Heaven Tonight failed to crack the Top 40. In Japan, however, all three had gone gold, and the group's initial tour there in early 1978 met with hysteria reminiscent of Beatlemania. During that visit Cheap Trick recorded At Budokan, which went triple platinum in the States largely on the strength of their single "I Want You to Want Me" (#7, 1979), a song that had originally appeared on In Color.

By the time Dream Police (#8) was released in fall 1979, the band was headlining arenas and stadiums. All Shook Up (#24, 1980), produced by George Martin, went gold in late 1980 but was considered a disappointment, producing no Top 40 singles. The band contributed "Everything Works If You Let It" (#44, 1980) to the Roadie soundtrack that year, and Nielsen and Carlos played on John Lennon and Yoko Ono's recording sessions for Double Fantasy (They appear on The Lost Lennon Tapes and "I'm Losing You.")

As the '80s dawned, the group's activities slowed considerably. In 1981 Epic rejected an LP, and after a flurry of lawsuits and countersuits, Cheap Trick began recording One on One. Petersson departed in 1980 to form a group with his wife Dagmar, as vocalist. He recorded an LP in 1982, but Epic refused to release it. Pete Comita replaced him, but was himself replaced by Jon Brant before the recording of One on One (#39, 1982), which included two minor hits, "If You Want My Love" (#45, 1982) and "She's Tight" (#65, 1982), and eventually went gold.

Cheap Trick's fortunes began to wane with the release of Next Position Please (#61, 1983), produced by Todd Rundgren. Neither it nor the group's next two albums went gold, although 1985's Standing on the Edge (#35) contained its strongest material since Heaven Tonight. The Doctor (#115, 1986) didn't even crack the Top 100, and the quartet's future seemed in jeopardy.

Petersson rejoined in 1987, and in 1988 Lap of Luxury (#16) was a surprise hit. The hard-rock ballad "The Flame" gave the group its first #1 single, a version of "Don't Be Cruel" (#4) became the first Elvis Presley cover to hit the Top 10 since the singer's death, and "Ghost Town" reached #33. Just as inexplicably, the band's next album, Busted (#48, 1990), stiffed. "Can't Stop Fallin' Into Love" (#12) did go Top 20. Aside from a solo album from Zander, and a duet he recorded with Heart's Ann Wilson, "Surrender to Me" (#6, 1988), Cheap Trick maintained a low profile until 1994's Woke Up With a Monster (#123, 1994), its first and only album for Warner Bros. In 1996 Epic/Legacy anthologized the band's music with a four-CD box set, Sex America Cheap Trick. But Cheap Trick was not yet finished. The band enjoyed yet another triumphant return, in 1997, when it went back to the basics, releasing its 14th album of new material on the indie label Red Ant. The album received such a warm reception from the alternative-rock set that Cheap Trick applied its old creative marketing flair by staging a series of club gigs in which the band performed each of its first three albums from start to finish on three consecutive evenings. Music for Hangovers is a live album compiled from the series. By the end of the millennium Cheap Trick was still performing more than 200 shows a year. In 2000 Petersson collaborated on an album with Ken Coomer of Wilco and Robert Reynolds of the Mavericks. Swag (the band's name as well) was released in conjunction with a brief tour by Swag in 2001.

Chubby Checker

Born Ernest Evans, Oct. 3, 1941, Andrews, SC
1960—Twist With Chubby Checker (Cameo/Parkway) 1961—For Twisters Only; Let's Twist Again; Your Twist Party 1962—Teen Twisters Only; All the Hits 1982—The Change Has Come (MCA) 1994—Texas Twist (TEEC).

With the Fat Boys: 1988—Coming Back Hard Again (Tin Pan Apple).

Although Chubby Checker didn't invent the Twist, the dance craze was his ticket to stardom. Written and recorded as a B side by R&B singer Hank Ballard, Checker's version of "The Twist" went to #1 in September 1960, stayed on the chart for four months, dropped off, and returned to #1 early in 1962. It is the only rock & roll record to enjoy two stays at #1 more than a year apart.

The young Ernest Evans worked as a chicken plucker in a local poultry shop while in high school. On the job he would frequently entertain customers by singing songs and telling jokes. Evans' boss put him in touch with Philadelphia's Cameo-Parkway label, which signed him in 1959. Shortly thereafter—at the suggestion of Dick Clark's wife—he became "Chubby Checker", (in emulation of the similarly built Fats Domino). His first single, "The Class," released in the summer of 1959, featured Checker doing vocal impersonations, but it was only a minor hit, and subsequent singles were even less successful.

Then "The Twist" hit. After it, Checker promoted several less successful dance crazes: the Hucklebuck, the Fly, the Mess Around, the Pony, the Limbo—even Freddie and the Dreamers' the Freddie His Top 10 hits included "Pony Time" (#1, 1961), "Let's Twist Again" (#8, 1961), "The Fly" (#7, 1961), "Slow Twistin'" (#3, 1962), "Limbo Rock" (#2, 1962), and "Popeye the Hitchhiker" (#10, 1962). In December 1963 Checker married Dutch-born Catharina Ladders, Miss World 1962; he wrote "Loddy Lo" for her. His hits ended in 1965, and Checker became a mainstay on the nightclub circuit. He recorded for Buddah in 1969 and for Chalmac in 1971, with regular appearances as part of rock revival shows and a featured spot in the film Let the Good Times Roll. His early-'80s work for MCA moved toward disco, with some success ("Running" [#91, 1982], "Harder Than Diamond" [#104, 1982]), but in 1988 Checker hit the Top 40 for the first time in 25 years with a rap version of "The Twist," featuring the Fat Boys. The song went to #2 in the U.K. After self-releasing Texas Twist in 1994, Checker was recruited by K-tel's Bare Bones imprint, which in 1998 reissued his Halloween-themed dance single "Doin' the Zombie." Checker continues to perform frequently; having marketed a line of beef jerky and the Twist-a-Sizer weight-loss machine, he also dabbles in the food and exercise industries.

The Chemical Brothers

Formed 1992, Manchester, Eng.

Tom Rowlands (Jan. 11, 1971, Oxfordshire, Eng.), producer; Ed Simons (June 9, 1970, London, Eng.), producer.

1995—Exit Planet Dust (Astralwerks) 1996—Live at the Social, vol. 1 (Heavenly, U.K.) 1997—Dig Your Own Hole (Astralwerks) 1998—Brothers Gonna Work It Out 1999—Surrender.

Layering rock, samples, and a strong psychedelic streak on their guest-studded albums, the Chemical Brothers successfully made the transition from the DJ booth to the recording studio in the late '90s.

Two former history students at Manchester University, Tom Rowlands (who at the time was in a group called Anel) and Ed Simons started DJ'ing together in 1992. That year the duo self-released their first single, "Song to the Siren," under the name the Dust Brothers. They sent it to DJ Andrew Weatherall, who reissued it on his label, Junior Boy's Own. In 1994 the duo released another pair of EPs, 14th Century Sky and My Mercury Youth. They became in-demand DJs, holding a residency (to be immortalized later on Live at the Social) at London's popular Heavenly Social club, and accumulated remix jobs for the likes of Leftfield, Primal Scream, and the Charlatans UK. After changing their name to the Chemical Brothers (at the request of the preexisting Los Angeles-based production team the Dust Brothers, made famous for its work with Beck and the Beastie Boys), Rowlands and Simons finally released their debut album in 1995. Exit Planet Dust was a heady fusion of big beat (the bass-pumping, hook-filled dance-floor style they had pioneered along with Fatboy Slim), electro, hip-hop, and catchy pop melodies anchored by guest singers Beth Orton and the Charlatans' Tim Burgess.

After successfully touring America, the Chemical Brothers released the hit single "Setting Sun" (#80 pop, 1997; #1, U.K.), which featured vocals by Oasis' Noel Gallagher. It was followed by the album Dig Your Own Hole (#14, 1997), which went gold. Its opening track, "Block Rockin' Beats," was another U.K. chart-topper and a U.S. modern-rock hit; it also won a Grammy for Best Rock Instrumental. In addition to Gallagher, guests included the American neo-psychedelic rock band Mercury Rev. Along with Prodigy's The Fat of the Land, Dig embodied the "summer of electronica," the first time America began embracing the dance-floor sounds that had been ruling the U.K. for more than a decade. After the release of the mix CD Brothers Gonna Work It Out in 1998, Rowlands and Simons came back with Surrender (#32, 1999), which was overall more quiet and experimental than their previous efforts and featured the single "Hey Boy Hey Girl" (#3, U.K.). Once again Gallagher was on board for a guest appearance; other vocalists included Mazzy Star's Hope Sandoval, Primal Scream's Bobby Gillespie, and New Order's Bernard Sumner.

Clifton Chenier

Born June 25, 1925, Opelousas, LA; died Dec. 12, 1987, Lafayette, LA

1965—Louisiana Blues & Zydeco (Arhoolie) 1966—Bon Ton Roulet 1967—Black Snake Blues 1970—King of the Bayous 1971—Bayou Blues (Specialty) 1972—Live (Arhoolie) 1974—Out West 1976—Bogalusa Boogie 1978—And His Red Hot Louisiana Band; Cajun Swamp Music Live (Tomato) 1980—Classic Clifton (Arhoolie) 1983—I'm Here! (Alligator) 1993—Zydeco Dynamite: The Clifton Chenier Anthology (Rhino).

Clifton Chenier was the undisputed king of zydeco music, the rousing black Creole party music that, influenced by Cajun music, mixes blues, French folk tunes, country, New Orleans R&B, and rock & roll. Wearing a jeweled crown and flashing his gold tooth onstage, Chenier pumped his chrome-studded accordion and sang in Creole French and English; he also played the harmonica, piano, and organ.

He grew up as a sugar cane cutter and weekend musician in such places as New Iberia, Louisiana, where he met his wife, Margaret, in 1945. In 1946 he followed his brother Cleveland to Lake Charles, Louisiana, for a job at an oil refinery, where he worked until 1954. The brothers began playing at parties as a duet, with Clifton on accordion and Cleveland on "rub board," a piece of corrugated steel played with beer-can openers like a washboard. In 1954 Chenier made his first recordings at radio station KAOK in Lake Charles for Elko Records, and a year later recorded his more R&B-style material at Specialty, including the R&B hit "Ay 'Tit Fille (Hey Little Girl)" (originally "Ay Tete Fee") and "Boppin' the Rock."

Chenier became a full-time musician, performed on both coasts, and in 1958 moved to Houston. In 1964 he began to record for the folk-oriented Arhoolie label and had a number of regional Gulf Coast hits, including "Louisiana Blues" and "Black Gal." He appeared in 1966 at the Berkeley Blues Festival and continued to appear regularly on the West Coast and more infrequently in the East. He earned a Grammy Award for I'm Here in 1984.

He was featured in the 1974 documentary Hot Pepper by Les Blank, and inspired a generation of zydeco accordionists, including Rockin' Dopsie, Rockin' Sidney, Queen Ida, Buckwheat Zydeco, and his son, C.J. Chenier. Chenier had suffered from diabetes since 1979, one reason his recorded output slowed during his last decade. Upon his death, C.J., who had come into his own as a zydeco singer and musician, took over the Red Hot Louisiana Band.

Cher

Born Cherilyn Sarkasian LaPier, May 20, 1946, El Centro, CA 1965—All I Really Want to Do (Imperial) 1966—Cher 1967—With Love, Cher 1968—Backstage 1969—3614 Jackson Highway (Atco) 1971—Cher (Kapp) 1972—Foxy Lady 1973—Half-Breed (MCA) 1974—Dark Lady 1975—Stars (Warner Bros.) 1976—I'd Rather Believe in You 1977—Allman and Woman: Two the Hard Way (with Gregg Allman) 1979—Take Me Home (Casablanca) 1980—Black Rose 1982—I Paralyze (Columbia) 1987—Cher 1989—Heart of Stone 1991—Love Hurts 1996—It's a Man's World (Reprise) 1998—Believe (Warner Bros.) 1999—If I Could Turn Back Time: Cher's Greatest Hits (Geffen).

In a long career that's well into its fourth decade, Cher has reinvented herself a number of times: as a hippie rock singer, a wisecracking TV comedienne, as a forthright film star, a middle-aged sex symbol, a fitness guru, and most recently a dance-club diva.

Cher dropped out of school and left home at 16, moving to Hollywood to be an actress. In 1963 she sang in sessions for producer Phil Spector and met Sonny Bono. Her musical and romantic partnership with Bono lasted until 1975 [see Sonny and Cher entry]. After their bitter split, Cher hosted her own TV variety show, which lasted one year. She had been having an affair with record producer David Geffen but married guitarist Gregg Allman five days after her divorce from Bono. That 1975 marriage produced a son, Elijah Blue, and an album, the critically reviled Allman and Woman: Two the Hard Way. The couple divorced in 1979. Cher became famous for her relationships with younger rockers, including a late-'70s romance with Kiss' Gene Simmons and an early-'90s relationship with Bon Jovi guitarist Richie Sambora.

In 1979 Cher had her first hit since her breakup with Bono with the disco hit Take Me Home (#25, 1979) and its title track (#8, 1979). In 1980 she formed the hard-rock band Black Rose with her boyfriend Les Dudek (who had previously played with Steve Miller and Boz Scaggs), but critics buned them. Cher returned to playing Las Vegas and Atlantic City, where she has always been popular; her casino stunts also led her to the infamous Sun City resort in South Africa.

Cher made her Broadway debut in Robert Altman's Come Back to the 5 and Dime, Jimmy Dean, Jimmy Dean in 1982. She starred in the movie of the play also, a role that finally broke down the Hollywood doors she had been knocking on for years. (In 1969 she had starred in the ill-fated film entitled Chastity.) In the next decade she landed featured roles in Silkwood, Mask, The Witches of Eastwick, Suspect, Moonstruck, and Mermaids; she won an Oscar for best actress for her performance in Moonstruck.

In 1987 Cher returned to recording and had a gold record with Cher (#32, 1987), which featured the singles "I Found Someone" (#10, 1987) and "We All Sleep Alone" (#14, 1988). Sonny and Cher last performed together singing an impromptu version of "I Got You Babe" on Late Night With David Letterman in February 1988. In 1989 her duet with Peter Cetera from the Chances Are soundtrack, "After All" (#6, 1989), became a hit. Heart of Stone (#10, 1989) went double platinum with the singles "If I Could Turn Back Time" (#3, 1989), "Just Like Jesse James" (#8, 1989), and "Heart of Stone" (#20, 1989). Cher's cover of Betty Everett's "The Shoop Shoop Song (It's in His Kiss)" (#33, 1990) was featured in Mermaids. In 1993 Cher recorded "I Got You Babe," her 1965 hit with Sonny, backed by MTV cartoon characters Beavis and Butt-head for The Beavis and Butt-head Experience album.

Always obsessed with her appearance, Cher has released exercise videos, a diet guide, perfume, and a line of skin-care products. (She has denied reports that she has had numerous cosmetic surgical procedures.) Since playing the mother of a physically deformed child in Mask, Cher has been active in a charity benefiting children with craniofacial problems.

In 1996 Cher released It's a Man's World (#64), her first studio album in five years. The single "One by One" (#5, 1996) became a big club hit; one of the song's remixes featured rapper Melle Mel, formerly of the groundbreaking hip-hop crew Grandmaster Flash and the Furious Five. It's a Man's World employed a half-dozen producers and included songs written by James Brown, Don Henley, the Walker Brothers, Paul Brady, and Trevor Horn, among others.

On January 8, 1998, Cher's former husband and singing partner, Sonny Bono, then a Republican congressman from California, died in a skiing accident at Lake Tahoe. Cher delivered a tearful eulogy at Bono's funeral. Her autobiography, The First Time (with Jeff Coplon), got surprisingly little attention. Cher's subsequent album, Believe (#7, 1998), went platinum. The record's electronically enhanced title track (#1, 1998) was an international dance smash, her biggest hit ever. In 1999 Cher acted alongside Dame Maggie Smith, Dame Judi Dench, and Lady Joan Plowright in Tea With Mussolini, a film directed by Franco Zeffirelli.

Neneh Cherry

Born Neneh Mariann Karlsson, Mar. 10, 1964,
Stockholm, Swe.

1989—Raw Like Sushi (Virgin) 1992—Homebrew 1996—Man (Hut, U.K.).

Throwing punches like a tomboy homegirl, dropping beats and wisdom like a cosmo boho, or prancing like an African queen, Neneh Cherry plays an intelligently crafted version of post-rap dance pop. The daughter of artist Moki Cherry and West African percussionist Ahmadu Jah, Cherry was raised by her mother and stepfather Don Cherry, a pioneering jazz trumpeter, and grew up shuttling between Stockholm and New York.

Cherry dropped out of school at 14. The following year she went to Africa with her biological father. In 1980 she joined the Cherries in London, where she found through the burgeoning punk scene a new, tough identity. She sang backup for the ska band the Nails and briefly performed with the seminal all-girl group the Slits. After being raped on a street late one night, Cherry moved back to New York. But friends convinced her to return to London to sing and play percussion with Rip Rig + Panic, a group whose mixture of punk, funk, jazz, and soul coincided with her own musical interests.

Cherry recorded three albums with Rip Rig + Panic (God, 1981, I Am Cold, 1982, Attitude, 1983). At 18 she married drummer Bruce Smith and had her first child. The couple split within three years, and Cherry began singing with RR+P spinoff Float Up C.P. She also started rapping at a London club, where she was spotted by a talent scout. Her first single, "Stop the War," was about the Falkland Islands.

Cherry began dating and working with a composer and musician named Cameron McVey, who cowrote Raw Like Sushi (#40, 1989) and, under the name Booga Bear, coproduced several songs. The album received critical accolades for its pop melodies, positive messages, and fusion of hip-hop with jazz and rock stylings; in retrospect, Raw was probably the first "alternative rap" album. The hit "Buffalo Stance" (#3, 1989) introduced Cherry's tough street smarts, followed by "Kisses on the Wind" (#8, 1989). The birth of Cherry's second baby shortly before the album's release added to her image as a strong, mature sex symbol, she memorably appeared shimmying and fully pregnant on the British TV show Top of the Pops.

A few months after the album's release, Cherry collapsed backstage at the MTV Music Awards, possibly with Lyme disease. For the next few years, her only artistic foray was recording "I've Got You Under My Skin" for the Red Hot + Blue AIDS benefit album. She and McVey married and moved to the converted schoolhouse in Sweden in which Cherry had grown up. There they began writing and recording Homebrew. The album was more thoughtful, less in-your-face than Cherry's debut, although the opening track, "Sassy" (featuring Gang Starr rapper Guru), showed the singer's braggadocio was intact. Homebrew prospered mostly on alternative and college radio, where the Michael Stipe duet "Trout" was popular, and the "Buddy X" video became a staple on MTV.

In 1994 Cherry recorded a duet with Youssou N'Dour. "7 Seconds." The single was a hit in Europe, and it later appeared, along with a version of Marvin Gaye's "Trouble Man," on Cherry's 1996 album, Man. Coproduced by Cherry and McVey, with help from Geoff Barrow (half of the trip-hop duo Portishead), the record has yet to be released in the States. Cherry has also appeared on Tricky's Nearly God (1996). Her half brother, Eagle-Eye Cherry, released his debut album, Desireless, in 1998.

Vic Chesnut

Born Nov. 12, 1964, Jacksonville, FL
 1990—Little (Texas Hotel) 1992—West of Rome 1994—Drunk 1995—Is the Actor Happy? 1996—About to Choke (Capitol) 1998—The Salesman and Bernadette (Capricorn).
 brute: 1995—Nine High a Pallet (Capricorn).
 Vic Chesnut and Mr. and Mrs. Keneipp: 2000—Merriment (Backburner).

Vic Chesnut began his career as a protégé of R.E.M.'s Michael Stipe, only to emerge as one of the most incisive and revered singer/songwriters of his generation. Chesnut, who has been wheelchair-bound since a near-fatal auto accident in 1983, met Stipe when the R.E.M. lead singer came to hear him play at a club in Athens, Georgia. Stipe proceeded to help Chesnut land a record deal and to produce his first two albums.

Little (1990) was basically a solo acoustic affair spotlighting Chesnut's creaky tenor, wry phrasing, and sense of humor. It also established him as a gifted, if often dour, minimalist and garnered him a spot on a nationwide tour opening for Bob Mould, late of Hüsker Dü. Chesnut's second album, West of Rome (1992), was sonically more ambitious, fleshing out his acerbic, rock- and soul-inflected originals with piano, cello, drums, and his wife Tina's bass. The sessions were captured on film in Speed Racer: Welcome to the World of Vic Chesnut, a documentary by New York filmmaker Peter Sillen. Eventually airing on PBS, Speed Racer premiered at the 1994 Sundance Film Festival. Drunk, a predictably loose album that Chesnut made with some friends while on a bender, also came out that year.

In 1995 Chesnut recorded Nine High a Pallet with members of the Athens jam band Widespread Panic. Released under the group name brute, the record leaned toward generic country rock, but its crunchier, Neil Young-inspired numbers anticipated Chesnut's next solo album, Is the Actor Happy? His most streamlined, and fully realized, record to date, Is the Actor Happy? also featured a duet with Stipe. Meanwhile, Chesnut's reputation as a songwriter had grown beyond that of a cult hero. In 1996 a circle of his admirers, including Madonna, Garbage, and Live, paid tribute to him by recording Sweet Relief II: Gravity of the Situation, an album consisting entirely of covers of Chesnut originals. Proceeds from the record went to a fund that helps musicians who are experiencing medical and financial hardships. Chesnut subsequently toured as an opening act for Live and made his big-screen debut in the critically acclaimed feature film Sling Blade.

In 1996 Capitol released Chesnut's long-awaited major-label debut, About to Choke. But the album fared better with critics than at the cash register, prompting Chesnut and Capitol to dissolve their partnership after the singer embarked on extensive U.S. and European tours. Chesnut then teamed with Nashville's mood-twang ensemble Lambchop for The Salesman and Bernadette, a whimsical, groove-rich album that sounds like it could have been made at Muscle Shoals during the late '60s.

Chic/Nile Rodgers/Bernard Edwards

Formed 1976, Bronx, NY
 Bernard Edwards (b. Oct. 31, 1952, Greenville, NC; d. Apr. 18, 1996, Tokyo, Jap.), bass; Nile Rodgers (b. Sep. 19, 1952), gtr.; Norma Jean Wright, voc.; Tony Thompson, drums; Alfa Anderson (b. Sep. 7, 1946), voc.

 Bernard Edwards solo: 1983—Glad to Be Here (Warner Bros.).
 Nile Rodgers solo: 1983—Adventures in the Land of the Good Groove (Warner Bros.) 1985—B-Movie Matinee 1986—(as Outloud) Out Loud.

Boasting a series of gold and platinum hit singles that began with 1977's #1 "Dance, Dance, Dance (Yowsah, Yowsah, Yowsah)." Chic's stripped-down, not-quite-mechanical groove made them the premier black disco group of the late '70s and early '80s. In addition, cofounders Nile Rodgers and Bernard Edwards produced, wrote, or played on records by many other performers and became two of the most influential contemporary black writers and producers.

Edwards and Rodgers met in the Bronx while working at various gigs around New York in 1970. Over the next six years, they worked in soul and R&B groups; former Black Panther Rodgers played for the Apollo Theatre's house band. Soon after meeting former Patti LaBelle drummer Tony Thompson, they formed a rock-fusion power trio called Big Apple Band, aiming to become the black version of Kiss. They changed their name to Chic in the wake of Walter Murphy and the Big Apple Band's disco hit "A Fifth of Beethoven."

Frustrated by its inability to land a record deal, the band teamed with vocalists Alfa Anderson (who had sung on The Wiz soundtrack) and Norma Jean Wright to make disco records. Several record companies rejected the original demo tape of "Dance, Dance, Dance" before Atlantic took it in late 1977. In less than a month, the single, powered by Rodgers' distinctive rhythm guitar, sold a million copies and reached #6. Their second album, C'est Chic (with the 6-million-selling #1 song "Le Freak," the all-time top-selling single for Atlantic Records), and its followup, Risque, were both certified platinum. "Dance, Dance, Dance" (#1, 1977), "I Want Your Love" (#7, 1979), and "Good Times" (#1, 1979) were gold singles. "Good Times" (specifically its ominous yet playful bass line) inspired two hits: the Sugar Hill Gang's "Rapper's Delight," based on the instrumental track, and Queen's "Another One Bites the Dust."

In 1983, after releasing Believer, Chic disbanded, only to reassemble nearly a decade later. In 1992, with Rodgers and Edwards at their core but with a new drummer and new singers, Chic re-formed and signed with Warner Bros. In a version that included Steve Winwood, Sister Sledge, and Sliash of Guns n' Roses, they toured Japan in 1996 and 1997 with great success. It was on the 1996 tour that Bernard Edwards died suddenly of pneumonia.

Rodgers has released two solo albums; Edwards, one (none was a hit). In 1989, with Tony Thompson, Edwards formed the band The Distance and recorded their album. But it was as producers, both as a team and individually, that Rodgers and Edwards made the greatest impact. Sister Sledge's We Are Family (1979) established them as studio purveyors of a streamlined sound (the title song earned Rodgers his first Grammy nomination for best songwriter); they went on to collaborate on albums, including Diana Ross' highly successful Diana, Debbie Harry's KooKoo, Sheila and B Devotion's self-titled LP, and a soundtrack, Soup for One.

On his own, Edwards produced such artists as Power Station (with Robert Palmer and Tony Thompson), ABC, Jody Watley, Rod Stewart, Gladys Knight, and Kenny Loggins, his most noteworthy effort being Robert Palmer's Riptide and its 1986 #1 single "Addicted to Love." Rodgers has been even more prolific, producing more than 50 records between 1981 and 1993. He, too, has worked with a tremendous variety of musicians, among them Peter Gabriel, Eric Clapton, the Stray Cats, Ric Ocasek, Duran Duran, and David Lee Roth. Especially with his more notable productions—David Bowie's Let's Dance (Bowie's best-selling album), Madonna's Like a Virgin, Mick Jagger's She's the Boss, and the B-52's' Cosmic Thing—he lent a new sonic clarity to contemporary music without sacrificing any of its power. In the late '90s, Rodgers founded his own record label, Sumthing Else Music Works. In 1992 he received a Lifetime Achievement Award Grammy.

The Chic sound reemerged at the turn of the century, with their songs sampled by artists ranging from Will Smith to Sean Combs to Notorious B.I.G.

Chicago/Peter Cetera

Chicago followed the lead of Blood, Sweat and Tears and the Electric Flag by grafting a horn section onto a rock band. For over a quarter of a century, Chicago has produced 20 Top 10 hits and 15 platinum or multiplatinum albums and sold more than 100 million records.

School friends Terry Kath and Walter Parazaid formed the band in 1967 and named it the Big Thing After they were joined by James William Guercio, who had worked with the Buckingham and Blood, Sweat and Tears as a Columbia staff producer, they changed their name to the Chicago Transit Authority. The band's 1969 debut, Chicago Transit Authority, like BS&T's, was an ambitious jumble of jazz and rock, including protesters' chants from the 1968 Chicago Democratic convention.

Under Guercio's guidance and pressure from the city of Chicago, Chicago shortened its name and moved toward MOR pop with a string of hits ("Does Anybody Really Know What Time It Is?" #7, 1970; "Colour My World," #75, 1971; "Saturday in the Park," #3, 1972; "Feeling Stronger Every Day," #10, 1973; "Wishing You Were Here," #11, 1974, and many others) that made the group a constant presence on AM radio and kept its albums in the gold and platinum range. Several band members made cameo appearances in the Guercio-produced and -directed 1973 film Electra Glide in Blue.

In 1974 the group's unofficial leader, keyboardist Robert Lamm, made a solo album, Skanny Boy. Despite its moniker, Chicago worked out of L.A. (Guercio's base) from the late '60s on. In the later '70s the group's appeal began to flag. In 1977 they left Guercio, who had founded his own Caribou studio. Kath died of an accidental self-inflicted gunshot wound (some sources claim he was playing Russian roulette) in 1978; he was replaced by Donnie Dacus, formerly with Stephen Stills and Boz Scaggs. In 1979 Chicago played several benefits for presidential candidate Jerry Brown. Columbia, which had sold millions of Chicago records, dropped the group from its roster in 1981, ironically, with Warners, the group started a second-phase streak of hits: "Hard to Say I'm Sorry" (#1, 1982), "Hard Habit to Break" (#3, 1984), "You're the Inspiration" (#3, 1984), "Will You Still Love Me?" (#3, 1986), "I Don't Wanna Live Without Your Love" (#3, 1988), "Look Away" (#1, 1988), "You're Not Alone" (#10, 1989), and "What Kind of Man Would I Be?" (#5, 1989).

The Stone of Sisyphus, the group's less ballad-oriented 1993 album, remains unreleased in the U.S.; it marked the end of Chicago's contract with Warner Bros. Night & Day (#90, 1995) was an experiment in updated big-band stylings. In 1996 Chicago secured the rights to its Columbia catalogue, which it has since reissued on its own label. The Heart of Chicago, a career-spanning 1997 compilation of hits, peaked at #55; its 1998 sequel hit #154. The band's seasonal, self-released Chicago 25 reached #47 in 1998.

Cetera released a self-titled solo album in 1981. He left the group in 1985 (and was replaced by Jason Scheff, son of longtime Elvis Presley bassist Jerry Scheff) for what began as a promising solo career with "Glory of Love" (#1, 1986), "The Next Time I Fall" (a duet with Amy Grant, #1, 1986), "One Good Woman" (#4, 1988), and "After All" (a duet with Cher, #6, 1989). Nonetheless, none of his albums went Top 20; only one, Solitude/Solitaire, was certified gold, and World Falling Down peaked at #163. One Clear Voice contains "(I Wanna Take) Forever Tonight" (#86, 1995), a duet with television star

Crystal Bernard (Wings). In 1997 Cetera and the R&B vocal group Az Yet charted with revisions of "Hard to Say I'm Sorry" (#8 pop, #20 R&B) and "You're the Inspiration" (#77 pop). You're the Inspiration (#134, 1997) contains hits alongside rerecordings of Chicago-era material. In 1987 Cetera produced ex-Abba vocalist Agnetha Faltskog's solo album, I Stand Alone, and sang a duet with her on "I Wasn't the One (Who Said Goodbye)."

Chicken Shack

Formed 1967, London, Eng.

Stan Webb, gtr., voc.; Andy Sylvester, bass; Christine Perfect (b. July 12, 1943, Birmingham, Eng.), piano, voc.; Dave Bidwell, drums.

1968—Forty Blue Fingers, Freshly Packed and Ready to Serve (Blue Horizon); OK, Ken? 1969—(— Perfect; + Paul Raymond, kybds.) Hundred Ton Chicken; Accept 1970—(— Sylvester; — Bidwell; — Raymond; + Hughie Flint, drums; + John Glascock, bass) 1971—(— Flint; + Paul Hancox, drums) 1972—Imagination Lady (London) (— Glascock; + Bob Daisley, bass; + Chris Mercer, reeds; + Tony Ashton, piano) 1973—Unlucky Boy (group disbanded) 1974—Goodbye (Nova) 1978—(— Webb; + Robbie Blunt, gtr.; + Ed Spevock, drums; + Dave Winthrop, sax; + Paul Martinez, bass) The Creeper (Ariola).

Chicken Shack was a leading band of the late-'60s British blues revival, but it is best remembered for pianist/singer Christine Perfect, who later became better known as Christine McVie of Fleetwood Mac. Stan Webb, Andy Sylvester, and Perfect played together in a Birmingham band the Shades of Blue, in 1965. That band broke up when Perfect completed art college and moved to London. She later met up with Webb and Sylvester, and they regrouped as Chicken Shack, adding Bidwell. They made their UK debut at the Windsor Blues Festival in August 1967. There Perfect met her future husband, John McVie of Fleetwood Mac.

Chicken Shack's rendition of the Etta James blues "I'd Rather Go Blind" reached the U.K. Top 20 in May 1969, but in August Perfect left the group. A year later, after recording a solo album, she joined Fleetwood Mac [see entry]. Chicken Shack had a U.K. Top 30 hit with "Tears in the Wind" before Sylvester, Dave Bidwell, and Paul Raymond dropped out, later to join Savoy Brown.

Subsequent personnel under Webb's leadership included Hughie Flint (cofounder of McGuinness Flint), Paul Hancox (formerly of Wayne Fontana and the Mindbenders), Chris Mercer (veteran of numerous British blues sessions), Tony Ashton (of Family and Paice, Ashton and Lord), and Bob Daisley (who later joined Ritchie Blackmore's Rainbow and Ozzy Osbourne). Webb disbanded Chicken Shack in 1973. After brief stints with Savoy Brown and his own Broken Glass (which cut one album for Capitol in 1975), he revived Chicken Shack with Robbie Blunt and Paul Martinez, who went on to play with Robert Plant after the demise of Led Zeppelin.

The Chieftains

Formed 1963, Dublin, Ire.

Paddy Moloney (b. 1938, Dublin), uilleann pipes, tin whistle; Sean Potts (b. 1930), tin whistle, bodhran; Michael Tubridy (b. 1935), flute, concertina, whistle; Martin Fay (b. 1936, Dublin), fiddle; David Fallon, bodhran.

With James Galway: 1987—In Ireland (BMG Classics/RCA)

1991—Over the Sea to Skye (RCA Victor).

With Van Morrison: 1988—Irish Heartbeat (Mercury).

The Chieftains are indisputably the world's leading proponents of traditional Irish music. As such, their appeal has extended well beyond Ireland's folk community, engendering international praise and collaborations with a wide range of musicians, from leading symphony orchestras to major rock artists. The five original Chieftains—including current members Paddy Moloney, initially the group's sole producer/arranger and still its leader, and fiddler Martin Fay—met in the late '50s while playing in Ceoltoin Caulann, a folk ensemble. As the Chieftains, they aimed to lend their classical training to skilled interpretations of Celtic music, using traditional instruments like the tin whistle, uilleann pipes, and bodhran drum. In the decade following the group's 1964 debut, it put out albums sporadically—Chieftains 2 didn't materialize until 1969—and made some personnel changes as its members tried to maintain their day jobs.

The Chieftains finally became a full-time act in 1975 and commemorated it by selling out London's Royal Albert Hall and providing the Oscar-winning soundtrack for Stanley Kubrick's film Barry Lyndon. In 1979 they played before 1.3 million people at an outdoor Mass in Dublin, as the supporting act for Pope John Paul II. The following year they released their ninth studio album, 9 Boil the Breakfast Early, which introduced vocals to their music, courtesy of bodhran player Kevin Conniff. 10 Cotton Eyed Joe found the Chieftains diversifying further, experimenting with American country textures. In 1983 they were among the first Western acts to play China, performing with a Chinese folk orchestra. Appearances with prominent North American symphonies, including the Boston Pops, followed

In 1987 the group recorded the first of two traditional albums with Irish classical flutist James Galway. The following year saw a similar collaboration with Van Morrison [see entry]. Morrison also appeared, alongside singer/songwriter Nanci Griffith [see entry] and others, on A Chieftains Celebration. That year the Irish government made the Chieftains national musical ambassadors. The group's '90s accomplishments include The Bells of Dublin (1991), featuring such folk and rock luminaries as Griffith, Elvis Costello, Jackson Browne, and Rickie Lee Jones; An Irish Evening (1992), recorded live at Belfast's Grand Opera House with Griffith and Roger Daltrey; and Another Country (1992), a collaboration with C&W stars including Willie Nelson and Emmylou Harris. The latter recordings won Grammys for Best Contemporary Folk Album and Best Traditional Folk Album, respectively.

The Long Black Veil (#22, 1995) includes contributions from Sinéad O'Connor, Marianne Faithfull, Ry Cooder, Mark Knopfler, Sting, and the Rolling Stones. The record went gold, and its version of Van Morrison's "Have I Told You Lately That I Love You" beat out Mariah Carey and Michael Jackson to win a 1995 Grammy for Best Pop Vocal Collaboration. Santiago, released in 1996, won a Grammy for Best World Music Album. Tears of Stone (1999), a concept album about women and love, features guest performances from Bonnie Raitt, Joni Mitchell, Joan Osborne, and others. Recorded live and in the studio at locations throughout Ireland, Water From the Well consists entirely of traditional Celtic music.

The Chiffons

Formed 1960, Bronx, NY

Barbara Lee (b. May 16, 1947, Bronx; d. May 15, 1992), voc.;

Patricia Bennett (b. Apr. 7, 1947, Bronx), voc.; Judy

Craig (b. 1946, Bronx), lead voc.

1962—(+ Sylvia Peterson [b. Sep. 30, 1946, Bronx], voc.)

1963—He's So Fine (Laurie) 1966—Sweet Talkin' Guy

1992—(– Lee) 1994—(+ Connie Haynes).

A black female vocal group, the Chiffons had several international hits in the early '60s. Barbara Lee, Patricia Bennett, and Judy Craig met and began singing together in high school. In 1960 manager/songwriter Ronald Mack got them a contract with Big Deal Records. After one small hit that year, a cover of the Shirelles' "Tonight's the Night," they were not heard from again until 1962, when fourth member Sylvia Peterson joined. Their three-year string of hits included the Mack-penned "He's So Fine" (#1, 1963), which George Harrison was convicted of having unintentionally plagiarized in 1976 with his 1970 hit "My Sweet Lord" (In 1975 the Chiffons recorded their version of "My Sweet Lord.")

Other hits for the Chiffons included "One Fine Day" (#5, 1963), "Nobody Knows What's Going On" (#49, 1965), and "Sweet Talkin' Guy" (#10, 1966). In 1963 the group also recorded two songs as the Four Pennies ("My Block" and "When the Boy's Happy"). After 1966 the group ceased to appear on the charts in the U.S., but a 1972 rerelease of "Sweet Talkin' Guy" went to #4 in the U.K. Lee died of a heart attack in 1992. The soundtrack to the 1997 film One Fine Day contained the Chiffons' track of the same name. The group continues to perform both with and without Craig, who first left the group in the '70s.

The Chi-Lites

Formed 1960, Chicago, IL

Marshall Thompson (b. Apr. 1941, Chicago), voc.; Creadel Jones (b. 1939, St. Louis, MO), voc.; Robert Lester (b. 1942, McComb, MS), voc.; Eugene Record (b. Dec. 23, 1940, Chicago), voc.; Clarence Johnson, voc.
 1964—(– Johnson) 1968—Give It Away (Brunswick)
 1971—Give More Power to the People 1972—A Lonely Man
 1973—A Letter to Myself; The Chi-Lites (– Jones; + Stan Anderson, voc.) 1974—Toby 1975—Half a Love; Chi-Lites Greatest Hits, vol. 2 (– Record; + David Scott, voc.; + Danny Johnson, voc.) 1976—Happy Being Lonely 1977—The Fantastic Chi-Lites (Mercury) (– Johnson; + Vandy Hampton, voc.) 1980—(original lineup re-forms: Thompson; Lester; Jones; Record) Heavenly Body (Chi-Sound) 1981—Me and You 1983—Bottom's Up (Larc) (– Jones) 1990—Just Say You Love Me (Ichiban) 1992—The Chi-Lites Greatest Hits (Rhino) 1998—Help Wanted (Copper Sun).

The Chi-Lites' yearning ballads, featuring falsetto vocals and close harmonies, made them a leading soul vocal group of the early '70s. Originally known as Marshall and the Hi-Lites (later Chi-Lites), the quintet performed around Chicago and recorded for local labels. Former cabdriver Eugene Record became lead singer and eventually their songwriter and producer as well. The Chi-Lites signed with Chicago-based, nationally distributed Brunswick in 1968 and had a few soul hits before Record's "Have You Seen Her" (#3, 1971), cowritten with Barbara Acklin, became a pop hit. "Oh Girl" (#1, 1972) also sold in the millions and was later covered by Paul Young. The Chi-Lites had 11 Top 20 R&B hits between 1969 and 1974. In 1976 they were embroiled in the Brunswick label's tax evasion problems. Record went solo, recording for Warner Bros., while the Chi-Lites switched to Mercury, with meager results. Record returned in 1980, and with the group recording on his own Chi-Sound label, the Chi-Lites hit the R&B Top 20 with "Hot on a Thing" in 1982 and "Bottom's Up" in 1983. Creadel Jones retired not permanently, however, in 1983. Record has been in and out of the group several times, and there have been several personnel changes that are not included in the chronology above. A core of Lester and Thompson were still performing as of the late '90s.

Antipodean isolation bred a unique musical scene in New Zealand in the '80s, when bands like the Clean, Tall Dwarfs, the Bats, Straitjacket Fits, the Verlaines, and the Jean Paul Sartre Experience created postpunk singer/songwriter music. The Chills were the first of several Kiwi bands to be signed by American labels; in 1992 the band, always a volatile unit, exploded under the pressure of being an international act.

Martin Phillipps began playing music at 15 when he joined the Same, one of Dunedin's first punk bands. He started the Chills in 1980 with ex-Clean guitarist Peter Gutteridge (later of Snapper). Gutteridge soon left the group, thus starting the endless cycle of personnel changes that saw 14 Chills lineups in 12 years. In March 1982 the band recorded three songs for the Dunedin Double EP, the debut compilation from Flying Nun, the record company that soon became synonymous with the sound of the South Island.

In May '82 the Chills recorded their first single, "Rolling Moon," and the following month drummer Martyn Bull was diagnosed with leukemia. The band took a brief hiatus, then resumed under the moniker Time Flies, with the Clean's David Kilgour. That lineup lasted only a few months. In July 1983 Bull died, a traumatic event in Phillipps' life, which he later commemorated on the single "I Love My Leather Jacket."

Later in 1983 Phillipps re-formed the band with an eighth lineup and the name a Winkle in Time, but soon reverted to the Chills. In 1984 the band released its second and third singles, "Pink Frost" and "Doledrums," and recorded The Lost EP. The next year the Chills' ninth lineup made its first overseas trip to England. They were well received by the press there and promoted by influential disc jockey John Peel. On returning to New Zealand, however, the band broke up again.

In 1986 the British label Creation issued Kaleidoscope World, a collection of singles. The Chills finally released their first album, Brave Words, the following year. They played the New Music Seminar in New York that summer and spent the fall in Europe negotiating a record deal and touring. In 1988 the eleventh version of the Chills toured the U.S., then relocated to Europe.

The Chills signed to Slash and recorded Submanne Bells in 1989. The album was released in 1990 to critical acclaim, but the single "Heavenly Pop Hit" failed to live up to its title. The band collapsed again that summer, and after going through several more lineups, Philipps recorded Soft Bomb basically as a solo effort, accompanied by longtime Chill Terry Moore. The album was wanly received, and at the end of a bitter U.S. tour, Philipps announced the Chills' demise at a New York show.

But, in keeping with the band's on-again, off-again past, things weren't over yet. Instead of launching his solo career outright, Philipps opted for a compromise. The next album, 1996's Sunburnt, was credited to Martin Philipps and the Chills and included XTC members as guests. In addition to the name change, the sound was a bit more spare than lush older tunes like "Heavenly Pop Hit."

While the fate of the Chills as a proper group was continually debated as the band marked its 20th anniversary in 2000, Philipps worked with members of the Clean in the New Zealand supergroup the Pop Art Toasters. He toured alone in 1999 to promote his solo album, Sketchbook, a compilation of home recordings and unreleased material written from 1988 to 1995.

Charlie Christian

Born 1919, Dallas, TX; died Mar. 2, 1942, New York, NY
1972—Solo Flight—The Genius of Charlie Christian (Columbia)
1987—The Genius of the Electric Guitar.

As the musician who took the guitar out of the rhythm section and made it a lead instrument, Charlie Christian had a profound influence on both jazz and rock & roll.

Christian's recording career spanned only three years. He was discovered playing in a jazz band in Oklahoma City by John Hammond in 1939. Benny Goodman brought him to New York to play with his sextet and his orchestra, and it was with Goodman that Christian revolutionized jazz guitar. The newly introduced electrified guitar gave the instrument an authoritative volume and tonal range it had never had before, and Christian's innovative single-string picking technique made the guitar a solo voice equal to the trumpet and the saxophone. Additionally, as one of the participants in after-hours jam sessions with Thelonious Monk, Dizzy Gillespie, and Kenny Clarke, Christian was one of the originators of bebop, which became the dominant force in jazz after his death. He developed tuberculosis in 1940 and was hospitalized in the summer of 1941. He spent the last six months of his life in the hospital.

Lou Christie

Born Lugee Alfredo Giovanni Sacco, Feb. 19, 1943, Glen Willard, PA

1963—Lou Christie (Roulette) 1966—Lightnin' Strikes (MGM); Lou Christie Painter of Hits; Lou Christie Strikes Again 1969—I'm Gonna Make You Mine (Buddah); This Is Lou Christie (Marble Arch) 1971—Paint America Love (Buddah) 1974—Lou Christie (Three Brothers) 1988—EnLightnment Strikes: The Best of Lou Christie (Rhino) 1989—Rhapsody in the Rain (PolyGram) 1997—Pledging My Love (Varese Sarabande).

Singer Lou Christie had two big hits in 1963—"The Gypsy Cried" (#24) and "Two Faces Have I" (#6)—in the quavery falsetto style popularized by Del Shannon and Frankie Valli. Three years later he returned to the charts with "Lightnin' Strikes" (#1, 1966).

In Pennsylvania the young singer won a scholarship to Moon Township High School, where he studied classical music and vocal technique and also sang with a group called the Classics. From 1959 to 1962 he recorded with various local acts for several small Pittsburgh labels, adopted the stage name of Lou Christie, and in October 1962 recorded "The Gypsy Cried." The first of several songs cowritten with Twyla Herbert (a mystic 20 years Christie's senior who claimed she could foresee his future and predict his hits), it was a big local hit and was subsequently picked up for national distribution by Roulette Records. By then Christie had moved to New York, where he found frequent session work as a background vocalist. Shortly after the release of "Two Faces Have I" (#6, 1963), he served two years in the army. After his discharge in 1966, he signed with MGM and returned with the lushly produced "Lightnin' Strikes," which sold over 2 million copies.

His followups included "Rhapsody in the Rain" (#16, 1966), a fairly sexually explicit song for its time. Christie subsequently recorded for Colpix and Columbia before signing to Buddah in 1969. "I'm Gonna Make You Mine" (#10, 1969) was a hit in the U.S., Europe, and the U.K. Christie experienced problems with drugs in the early '70s, and after cleaning up in London, he held a range of jobs, including offshore oil driller, ranch hand, and carnival barker. In the late '70s he returned to New York, where he has done background vocal work. He continues to tour today. Pledging My Love is his first new studio album in over 20 years.

The Church

Formed 1980, Sydney, Austral.

Steven Kilbey (b. Sep. 13, ca. 1959, Welwyn Garden City, Eng.), bass, voc.; Marty Willson-Piper (b. May 7, ca. 1959, Stockport, Eng.), gr., voc.; Peter Koppes (b. ca. 1959, Austral.), gr., voc.; Richard Ploog (b. ca. 1959, Austral.), drums. 1981—Of Skins and Heart (Parlophone, Austral.) 1982—The Blurred Crusade (Carrere, Austral.) 1983—Seance 1984—Remote Luxury (Warner Bros.) 1985—Heyday 1988—Starfish (Arista) 1990—Gold Afternoon Fix (- Ploog; + Jay Dee Daugherty [b. Mar. 22, 1956, Santa Barbara, CA], drums) 1992—Priest = Aura (- Daugherty; - Koppes) 1994—Sometime Anywhere 1996—Magician Among the Spirits (Thirsty Ear) 1998—Hologram of Baal (+ Koppes) 1999—Box of Birds: Under the Milky Way—Best of the Church (Buddha Records/BMG).

This Australian quartet initially rehashed the jangly, psychedelic side of the Byrds, though by the mid-'80s the Church had forged its own style of guitar pop with willfully obscure lyrics. Principal songwriter Steven Kilbey is a private man who grew up consumed by rock music, listening to rare, import-only albums alone in his bedroom. In 1980 Kilbey formed the Church with friends Marty Willson-Piper and Peter Koppes, who shared his passion for music. Drummer Richard Ploog was added a year later. After much success among underground and alternative-rock audiences in Australia and abroad, the Church gained a larger, AOR-oriented audience when Ansta signed the band to a U.S. deal in 1987. Often lumped together with R.E.M., the group finally reached the pop charts with its first Arista release, 1988's Starfish (#41), and subsequent single, "Under the Milky Way" (#24).

Ploog left after 1990's Gold Afternoon Fix, replaced by former Patu Smith Group drummer Jay Dee Daugherty for 1992's Priest = Aura. In 1992 Koppes also quit. By 1993, only Kilbey and Willson-Piper remained. Since 1987 Kilbey Willson-Piper, and Koppes have each released several solo albums; Kilbey also collaborated with Go-Between G.W. McLennan for the 1991 album Jack Frost and 1995's Snow Job.

In 1998 the band released Hologram of Baal, the first 7,500 copies of which included a free bonus disc devoted to an hour-long instrumental titled "Bastard Universe." The release precipitated the Church's first U.S. tour as a full band in eight years. Band members pursued various solo projects, and Kilbey kept busy publishing books of poetry and producing albums for other artists. In 1999 the band regrouped for Box of Birds, a loving collection of new recordings of covers of such artists as Hawkwind ("Silver Machine"), Ultravox ("Hiroshima Mon Amour"), David Bowie ("All the Young Dudes"), and Neil Young ("Cortez the Killer").

Cibo Matto

Yuka Honda (b. Jap.), kybds.; Miho Hatori (b. Jap.), voc. 1996—Viva! La Woman (Warner Bros.) 1997—Super Relax EP 1999—(+ Sean Lennon [b. Oct. 9, 1975, New York], gr., bass; + Timo Ellis [b. June 7, 1970], drums; + Duma Love, perc.) Stereotype A.

Butter 08 (Hatori; Honda; Russell Simins, drums; Mike Mills, bass; Rick Lee, guitar); 1996—Butter (Grand Royal).

Centered around two female Japanese musicians, Cibo Matto grew out of New York's cultural and musical melting pot in the mid-'90s. Miho Hatori and Yuka Honda met in the East Village in 1994. Hatori had just moved there from Japan (where she was in a group called Kimidon) the previous year, but Honda had been there since 1987, playing with such local luminaries as the Brooklyn Funk Essentials and John Zorn. The two women started working together in the noise combo Laitoh Lychee ("frozen lychee") before switching to Cibo Matto ("food crazy" in Italian). Honda programmed and triggered a small sampler. Hatori wrote lyrics in fractured English and sang. Cibo Matto regularly played New York clubs and in 1995 released a vinyl single, "Birthday Cake" b/w "Know Your Chicken," the first in a series of songs centered around food that made up the bulk of 1996's Viva! La Woman. Produced by Mitchell Froom and Tchad Blake (Suzanne Vega), the critically acclaimed album was an off-beat, giddy mix of sampled beats, Ennio Morricone-influenced atmospheres, funk, and pop, with songs covering the entire culinary palette from "Artichoke" and "Beef Jerky" to "White Pepper Ice Cream."

The group did not rest on its laurels and started filling out its sound on the 1997 EP Super Relax, which included a cover of Antonio Carlos Jobim's "Águas de Março." That evolution continued on Stereotype A (#171, 1999). Honda handled the producing duties, while frequent collaborators such as her then-boyfriend Sean Lennon (on bass and guitar) and drummer Timo Ellis became permanent members. The group's sound expanded as well, jumping from hip-hop to hard rock, from bossa nova to funk. When performing live, the band's lineup would often swell with rotating guests like guitarist Marc Ribot or bassist Sebastian Steinberg (formerly of Soul Coughing).

Honda and Hatori have made guest appearances on records by Arto Lindsay and Yoko Ono, and they play with graphic designer Mike Mills, the Jon Spencer Blues Explosion's Russell Simins, and Skeleton Key's Rick Lee, the latter two occasional Cibo Matto collaborators in the band Butter 08, which released the more rockist Butter in 1996.

Cinderella

Formed 1983, Philadelphia, PA

Eric Brittingham (b. May 8), bass; Tom Keifer (b. Jan. 26), gr., kybds., voc.; Jeff LeBar (b. Mar. 18), gr.; Tony Destra, drums. 1986—(- Destra; + Jody Cortez, drums) Night Songs (Mercury) (- Cortez; + Fred Coury, drums) 1988—Long Cold Winter 1990—Heartbreak Station 1994—Still Climbing 1997—Once Upon a . . . 1999—Live at the Key Club (Dead Line).

In 1986 Cinderella was a heavy-metal band when heavy metal was not cool, headlined arenas when metal became cool, and remained a heavy-metal band long enough to capitalize on its late-'90s revival. Their teased coiffures, leather

'n' lace costumes, and thudding blues-based music heard on the multiplatinum albums Night Songs (#3, 1986) and Long Cold Winter (#10, 1988) and Top 20 singles "Nobody's Fool" (#13, 1986), "Don't Know What You Got (Till It's Gone)" (#12, 1988), and "Coming Home" (#20, 1989) can be seen as the advance wave of the metallic invasion that produced Guns n' Roses, Poison, et al.

Cinderella was formed by Philadelphia bar-band veterans Tom Keifer and Eric Burdon. Jeff LeBar, who sometimes played the same clubs as the nascent band, thought they needed a guitarist and volunteered. They chose the name Cinderella for its lack of heavy-metal connotations, but the band did have a Prince Charming, in the form of Jon Bon Jovi. He saw them at a club in 1985 and recommended them to his label, Mercury, which signed them the next year. Drummer Fred Coury joined while they recorded Night Songs. Produced by Andy Johns, the album has a slick, aggressive sound, topped off by Keifer's throat-shredding vocals. The band supported it and its followup, the bluesy, ballad-laden Long Cold Winter, with near-constant touring, opening for Bon Jovi, David Lee Roth, Judas Priest, and AC/DC and playing before a crowd of over 100,000 at England's Castle Donnington festival in 1987.

Heartbreak Station (#19, 1990), led by the ballad "Shelter Me" (#38, 1990), was a surprising turn toward a softer sound. Embellished with horns, gospel singers, and strings arranged by ex-Led Zeppelin John Paul Jones, it gave the band entrée to MTV and classic-rock formats and secured its headliner status. Like so many other metal bands, Cinderella sounded irrelevant in the wake of Nirvana and grunge. Still Climbing (1994) sank without a trace, a fate that also befell the greatest-hits collection Once Upon a Time (1997). A live album released in 1999 by the indie metal-specialist label Dead Line garnered some interest, and the band found itself signed to a major label deal in 2000 and, back on the road, touring with Poison, Dokken, and Slaughter.

Circle Jerks

Keith Morris, voc.; Greg Hetson, gtr.; Roger (Dowding) Rogerson, bass; Lucky Lehrer, drums.

1980—Group Sex (Frontier) 1982—Wild in the Streets (Faulty Products) (- Lehrer; + John Ingram, drums) 1983—Golden Shower of Hits (LAX) (- Rogerson; - Ingram; + Zander Schloss, bass; + Keith Clark, drums) 1985—Wonderful (Combat Core) 1987—VI (Relativity) 1992—Gig 1995—Oddities, Abnormalities and Curiosities (Mercury).

This unruly L.A. hardcore band became a popular live attraction, particularly among skateboarders and slam dancers, and were key players in creating the influential '80s Southern California punk scene. Like Black Flag, X, and the Germs, the Circle Jerks played punk when it was far more likely to attract the ire of L.A. police than major-label interest. Lead singer Keith Morris had the whine and scowl of Johnny Rotten, and the group's music was basic loud, speedy, three-chord punk.

Morris was also the original singer for Black Flag [see entry]. After that group's first EP (Nervous Breakdown, 1978), Morris quit Black Flag and teamed up with former Redd Kross guitarist Greg Hetson in a garage in Hawthorne, soon forming the Circle Jerks. The group recorded its first album in 1980 and the next year appeared in the L.A. punk documentary The Decline of Western Civilization.

Wild in the Streets was originally released on Faulty Products, the label of Police manager Miles Copeland. Golden Shower of Hits contains a humorous hardcore medley in which the group desecrates '70s AM pop gems like "Afternoon Delight," "(You're) Having My Baby," and "Love Will Keep Us Together." The group changed rhythm sections for Wonderful, which was marked by a more heavy-metal sound. VI continued in the direction of its predecessor. The Circle Jerks performed into the '90s, releasing Gig, an anthology of live recordings, in 1992.

By then Hetson was also playing guitar in Bad Religion, while bassist Zander Schloss moonlighted as a guitarist for both Joe Strummer and Thelonus Monster. But the rise of pop-punk act Green Day suddenly had the Circle Jerks courted by major labels. Mercury released 1995's Oddities, Abnormalities and Curiosities, the band's first studio album in eight years. The album included a cover of the Soft Boys' "I Wanna Destroy You" (with guest vocals by former teen pop star Debbie Gibson). Four weeks into a tour, the band split up. Hetson returned to Bad Religion, and Schloss joined the Low & Sweet Orchestra, releasing Goodbye to All That in 1996. Morris was sidelined in the late '90s by diabetes but returned in 2000 leading a new band, Midget Handjob, which released a debut album on Epitaph.

With B.B. King: 2000—Riding With the King (Duck/Reprise).

Eric Clapton

In the Yardbirds, Cream, Blind Faith, Derek and the Dominos, and his own bands, guitarist Eric Clapton has continually redefined his own version of the blues. Raised by his grandparents after his mother abandoned him at an early age, Clapton grew up a self-confessed "nasty kid." He studied stained-glass design at Kingston Art School and started playing the guitar at 15 and joining groups two years later. He stayed with his first band, the early British R&B outfit the Roosters (which included Tom McGuinness, later of Manfred Mann and McGuinness Flint), from January to August 1963 and frequently jammed in London clubs with, among others, future members of the Rolling Stones. The guitarist put in a seven-gig stint with a Top 40 band, Casey Jones and the Engineers, in September 1963. He joined the Yardbirds [see entry] in late 1963 and stayed with them until March 1965, when they began to leave behind power blues for psychedelic pop.

Upon leaving the Yardbirds, Clapton did construction work until John Mayall [see entry] asked him to join his Bluesbreakers in spring 1965. With Mayall, he contributed to several LPs while perfecting the blues runs that drew a cult of worshippers (the slogan CLAPTON IS GOD became a popular graffiti in London). Also with Mayall he participated in a studio band called Powerhouse (which included Jack Bruce and Steve Winwood); they contributed three cuts to a 1966 Elektra anthology, What's Shakin'. Clapton left the Bluesbreakers in July 1966 and cut a few tracks with Jimmy Page, then with bassist Jack Bruce and drummer Ginger Baker he formed Cream [see entry].

Clapton perfected his virtuoso style, and Cream's concerts featured lengthy solo excursions, which Clapton often performed with his back to the crowd. During his tenure with Cream, Clapton contributed lead fills to the Beatles' "While My Guitar Gently Weeps" and appeared on Frank Zappa's We're Only in It for the Money.

When Cream broke up in November 1968, Clapton formed the short-lived supergroup Blind Faith with Baker, Winwood, and Rick Grech [see entry]. During their only U.S. tour, Clapton embraced Christianity, which he has given up and reaffirmed periodically ever since. As a corrective to Blind Faith's fan worship, Clapton began jamming with tour openers Delaney and Bonnie, then joined their band as an unbilled (but hardly unnoticed) sideman. Clapton's 1969 activities also included a brief fling with John Lennon's Plastic Ono Band (Live Peace in Toronto).

He moved to New York in late 1969 and continued to work with Delaney and Bonnie through early 1970. With several members of the Bramletts' band, and friends like Leon Russell and Stephen Stills, whose solo albums Clapton played on, he recorded his first solo album, Eric Clapton, which yielded a U.S. #18 hit, the J.J. Cale song "After Midnight." The album marked Clapton's emergence as a strong lead vocalist, a role he continued to fill after forming Derek and the Dominos with bassist Carl Radle, drummer Jim Gordon, and keyboardist Bobby Whitlock, all former Delaney and Bonnie sidemen. The Dominos' only studio album, the two-record Layla (#16, 1970), was a guitar tour de force sparked by the contributions of guest artist Duane Allman. The title track, an instant FM standard (and a Top 10 hit two years later), was a tale of unrequited love inspired by Pattie Boyd Harrison (wife of ex-Beatle George), whom Clapton eventually married in 1979; they divorced in 1989. Clapton toured on and off with the Dominos through late 1971, but the group collapsed due to personal conflicts, most, Clapton later claimed, drug- or alcohol-induced. Over the following two decades, Derek and the Dominos would prove to be one of the most star-crossed groups in rock: Allman died in a motorcycle crash in October 1971; Radle died of alcohol poisoning in 1981; Gordon was convicted of murdering his mother and imprisoned in 1984.

Clapton sat in on albums by Dr. John and Harrison, who enticed Clapton to play at the benefit concert for Bangladesh in August 1971. Depressed and burdened by a heroin habit, Clapton retreated to the isolation of his Surrey, England, home for most of 1971 and 1972. With the aid of Pete Townshend, he began his comeback with a concert at London's Rainbow Theatre in January 1973. Supported by Townshend, Winwood, Ron Wood, Jim Capaldi, and others, Clapton reissued tapes from the ragged concert in a September 1973 LP. By the time 461 Ocean Boulevard (#1, 1974) was released, he had kicked heroin for good.

In the '70s Clapton became a dependable hitmaker with the easygoing, more commercial style he introduced on 461—a relaxed shuffle that, like J.J. Cale's, hinted at gospel, honky-tonk, and reggae while retaining a blues feeling but not necessarily the blues structure. Playing fewer and shorter guitar solos, he emphasized his vocals—often paired with harmonies by Yvonne Elliman or Marcy Levy—over his guitar virtuosity. He had hits with his cover of Bob Marley's "I Shot the Sheriff" (#1, 1974) and originals "Lay Down Sally" (#3, 1978) and "Promises" (#9, 1979). His albums regularly sold in gold quantities; Slowhand and Backless were certified platinum.

He had a Top 10 hit in 1981 with "I Can't Stand It," from Another Ticket (#7), and later that year formed his own label, Duck Records. During the early '80s he made frequent appearances at major benefit concerts. In that decade Clapton's singles veered closer to balladry than blues, producing a string of hits, including "I've Got a Rock 'n' Roll Heart" (#18, 1983) and "Forever Man" (#26, 1985).

In 1985 he separated from his wife, Pattie, and went into rehabilitation to overcome the alcoholism that had replaced his heroin addiction over a decade earlier. The next year Italian actress Lori Del Santo gave birth to Clapton's son, Conor.

Clapton continued to tour and record; 24 Nights captured Clapton's 1990-91 concert series at London's Royal Albert Hall, which since 1987 has become an annual event. Guests on the album include Jimmie Vaughan, Phil Collins, Buddy Guy, Albert Collins, and Robert Cray. He had spent the better part of the past two years on the road, and in August 1990 his agent and two members of his road crew died in the same helicopter crash that claimed Stevie Ray Vaughan. On March 20, 1991, four-and-a-half-year-old Conor died after falling 50 stories through a window in his mother's Manhattan apartment. A maintenance worker had left it open by mistake. Clapton was staying at a hotel just blocks from the apartment when the tragedy occurred. The following year Clapton made public service announcements warning parents to protect their children by installing gates over windows and staircases.

After a period of seclusion, Clapton began to work again, writing music for Rush, a film about drug addiction. In March 1992, almost a year after Conor's death, Clapton taped a segment for MTV's Unplugged series, the soundtrack of which peaked at #2 in 1992 and included a reworking of "Layla" (#12, 1993) and "Tears in Heaven" (#2, 1993), the latter written for his son. That year he was nominated for nine Grammy Awards and won six, including Record of the Year, Song of the Year, and Best Pop Vocal Performance, Male, for "Tears in Heaven." In early 1993 Clapton and his former cohorts in Cream, Jack Bruce and Ginger Baker, reunited to perform three songs at the group's Rock and Roll Hall of Fame induction. Clapton was inducted as a solo artist in 2000. In 1994 Clapton released an album of pure electric blues, From the Cradle, which topped the charts and won a Grammy for Best Traditional Blues Album. The double-platinum album became the best-selling traditional blues recording in history.

Two years later he returned with another career milestone. The single "Change the World," produced by R&B mastermind Kenny "Babyface" Edmonds for the soundtrack to the John Travolta film Phenomenon, became Clapton's highest-debating single, hitting #9 in its first week (it peaked at #5 pop, #54 R&B, and #1 Adult Contemporary). The guitarist also dabbled in electronica, recording with keyboardist Simon Climie as the duo T.D.F. The 1997 release Retail Ther- apy was little more than a curiosity. The next year Climie also collaborated on Pilgrim, Clapton's first studio album of mostly original material since 1989. With its focus on slick, R&B-flavored pop, the album got mixed reviews from critics but charted well (#4) and produced a hit in the ballad "My Father's Eyes" (#26 pop, #2 Adult Contemporary). Another track, "She's Gone," reached #19. The subsequent tour was sponsored by luxury car manufacturer Lexus, which employed Clapton for a 30-second commercial performing "Layla" as pop-up script called attention to similitudes—such as "effortless shifting"—between Clapton and the car. On June 24, 1999, Clapton auctioned off 100 of his guitars at Christie's with the proceeds going to support the Crossroads Centre on Antigua, a drug and alcohol rehabilitation facility that he founded in 1998.

In 2000 Clapton joined forces with one of his heroes, blues guitar legend B.B. King, to record Riding With the King, which featured several vintage King numbers and which won a Grammy for Best Traditional Blues Album. Reptile (#5, 2001) returned Clapton to the rock sound of his early solo career. He announced his subsequent 2001 tour would be his last.

The Dave Clark Five

Formed 1961, Tottenham, Eng.

Dave Clark (b. Dec. 15, 1942, Tottenham), drums, voc.; Mike Smith (b. Dec. 6, 1943, London, Eng.), piano, voc.; Rick Huxley (b. Aug. 5, 1942, Dartford, Eng.), gtr.; Lenny Davidson (b. May 30, 1944, Enfield, Eng.), gtr.; Denis Payton (b. Aug. 11, 1943, London), sax.

1964—Glad All Over (Epic); American Tour; The Dave Clark Five Return 1965—Coast to Coast; Having a Wild Weekend; I Like It Like That 1966—The Dave Clark Five's Greatest Hits; Try Too Hard; Satisfied With You; More Greatest Hits 1967—5 by 5; You Got What It Takes 1968—Everybody Knows (Columbia); Weekend in London (Epic) 1971—Good Old Rock 'n' Roll 1993—The History of the Dave Clark Five (Hollywood).

The Dave Clark Five, a British Invasion phenomenon, was formed in 1961 by members of the Tottenham Hotspurs soccer team in suburban London because they needed to raise funds to travel to Holland for a match. Photogenic leader Dave Clark, a former film stuntman, had never played the drums but quickly learned; he soon became the group's chief songwriter, producer, and manager as well.

The quintet's sound differed strikingly from its British Invasion counterparts. On songs like "Glad All Over" and especially "Anyway You Want It," the DC5 was probably the loudest U.K. act until the arrival of the Who. Denis Payton's sax underpinned a dense, churning rhythm section, while Clark's crackling snare-drum triplets punctuated the mix. And in Mike Smith the DC5 possessed a truly outstanding (and greatly overlooked) soul shouter.

"Glad All Over" (#6, 1964) was the first in a string of 17 Top 40 hits in just three years. The group's Top 10s included "Bits and Pieces" (#4), "Can't You See That She's Mine" (#4), and the ballad "Because" (#3) in 1964, "I Like It Like That" (#7), "Catch Us If You Can" (#4), and "Over and Over" (#1) in 1965, and "You Got What It Takes" (#7) in 1967. The DC5 was the second British act after the Beatles to appear on the Ed Sullivan Show; its 18 appearances on that show eclipsed both the Fab Four and the Rolling Stones. Clark and company also followed the Beatles into film, appearing (with the Animals) in Get Yourself a College Girl (1964) and Having a Wild Weekend (1965).

By 1968, the group's U.S. hits had dried up, although the Dave Clark Five continued to score hits in Britain through 1970, the year the band split up. Smith and Clark continued to put out records under the name Dave Clark and Friends for another three years. Smith then made an album with onetime Manfred Mann vocalist Mike D'Abo in 1975. He later got into commercial jingle writing and session work, and appeared on the original album to Evita. In 1990 he recorded an album of '50s American rock standards as well as originals.

Clark wrote and produced the 1986 musical Time, which starred Cliff Richard and, later, David Cassidy. An accompanying album of music from the stage production featured Richard, Freddie Mercury, Stevie Wonder, and others. Clark, a savvy businessman, has owned the DC5's original masters from the beginning. When he put together the 1993 double-CD retrospective, it marked the first time the DC5 catalogue was made available in 20 years. Over its career, the Dave Clark Five has sold over 50 million records worldwide.

Petula Clark

Born Nov. 15, 1932, Epsom, Eng.
1965—Downtown (Warner Bros.) 1967—These Are My Songs
1968—Petula Clark's Greatest Hits, vol. 1 1995—Blue Lady: The Nashville Sessions (Varèse Sarabande) 1998—Here for You.

British pop singer Petula Clark is best known in America for mid-'60s hits such as "Downtown" and "Don't Sleep in the Subway" but has also earned on a varied career in Europe. She began singing professionally at age eight; by nine she was a regular on radio shows; at 11, she hosted her own radio show, Pet's Parlour. Along with other child stars Julie Andrews and Anthony Newley, she performed for British troops during World War II.

She was 12 when she made her film debut in A Medal for the General. By the early '50s, she was a major star in the U.K., with over 20 movie credits. In 1954 "The Little Shoemaker" (#12, U.K.) became her first hit, followed by "Majorca" and others. She got her first #1 in the U.K. with 1961's "Sailor," followed by her first million-seller, "Romeo" (#3 U.K., 1961). That same year she married Vogue Records publicity director Claud Wolff, who became her manager. They moved to France, and she became popular there with such hits as "Chariot" and "Monsieur," also a big seller in Germany. Her string of English hits continued throughout the early '60s—

"My Friend the Sea," "Ya Ya Twist," "Casanova"—and she cracked the American market with "Downtown" (#1, 1965), which won a Grammy Award in 1964.

Clark toured U.S. nightclubs for the next few years and managed followup hits like "I Know a Place" (#3, 1965), "My Love" (#1, 1966), and "I Couldn't Live Without Your Love" (#9, 1966). Although she cut down her personal appearances to raise her family, there were a few more hits like "Don't Sleep in the Subway" (#5, 1967), "The Other Man's Grass Is Always Greener" (#31, 1967), and "Kiss Me Goodbye" (#15, 1968). Blue Lady, issued in 1995, unearths previously unreleased material recorded in 1975, overseen by famed Nashville producer Chips Moman.

In the late '60s she revived her acting career, starring in the films Goodbye, Mr. Chips and Finian's Rainbow. She has also performed on the British stage in The Sound of Music (1981) and Someone Like You (1990), which she cowrote with Fay Weldon. She made her Broadway debut in 1993 in Blood Brothers, which costarred David Cassidy and his half brother Shaun Cassidy. From the late '90s through 2000, Clark toured the U.S. playing Norma Desmond in Andrew Lloyd Webber's Sunset Boulevard; she also appeared in the musical during its 1995-97 U.K. run.

In late 1988, Clark returned to the upper reaches of the pop charts when a remix of "Downtown," entitled "Downtown '88," became a Top 10 U.K. hit. Ten years later Queen Elizabeth named Clark a Commander of the Order of the British Empire, one of the U.K.'s highest honors. Here for You contains an assortment of standards and show tunes.

Stanley Clarke

Born June 30, 1951, Philadelphia, PA
1973—Children of Forever (Polydor) 1974—Stanley Clarke (Epic) 1975—Journey to Love 1976—School Days
1978—Modern Man (Nemperor) 1979—I Wanna Play for You
1980—Fuse One (IMS); Rocks, Pebbles and Sand (Epic)
1981—The Clarke/Duke Project (with George Duke) 1982—Let Me Know You (Columbia) 1983—The Clarke/Duke Project II (with George Duke) 1984—Time Exposure (Epic) 1985—Find Out! 1986—Hideaway 1988—Project (CBS); If This Bass Could Only Talk (Portrait) 1989—3 (with George Duke) (Epic) 1992—Passenger 157 1993—East River Drive
1994—Live at the Greek; Live in Montreaux (Jazz Door)
1995—Rite of Strings (Gai Saber); At the Movies (Epic Soundtrax) 1997—The Bassic Collection.

Stanley Clarke earned a considerable reputation as a jazz bassist before entering the rock market with Return to Forever and switching to electric bass. His trademark on acoustic bass is precise upper-register vamping, on the electric a metallic plunk.

Clarke studied at the Philadelphia Academy of Music before moving to New York in 1970. He soon worked with Art Blakey, Gil Evans, the Thad Jones-Mel Lewis Orchestra, and Chick Corea (see entry), whom he met in Philadelphia in 1971. Clarke also played in a group led by saxophonist Stan Getz; the vaguely Brazilian-style material Corea furnished for Getz became the repertoire for a Corea quintet with Clarke, reedman Joe Farrell, singer Flora Punim, and percussionist Aírto Moreira on the 1972 Corea albums Return to Forever and Light as a Feather.

Corea and Clarke, both Scientologists, kept the name Return to Forever for their group. They formed an electrified band with drummer Lenny White and guitarist Bill Connors—soon replaced by Al DiMeola—which grew increasingly bombastic and popular. In 1976 Clarke and DiMeola both left to pursue solo careers. Clarke had already begun releasing his own fusion albums including 1975's Journey to Love with guest Jeff Beck.

At the end of the '70s, he released the half-studio, half-live double album I Wanna Play for You and joined Rolling Stones Ron Wood and Keith Richards for a North American tour as the New Barbarians. He teamed up with keyboardist George Duke (who had appeared on previous Clarke LPs) as the Clarke/Duke Project in 1981, and had a hit with the ballad "Sweet Baby." He also recorded with Corea, White, and Chaka Khan on the acoustic jazz session Echoes of an Era. In 1983 Clarke joined Corea, White, and DiMeola on a Return to Forever reunion tour.

Clarke has worked as a producer and played on albums by Santana, Aretha Franklin, and Quincy Jones, among others; he also appeared on Paul McCartney's Tug of War (1982).

In the late '80s Clarke turned to composing for television and films. He began by writing for TV pilots, movies of the week, and Pee-wee's Playhouse; by the '90s, he graduated to feature films, scoring, among others, the Tina Turner biopic What's Love Got to Do With It, and John Singleton's Boyz n the Hood and Poetic Justice. In 1989 Clarke played in the band Animal Logic with former Police drummer Stewart Copeland. He also continued playing jazz, with 1988's If This Bass Could Only Talk and 1995's acoustic The Rite of Strngs, featuring Jean-Luc Ponty and Al DiMeola, illustrating his constantly evolving technique. In 1997 he formed Basic Music Co. (BMC), an entertainment company with a record label, an instructional video company, and a management firm for film composers.

The Clash

Formed 1976, London, Eng.

Mick Jones (b. Michael Jones, June 26, 1955, London), gr., voc.; Paul Simonon (b. Dec. 15, 1955, London), bass; Tory Crimes (b. Terry Chimes, London), drums; Joe Strummer (b. (Simonon, bass.; Gary Myrick, gr.; Nigel Dixon, voc.): 1991—Havana 3 A.M. (I.R.S.). Joe Strummer solo: 1987—Walker (Virgin Movie Music) 1989—Earthquake Weather (Epic) 1999—Rock Art and the X-Ray Style (Epitaph) 2001—Global A Go-Go.

The Clash took the raw anger of British punk and worked it into a political and aesthetic agenda. Outstripping all of their peers in terms of length and depth of career, they were rebels with a cause—with many causes, from anti-Thatcherism to racial unity to the Sandinistas. Their music was roots-based but future-visionary; their experiments with funk, reggae, and rap never took them far from a three-minute pop song. Hyped as "the only band that matters," the Clash fell apart just as it broke through to an American audience. By then it had shown that punk was not just a flash-in-the-pan explosion and had delivered an arsenal of unforgettable rock songs.

The Clash was very much dependent on the band chemistry between its four longest-time members: Strummer, Jones, Simonon, and Headon. Primary songwriter Strummer, the son of a British diplomat, grew up in a boarding school. He quit school while still in his teens and in 1974 formed the 101ers, a pub-rock band named either for the address of the building where they squatted or the number of the torture room in the George Orwell novel 1984.

Jones and Simonon are both from working-class Brixton. The gangling, handsome Simonon was attending art school when he met Jones. He had never played an instrument until he heard the Sex Pistols; he then acquired a bass and joined Jones' band, the London SS, which in its 11-month existence included Tory Crimes and Topper Headon (as well as future Generation X/Sigue Sigue Sputnik bassist Tony James). Seeing the Pistols induced Strummer (a name he got when he strummed "Johnny B Goode" on a ukulele as a busker in London subway stations) to leave the 101ers, which included guitarist Keith Levene, soon after they recorded the single "Keys to Your Heart." Strummer and Levene then joined Jones, Simonon, and Crimes in their new group, named the Clash by Jones because it was the word that seemed to appear most often in newspaper headlines.

The Clash played its first, unannounced gig opening for the Sex Pistols in summer 1976 as a quintet. They opened for the Pistols on their Anarchy in the U.K. Tour after Levene quit. (He eventually joined Public Image Ltd.) The Clash was managed by Malcolm McLaren associate Bernard Rhodes, who helped the band articulate its political mission. Where the Sex Pistols were nihilists, the Clash were protesters, with songs about racism, police brutality, and disenfranchisement. They mixed rock with reggae, the music of Britain's oppressed Jamaicans; one of their early singles was a cover of Junior Murvin's "Police and Thieves." Throughout its career, the Clash was active in several political causes and performed benefit concerts for Rock Against Racism.

In February 1977 British CBS Records signed the Clash for a reported $200,000 advance. Their debut album was released that spring and entered the British charts at #12. Columbia considered the album too crude for American release (although the import sold 100,000 copies, making it the biggest-selling import album of that time). In response, the Clash recorded "Complete Control" with Jamaican producer Lee "Scratch" Perry.

Crimes quit the group in late 1976. Headon, who had been drumming with Pat Travers in Europe since his stint in the London SS, accompanied the group on its first national headlining tour. The White Riot Tour, named after the current Clash single, ended at a London concert where the audience ripped the seats out of the floor. It was the first in a series of confrontations between the Clash and the police, especially in Britain, where the group members were arrested on charges ranging from petty theft to illegal possession of firearms (for shooting prize pigeons).

In October 1978 the Clash's stormy relationship with Rhodes took a turn for the worse and the band fired the manager, only to rehire him years later. They worked with journalist Caroline Coon and Kosmo Vinyl, among others, in between times.

One of the four songs on an EP entitled Cost of Living, a cover of the Bobby Fuller-Sonny Curtis "I Fought the Law," was the first Clash record released in the U.S. At Columbia's behest, American producer Sandy Pearlman, best known for his work with Blue Oyster Cult, produced Give 'Em Enough Rope, which reached #2 on the British charts but failed to crack the American Top 200.

The Clash launched its Pearl Harbour Tour of America in February 1979. They also persuaded Columbia to release their first album, which in its American version contained only 10 of the original 14 tracks. A bonus 45 and EP selections dating as far back as two years made up the rest. The album eventually went gold. The Clash toured the U.S. again that fall, with Mickey Gallagher, of Ian Dury's Blockheads, on keyboards.

London Calling (#27, 1980), with its eclectic collection of pop styles, was both an artistic and commercial breakthrough. Produced by Guy Stevens (who had worked with Mott the Hoople) and supplemented by a brass section and Gallagher, the album went gold thanks to a hit single penned by Jones, "Train in Vain (Stand by Me)" (#23, 1980). Beginning with London Calling, the Clash insisted that its records sell at lower than standard prices, a laudable position, considering that London Calling is a double LP and album prices were rising sharply then due in part to the oil crisis.

In 1980 the semidocumentary film Rude Boy was released. It wove a fictional story about a fan (played by Ray Gange) around actual footage of Clash shows and backstage scenes, filmed during the previous 18 months. That year Jones also produced an album by his then-girlfriend, singer Ellen Foley.

The Clash recorded Sandinista! in New York, producing it themselves. The triple-LP package was a deliberately anti-commercial gesture. It sold for less than most double albums, and Columbia took the lost profits out of the group's royalties and tour support funds. The sprawling, often-experimental album was chosen by a poll of Village Voice critics as album of the year, and Sandinista! (#24, 1981) was the first Clash album to sell more copies in the U.S. than in the U.K.

In December 1981, as the band was beginning to record their next album, Headon was arrested for heroin possession. In April 1982, just as Combat Rock was about to be released, Strummer disappeared, to be found a month later in Paris. (Some accounts say the vanishing act was a publicity stunt engineered by Rhodes.) Upon Strummer's return, Headon left the group, reputedly because of "political differences," although Strummer later revealed that the problem was the drummer's drug use; he was replaced by Crimes for the Clash's U.K. tour. Ironically, Heaton wrote "Rock the Casbah" (#8, 1982), which became an early MTV staple; the Clash's biggest hit, and in 1999 provided the distinctive sample for Will Smith's "Will2K." In July 1982 Heaton was arrested in London for receiving stolen property.

Combat Rock (#7, 1982), produced by Glyn Johns, continued the Clash's forays into funk and rap. One song featured Beat poet Allen Ginsberg. The album went platinum; the single "Should I Stay or Should I Go" was a Top 50 hit that summer. In fall 1982 the Clash toured the U.S. with the Who, playing for its biggest audiences yet. In spring 1983 they headlined at the US Festival in California, with Pete Howard on drums.

That fall Simonon and Strummer kicked Jones out of the band, replacing him with two guitarists, Vince White and Nick Sheppard. Jones went on to form Big Audio Dynamite [see entry]. Cut the Crap was poorly received by critics and fans; the new Clash was a feeble imitation of its old self, and the band soon called it quits.

Strummer briefly reunited with Jones to work on B.A.D.'s second album. He pursued film work with director Alex Cox, writing "Love Kills," the theme song for Sid & Nancy; starring in Straight to Hell and contributing to the soundtrack; and scoring Walker. Forming the short-lived combo Latino Rockabilly War (including ex-Circle Jerk guitarist Zander Schloss), Strummer recorded the B side of the soundtrack for Permanent Record, a 1988 film about teen suicide. In 1988 Strummer toured as the rhythm guitarist for the Pogues [see entry]; he later produced their 1990 album, Hell's Ditch, and filled in for erstwhile frontman Shane MacGowan following its release. In 1989 he appeared in Jim Jarmusch's film Mystery Train and released the poorly received solo album Earthquake Weather.

Strummer was something of a recluse during the '90s but became somewhat more active as the decade wore on—and as ska-punk bands like Rancid and Sublime refocused attention on the Clash. In 1996 Strummer and Rat Scabies of the Damned formed Electric Dog House and contributed a track to the benefit album, Generations I: A Punk Look at Human Rights. Strummer also scored the music for the movie Grosse Pointe Blank and appeared on the animated TV show South Park and its Chef Aid soundtrack. In 1999 Strummer formed the Mescaleros and released Rock Art and the X-Ray Style, an album that fused hip-hop, dub, punk, and rockabilly and featured reggae star Horace Andy on one track. The follow-up, Global A Go-Go, continued in the same vein.

Simonon formed the roots-oriented Havana 3 A.M. with longtime L.A. scenester Gary Mynck; they recorded one album. He has mostly pursued his painting since the band's demise. Heaton released a solo album in England in 1987 but later that year was sentenced by a London court to 15 months in jail for supplying heroin to a friend who died of an overdose.

The Story of the Clash, vol. 1 and Clash on Broadway compiled Clash songs. In 1991 the Clash had their biggest British hit ever when "Should I Stay or Should I Go" was rereleased, after being featured in a Levi's commercial. It went to #1 in the U.K. In 1998 Strummer oversaw the creation of Burning London, a Clash tribute album featuring covers of the band's songs by Rancid, Afghan Whigs, Ice Cube, Moby, and others. A much-anticipated live album drawn from the Clash's punk heyday surfaced the following year. On June 16, 2000, the band's best-known lineup—Strummer, Jones, Simonon, and Heaton—were scheduled to reunite for the first time since 1985 to perform as part of a tribute to the late Ian Dury at London's Brixton Academy. However, Strummer withdrew less than two weeks before the tribute.

The Classics IV

Formed mid-1960s, Jacksonville, FL

J.R. Cobb (b. Feb. 5, 1944, Birmingham, AL), gtr.; Dennis Yost, voc.; Kim Venable, drums; Joe Wilson, bass; Wally Eaton, gtr. (- Wilson; + Dean Daughtry [b. Sep. 8, 1946, Kinston, AL], bass).

1975—The Very Best of Classics IV (United Artists).

The Classics IV made several major soft-pop hits, including "Spooky" (#3, 1968), "Stormy" (#5, 1968), and "Traces" (#2, 1969), featuring lead vocalist Dennis Yost. J.R. Cobb, producer/writer Buddy Buie, and Dean Daughtry went on to studio work and in 1974 formed the Atlanta Rhythm Section [see entry].

One of the most politically charged "world music" artists to emerge from Africa in the '80s, Johnny Clegg fell so deeply in love with Zulu tribal culture that he not only fused it with Western-based music, he actually became an honorary Zulu tribesman. He was arrested and harassed for flouting South Africa's apartheid system to play music with blacks, yet managed to garner international acclaim.

Clegg took after both of his parents: his mother was a cabaret singer and his father was a journalist who admired black culture and abhorred apartheid. Born in England, he moved with his family to South Africa at the age of six. As a teenager, Clegg was frequently arrested for hanging out in Zulu bars, listening to the music he preferred. He later lectured on Zulu anthropology at the University of the Witwatersrand in Johannesburg.

He left academic life in the mid-'70s to pursue a career in music. In Johannesburg he befriended migrant gardener/street musician Siphon Mchunu, who taught him traditional Zulu music. The two formed a duo, Johnny and Siphon, which was renamed Juluka (Zulu for "sweat"), and played mbaqanga music with political lyrics, gradually integrating Western funk, soul, and reggae elements. Juluka gained a large, interracial South African audience and found some success internationally, especially with 1983's Scatterlings. After Mchunu returned to his family's farm in Zululand in 1985, Clegg formed a fully electric, more rock-oriented update of Juluka, called Savuka (Zulu for "we have arisen"), which included Juluka drummer Derek De Beer. Ironically, Clegg was expelled from the musicians union in his native Britain for performing in South Africa.

Despite its never having had a U.S. hit single, Savuka enjoyed a high enough international profile to be invited on the 1988 Amnesty International Conspiracy of Hope Tour, with Bruce Springsteen, Sting, Peter Gabriel, and others. Cruel, Crazy, Beautiful World (1990) included songs inspired by the assassination of Clegg's friend, anti-apartheid activist David Webster. In 1992 Savuka percussionist Dudu Zulu—with whom Clegg performed the acrobatic, crowd-pleasing Zulu dances known as Indlamu—was murdered during factional warfare between different Zulu tribes. Clegg's next album, Heat, Dust & Dreams, featuring many non-South African guest musicians, included "The Crossing," a tribute to Dudu Zulu.

Juluka reunited in 1996 to perform at the National Festival of the Arts, South Africa's leading cultural event, and subsequently toured the U.S., newly incorporating hip-hop influences into its synthesis of sounds. The retrospective A Johnny Clegg & Juluka Collection was released that year. Anthology followed in 2000.

The Reverend Cleveland was a dominant force in gospel music, through numerous releases and the work of his Gospel Music Workshop Convention. As the leader of the Southern California Community Choir, Cleveland helped to expand the musical base of gospel music and to integrate jazz and pop rhythms and arrangements into spiritual material. The pop gospel of Andrae Crouch and Edwin Hawkins are offshoots of Cleveland's pioneering efforts. Cleveland's foghorn vocal style, ridiculed by some when he started singing in the '50s, earned him the title "Gospel's Louis Armstrong."

His recordings of "Peace Be Still," "Lord Remember Me," "Father, I Stretch My Hands to Thee," and "The Love of God" are gospel standards. His 1972 double-platinum album with Aretha Franklin, Amazing Grace, is interesting not just because of the music but for the fact that Franklin's father, the Reverend C.L. Franklin, gave the Reverend Cleveland the opportunity to arrange for Detroit's New Bethel Baptist Church choir when Cleveland was only 26. Cleveland also appeared on Elton John's Blue Moves LP in 1976. In 1968 Cleveland organized the interdenominational Gospel Music Workshop Convention, which brought together top gospel musicians with churchgoers and showcased new artists. In the early '80s the organization boasted over 25,000 members and 250 chapters; a decade later the membership had more than doubled. The GMWC played an important role in gaining exposure for gospel music outside churches. Cleveland died of heart failure in 1991.

As the star of the groundbreaking film The Harder They Come and its soundtrack album, Jimmy Cliff was one of the first reggae stars to be heard outside of Jamaica. Although he remains active and is popular in Europe and Africa, he never achieved the international stardom of Bob Marley. Like Ivan, the character he plays in The Harder They Come, Cliff left his country home for the city when he was barely a teenager. He arrived in Kingston in 1962; within the year he had recorded his first record, a single called "Daisy Got Me Crazy." In the following months he cut a half-dozen tracks for various disc jockeys to play over their "sound systems." In 1962 he had a hit produced by Leslie Kong, "Dearest Beverly." Cliff's second collaboration with Kong, "Hurricane Hattie," went to #1 on the island, followed by "My Lucky Day," "King of Kings," and "Miss Jamaica." As a vocalist for Byron Lee's Dragonaires, he toured the Americas in 1964, at the New York World's Fair. Cliff met Chris Blackwell of Island Records, who signed him and enticed him to move to London in 1965.

Cliff worked at first as a backup singer. By divesting himself of his Jamaican patois, assuming the style of a cosmopolitan and the repertoire of a jet-setting troubadour, he developed a following in France and Scandinavia. And in 1967 "Give and Take" hit the British charts. The following year he traveled to Brazil as Jamaica's representative at an international music festival. His song "Waterfall" won a festival prize and became a South American hit. "Wonderful World, Beautiful People" was an international bestseller in 1969, a Top 10 hit in the U.K., and one of the first reggae tunes widely heard outside of Jamaica.

Jimmy Cliff

In 1969 Desmond Dekker recorded Cliff's "The Song We Used to Sing." Cliff was best known at this time as a songwriter. (Bob Dylan described his "Vietnam" as "the best protest song ever written.") He wrote "You Can Get It If You Really Want" for Dekker, and the Pioneers had a hit with his "Let Your Yeah Be Yeah." Cliff returned to Jamaica at the end of 1969 and recorded "Many Rivers to Cross," which inspired Jamaican filmmaker Percy Henzell to offer him the lead in The Harder They Come.

After the film, Cliff became a major star in Europe, Africa, and Latin America. "Under the Sun, Moon and Stars," "Struggling Man," and "House of Exile" were international hits between 1973 and 1975. In the attempt to expand his following, he left Island in 1973, signing with EMI in the U.K. and Warner Bros. in the U.S. But instead of reaching new fans, he almost lost those he had. In Jamaica he was denounced for abandoning his musical, religious, and national roots.

A Muslim—Cliff converted from Rastafarianism in 1973—he is welcomed in Africa and the Middle East. African religion, culture, history, and music became recurrent themes in his songs and were the focus of a film he made in 1980, Bongo Man.

In 1982 Cliff switched labels (moving to Columbia) and returned to Jamaica. There he recorded Special (#186, 1982) and coheadlined the World Music Festival in an effort to win back his Jamaican fans. Cliff recorded parts of two albums, The Power and the Glory and Cliff Hanger, with Kool and the Gang, the latter winning the Grammy for Best Reggae Recording in 1985. That year Bruce Springsteen covered his song "Trapped" on the USA for Africa benefit album.

An appearance in the 1986 movie Club Paradise, with Robin Williams and Peter O'Toole, was accompanied by seven songs on the soundtrack, including "Seven Day Weekend," a duet with Elvis Costello. None of the above helped Cliff gain American listeners. He formed his own production company, Cliff Sounds and Films, in 1990 and released Images that year. Humanitarian (1999), which includes covers of the Beatles and Carole King, consists of synth-heavy sessions with such famed reggae players as Sly Dunbar, Judy Mowatt, and Ansel Collins. That year Cliff toured with the Dave Matthews Band.

Climax Blues Band

Formed 1968, Stafford, Eng.

Original lineup: Colin Richard Francis Cooper (b. Oct. 7, 1939, Stafford), sax, harmonica, clarinet, gtr., voc.; Peter John Haycock (b. Apr. 4, 1952, Stafford), gtr., voc.; Arthur Wood (b. Stafford), kybds.; Derek Holt (b. Jan. 26, 1949, Stafford), bass, gtr., kybds., voc.; George Newsome (b. Aug. 14, 1947, Stafford), drums, harmonica.

1981—Lucky for Some 1983—Sample and Hold (Virgin)
 1988—Drastic Steps (Clay, U.K.) 1995—Blues From the Attic (Griffin).

While its name reveals its British blues revival beginnings, the Climax Blues Band became a dependable AOR outfit that reached the Top 40 every few years, with a sound trademarked by shared lead vocals from Peter Haycock and Colin Cooper and Cooper's saxophone playing. The group toured Europe and North America frequently, taking time off to cut its annual album through the '70s. Since then it has released albums with decreasing frequency.

CBB recorded each of its first two albums in less than three days. At first, it was a derivative blues band distinguished mainly by its youthful lineup. Haycock was only 16 when the band got started. By 1973, when the group first received extensive FM radio airplay in the U.S. with "Rich Man," it had already moved toward pop songwriting and production. Climax's first U.S. tour that same year yielded FM Live (#37, 1973), recorded in New York during an Academy of Music concert broadcast over WNEW-FM. Its first self-produced album, Gold Plated, became CBB's biggest seller on the strength of "Couldn't Get It Right" (#3, 1977), and 1980's Flying the Flag featured the MOR ballad "I Love You" (#12, 1981). By the time of 1983's Sample and Hold, the group's name was carried by Haycock, Cooper, and keyboardist George Glover, along with studio musicians.

Through its lengthy tenure, the group (in which Cooper is presently the only original member) has kept a low profile and a reputation for professionalism and a good live act. In 1997 a former CBB keyboardist, Peter Filleul, organized a free concert on the Caribbean island of Montserrat, the volcano-devastated U.K. colony. The gig, which coincided with a big-name benefit in London, featured several original CBB alumni.

Patsy Cline

Born Virginia Patterson Hensley, Sep. 8, 1932, Winchester, VA; died Mar. 5, 1963, Camden, TN
 1973—Greatest Hits (MCA) 1989—Walkin' Dreams: Her First Recordings, vol. 1 (Rhino); Hungry for Love: Her First Recordings, vol. 2; Rockin' Side: Her First Recordings, vol. 3 1991—The Patsy Cline Collection (MCA) 1993—Walkin' After Midnight (Rhino) 1994—The Patsy Cline Classics Collection (Curb) 1996—The Birth of a Star (Razor & Tie) 1997—Live at the Cimarron Ballroom (MCA Nashville).

Country singer Patsy Cline's career was in full swing, with pop Top 40 hits and national concert tours, when she was killed in a plane crash at the age of 30. Her honeyed soprano has been emulated not only by country singers like Loretta Lynn and Dolly Parton but also by pop singers like Linda Ronstadt.

Cline took up the piano at age eight but didn't begin singing until her teens. In 1948 she won a trip to Nashville through an audition; nine years later she appeared on TV on Arthur Godfrey's Talent Scouts and was spotted by Owen Bradley of Decca Records. Her first record, "Walkin' After Midnight," was both a country hit (#3) and a pop hit (#12) in 1957.

She was soon one of country music's biggest stars. Despite her numerous country hits, she sought a broader audience and refused to be saddled with a hillbilly or cowgirl image. Under Bradley's direction, she came to embody the smooth, sophisticated new Nashville sound. "I Fall to Pieces" was a pop hit (#12) in 1961, followed later that year by "Crazy" (#9 pop, #2 country), a song written by a then little-known writer named Willie Nelson. She had another pop Top 20 hit with "She's Got You" (#14) in 1962.

On March 5, 1963, Cline was returning from a Kansas City, Missouri, show when the single-engine plane her manager was piloting crashed. Over 25,000 people attended her funeral. In 1973 Cline became the first woman solo artist elected to the Country Music Hall of Fame. Actress Jessica Lange played the singer in the 1985 biopic Sweet Dreams; its soundtrack climbed to #29 on the U.S. LP chart. Cline's memory remained alive in the '90s, thanks to a flood of reissues, box sets, unreleased live albums, anthologies, and radio-session compilations. At least five musical plays about the singer's life, including A Closer Walk With Patsy Cline and Always... Patsy Cline, were presented in North America and Europe. As of 1999, her Greatest Hits collection (MCA, 1973) had sold over 7 million copies.

Since 1955, George Clinton (a.k.a. Dr. Funkenstein, a.k.a. the Maggot Overlord, a.k.a. Uncle Jam) has headed a loose aggregation of musicians known variously as "The Mothership Connection," his "Parliafunkadelicment Thang," or "P-Funk All-Stars." Composed of members of two main groups, Parliament and Funkadelic, and various offshoot bands, the organization made some of black pop's most adventurous—and often popular—music of the '70s. Since then, Clinton's zany presence was being felt in the music of a wide range of postdisco and postpunk artists from Prince to Public Enemy, Dr. Dre, and the Red Hot Chili Peppers. Clinton's music mixes funk polyrhythms, psychedelic guitar, jazzy horns, vocal-group harmonies, and often scatological imagery. His lengthy concerts are unpredictable, characterized by extended, improvised jams, and sometimes compared in scope to those of the Grateful Dead. One of his many quotable mottoes is "Free your ass and your mind will follow."

As a teenager in Plainfield, New Jersey, Clinton straightened hair working in a local barbershop, where he also founded a vocal group called the Parliaments. They struggled through the '50s and most of the '60s, by which time Clinton had moved to Detroit to work as a staff writer for Motown. In 1967 the Parliaments had a major hit with Clinton's "I Wanna Testify" (#20 pop, #3 R&B), a straight love song. The Parliaments' next charted single, "All Your Goodies Are Gone" (#21 R&B), suggested Clinton's future direction. Hanging out with Detroit hippies and listening to local hard-rock bands like the MC5 and the Stooges influenced Clinton's approach to music and he began to contemplate making a radical change in the Parliaments' sound.

At the same time in 1967, a legal battle over the Parliament name ensued, so Clinton and the group's singers began recording with their backup band as Funkadelic for Westbound Records in 1968. After winning the lawsuit, Clinton would record Parliament (the "s" was dropped) and Funkadelic separately. Initially, Parliament was more commercially oriented and Funkadelic more experimental and gritty, though as time went on these distinctions blurred.

Early Funkadelic albums built a cult audience. Parliament/Funkadelic concert appearances featured Clinton jumping out of a coffin, musicians running around in diapers, smoking marijuana, and simulating sex acts. On both Parliament and Funkadelic albums, Clinton wrote about the dark realities of funk—which he had elevated to a philosophy—utilizing negative imagery from the Process Church of Final Judgment and clear-eyed wit; he wrote for denizens of "Chocolate City" surrounded by "vanilla suburbs."

Parliament's 1974 hit on Casablanca, "Up for the Down Stroke" (#63 pop, #10 R&B), introduced Clinton's concepts to a wider audience and helped Funkadelic get signed to Warner Bros. Over the years, the group attracted top R&B instrumentalists, including bassist Bootsy Collins (ex-James Brown), guitarists Eddie Hazel and Gary Shider, keyboardist Bernie Worrell, keyboardist Junie Morrison (ex-Ohio Players), and reedmen Fred Wesley and Maceo Parker (ex-James Brown). Parliament's Mothership Connection and gold single "Tear the Roof Off the Sucker" (#15 pop, #5 R&B) made Clinton and company a major concert attraction. With a weird, lengthy stage show that included a spaceship descending onstage from a huge denim cap, the P-Funk crew rivaled Earth, Wind & Fire as black America's favorite band. From 1976 to 1981, Clinton's salesmanship and success landed recording contracts for many P-Funk offshoots: Bootsy's (Collins) Rubber Band [see Bootsy Collins entry], Eddie Hazel, the Horny Horns, Parlet, Bernie Worrell, the Brides of Funkenstein, Philippe Wynne, Junie Morrison, and Zapp [see entry].

Parliament's "Flash Light" (#16 pop, #1 R&B)—in which Worrell introduced the synthesized bass lines later imitated by many funk and new-wave bands—and the platinum Funkentelechy vs. the Placebo Syndrome in 1977; "Aqua Boogie" (#1 R&B) in 1978; and Funkadelic's funk anthem "One Nation Under a Groove—Part I" (#28 pop, #1 R&B) in 1978 were Clinton's commercial peaks in the '70s.

Beginning in 1980, internal strife and legal problems temporarily sapped Clinton's P-Funk tribe of its energy and key performers. And while P-Funk's sound got absorbed into mainstream funk and hip-hop, Clinton's many projects became entangled. Drummer Jerome Brailey left P-Funk to start his own group, Mutiny, which pointedly devoted its first album to imprecations against the "Mamaship." Other ex-sidemen actually recorded as Funkadelic, although their album (the poorly received Connections and Disconnections) carried a sticker to the effect that Clinton was not involved. After Warner Bros. refused to release The Electric Spanking of War Babies (with guest Sly Stone) as a double album, Clinton cut it to a single LP and began proceedings to end his Warners contract. He recorded two singles, "Hydraulic Pump—Part I" and "One of Those Summers," with the P-Funk All-Stars on an independent label, Hump Records. Then he reemerged with a name that was not in litigation—his own—on a George Clinton solo album, Computer Games (1982), which included P-Funk's core members and the hit single "Atomic Dog" (#1 R&B, 1983).

In 1983 Clinton began a six-year sabbatical from the pop limelight, during which time his music showed up (both in spirit and as samples) in rap and hip-hop (as well as on albums of Clinton's collected works). "Atomic Dog" became one of the most-requested dance-floor songs. In 1985 he produced the Red Hot Chili Peppers' second album, Freaky Styley. Clinton returned to music making in 1989 with The Cinderella Theory (featuring guests Chuck D and Flavor Flav) on Prince's Paisley Park label and regrouped the P-Funk All-Stars for concerts. In 1993 he and P-Funk performed at President Clinton's Youth Inaugural Ball. Later that year he released Hey Man... Smell My Finger (with an all-star lineup of guests including rappers Ice Cube and Yo-Yo and members of the Chili Peppers), and, though the album was not a commercial smash (peaking at #145), it appeared as though Clinton's career was back on the upswing. In the summer of 1994, he appeared on the Lollapalooza Tour. In 1997 the Parliament/Funkadelic conglomeration was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame.

A followup album, T.A.P.O.A.F.O.M. [The Awesome Power of a Fully Operational Mothership], reunited Clinton in the studio with Worrell, Collins, and other original P-Funk sidemen for the first time in more than a decade. The record peaked at #121 in 1996 and was followed that same year by Greatest Funkin' Hits (#138), which gathered modern remixes of his work and included such guests as Coolio, Digital Underground, and Ice Cube. Two years later Clinton returned with a concept album about dogs and the drug war called Dope Dogs.

The Clovers

Formed 1946, Washington, DC

Lineup ca. 1950: John "Buddy" Bailey (b. ca. 1930, Washington, DC; d. 1994), voc.; Matthew McQuater (d. Dec. 19, 2000), voc.; Harold "Hal" Lucas Jr. (b. ca. 1923; d. Jan. 6, 1994, Washington, DC), voc.; Harold Winley, bass voc.; Bill Harris

(d. 1988), gr. 1953—(– Bailey; + Charlie White [b. ca. 1930, Washington, DC; d. ca. late '90s], voc.) 1954—(– White; + Billy Mitchell, voc.).

1975—Their Greatest Recordings—The Early Years (Atco)
1991—Down in the Alley (Rhino); The Best of the Clovers—Love Potion No. 9 (EMI).

Emerging out of the Washington, DC, area, the Clovers were the most successful R&B group of the '50s. They were an important force in the fusion of big-beat R&B with gospel-style vocals, which laid the groundwork for soul music a decade later. With the Top 30 success of "Love, Love, Love" in 1956, the Clovers became one of the first black vocal groups to arrive on the pop chart.

The group was formed in a Washington, DC, high school by Harold Lucas in the late '40s. Then known as the Four Clovers, they were singing at a local nightclub, the Rose Club, when they were discovered by record-store owner Lou Krefetz, who became their manager and got them a contract with Atlantic Records in 1950. By then the group's lineup had settled into that outlined above. Label president Ahmet Ertegun wrote their first of many R&B hits in 1951, including two R&B #1s, "Don't You Know I Love You" and "Fool, Fool, Fool." Through 1952 they continued their hitting streak with "One Mint Julep," "Ting-A-Ling," "Hey Miss Fannie," and "I Played the Fool." They were also a top draw at black nightclubs.

Their string of R&B hits continued through the early '50s with "Crawlin'," "Good Lovin'" (1953), "Lovey Dovey," "I've Got My Eyes on You," "Your Cash Ain't Nothing but Trash" (1954), "Blue Velvet" (later covered by Bobby Vinton), "Devil or Angel" (later covered by Bobby Vee), and "Nip Jip" (1955). In late 1952 Bailey joined the army; his replacement, Charles White, had sung with the Dominoes and the Checkers. In April 1954 he left for the Playboys, and Billy Mitchell replaced him. In 1956 the Clovers had another R&B hit with "From the Bottom of My Heart."

Ironically, however, the historic appearance of "Love, Love, Love" in the pop listings marked the beginning of the Clovers' commercial decline. After moving to United Artists in 1959, they had their last major hit with Leiber and Stoller's "Love Potion No. 9" (#23 R&B). In 1961 the group disbanded, and for a time two groups of Clovers (one led by Bailey and Winley, another by Lucas) and their innumerable variations performed and recorded through the years. Lucas had only stopped touring approximately two years before he died in early 1994. In 1988 he and the other founding members received the Rhythm & Blues Foundation's Pioneer Award.

The Coasters' comic vocals plus the writing and production of Jerry Leiber and Mike Stoller resulted in a string of wise-cracking doo-wop hits in the late '50s. They were among the first black singing groups to truly cross over and be considered a rock & roll act, and their catalogue includes not only their famous humorous hit singles but social protest (1959's "What About Us"), one of the first great rock anthems ("That Is Rock and Roll"), and a wealth of future cover hits for artists ranging from Elvis Presley ("Girls, Girls, Girls") to Leon Russell ("Young Blood").

The group originated in the late '40s as an L.A. vocal quartet, the Robins. Protégés of Johnny Otis, they recorded for Savoy Records, hitting #1 on the R&B chart in 1950 with "Double Crossing Blues," which featured Little Esther Phillips. They began their association with Leiber and Stoller when they moved from Crown Records to RCA in 1953. When Leiber and Stoller founded Spark Records in 1954, the Robins became the label's most successful act, hitting on the West Coast with "Riot in Cell Block No. 9," "Framed," "The Hatchet Man," and "Smokey Joe's Cafe." The latter song attracted Atlantic Records, which bought the Robins' catalogue in 1955 and contracted Leiber and Stoller as independent producers.

At that point the Robins split into two groups: Carl Gardner and Bobby Nunn stayed with Leiber and Stoller, while the other Robins went on to record for Whippet Records. Billy Guy and Leon Hughes joined Gardner and Nunn to become the Coasters (so-named because of their West Coast origins). Their first single, "Down in Mexico," made the R&B Top 10 in 1956. Its double-sided followup, "Searchin'" b/w "Young Blood," went to #1 on the R&B chart and #3 on the pop chart in 1957; it was the first of the Coasters' four gold records. The group, together with Leiber and Stoller, moved to New York. After yet another personnel change—the addition of Cornell (a.k.a. Cornelius) Gunter from the Flairs—the Coasters returned to the charts with "Yakety Yak" (#1, 1958), "Charlie Brown" (#2, 1959), "Along Came Jones" (#9, 1959), and "Poison Ivy" (#7, 1959). Their backup group often featured King Curtis on sax and Mickey Baker or Adolph Jacobs on guitar. By decade's end, the Coasters were America's most popular black rock & roll group.

Four more Coasters records made the Top 40 in 1960 and 1961, and (joined by Earl "Speedo" Carroll, formerly of the Cadillacs, and Ronnie Bright, the featured vocalist on Johnny Cymbal's "Mr. Bass Man") they continued to record for Atco until 1966. Their last chart appearance was in 1971, with a Leiber-and-Stoller reproduced "Love Potion No. 9" (#76). They last worked with Leiber and Stoller in 1973, and in 1976 they released their last single, a version of "If I Had a Hammer." Since then, Nunn, Gardner, and Hughes individually, and Guy and Jones together, at one time or another all led groups billed as the Coasters.

In 1988 Gardner, Guy, Jones, and Gunter (with Tom Palmer) performed at the Atlantic Records' 40th-anniversary concert in New York City. In 1987 the Coasters were inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. Gunter was murdered in Las Vegas in early 1990. Ten years earlier, latter-day member Nathaniel Wilson disappeared from Las Vegas; his dismembered body was recovered in California a month later. Nunn died of a heart attack in 1986.

Recording with Miles Davis and then starring with the Mahavishnu Orchestra in the '70s, drummer Billy Cobham was a key figure in the development of jazz-rock fusion.

Learning to play the timbales by age three, Cobham moved with his mother from Panama to New York when he was about seven to join his pianist father. In 1959 he enrolled at the High School of Music and Art. After serving in the armed forces, he worked in the city's jazz circles, playing with the Billy Taylor Trio and the New York Jazz Sextet in the late '60s. In 1968 he earned his first session credit, George Benson's Giblet Gravy, followed by two albums with Horace Silver. He has since played on numerous recordings, backing James Brown, Quincy Jones, Carlos Santana, Carly Simon, Sam and Dave, and Larry Coryell, among others. In 1969, after stints with Stanley Turrentine and Kenny Burrell, he joined the Miles Davis band that virtually invented jazz rock; ultimately, he played on eight Davis albums, including the landmark Bitches Brew. Concurrently, with Michael and Randy Brecker, he founded the jazz-rock group Dreams, which recorded two albums before disbanding in 1970.

In 1971 Cobham joined fellow Davis alumnum John McLaughlin in his Mahavishnu Orchestra, staying with the pioneering fusion group until the end of 1973 [see entry]. He then went solo, recording Spectrum with such guests as jazz bassist Ron Carter and saxophonist Joe Farrell and rock guitarist Tommy Bolin, the album and its two successors made the pop Top 40. In 1974 Cobham assembled a band called Spectrum including keyboardist George Duke, guitarist John Scofield (who later joined Miles Davis), and ex-Santana bassist Doug Rauch (later replaced by Alphonso Johnson). By 1976 the group had become the Billy Cobham-George Duke Band.

In 1979 and 1980 he worked extensively as part of Jack Bruce's band, followed by a year's stint with Grateful Dead guitarist Bob Weir's Midnites. In the mid-'70s he produced albums for Airto and pianist David Sancious. Throughout the decade Cobham's solo albums, either in a small-group format or with more extensive lineups, continued to mine the jazz-rock vein.

Cobham settled ultimately in Zurich, Switzerland, continuing to record solo projects during the '80s. Still an influential percussionist, Cobham found a new forum in the drum clinic. In the '90s he toured with ex-Dixie Dregs keyboardist T Lavitz in Jazz Is Dead, an ensemble that specialized in jazz interpretations of Grateful Dead songs. Becoming a renowned lecturer about jazz, he also premiered, in 2000, a multimedia project: a DVD, recorded with the London Jazz Orchestra, that enables musicians to play along with Cobham compositions.

Eddie Cochran

Born Oct. 3, 1938, Oklahoma City, OK; died Apr. 17, 1960, London, Eng.

1960—Eddie Cochran (Liberty) 1962—Cherished Memories: Memorial Album; Singing to My Baby 1963—Never to Be Forgotten 1964—My Way 1970—C'mon Everybody (Sunset); 10th Anniversary Album (Liberty) 1972—Legendary Masters (United Artists) 1990—Greatest Hits (Curb).

In his brief career, Eddie Cochran made a lasting imprint on rock with songs like "Summertime Blues." Born in Oklahoma, he was raised in Minnesota until 1949, when he moved with his family to Bell Gardens, California. By then he had taught himself to play blues guitar. He and guitarist Hank Cochran (no relation) began recording as the Cochran Brothers in 1955.

The following year Eddie and Hank split up, and Cochran began writing songs with Jerry Capeheart, whom he'd met while buying guitar strings at a local music shop. While the two were recording background music for a low-budget film, the producer, Boris Petroff, enlisted him to sing his song "Twenty Flight Rock" in another movie he was making. The Girl Can't Help It, with Jayne Mansfield. Liberty Records signed him soon after.

His first hit was 1957's "Sittin' in the Balcony" (#18). A year later Cochran and Capeheart's good-humored anthem of teen boredom, "Summertime Blues," made the Top 10. It has since revisited the charts in versions by The Who and Blue Cheer. Two more hits, "C'mon Everybody" (#35, 1958) and "Somethin' Else" (#58, 1959), established him as a star, especially in England.

Cochran toured steadily, backed by the Kelly Four (bassist Connie Smith, who was later replaced by Dave Schrieber, drummer Gene Ridgio; and a series of pianists and saxophonists). He was an exceptionally talented guitarist, an energetic stage performer, and an early master of studio overdubbing, he played and sang all the parts on both "C'mon Everybody" and "Summertime Blues." Cochran was 21 when he died on April 17, 1960, in an auto accident en route to the London airport. His hit single at the time was "Three Steps to Heaven," which went to #1 in the U.K. Injured in the crash were Gene Vincent and Cochran's fiancée, Sharon Sheeley, cowriter of "Somethin' Else" and composer of Rick Nelson's 1958 #1 smash "Poor Little Fool." Cochran and Nelson both entered the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame posthumously in 1987.

Singer/songwriter Bruce Cockburn has been a major star in his homeland since his debut album in 1970, garnering 10 Juno awards, two Canadian platinum records, and 13 gold. A virtuoso guitarist, Cockburn has progressed from folk-style songs to his own blend of jazz, reggae, and rock, and most recently Latin and Afro-pop. His lyrics have ranged from hippie-ish mysticism to openly fundamentalist Christianity, although Cockburn told Musician magazine in 1986: "Personally, I think the whole moral majority, hard-right, virulent anticommunist thinking that's centered around America First is pathological and dangerous. . . . [O]ne of the reasons I stopped making such a public issue of being a Christian has to do with not wanting to be identified with that version of fundamentalism." Since the mid-'80s, his work has become increasingly political.

In his late teens, Cockburn traveled through Europe as a street musician, then studied at Boston's Berklee School of Music for three years before returning to Ottawa to play the organ in a Top 40 cover band and harmonica in a blues band. He made his recording debut in 1970 as a soloist; his first two albums, Bruce Cockburn and High Winds, White Sky, were released in Canada on True North and appeared in the U.S. on Epic, but his next four appeared only in Canada. There he began to win wide acclaim. In 1976 he signed with Island and made forays into the U.S.; his first Millennium album included his first and, to date, only U.S. hit, "Wondering Where the Lions Are" (#21, 1980).

With 1980's Humans, Cockburn's work began focusing on political and humanitarian issues, inspired not only by his religious beliefs but by fact-finding trips to strife-torn areas around the globe. He is perhaps best known to U.S. audiences through his 1984 single "If I Had a Rocket Launcher," which, although it peaked at #88, was an oft-seen video on MTV. Mummy Dust, alternately titled Resumé, summed up his first 10 albums.

Cockburn remained faithful to his social and political activism through the '90s, and he performed at President Clinton's inauguration in 1993. But while critics applaud his eclecticism and craft, his albums have only rarely broken in the Top 100 in the U.S., where he is mostly known as a "musician's musician." Indeed, 1997's The Chanty of Night featured an array of prestigious guests such as Bob Weir, Rob Wasserman, Ani DiFranco, Bonnie Raitt, and Mana Muldaur, while 1999's Breakfast in New Orleans, Dinner in Timbuktu included Lucinda Williams and Margo Timmins (of Cowboy Junkies).

British white-soul singer Joe Cocker parlayed Ray Charles-ish vocals and an eccentric stage presence into a string of late-'60s hits only to suffer from his excesses in drugs and alcohol by the mid-'70s. In the '80s and '90s, however, he went from tragic figure to well-respected interpreter, and his gritty, powerful voice remains one of the most distinctive in rock & roll.

Cocker attended Sheffield Central Technical School and worked as a gas fitter for the East Midlands Gas Board. In 1959 he joined his first group, the Cavaliers, playing drums and harmonica. He moved to lead vocals in 1961, and the band changed its name to Vance Arnold (Cocker) and the Avengers. They released regional singles and toured locally with the Hollies and the Rolling Stones. Decca offered Cocker a contract in 1964, and he took a six-month leave of absence from the gas company. Cocker's version of the Beatles' "I'll Cry Instead" (which he hated so much that he refused to sing it onstage) and an English tour opening for Manfred Mann were ignored, and he went back to his day job.

The following year Cocker and keyboardist Chris Stainton assembled the Grease Band with guitarists Henry McCullough and Alan Spenner and two other musicians. They played Motown covers in northern England pubs until 1967, when producer Denny Cordell became Cocker's manager and persuaded him and the band to move to London. A Cocker-Stainton song, "Marjorine," became a minor British hit, and after some exposure in London, Cocker and the Grease Band recorded With a Little Help From My Friends in 1968 with guests Jimmy Page, Steve Winwood, and others. The title track, one of many cover versions Cocker would record over his career, went to #1 in England and #68 in the U.S. His explosive performance of the song at Woodstock was a festival highlight, and his habit of wildly flailing his arms as he sang became as much a rock archetype as Pete Townshend's windmill. When Cocker sang Traffic's "Feelin' Alright" on The Ed Sullivan Show in 1969, the program's producer hid him behind a group of dancers—shades of Elvis Presley and his wiggling hips.

During the U.S. tour, Cocker met Leon Russell, who wrote "Delta Lady" and coproduced Joe Cocker!, the Grease Band's swan song. Russell also pulled together the assemblage of musicians, hangers-on, and animals for the boisterous Mad Dogs and Englishmen tour Cocker made in 1970, resulting in a #2 live double album that yielded a pair of hits—"The Letter" (#7, 1970) and "Cry Me a River" (#11, 1970)—and a film. But the tour left Cocker broke and ill. On a 1972 tour, with Stainton again leading the band, Cocker was often too drunk to remember lyrics and to hold down food, although material from that tour was released in 1976 as Live in L.A. Cocker toured Britain and then Australia, where he was arrested for possession of marijuana.

At the height of his troubles, Cocker had one of the biggest hits of his career, the achingly tender modern standard "You Are So Beautiful" (#5, 1975), written by Billy Preston. He recorded regularly throughout the '70s, but without much success. In 1976 he sang on TV's Saturday Night Live, with comedian John Belushi doing a deadly accurate parody behind him. Given Cocker's state at the time, it seemed more cruel than funny.

Cocker's career turned around in 1982. A duet with Jennifer Warnes, "Up Where We Belong," from the movie An Officer and a Gentleman, hit #1. Since then, several other Cocker songs have graced films, including his version of Randy Newman's "You Can Leave Your Hat On" (9½ Weeks, 1986) and "When the Night Comes" (An Innocent Man, 1990). The latter, a dramatic hard-rock ballad cowritten by Bryan Adams, hit #11 in 1990.

Cocker, who moved to Colorado in 1991, continues to record and tour—sometimes accompanied by old friend Chris Stainton—and remains a popular live attraction in Europe. His 1994 album, Have a Little Faith, hit the UK Top 10, and at the request of his German label he revisited several songs from his own catalogue, including "You Are So Beautiful" and "Delta Lady," on 1996's Don Was–produced Organic

Cocteau Twins

Formed 1981, Grangemouth, Scot.

Robin Guthrie (b. Jan. 4, 1962, Grangemouth), gr., various instr.; Elizabeth Fraser (b. Aug. 29, 1963, Grangemouth), voc.; Will Heggie, bass.

1982—Garlands (4AD); Lullabies EP 1983—(–Heggie) Head Over Heels; Peppermint Pig EP; Sunburst and Snowblind EP 1984—(+Simon Raymonde [b. One of contemporary pop's more distinctive and prolific acts, Cocteau Twins have maintained an avid cult following since the early '80s. While their singles have only occasionally entered the Top 40 in England (though they've topped the U.K.'s independent charts without fail), and have never done so in the U.S., the band is appreciated by many critics and progressive pop fans for its lush, dreamy sound, which centers on Elizabeth Fraser's ethereal vocals and composer/producer/multi-instrumentalist Robin Guthrie's inventive use of modern musical devices like tape loops, echo boxes, and drum machines. Fraser and Guthrie are partners outside the studio as well; longtime lovers, they had a daughter together in 1989.

The couple met in 1979, when Guthrie spotted Fraser dancing in a pub. At the time, he and bassist Will Heggie were forming a band, and after hearing Fraser sing, they recruited her, completing the Cocteau's original lineup. In 1982 the trio signed with the British label 4AD and released its debut album, Garlands, which drew wide praise and attracted the interest of influential BBC Radio 1 DJ John Peel. Heggie quit the band soon afterward, though, leaving Fraser and Guthrie to record their second album, Head Over Heels, as a duo. Also in 1983 Guthrie and Fraser were involved in This Mortal Coil, for which they recorded Tim Buckley's "Song to the Siren" on the album It'll End in Tears (4AD).

The Twins became a threesome again later that year, with the addition of bassist Simon Raymonde (ex-Drowning Craze), who would eventually play an active role in writing, arranging, and producing the band's songs. He also participated in some of the 1983–84 sessions for This Mortal Coil. (Fraser also emerged as more of a creative contributor as time went on.) In the years that followed, Cocteau Twins put out several albums and/or EPs a year. They moved to Capitol for the 1993 release, Four-Calendar Café, which they supported in 1994 with their first world tour in four years. The group used a four-piece backing band for the first time and also made their debut appearance on U.S. television, performing on The Tonight Show With Jay Leno.

In 1995 Cocteau Twins issued a pair of EPs, Twinlights, a largely acoustic affair, and Otherness, which explored more ambient terrain. Milk & Kisses reprised some of the material from those two EPs and included lyrics drawn from Fraser's daily journal. The album is less impressionistic than much of the group's catalogue and is perhaps their most song-based effort to date. The trio also wrote a tune for the Judge Dredd soundtrack before calling it quits in 1996 (Fraser and Guthrie had already split up as a couple). Guthrie and Raymonde formed the Bella Union record label while Fraser went on to work with Massive Attack and Craig Armstrong and to sign a solo deal with the Blanco Y Negro label.

David Allan Coe

Born Sep. 6, 1939, Akron, OH

1970—Penitentiary Blues (SSS) 1974—Mysterious Rhinestone Cowboy (Columbia); Mysterious Rhinestone Cowboy Rides Again 1976—Once Upon a Rhyme; Long-Haired Redneck 1977—David Allan Coe Rides Again; Tattoo 1978—The Family Album 1979—Human Emotions 1980—I've Got Something to Say 1981—Invictus Means Unconquered 1982—D.A.C. 1983—Castles in the Sand 1984—For the Record: The First 10 Years 1989—Crazy Daddy 1990—1990 Songs for Sale (DAC) 1994—Standing Too Close to the Flame; Granny's Off Her Rocker 1996—Living on the Edge 1997—Live! If That Ain't Country . . . (Lucky Dog/Columbia) 1999—Recommended for Airplay.

Singer/songwriter David Allan Coe is the composer of country hits like Tanya Tucker's "Would You Lay With Me (in a Field of Stone)" and Johnny Paycheck's "Take This Job and Shove It." Coe's life is the stuff of outlaw legends. Orphaned at age nine, he was arrested the next year for stealing a car. After spending several years in an Ohio reformatory, he was released on parole, only to be arrested again for possession of obscene material (a comic book). He was sentenced to the Ohio State Correctional Facility. (He later falsely claimed to have fatally stabbed a fellow convict, for which he spent three months on death row before Ohio abolished the death penalty. None of it ever happened.) In the early '90s, without a record label, Coe admitted some regret over his past "outlaw" image.

By the time he was finally released in 1967, he had been writing songs for 14 years. Encouraged by fellow prisoner Screamin' Jay Hawkins, Coe pursued his music career and with singer Hugh X. Lewis' help met music publisher Audie Ashworth and producer Shelby Singleton, who helped get Coe a contract with his Plantation label. Coe later signed with Columbia. Coe's albums sold respectably through the '70s and early '80s, though his greatest success has been as a songwriter of hits for other artists. In 1976 he was featured in a PBS documentary, The Mysterious Rhinestone Cowboy, so titled because of the mask Coe wore onstage in his early days. Only his 1983 album, Castles in the Sand, hit the pop chart, at #183, but he scored a #1 country hit with "The Ride" (about a singer's encounter with Hank Williams' ghost) and "Mona Lisa Lost Her Smile." He has also appeared in several films, among them The Last Days of Frank and Jesse James (with Willie Nelson, Waylon Jennings, Johnny Cash, and Kris Kristofferson).

Coe, who never stopped touring and recording even when he was without a record label, underwent a resurgence in the late '90s. He was signed to Sony's new alternative-country imprint and was embraced by a new generation of performers, who identified with his bad-boy image. In 2000 he opened Kid Rock's summer tour and collaborated with Dallas metal band Pantera. Coe ran into controversy again with the CD reissue of Underground and Nothing Sacred, a pair of X-rated albums brimming with racist, sexist, and homophobic material that he sold through biker magazines in the early '80s. Despite refusing to put his name on the CD, Coe sells it on his own Web site.

Leonard Cohen

Born Sep. 21, 1934, Montreal, Can.

1968—Songs of Leonard Cohen (Columbia) 1969—Songs From a Room 1971—Songs of Love and Hate 1972—McCabe and Mrs. Miller soundtrack (CBS) 1973—Live Songs (Columbia) 1974—New Skin for the Old Ceremony 1975—Best of Leonard Cohen 1977—Death of a Ladies' Man 1979—Recent Songs 1984—Various Positions (PVC) 1988—I'm Your Man (Columbia) 1992—The Future 1994—Cohen Live 1998—Live Songs (Sony International).

Singer/songwriter Leonard Cohen was a noted poet and novelist before turning to music in the '60s. His songs have been widely covered by Judy Collins ("Suzanne," "Famous Blue Raincoat") and Aaron Neville ("Bird on a Wire"), among others, and in Europe his aura of quasi-suicidal romantic despair has won him acclaim as an heir of Jacques Brel.

Cohen studied English literature at Montreal's McGill University and later at Columbia University in New York, and published his first book of poems, Let Us Compare Mythologies, in 1956. In 1957 he recited his poetry to jazz piano backup, Beat-style. Cohen tried and failed to sell songs in the late '50s, and continued to write poems as well as two novels, The Favorite Game (1963) and Beautiful Losers (1966).

He set some poems from his 1966 collection, Parasites of Heaven, to simple chord progressions; Judy Collins recorded one of them, "Suzanne," for her album In My Life, and she brought Cohen onstage at a 1967 Central Park concert. Cohen performed at the 1967 Newport Folk Festival, and his debut album came out early in 1968. Songs from that album later appeared on the soundtrack of Robert Altman's McCabe and Mrs. Miller.

After his second album, which included "Bird on a Wire" and "Famous Blue Raincoat," Cohen began extensive touring of the U.S. and Europe and appeared in 1970 at the Isle of Wight festival. Although he entertained Israeli troops in 1973, he cut back on touring after 1971's Songs of Love and Hate. Cohen lived on a Greek island in the mid-'70s and continued to write poems, prose, and songs. In 1976 he resumed touring, and in 1977 he collaborated with producer Phil Spector on Death of a Ladies' Man, which also included backing vocals by Bob Dylan. He pronounced the finished album mix a "catastrophe," and on Recent Songs he returned to a more conventional folk-pop style. Various Positions evinced Cohen's fascination with religious themes.

With Cohen's dry, flat baritone intoning his hard-bitten, topical poems over sleek, modern-sounding tracks, I'm Your Man suddenly made him hip and prompted a 1991 tribute album, I'm Your Fan, with Cohen songs recorded by such college-radio stars as R.E.M., Nick Cave, Lloyd Cole, and others. The Future has been Cohen's best-seller to date; its anthem "Democracy" was performed by Don Henley at MTV's January 1993 inaugural Ball for President-elect Bill Clinton. Two years later another tribute album, Tower of Song: The Songs of Leonard Cohen, featured versions of his compositions by Bono, Elton John, Willie Nelson, and others.

Cohen has published many other books, including The Spice-Box of Earth (1961), Flowers for Hitler (1964), Selected Poems, 1956-1968 (1968), The Energy of Slaves (1972), Death of a Lady's Man (1978), Book of Mercy (1984), and Stranger Music (1993). His interest in film is strong, too: his 1984 short feature, "I Am a Hotel," received Academy Award consideration. A student of Buddhism since the early '70s, Cohen made his home between 1993 and mid-1999 in the Mount Baldy Zen Center, a monastery near L.A.

Marc Cohn

Born July 5, 1959, Cleveland, OH
1991—Marc Cohn (Atlantic) 1993—The Rainy Season
1998—Burning the Daze.

Singer/keyboardist Marc Cohn writes songs that fuse the influences of '60s soul music and '70s singer/songwriter pop. On the strength of his self-titled debut album, he earned the 1991 Grammy for Best New Artist.

Cohn grew up in Cleveland, where he listened to Van Morrison, Jackson Browne, James Taylor, and the Band. He taught himself to play the piano while attending Oberlin College and performed solo in L.A. clubs before moving to New York in the '80s and founding a 14-piece band, the Supreme Court. Discovered by Carly Simon, the blues-based outfit played at Caroline Kennedy's 1986 wedding but broke up after only five performances.

Cohn then began concentrating on songwriting, eventually landing a contract with Atlantic. Producing his own debut, he scored a #13 hit in 1991 with "Walking in Memphis," an homage to that city's blues players and its most famous former resident, Elvis Presley. The song was covered by numerous performers, among them Tom Jones. The Rainy Season, bluesier and more somber than its predecessor, featured David Crosby, Graham Nash, Bonnie Raitt, and Heartbreaker Benmont Tench. Burning the Daze, released after a five-year hiatus, again showcased thoughtful songwriting that provoked comparisons to the Band and Bruce Springsteen.

Natalie Cole

Born Feb. 6, 1950, Los Angeles, CA
1975—Inseparable (Capitol) 1976—Natalie 1977—Thankful
1978—Natalie . . . Live! 1979—We're the Best of Friends (with Peabo Bryson) 1980—Don't Look Back 1981—Happy Love
1983—I'm Ready (Epic) 1984—The Natalie Cole Collection (Capitol) 1985—Dangerous (Modern) 1987—Everlasting (Manhattan) 1989—Good to Be Back (EMI) 1991—Unforgettable With Love (Elektra) 1993—Take a Look
1994—Holly & Ivy 1996—Stardust 1999—Snowfall on the Sahara; The Magic of Christmas (with the London Symphony Orchestra) 2000—Greatest Hits, vol. 1.

When Natalie Cole debuted in 1975, she was hailed as the next Aretha Franklin, and Inseparable brought her a gold record and two Grammys, including that year's Best New Artist. But by 1983 a decade-long drug problem forced her career into a downward spiral from which she did not reemerge commercially until 1987. An early-'90s "duet" with her late father (made possible by electronic editing) brought her biggest success yet.

The second of Nat "King" Cole's five children, Natalie grew up in the exclusive Hollywood enclave known as Hancock Park. Her father died of lung cancer when she was 15, and she moved east several years later to attend the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, where she began singing in local clubs with a group called Black Magic and earned a degree in child psychology. Although she was arrested for possession of heroin in Canada in 1973 and continued to have problems with alcohol and cocaine through the following decade, Cole launched an initially dazzling career. She met her first husband, songwriter Marvin Yancy (they married in 1976), when he and his partner Chuck Jackson coproduced Inseparable. Her critically acclaimed debut included "This Will Be" (#6 pop, #1 R&B, 1975) and "Inseparable" (#32 pop, #1 R&B, 1976).

She subsequently released a top-selling album nearly every year throughout the '70s and made consistent appearances on the singles chart: "Sophisticated Lady" (#25 pop, #1 R&B, 1976), "I've Got Love on My Mind" (#5 pop, #1 R&B, 1977), and "Our Love" (#10 pop, #1 R&B, 1978). In 1978 she hosted The Natalie Cole Special on prime-time TV. The next year she teamed up with Peabo Bryson for an album and two R&B Top 20 singles, "Gimme Some Time" and "What You Won't Do for Love." Despite her auspicious beginning and a strong run on the R&B chart, it would be about nine years before her next pop/Top 20 hits: 1987's "Jump Start" (#13 pop, #2 R&B) and "I Live for Your Love" (#13 pop, #4 R&B), and a cover of Springsteen's "Pink Cadillac" (#5 pop, #9 R&B, 1988) from her first commercial comeback, Everlasting (#42, 1987). Two duets with Ray Parker Jr., "I Don't Think That a Man Should Sleep Alone" (#5 R&B) and "Over You" (#5 pop, #10 R&B), were also released in 1987. In 1989 she scored another hit with "Miss You Like Crazy" (#7) and married her second husband, Andre Fischer, a producer and former member of the group Rufus.

Cole, who spoke openly of growing up in her father's shadow and in 1983 appeared on Johnny Mathis' Cole tribute album (Unforgettable—A Tribute to Nat "King" Cole), swept the Grammy Awards in 1992 with her quintuple-platinum #1 album Unforgettable With Love, a tribute to her father. On it she not only recorded a number of his best-known songs but, in a feat of technical wizardry, produced a duet and video of her "singing with" him on the title track. (Hank Williams Jr. did the same thing in 1992 using old recordings of his father for "There's a Tear in My Beer.") That album garnered six Grammys, including Record of the Year, Album of the Year, and Song of the Year (for "Unforgettable").

In 1993 she made her acting debut in the acclaimed TV series I'll Fly Away and released Take a Look, another collection of pop standards from a range of artists, among them Billie Holiday, Carmen McRae, and her father. "Take a Look" from that album reached #68 in 1993 and earned her yet another Grammy, for Best Jazz Vocal Performance.

In 1996 the singer released another collection of standards, Stardust (#20 pop, #11 R&B), which included a new "collaboration" with her father on "When I Fall in Love." She returned to her pop and R&B roots with Snowfall on the Sahara (#163 pop, #64 R&B, 1999), cowriting the title track with Peter Wolf and covering Bob Dylan's "Gotta Serve Somebody." In the fall of 2000 Cole published her autobiography, Angel on My Shoulder, in which she frankly detailed her addiction to cocaine and heroin; she also played herself from age 35 on in the TV biopic Livin' for Love: The Natalie Cole Story.

Paula Cole

Born Apr. 5, 1968, Rockport, MA
1994—Harbinger (Imago) 1996—This Fire (Warner Bros.)
1999—Amen.

Singer, songwriter, and pianist Paula Cole gained fame as part of the Lilith Fair sisterhood of women musicians who topped the charts and packed arenas in the late '90s, bringing the singer/songwriter genre back into the pop spotlight after some 20 years in the wings. Cole's wry single about a failing marriage, "Where Have All the Cowboys Gone?" (#8, 1997), catapulted her to stardom and won the singer a Grammy for Best New Artist.

Raised in the small town of Rockport, Massachusetts, Cole played an active role in chorus and school musicals at an early age. By high school, the cheerleader, junior prom queen, and three-time class president excelled in academics and, with the blessings of her artist mother and biology professor father, attended the prestigious Berklee College of Music in Boston. There, suffering from depression, she began writing dark, introspective songs in a style influenced by arty singer/songwriters like Kate Bush. (One of those songs, "Bethlehem"—about growing up in repressed, upper-middle-class white culture—wound up on her debut album, Harbinger.)

After graduating from Berklee, Cole moved to San Francisco, continued writing songs at a furious pace, and in 1993 signed to Imago Records. Prior to its release, Harbinger landed in the hands of Peter Gabriel, who had worked with Kate Bush and liked Cole's album so much that he asked her to sing on his 1993-94 Secret World tour. Inspired by Gabriel's onstage dynamic, Cole began performing her own songs with a thespian's sense of gesture and movement.

In 1995, after Imago's demise, Cole moved to Warner Bros. and recorded her second album, This Fire, which she produced herself. Released in October 1996, the album yielded the 1997 single "Cowboys," which helped to finally propel the album to #20. By the time Cole appeared on the summer 1997 Lilith Fair Tour, her star had risen. Eventually selling 2 million copies, This Fire wound up with seven Grammy nominations (including one for Best Producer, the first time in Grammy history that a woman had been nominated for such). By early 1998, the album's second single, "I Don't Want to Wait," reached #11, helped along by its inclusion in the popular TV series Dawson's Creek.

In 1999 Cole returned with another self-produced album, Amen (#97), a more R&B-flavored recording, which sold only modestly.

Ornette Coleman

Born Mar. 19, 1930, Fort Worth, TX
1958—Something Else! (Contemporary) 1959—Tomorrow Is the Question; Twins (Atlantic); The Shape of Jazz to Come; Change of the Century 1960—This Is Our Music; Free Jazz 1961—Jazzlore; Ornette Coleman, vol. 29; Ornette!; Ornette on Tenor 1962—Town Hall Concert (Blue Note); Town Hall Concert 1962 (ESP) 1965—The Great London Concert (Freedom); At the Golden Circle, vols. 1 and 2 (Blue Note) 1966—Empty Foxhole; Who's Crazy (Affinity) 1967—Saints and Soldiers (RCA); The Music of Ornette Coleman: Forms and . . . (Bluebird) 1968—New York Is Now!; Love Call (Blue Note) 1969—Crisis (Impulse!); Ornette at 12 1970—Friends and Neighbors (Flying Dutchman); The Art of the Improvisers (Atlantic) 1971—Science Fiction (Columbia); Broken Shadows 1972—Skies of America 1976—Body Meta (Artist's House) 1977—Dancing in Your Head (Horizon); Soapsuds, Soapsuds 1979—Of Human Feelings (Antilles); Broken Shadows (Columbia) 1985—Opening the Caravan of Dreams (Caravan of Dreams); Prime Design/Time Design 1986—Song X (with Pat Metheny) (Geffen) 1987—In All Languages 1988—Virgin Beauty (CBS Portrait) 1993—Beauty Is a Rare Thing (Atlantic/Rhino) 1995—Tone Dialing (Harmolodic) 1996—Colors: Live From Leipzig (PolyGram); Hidden Man; Three Women (Harmolodic).

Ornette Coleman's bluesy, playful music revolutionized jazz in the '60s by ignoring regular harmonies and rhythms. In the '70s he formalized his "harmolodic" theory and applied it to rock instrumentation with his group, Prime Time, pioneering a powerful and increasingly influential jazz-rock-funk-ethnic-music fusion. In the late '90s, he enjoyed a considerable revival of interest.

Coleman taught himself to play alto sax in his early teens. At 16, he switched to tenor sax and began playing in R&B and jazz bands around the South. His unorthodox notions of music were already meeting resistance (he switched back to alto sax when three members of the audience in Baton Rouge threw his tenor sax over a cliff), and he got used to getting fired. In 1950 he wrote an unpublished book in which he theorized that melody "has nothing to do with harmony or chords or key centers."

In 1952 he went to L.A. with the Pee Wee Crayton Band. He returned to Fort Worth after Crayton fired him, then returned to L.A. in 1954. The L.A. jazz community ignored him for most of the decade. In 1958 he formed his first band with trumpeter Don Cherry, bassist Charlie Haden, and drummer Billy Higgins and established a mode of playing in which, as he explained, "no one player has the lead; anyone can come out with it at any time."

In 1959 the Coleman quartet went to New York, where their engagements and recordings developed the concept of

"free jazz." For Free Jazz, a collective improvisation, Coleman employed a "double quartet" (drummers Higgins and Ed Blackwell, trumpeters Cherry and Freddie Hubbard, bassists Haden and Scott LaFaro, and reedmen Coleman and Eric Dolphy)

Coleman withdrew from the public between 1962 and 1965, during which time he taught himself to play the trumpet and violin. When he resumed performing, he introduced compositions for these instruments and for wind quintets, larger chamber orchestras, and vocalists. He rarely performed with a regular band, although he continued to collaborate with Haden, Cherry, Higgins, Blackwell, and tenor saxophonist Dewey Redman. (In the late '70s Cherry, Haden, Redman, and Blackwell formed Old and New Dreams, playing their own music and occasional new Coleman tunes.) He also played with saxophonist Pharoah Sanders, drummer Elvin Jones, and Yoko Ono, whose 1968 performance with Coleman's band is documented on her 1970 Yoko Ono/Plastic Ono Band.

A Guggenheim fellowship allowed him to compose Skies of America, a long work for orchestra that he debuted at 1972's Newport in New York Festival and recorded later that year with the London Symphony Orchestra. Skies of America introduced his theory of "harmolody," in which harmonies, rhythms, and melodies function independently.

Coleman went to Morocco in 1973 to record with the Master Musicians of Joujouka (a short selection was included on Dancing in Your Head), and in New York and Paris, he became interested in the guitar and electrified instruments and started working with guitarist James Blood Ulmer. He rehearsed a new band, Prime Time—electric guitarists Bern Nix and Charles Ellerbee, electric bassist Jamaaladeen Tacuma, and drummers Ronald Shannon Jackson and his son Denardo Coleman—for two years before recording Dancing in Your Head in Paris and introducing them at the 1977 Newport in New York Festival.

Prime Time's music incorporated rock and funk rhythms and melodic fragments that recall Joujouka and R&B among its harmolodic possibilities; Coleman stated that he considered it dance music. The band's instrumentation—especially in latter-day lineups—suggested a double rock band version of Coleman's double quintets. In the early '80s ex-Prime Time members Ulmer and Jackson started their own harmolodic rock-funk bands, and Coleman returned to public performances, touring the U.S. and Europe in 1982.

Song X, a 1986 collaboration with guitarist Pat Metheny (who had covered Coleman tunes on his own recordings), was a critical success; later that year the two men toured together with a band that included Charlie Haden, Jack DeJohnette, and Denardo Coleman. Denardo, who had made his recording debut with his father when he was 10, was now both a drummer in Ornette's band and his business manager.

In 1987—to celebrate the 30th anniversary of the formation of the original quartet—Coleman released In All Languages, pairing a reunited version of the 1957 acoustic group and a 1987 electric band both covering the same material.

Virgin Beauty featured a guest appearance by Grateful Dead guitarist Jerry Garcia, a longtime Coleman admirer. Coleman participated in the formation of the Caravan of Dreams, an arts center that opened in his hometown of Fort Worth, Texas. An affiliated record label released Coleman's next few recordings.

Coleman continued writing for all manner of instrumentation and size; later editions of Prime Time mixed acoustic and electric instruments. In 1993 Coleman's monumental Atlantic recordings were released in an acclaimed CD box set, Beauty Is a Rare Thing.

In 1997 Coleman was inducted into the American Academy of Arts and Letters. Also that year New York's Lincoln Center hosted a festival of his work featuring a performance of Skies of America by the New York Philharmonic and the surviving members of Prime Time; concurrently, a long Coleman composition, "? Civilization," received its world premiere in Paris.

Albert Collins

Born Oct. 1, 1932, Leona, TX; died Nov. 24, 1993, Las Vegas, NV

1965—The Cool Sound of Albert Collins (TCF Hall) 1969—Truckin' With Albert Collins (Blue Thumb); Love Can Be Found Anywhere (Even in a Guitar) (Imperial); Trash Talkin' 1970—The Complete Albert Collins 1972—There's Gotta Be a Change (Tumbleweed) 1978—Ice Pickin' (Alligator) 1980—Frostbite 1981—Frozen Alive! 1983—Don't Lose Your Cool 1984—Live in Japan 1985—Showdown! (with Robert Cray and Johnny Copeland) 1986—Cold Snap 1991—Iceman (Pointblank/Charisma); The Complete Imperial Recordings (EMI) 1993—Collins Mix (Pointblank/Charisma).

Guitarist/singer/songwriter Albert Collins' hard-rocking Texas shuffle blues and his gregarious showmanship have made him one of the most popular contemporary bluesmen. Jimi Hendrix once called him "one of the best guitarists in the world," and six of his albums have been nominated for Grammy Awards; in 1986 Showdown!, recorded with Robert Cray (who had played in Collins' backing band) and Johnny Copeland, won for Best Traditional Blues Recording.

The son of sharecroppers, Collins grew up in rural Texas before moving to Houston's Third Ward ghetto at age nine. He studied the piano in school, and a cousin gave him a cheap electric guitar and taught him the unusual minor-key tuning that remains a distinctive aspect of his sound. Another cousin, Sam "Lightnin'" Hopkins, was a primary influence on his single-string guitar technique.

Collins began working the Houston blues-club circuit in 1948, playing with Clarence "Gatemouth" Brown. The following year he formed his own band, the Rhythm Rockers, and fronted them until 1951, when he joined Piney Brown's band. After leaving Brown in 1954, he became a pickup guitarist, performing and occasionally recording with Johnny "Guitar" Watson, Little Richard, and Willie Mae Thornton.

Albert Collins

among others. A 1958 session resulted in his first record, "The Freeze," an instrumental that introduced Collins' "cool sound"—the highly amplified, sustained treble notes of his guitar set against three horns, keyboard (piano or, more often, organ), bass, and drums. Over the next five years he recorded more than a dozen such instrumentals, including "Defrost," "Thaw-Out," "Sno-Cone," and "Hot 'n' Cold." Several were regional hits. "Frosty" reportedly sold a million copies in 1962 without placing on national charts.

Sometime around 1968, blues scholar Bob Hite of Canned Heat discovered Collins playing in a Houston lounge and brought him to the attention of Imperial Records, which awarded him a contract. Collins moved to L.A., where for the next two years he recorded three albums, produced by members of Canned Heat. These were also the first on which he sang. The Canned Heat connection attracted young, white blues fans, and Collins frequently played West Coast rock venues, including the Fillmore West.

In 1971 Collins was the first artist signed to producer Bill Szymczyk's Tumbleweed label, and there he recorded his sole charting R&B single, "Get Your Business Straight" (#46, 1972). But Tumbleweed folded two years later, and he did not record again until 1978. With his band the Icebreakers, he recorded Ice Pickin', which was named Best Blues Album of 1979 by several American and European journals and nominated for a Grammy Award. From then on, through a series of releases on Alligator, he continued to rack up Grammy nominations and solidify his reputation as "the Master of the Telecaster." In the late '80s, he appeared to be on the verge of a mainstream breakthrough. At the insistence of George Thorogood, Collins appeared at Live Aid in Philadelphia in 1985. He appeared in a wine-cooler ad with blues-singing wanna-be Bruce Willis and had a cameo in the film Adventures in Babysitting.

Throughout his career Collins guested on albums by artists as diverse as David Bowie (Labyrinth), John Lee Hooker (Mr. Lucky; Boom, Boom), Branford Marsalis (Super Models in Deep Conversation), and John Zorn (Spillane). He received several W.C. Handy Awards as well. At 61, Collins died at his home of cancer.

As Parliament-Funkadelic's bassist and songwriter, Collins has attracted a personal following to challenge George Clinton's. Already given to spontaneous reproduction, it was natural for P-Funk to spawn Bootsy's Rubber Band. While Bootsy's records have sold better than the parent group's, Collins continues to play with P-Funk on occasion, in addition to his work with other musicians (see George Clinton entry).

Collins worked as a session musician for King Records in his hometown of Cincinnati until James Brown recruited the 16-year-old and his group, the Pacemakers, into his JBs in 1969. Two years later Collins left Brown, and after doing sessions with the Spinners and Johnnie Taylor—and turning down the Spinners' invitation to join them—he joined P-Funk. He became Clinton's right-hand man, contributing music and lyrics to many of P-Funk's best-known songs and helping to formulate the band's doctrine of "silly seriousness." When Clinton negotiated Funkadelic's contract with Warner Bros. in 1976, a solo contract for Collins was part of the deal.

Collins put together Bootsy's Rubber Band from musicians outside the P-Funk family. Guitarist Phelps "Catfish" Collins (Bootsy's elder brother) and drummer Frankie "Kash" Waddy had been Pacemakers and JBs; saxophonist Maceo Parker and trombonist Fred Wesley had been JB stalwarts until Collins lured them to the Rubber Band; others had been members of the Complete Strangers, a Cincinnati band Collins had sponsored: singers Gary "Mudbone" Cooper, Leslyn Bailey, and Robert "Peanuts" Johnson, keyboardist Frederick "Flintstone" Allen (later replaced by Joel "Razor Sharp" Johnson), and trumpeters Rick Gardner and Richard "Kush" Griffith. The Rubber Band became part of P-Funk; its horn section, the Horny Horns, became an integral part of every P-Funk session, and Clinton branchchildren like the Endes of Funkenstein sang with the Rubber Band.

With Clinton collaborating with Collins on material and production, Bootsy's albums were very much in the P-Funk mold: irrepressibly rhythmic, ironic, at once earthy and spacey. The ostensible difference was in their intended audiences. While P-Funk was aimed at older teenage American youths, Bootsy wrote for the "geepies"—kids six to 12 years old who could respond to songs of Collins' alter egos like Casper the Friendly Ghost and Bootzilla. He advocated abstinence from drugs and liquor (if not prepubertal sex) and projected an aura of childlike optimism.

His second and third albums went gold (Player of the Year went to #16 pop and #1 R&B), and he had 10 R&B Top 30 singles in five years: "Stretchin' Out (in a Rubber Band)" (#18, 1976), "I'd Rather Be With You" (#25, 1976), "The Pinocchio Theory" (#6, 1977), "Can't Stay Away" (#19, 1977), "Bootzilla" (#1, 1978), "Hollywood Squares" (#17, 1978), "Jam Fan (Hot)" (#13, 1979), "Mug Push" (#25, 1980), "Take a Lickin' and Keep On Kickin'" (#29, 1982), and "Body Slam!" (#12, 1982).

Aside from his work with the Rubber Band and P-Funk, Collins has produced, arranged, and written songs for other acts. He arranged Johnnie Taylor's 1976 gold hit, "Disco Lady." He produced albums by Zapp and the Sweat Band in 1980 and by Godmoma in 1981. He has also collaborated on songs with Sly Stewart and James Brown. Collins was not heard from again for six years until What's Bootsy Doin'? (#58 R&B, 1988). In the interim he had recorded with an array of artists, including Keith Richards, Bill Laswell, the Last Poets, Buddy Miles, and Wilbert Longmire. He recorded and performed with Deee-Lite and appeared on the record and in the video for their hit "Groove Is in the Heart." In 1994 he appeared in Ice Cube's video for "Bop Gun."

The year 1994 also saw the release of three Bootsy albums (one a best-of) and what appeared to be a resurgence. Resplendent in his freaky wardrobe, Bootsy talked openly about the toll performing and drugs had taken before his hiatus. "I got so tired of living up to that Bootsy character," he told ROLLING STONE in 1994. "I'd become a so-called star, and I just didn't know how to handle it." In 1997 Collins was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame as a member of Parliament-Funkadelic. The following year he released Fresh Outta P' University, which includes an appearance by rapper MC Lyte. Bootsy also appeared alongside his JB's and P-Funk brethren for an interactive "thrill ride" on funk music for Seattle's Experience Music Project (EMP) museum.

Judy Collins, who describes herself as an "interpretive singer," was a major force in '60s folk rock, and her cover versions provided exposure for such then-unknown songwriters as Joni Mitchell, Leonard Cohen, Sandy Denny, and Randy Newman. Her later repertoire incorporated show tunes, pop standards, and cabaret material. Collins' clear, unwavering soprano has been equally effective on "Both Sides Now" (#8, 1968) and "Send in the Clowns" (#36, 1975; #18, 1977).

Inspired by her father, Chuck Collins, a blind bandleader and radio personality in the Rocky Mountain area, she began classical piano training at five and made her public debut at 13 with the Denver Symphony. Collins attended college in Jacksonville, Illinois, and then the University of Colorado.

She became interested in traditional folk music and began playing regularly in local coffeehouses before moving to Chicago around 1960. By then she had married college lecturer Peter Taylor (they were divorced in 1966). Shortly after moving to Chicago, her debut album, A Maid of Constant Sorrow, was released.

She began steady club work and met politically conscious folksinger/songwriters with whom she frequently performed at civil rights rallies. Her later political concerns would include ecology, endangered species, and reproductive rights. Judy Collins #3 and The Judy Collins Concert found her moving away from traditional ballads and focusing on protest material written by Bob Dylan, Tom Paxton, and Phil Ochs.

With In My Life, she abandoned the sparse production of her early folk-oriented efforts for the often idiosyncratic experiments of producer Joshua Rifkin, who later spurred the Scott Joplin revival with his piano ragtime recordings. On Wildflowers, she debuted as a songwriter. For the gold Who Knows Where the Time Goes, her backing ensemble included Stephen Stills on guitar. The alliance prompted a brief affair, which Stills later documented in the Crosby, Stills and Nash hit "Suite: Judy Blue Eyes."

In 1969 she played Solveig in the New York Shakespeare Festival's production of Ibsen's Peer Gynt. Two years later Whales and Nightingales went gold with a #15 single: an unaccompanied choral version of "Amazing Grace." In 1974 Collins codirected the documentary Antonia: A Portrait of the Woman, about a former music teacher turned conductor. It was nominated for an Academy Award.

In 1975 she released one of her best-selling LPs, Judith, which produced a major European hit, "Send in the Clowns" (from Stephen Sondheim's A Little Night Music). Despite the help of veteran producer Jerry Wexler, Bread and Roses did not go gold, and she maintained a very low profile for the next two and a half years. The title track of Hard Times for Lovers would be her last U.S. hit single (#66, 1979).

Collins published her autobiography, Trust Your Heart, in 1987, wherein she detailed her battle with alcoholism (The singer's private life would be shaken again in 1992 when her son Clark, who also had alcohol problems, committed suicide.) Her previous book, Amazing Grace, concerned her experiences with spirituality. She recorded 1989's Innervoces with classical clarinetist Richard Stolzman. In 1992 presidential candidate Bill Clinton revealed that his daughter, Chelsea, was named for Collins' recording of "Chelsea Morning" and that her Colors of the Day was his favorite album of all time. Collins released an album of Bob Dylan songs in 1993. In 1995 she released an album and her first novel, both titled Shameless (some of the songs borrowed lines and characters from the novel). The 1997 anthology Forever included four new songs, one of which was a collaboration with the Gin Blossoms' Jesse Valenzuela. The year 1998 brought another volume of her autobiography, Singing Lessons: A Memoir of Love, Loss, Hope, and Healing. Collins, who maintains a regular touring schedule, has also started her own label, Wildflower.

Color Me Badd

Formed 1987, Oklahoma City, OK

Bryan Abrams (b. Nov. 16, 1969, Oklahoma City), voc.; Mark Calderon (b. Sep. 27, 1970, Oklahoma City), voc.; Sam Watters (b. July 23, 1970, Oklahoma City), voc.; Kevin "KT" Thornton (b. June 17, 1969, Oklahoma City), voc.

1991—C.M.B. (Giant) 1993—Time and Chance 1996—Now & Forever 1998—Awakening (Columbia).

Color Me Badd was part of an early-'90s revival of R&B vocal groups that also included Boyz II Men and En Vogue. The multiracial quartet's 1991 debut sold 4 million copies and spawned the racy hip-hop doo-wop hit "I Wanna Sex You Up" (#2).

All four members attended Northwest Classen High School in Oklahoma City, where they would sing the doo-wop featured in Levi's 501 Blues commercials filmed in the hallways between classes. In time, the group discovered the '60s R&B vocal harmonies of the Dells, the Temptations, and the Four Tops.

In 1987 Kool and the Gang's Robert Bell heard Color Me Badd and helped the group relocate to New York and find a manager. The quartet landed a deal with Giant Records in 1991 and released C.M.B., which peaked at #3 and produced four additional hits: "I Adore Mi Amor" (#1, 1991), "All 4 Love" (#1, 1991), "Thinkin' Back" (#16, 1992), and "Slow Motion" (#18, 1992). Their sophomore release, Time and Chance (#56 pop, #20 R&B, 1993), produced by Jimmy Jam and Terry Lewis and DJ Pooh (Ice Cube), didn't bring the hits, with only the title track charting (#24 pop, #9 R&B, 1993). Likewise, their 1996 followup, Now & Forever, spawned only one hit, "The Earth, the Sun, the Rain" (#21 pop). The album was certainly a disappointment in the U.S. (#113 pop, #39 R&B), yet it strengthened CMB's following in Southeast Asia and Japan, where the album topped the charts.

The group's fourth album, Awakening, didn't even make the U.S. charts, although the single "Remember When" peaked at #48 pop. Nevertheless, Color Me Badd decided to share its "wealth" from the album to honor the victims of the 1995 bombing of the federal building in their hometown of Oklahoma City. The group recorded an alternate version of "Remember When" with local musicians and students and donated the proceeds to a memorial fund.

Shawn Colvin

Born Shawna Lee Colvin, Jan. 10, 1958, Vermillion, SD
1989—Steady On (Columbia) 1992—Fat City 1994—Cover Girl 1995—Live '88 (Plump) 1996—A Few Small Repairs

(Columbia) 1998—Holiday Songs and Lullabies 2001—Whole New You.

When folk-pop artist Shawn Colvin made her recording debut in the late '80s, her graceful melodies, reflective lyrics, and achingly pure soprano led some critics to compare the singer/songwriter to her idol, Joni Mitchell. Fittingly, it was through the help of Suzanne Vega—another heir to Mitchell's cerebral tradition—that Colvin finally landed a major-label contract after years of impressing audiences on the Northeast U.S. club circuit. In 1996 Colvin finally reached mass success with the Grammy-winning A Few Small Repairs.

One of four children, Colvin taught herself to play her brother's guitar when she was 10. Though her inclination was toward folk music, the aspiring singer found herself dabbling in various genres in different regions; she played with a rock band in Illinois and a country-swing outfit in Texas, and did Springsteen covers in California. Eventually Colvin decided to follow her own muse. Settling in New York, she began performing in Greenwich Village, at first covering the work of other local folk artists. Then one of Colvin's own compositions, "I Don't Know Why," earned her an appearance at a folk revue at the Bottom Line, where Vega was also on the bill. The song proved popular with college radio stations in Boston. Meanwhile, Colvin collaborated on material with songwriter/guitarist John Leventhal, who became her romantic partner as well.

In the late '80s Vega enlisted Colvin for backup vocals on the single "Luka," which became Vega's breakthrough hit. Colvin toured Europe with Vega and secured her own deal with Columbia Records. Her debut, Steady On, was produced and cowritten by Leventhal, and included a support vocal from Vega. Despite peaking at only #111 on the pop chart, the album won Colvin a Grammy for Best Contemporary Folk Recording. Her second effort, Fat City, was recorded in the wake of a personal and professional estrangement from Leventhal. Produced by Larry Klein, the album featured guest appearances by Richard Thompson and Bruce Hornsby (she has toured with both), and Klein's then-wife, Joni Mitchell.

In 1993 Colvin married Thompson's tour manager, Simon Tassano, and the couple soon moved to Austin, Texas. For 1994's Cover Girl, Colvin recorded songs by Tom Waits, Bob Dylan, Sting, and others. The following year she and Tassano divorced, and Colvin began working on her next album of original material, with Leventhal back as her cowriter and producer. Released in 1996, A Few Small Repairs (#39) was a strong collection of songs about disillusionment. The first single, "Get Out of This House," was surprisingly upbeat and helped give the album its first round of critical attention. The single earned a Grammy nomination for Best Female Vocal Performance, while the disc was nominated for Album of the Year in 1997. The Grammy ceremony one year later marked a series of changes for Colvin professionally and personally: she had married Mario Erwin, an advertising photographer, the previous year; at 40, she was pregnant with her first child, and the same album's second single, the deceptively troubled character study "Sunny Came Home," won awards for both Record of the Year and Song of the Year. This made Colvin 1997's long-persevering success story. Not only was she a critics' darling, she was a hit with the public, too: "Sunny Came Home" was a Top 10 hit (#7, 1997) and reached #1 on the Adult Contemporary chart.

At the height of her popularity, Colvin worked throughout her pregnancy, embarking on a U.S. club tour and playing a few dates of Lilith Fair, as she also had the previous summer. Just weeks before her due date, she headed into the studio to record Holiday Songs and Lullabies, inspired by a book of lullabies illustrated by Maurice Sendak (of Where the Wild Things Are fame) she'd had as a child. The CD booklet featured some of Sendak's illustrations from the book. In July 1998 Colvin's daughter, Caledonia, was born. In early 2001 Colvin released the much-anticipated Whole New You.

Sean Combs

Born Nov. 4, 1969, New York, NY
1997—No Way Out (Bad Boy) 1999—Forever 2001—The Saga Continues. . . .

Sean Combs' rise in the world of rap could hardly have been more dramatic. After dropping out of college, he became the head of A&R at Uptown Records; in 1993 he was president of his own record company, Bad Boy Entertainment. From there Combs went on to become not only one of the biggest and most controversial producers, songwriters, and performers of the '90s, but also an insatiable entrepreneur and owner of, among other things, his own clothing line and film production company. His career was jeopardized, however, due to criminal proceedings brought against him surrounding a New York nightclub shooting in late 1999; his acquittal was followed by Combs' announcement in March 2001 that he was changing his stage name from Puff Daddy to P. Diddy.

Combs first started promoting hip-hop events during the late '80s while attending Howard University in Washington, DC. Upon the recommendation of rapper Heavy D, Combs began interning at Uptown Records. After just a few months on the job, he became the label's director of A&R, producing records by R&B megastars Jodeci and Mary J. Blige [see entries]. Combs came under attack, though, when nine people were trampled at a benefit concert that he and Heavy D organized at the City College of New York in December 1991. An investigation into whether the two men failed to provide enough security for the overbooked event ensued, as did enough bad press to lead Uptown to fire Combs. A civil suit brought by a woman injured during the melee was later settled out of court.

By 1994, Combs was back on top after negotiating a deal with Arista Records to form Bad Boy Entertainment, installing himself as president and his mother, Janice, as owner. Combs then signed Craig Mack, the Notorious B.I.G. [see entry], and Faith Evans and produced gold or platinum records by each. Bad Boy was on its way to becoming one of the most prolific and successful urban music labels of the '90s. In the process, Combs also produced records by outside artists ranging from Mariah Carey and Aretha Franklin to TLC and Boyz II Men. Combs didn't just oversee the projects he produced, he performed on virtually all of them as well. In 1996 he won the ASCAP award for Songwriter of the Year.

Controversy, however, seemed to follow Combs wherever he went. His detractors claimed that the records he made diluted hip-hop by relying too heavily on rock and pop samples. Then West Coast rapper Tupac Shakur [see entry] accused Combs of involvement in a 1994 shooting in which he was injured. The fracas was an outgrowth of an ongoing rivalry pitting Shakur and Death Row Records owner Suge Knight against Combs and the Notorious B.I.G. (Shakur was gunned down by unidentified killers in 1996, and B.I.G. died in much the same way the following year.)

In 1997, recording under the name Puff Daddy, Combs released his long-awaited solo debut, No Way Out (#1 pop and R&B). The record went gold in its first week and has sold more than 7 million copies to date. It also produced several runaway hit singles, including "Can't Nobody Hold Me Down" (#1 pop and R&B, 1997) and "I'll Be Missing You" (#1 pop and R&B, 1997). The former featured rapper Ma$e and sampled "The Message" by Grandmaster Flash. The latter, a touching farewell to the Notorious B.I.G., included Faith Evans on backing vocals and sampled "Every Breath You Take" by the Police. In 1998 "I'll Be Missing You" also won a Grammy Award for Best Rap Performance by a Duo or Group, while No Way Out earned Combs the Grammy for Best Rap Album. Combs' followup, Forever (#2 pop, #1 R&B, 1999), found his limited skills as a rapper improving, yet it went only platinum, a major disappointment compared to its blockbuster predecessor.

Meanwhile, Combs found himself under suspicion again, this time over a December 27, 1999, altercation at a Manhattan club in which three people were shot and seriously injured. Combs and his girlfriend at the time, singer/actor Jennifer Lopez [see entry], as well as two members of Combs' entourage, were arrested over the incident. Authorities released Lopez, but Combs and his bodyguard were charged with criminal weapons possession, while Combs protégé Jamal "Shyne" Barrow faced charges of attempted murder. Combs was later indicted for bribery for allegedly offering his chauffeur $50,000 and jewelry to claim that the gun found in Combs' car the night of the shooting belonged to him. In March 2001 a New York Supreme Court jury found Combs and his bodyguard not guilty of all charges. Barrow was found not guilty of attempted murder and intentional assault but was convicted on counts of criminal possession of a weapon and assault. A few months after his announcement regarding his impending name change, Combs released The Saga Continues . . . , debuting at #2 on the pop chart, as P. Diddy and the Bad Boy Family

Bill Kirchen solo: 1994—Tombstone Every Mile (Black Top) 1996—Have Love, Will Travel 1997—Hot Rod Lincoln Live! (Hightone) 1999—Raise a Ruckus.

Behind their hard-drinking, deep-toking image, Commander Cody's various bands have always played a virtuosic, revved-up assortment of boogie-woogie, Western swing, country, and rockabilly. Frayne grew up in Brooklyn and studied sculpture and painting at the University of Michigan, during summers he was a lifeguard at Long Island's Jones Beach, where he performed with an all-lifeguard band, Lorenzo Lightfoot A.C. and Blues Band. After graduating, Frayne and some college friends formed the Lost Planet Airmen, which played around the Michigan and Wisconsin area while Frayne taught art for a year at Wisconsin State University. Frayne christened his onstage persona after Commando Cody, Sky Marshal of the Universe, from a 1952 film, The Lost Planet Airmen.

When the band lineup stabilized, they moved to San Francisco in 1969 and earned a local following. Their debut album, Lost in the Ozone, mixed originals like "Seeds and Stems" and oldies, notably a hit remake of Tex Ritter's "Hot Rod Lincoln" (#9, 1972). The followup, Hot Licks, Cold Steel and Truckers Favorites, was recorded on four tracks for a mere $5,000. They toured through the early '70s and had two more minor novelty hits—"Beat Me Daddy Eight to the Bar" and Ritter's "Smoke Smoke Smoke"—before leaving Paramount to sign with Warner Bros.

The making of the band's Warner's debut album was chronicled in Geoffrey Stokes' book Starmaking Machinery. The album included Cody's last U.S. hit, "Don't Let Go." After a 1976 European tour, the Airmen disbanded. The rhythm section of Lance Dickerson and Bruce Barlow joined Roger McGuinn's Thunderbyrd. Cody recorded two albums with singer Nicolette Larson, then toured backed by former band mate Bill Kirchen and his group the Moonlighters in 1979. Kirchen went on to gain a cult following for his solo endeavors, experiencing a renaissance of sorts in the mid-'90s as he became associated with the Americana genre. In addition to appearing on Nick Lowe's Party of One and The Impossible Bird albums and touring with him in 1995, Kirchen has released a string of critically acclaimed solo records.

Commander Cody, who moved back to New York state in 1997, continues to record and tour with an ever-changing lineup of Lost Planet Airmen. Frayne has also found acclaim as a painter, his art has been exhibited in galleries around the world, and he published some of his paintings in the 1979 book StarArt.

The Commodores began as a pop-and-funk sextet, a funky party band whose music was heavily influenced by Sly and the Family Stone and the Bar-Kays. During their second, most commercially successful phase, the Commodores became a popular ballad group led by singer/songwriter Lionel Richie. Following Richie's departure, the group began a third phase, marked by the Grammy-winning memorial tribute "Nightshift." In its latest incarnation, the group is a trio based around cofounders Walter Orange and William King and latter-day member James Dean "J.D." Nicholas.

The six original group members met at a Tuskegee Institute talent show when they were all freshmen. With drummer Walter Orange, the only one with prior professional experience, handling vocals, the group began performing as the Mystics. They later picked the name Commodores out of a dictionary by placing a finger on the page. In the summer of 1969 they traveled via van to Harlem, seeking summer employment. Soon after their arrival, their equipment was stolen, then sold back to them. Undaunted, they landed a gig at Small's Paradise, where they met a local businessman they knew, Benny Ashburn, who became their manager. They signed to Atlantic Records and released one single produced by Jerry "Swamp Dogg" Williams, which did not chart.

In 1971 the group signed to Motown and for the first two years worked as the opening act for the Jackson 5. Because the group refused to conform to the polished Motown style, the Commodores did not record until 1974, when they were teamed up with producer/arranger James Carmichael, who produced all their albums until 1983.

On the first three albums, the Commodores' sound was dominated by a hard funk, which inspired one reviewer to describe them as "black music's answer to heavy metal." The group had several early hits, including "Machine Gun" (#22 pop, #7 R&B, 1974), "I Feel Sanctified" (#75 pop, #12 R&B, 1974), "Slippery When Wet" (#19 pop, #1 R&B, 1975), "Fancy Dancer" (#39 pop, #9 R&B, 1977), and "Brick House" (#5 pop, #4 R&B, 1977). Although each of the group members wrote, Richie eventually became the Commodores' main songwriter, and by 1977 his ballads were taking center stage: "Just to Be Close to You," "Sweet Love," and "Easy" were all Top 10 pop hits.

By 1978, when the group appeared in the disco movie Thank God It's Friday, the Commodores were moving swiftly toward crossover pop stardom, largely on the strength of Richie tunes like "Three Times a Lady" (#1 pop, #1 R&B, 1978), a platinum single that firmly established the Commodores as the premier black pop group. "Sail On" and "Still" were Top 5 pop ballads in 1979.

The Commodores: Thomas McClary, Walter Orange, Ronald LaPread, Milan Williams, William King, Lionel Richie

Richie began to pursue outside projects. He wrote "Lady (You Bring Me Up)" (#8 pop, #5 R&B) and produced "Share Your Love" for Kenny Rogers. He also wrote and performed a duet with Diana Ross on another #1 hit, the title song from the movie Endless Love. In 1982 Richie released his solo debut, Lionel Richie (#3 pop, #1 R&B), featuring his Top 5 hit "Truly." Earlier that year Ashburn died of a heart attack in New Jersey, and Richie departed for a solo career. He was followed a year later by McClary. In the meantime James Dean "JD" Nicholas came aboard, and two years later the group had a #3 pop, #1 R&B hit with Orange's tribute to Marvin Gaye and Jackie Wilson, "Nightshift." The song won a Grammy, but the Top 15 album of the same title was the Commodores' last of new material for Motown.

They moved to Polydor for two albums, but by then LaPreard and Williams had departed, leaving the core membership of Orange, King, and Nicholas. The three cofounded Commodore Records and began releasing greatest-hits packages that featured Orange and Nicholas on all lead vocals. In the U.S. to date, the group has been awarded three platinum albums. Worldwide, the Commodores have sold over 40 million records.

In the meantime, Lionel Richie's spectacular solo success eclipsed even the Commodores at their commercial peak. His self-titled debut peaked at #3 on the pop chart and #1 R&B, followed a year later by the #1 Can't Slow Down, which won the 1984 Grammy for Album of the Year and contained the hit singles "All Night Long (All Night)" (#1 pop, #1 R&B, 1983), "Running With the Night" (#7 pop, #6 R&B, 1983), "Hello" (#1 pop and R&B, 1984), "Stuck on You" (#3 pop, #8 R&B, 1984), and "Penny Lover" (#8 pop and R&B, 1984). It was said to be the biggest-selling album in the history of Motown Records.

In 1985 Richie cowrote "We Are the World" with Michael Jackson, which was recorded for the benefit project USA for Africa, and the next year Richie won an Oscar for the #1 song "Say You, Say Me" from the film White Nights. The streak continued with his third solo effort, Dancing on the Ceiling (#1 pop, #6 R&B, 1986), which featured the #2 title track, "Love Will Conquer All" (#9 pop, #2 R&B, 1986), "Ballena Girl" (#7 pop, #5 R&B, 1987), and "Se La" (#20 pop, #12 R&B, 1987). These three albums alone were certified for U.S. sales of over 18 million copies. In addition, Richie had strong followings in the U.K., Canada, and throughout Europe.

In the late '80s and early '90s Richie faced some hardships that put his recording career on hold, including a messy divorce, surgery to remove a polyp on his throat, and the death of his father. The singer rebounded in 1992 with Back to Front (#19 pop, #7 R&B), a greatest-hits package that included some of his work with the Commodores as well as brand-new songs such as "Do It to Me" (#21 pop, #1 R&B, 1992) and "My Destiny" (#56 R&B, 1992). After yet another break from recording, Richie reentered the pop, R&B, and Adult Contemporary charts with 1996's Louder Than Words (#28 pop, #15 R&B), which yielded "Don't Wanna Lose You" (#39 pop, #17 R&B) and "Ordinary Girl" (#101 pop, #76 R&B). He followed up Louder Than Words with 1998's

Time (#152 pop, #77 R&B) and 2001's Renaissance. He has won a number of awards, including the Oscar and four Grammys.

Johnette Napolitano (b. Sep. 22, 1957, Hollywood, CA), voc., bass; Jim Mankey (b. May 23, 1955, PA), gr.; Harry Rushakoff (b. Nov. 17, 1959, Chicago, IL), drums.

1986—Concrete Blonde (I.R.S.) 1989—Free (–Rushakoff; + Alan Bloch, bass) 1990—Bloodletting (–Bloch; + Paul Thompson [b. May 13, 1951, Jarrow, Eng.], drums) 1991—(–Thompson) 1992—(+Rushakoff) Walking in London 1993—(+Thompson) Mexican Moon 1996—Recollection: The Best of Concrete Blonde 1997—(–Rushakoff) Concrete Blonde y Los Illegals (Ark 21).

Concrete Blonde got its start playing the same early-'80s L.A. club circuit that spawned X, Wall of Voodoo, and the Go-Go's. Though Blonde took a while to settle on a record deal and didn't enjoy a successful single until 1990, it has ultimately proven among the most resilient bands to emerge from that L.A. scene. The lean rock textures and dark, edgy lyricism of Concrete Blonde's music may not have made its members household names, but it has earned the band an enduring level of credibility and respect among critics and fans.

Singer Johnette Napolitano met guitarist Jim Mankey while both were working at Leon Russell's L.A. studio. After Russell relocated to Nashville, Napolitano and Mankey began working on their own songs in a studio owned by Mankey's brother Earle (a founding member of the band Sparks, with whom Jim also played). Calling itself the Dreamers, the duo set out in search of a drummer and a bassist. By 1984 Napolitano herself had assumed bass duties. As Dream 6, the band released an EP on a French independent label that year (Capitol reissued the EP in 1993). Dream 6 was courted by several major labels, but its demands for complete artistic control put off many record company executives. Finally, in 1987, after signing to I.R.S. Records, Concrete Blonde—a name suggested by a fellow I.R.S. artist, R.E.M.'s Michael Stipe—released its debut album, with Harry Rushakoff on drums.

Ex-Roxy Music drummer Paul Thompson took over for Rushakoff on the band's sophomore album and on its third LP, Bloodletting (#49, 1990), which yielded a Top 20 hit with the lovelorn "Joey." Rushakoff reappeared on a less commercially successful fourth album, Walking in London (#73, 1991), and he and Thompson both played on Mexican Moon (#67, 1993). The album's "Heal It Up" became popular on "modern rock" radio formats, but in early 1994 Napolitano decided that she'd had enough and left the band, which resulted in its demise.

In 1995 Napolitano teamed with fellow punk veteran Holly Vincent to record an album titled Vowel Movement, on which both women played all the instruments and sang. The same year Napolitano formed a new band, Pretty & Twisted, with ex-Wall of Voodoo guitarist Marc Moreland and drummer Danny Montgomery; she produced the group's lone, self-titled album. She also recorded vocals for a track on the 1996 Heads album, a short-lived project by the three remaining members of Talking Heads [see entry], and toured with them, taking on David Byrne's parts on the band's older material.

In 1997 Napolitano reestablished her partnership with Mankey when the pair collaborated on an album with East L.A. bilingual rock group Los Illegals. The same year Napolitano produced an album for Maria Fatal, an L.A. Chicano band that then opened for her on solo club dates. She recorded a solo album, The Sound of a Woman, for Island Records in 1998, but when Island founder Chris Blackwell departed, the label dropped her from its roster and didn't release the disc. In 1999 Napolitano focused on studying Mexican art and began to showcase her work at galleries while still performing occasional live gigs.

This Memphis soul band had been together almost 10 years when it placed "Ffun" at the top of the national R&B chart in 1977. In 1968 high school classmates Michael Cooper and Louis McCall formed the group, calling it Project Soul, and established its current lineup within a year. In the early '70s Project Soul relocated to Memphis, backed the Stax Records group the Soul Children (and in that capacity appeared in the 1973 movie Wattstax), and contributed to other Stax sessions. In 1972 the group changed its name to Con Funk Shun. After several local hits on Memphis labels, Mercury signed it in 1976. Con Funk Shun made its first appearance on the R&B chart with "Sho Feels Good to Me" (#66) the following year.

The success of "Ffun" (#23) made Secrets the first of four gold albums. It was followed by the Top 20 R&B hits "Shake and Dance With Me" (#5 R&B, 1978), "Chase Me" (#4 R&B, 1979), "Got to Be Enough" (#8 R&B, 1980), "Too Tight" (#8 R&B, 1980), "Bad Lady" (#19 R&B, 1981), "Ms. Got-the-Body" (#15 R&B, 1983), "Baby, I'm Hooked (Right Into Your Love)" (#5 R&B, 1983), "Electric Lady" (#4 R&B, 1985), "I'm Leaving Baby" (#12 R&B, 1985), and "Burnin' Love" (#8 R&B, 1986). In 1987 after the release of Burnin' Love, Con Funk Shun disbanded. Cooper went on to a solo career, while Felton Pilate has worked with rapper Hammer.

Harry Connick Jr.

Born Sep. 11, 1967, New Orleans, LA

1978—11 (Columbia) 1987—Harry Connick Jr. 1988—20 1989—When Harry Met Sally . . . soundtrack 1990—We Are in Love; Lofty's Roach Soufflé 1991—Blue Light, Red Light 1992—25 1993—When My Heart Finds Christmas 1994—Imagination; She 1995—Whisper Your Name 1995—Star Turtle 1996—All of Me 1997—To See You 1999—Come by Me.

A throwback to the prerock entertainment era, singer/pianist Harry Connick Jr. revives the elegance of classic American singers like Frank Sinatra. Flaunting his retro taste for Tin Pan Alley-style show business and jazz piano exotica, Connick garnered mixed critical reviews but took the country by storm in the late '80s.

The son of New Orleans' chief district attorney, five-year-old Harry played "The Star-Spangled Banner" at his father's inauguration. Due to his father's clout, Harry Jr. was able to attend nightclub performances while still a child. He became friendly with the legendary New Orleans pianist James Booker, who gave the boy lessons at home. As an adolescent, Connick studied at the New Orleans Center for the Creative Arts with Branford and Wynton Marsalis' father, Ellis. At age 11, Connick recorded his first album for Columbia.

Connick's 1987 eponymous album was an instrumental project that showcased his facility as a jazz and New Orleans-style pianist. Named for his age at the time of its release, 20 featured Connick's vocals on a few tracks. His amiable performance style, clean-cut looks, and reverence for the show-biz tradition of the '40s and '50s attracted media attention and fostered a growing cult following. Full-fledged stardom followed Connick's appearance on the soundtrack to the hit film When Harry Met Sally . . . From this point on, Connick the singer and Connick the jazz pianist would be compartmentalized, with singing getting the lion's share of attention.

Mounting an extravagant tour in 1990, which saw him fronting a big band, Connick struck some as an incarnation of the young Sinatra, albeit without the undercurrent of arrogant menace. Singing in a light, self-consciously off-the-cuff manner reminiscent of Sinatra and Bobby Darin, playing New Orleans piano, and bounding about the stage and through the audience with tireless enthusiasm, Connick drew raves from critics and fans apparently starved for old-fashioned entertainment. But Connick wasn't peddling a nostalgia act. On We Are in Love, Connick wrote original songs; Lofty's Roach Soufflé, a jazz piano trio recording, contained Connick's instrumental compositions. For a nonrock act, Connick's sales are staggering: three of his albums have gone platinum, two others are gold.

Unsurprisingly, Connick began appearing in films, acquitting himself in featured roles (Memphis Belle, Little Man Tate, Hope Floats; the voice of the town beatnik in the children's animated Iron Giant). He also appeared on the 1990 Academy Awards telecast to sing the nominated theme from The Godfather, Part III. In 1993 his wholesome image was barely scratched after he was arrested at New York's Kennedy International Airport for trying to take a gun onto a plane; charges were later dismissed.

By the mid-'90s, Connick had established a career on many fronts—as film actor (a role in the blockbuster Independence Day), jazz aficionado (he founded his own Columbia-distributed label, Noptee), and recording artist idiosyncratic enough to veer from big band and funk to the conceptual novelty of Star Turtle, an album that featured the singer communing with a turtle from outer space. Neither the album nor Connick's concert incarnation as a rock star was warmly received. With subsequent albums, Connick returned to the swing and ballads he is best known for.

The Contours

1981—Do You Love Me? (Motown) 1999—The Very Best of the Contours.

Hoarse screams over feverish dance beats characterized the Contours' string of hits in the mid-'60s. Originally a quartet formed in 1958 by Billy Gordon, Billy Hoggs, Joe Billingslea, and Sylvester Potts, the Contours were unknown even in their hometown of Detroit until joined by Hubert Johnson. He had them sing for his cousin Jackie Wilson, and in turn Wilson presented them to Motown owner Berry Gordy Jr. They cut their first record, "Whole Lotta Woman," in 1961, when it flopped. Gordy prepared to drop them. Wilson persuaded Gordy to give them another chance. That chance was a Gordy composition, "Do You Love Me?"—originally intended for the Temptations—which the Contours took to the top of the R&B chart in 1962 (#3 pop). The song was later covered many times, notably by the Dave Clark Five.

While the Contours never repeated the success of the million-selling "Do You Love Me?" they did follow it with five more clear-the-floor-cause-I-gotta-dance numbers: "Shake Sherry" (#21 R&B, 1963), "Can You Jerk Like Me?" (#15 R&B, 1965), "The Day When She Needed Me" (#37 R&B, 1965), "First I Look at the Purse" (#12 R&B, 1965), and "Just a Little Misunderstanding" (#18 R&B, 1966). Their last chart hit, "It's So Hard Being a Loser" (#35 R&B, 1967), was a ballad. One later member of the Contours was future Temptation Dennis Edwards.

In 1988 "Do You Love Me?" reached #11 after being featured in the film Dirty Dancing. The Contours, who include originals members Billingslea and Potts (Johnson committed suicide in 1981), joined the subsequent Dirty Dancing tour. They continue to perform.

Ry Cooder

Boomer's Story 1974—Paradise and Lunch 1976—Chicken Skin Music 1977—Showtime (Warner Bros.) 1978—Jazz 1979—Bop Till You Drop 1980—The Long Riders soundtrack; Borderline 1981—The Border soundtrack (Backstreet) 1982—The Slide Area (Warner Bros.) 1984—Paris, Texas soundtrack 1985—Alamo Bay (Slash) 1986—Blue City (Warner Bros.); Crossroads 1987—Get Rhythm 1989—Johnny Handsome 1993—A Meeting by the River (with V.M. Ry Cooder is a virtuoso on fretted instruments—slide guitar, mandolin, Mexican tiple, banjo, Middle Eastern saz—who crossbreeds his own sense of syncopation with vernacular musics. As a fan/musicologist, he has sought out local styles such as calypso, Hawaiian slack-key guitar, Tex-Mex, gospel, country, vaudeville "coon songs," and most recently, with the Buena Vista Social Club, prerevolutionary Cuban music. He records with L.A. session players and various "ethnic" musicians in and out of their own contexts.

Cooder began playing the guitar when he was three years old. He has had a glass eye since he was four, when he accidentally stuck a knife in his left eye. In the early '60s Cooder became active in Southern California blues and folk circles, and in 1963 he played in an unsuccessful group with vocalist Jackie DeShannon. With Taj Mahal, another musical archivist, he started the Rising Sons in 1966. He also appears on Mahal's debut album. Cooder was a busy session player in the late '60s, working for Gordon Lightfoot and on numerous commercials. He was a member of Captain Beefheart's Magic Band and appeared on Beefheart's Safe As Milk (1967), although he quit just before Beefheart was scheduled to play the Monterey Pop Festival. He also sat in on Little Feat's 1971 debut LP.

Cooder appeared on the soundtracks of Candy (1968) and Performance (1970, with Mick Jagger) and claims to have recorded extensively on the Rolling Stones' Let It Bleed. Although he is credited only for the mandolin on "Love in Vain," he claims to have provided the main riff for the Stones' "Honky-Tonk Women."

Since 1969, when he got a solo contract, Cooder has cut down on session work to concentrate on his yearly albums. His general strategy is to rework obscure songs (mostly pre-'60s) in his own lunging, syncopated style laced with elements from outside rock. He has championed the music of Bahamian guitarist Joseph Spence (a major influence), and he later produced an album by the Gabby Pahinui Hawaiian Band. On 1974's Paradise and Lunch, he recorded a duet with jazz pianist Earl "Fatha" Hines, and following Chicken Skin Music (1976), he toured with a band that included Mexican accordionist Flaco Jiménez and a Tex-Mex rhythm section alongside gospel-style singers Bobby King, Eldridge King, and Terry Evans (documented on the live Showtime).

Jazz actually contained early-jazz ragtime and vaudeville songs. Cooder played a onetime concert at Carnegie Hall with an orchestral group and tap dancers for its unveiling. Bop Till You Drop, Borderline, and The Slide Area turned toward '50s and '60s R&B. Bop was the first major-label digitally recorded album, the next two albums (and attendant tours) featured songwriter John Hiatt. Cooder also provided soundtracks for Blue Collar (1979), The Long Riders (1980), Southern Comfort (1981), The Border (1982), Paris, Texas (1983), Streets of Fire (1984), Cocktail (1988), Steel Magnolias (1989), Geronimo (1993), The End of Violence (1997), and Primary Colors (1998). Selections from his film scores were collected on the double-disc anthology Music by Ry Cooder.

Cooder played only a few session dates in the '70s, behind Randy Newman (Good Old Boys and Sail Away), Arlo Guthrie, and Van Dyke Parks. He joined Nick Lowe, Jim Keltner, and John Hiatt in Little Village, a group whose self-titled debut appeared in early 1992. He recorded with V.M. Bhatt, an Indian musician whom he had not met before recording the critically acclaimed A Meeting by the River. Cooder's critically acclaimed and commercially successful Talking Timbuktu featured Ali Zarka Touré, a West African guitar master, hit #1 on the World Music chart and remained there 25 weeks straight, setting a record for that chart. It won a Grammy for Best World Music Album in 1995.

In 1996 Cooder traveled to Havana, Cuba, to record an album with Cuban and African musicians for the English label World Circuit. When the African musicians couldn't make the trip, Cooder put together an all-star ensemble of Cuban musicians, most in their 70s or 80s, and recorded Buena Vista Social Club (#178, 1998), a celebration of traditional Cuban music forms such as the bolero and the son (a precursor to salsa). Licensed in America by Nonesuch, the album topped Billboard's Latin chart, won a Grammy in 1998 for Best Tropical Latin Performance, and inspired an Oscar-nominated documentary by filmmaker Wim Wenders. Cooder also produced solo albums by two of the BVSC's star players, pianist Ruben Gonzalez and singer Ibrahim Ferrer.

Sam Cooke

Songwriter and performer Sam Cooke merged gospel music and secular themes and provided the early foundation of soul music. Cooke's pure, clear vocals were widely imitated, and his suave, sophisticated image set the style of soul crooners for the next decades.

One of eight sons of a Baptist minister, Cooke grew up in Chicago and was a top gospel artist by 1951. As a teenager, he became lead vocalist of the Soul Stirrers (which later included Johnnie Taylor), with whom he toured and recorded for nearly six years. Cooke's phrasing and urban enunciation were distinctive from the start.

Hoping not to offend his gospel fans, he released his pop debut, "Lovable" (1956), as Dale Cooke, but Specialty dropped him for deserting the Soul Stirrers. He released his own "You Send Me" the following year, and the 17-million-selling #1 song was the first of many hits. In the next two years his several hits—"Only Sixteen" (#28, 1959), "Everybody Likes to Cha Cha" (#31, 1959)—concentrated on light ballads and novelty items. He signed to RCA in 1960 and began writing bluesier, gospel-inflected tunes.

Beginning with his reworking of "Chain Gang" (#2) in August 1960, Cooke was a mainstay in the Top 40 through 1965, with "Wonderful World" (#12, 1960), "Sad Mood" (#29, 1961), "Twistin' the Night Away" (#9, 1962), "Bring It On Home to Me" (#13, 1962), "Another Saturday Night" (#10, 1963), and "Shake" (#7, 1965).

His shooting death on December 11, 1964, tarnished his image. Bertha Franklin, the manager of the Hacienda motel in L.A., claimed she killed the singer in self-defense after he'd tried to rape a 22-year-old woman, then turned on Franklin. The coroner ruled it a justifiable homicide. There still remain questions about the circumstances surrounding Cooke's murder.

Two months after his death his song "Shake" peaked at #7 on the singles chart. Cooke's hits have been covered widely by rock and soul singers; "Shake," for instance, was interpreted by Otis Redding and Rod Stewart. The posthumously released "A Change Is Gonna Come" hit #31 in 1965. It represented a return to Cooke's roots, placing him back in the spiritual setting from which he had first emerged just nine years earlier. Cooke's material continues to be widely covered by rock and soul performers.

Cooke was also a groundbreaking independent black-music capitalist. He owned his own record label (Sar/Derby), music publishing concern (Kags Music), and management firm. His influence can be heard in the work of artists as varied as Michael Jackson and the Heptones, but it is most profoundly felt in the singing of Redding, Stewart, and Al Green. Cooke was one of the first inductees into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1986; three years later the Soul Stirrers entered separately.

Rita Coolidge

Born May 1, 1945, Lafayette, TN

1971—Rita Coolidge (A&M); Nice Feelin' 1972—Lady's Not for Sale 1974—Fall Into Spring 1975—It's Only Love 1977—Anytime . . . Anywhere 1978—Love Me Again 1979—Natural Act (with Kris Kristofferson); Satisfied 1981—Greatest Hits; Heartbreak Radio (with Kris Kristofferson) 1992—Love Lessons (Caliber) 1995—Cherokee (Concept Records) 1996—Out of the Blues (Beacon Records) 1998—Thinkin' About You (404 Music) 2000—Best Of—The Millennium Collection (A&M).

Walela: 1997—Walela (Triloka) 2000—Unbearable Love.

Former backup singer Rita Coolidge became a hitmaking soloist in the late '70s and early '80s. The daughter of a Baptist minister and a Cherokee Indian, she sang in church choirs as a child. In her late teens, she briefly attended Florida State University before moving to Memphis, where she did radio jingles. She cut a locally successful hit single, then moved to L.A.

By 1969 she was recording and touring regularly as part of Delaney and Bonnie and Friends, and she joined much of that same troupe on Joe Cocker's Mad Dogs and Englishmen tour, where her featured rendition of "Superstar" was a highlight. (Leon Russell wrote Cocker's "Delta Lady" about Coolidge.) She continued backup work in the early '70s for Eric Clapton, Stephen Stills, Boz Scaggs, Graham Nash, Marc Benno (who later joined Coolidge's backup band, the Dixie Flyers), and Dave Mason. (Her sister Priscilla recorded with her husband and producer, Booker T. Jones of Booker T. and the MG's.)

In 1971 Coolidge met Kris Kristofferson [see entry], whom she married two years later. By then her first solo album had been released to little response. In 1977 Anytime . . . Anywhere went platinum on the strength of three hit singles

Jackie Wilson's "Higher and Higher" (#2, 1977), Boz Scaggs' "We're All Alone" (#7, 1977), and the Temptations' "The Way You Do the Things You Do" (#20, 1978). She frequently toured with Kristofferson, whose growing movie career provided her with cameo roles in Pat Garrett and Billy the Kid, Convoy, and A Star Is Born. They also collaborated on 1979's Natural Act, released shortly before their divorce in 1980, and collected two Grammys for best country duo.

In the '80s Coolidge scored with "All Time High" (#36, 1983) from the soundtrack to the James Bond thriller Octopussy. Although she hasn't enjoyed any hits since, the singer has remained visible. She was one of the original VJs on the video music channel VH1, sang a duet with former Pink Floyd leader Roger Waters on his Amused to Death solo album; and continued to record. Love Lessons featured duets with country star Lee Greenwood, her sister Priscilla, and Bonnie Bramlett.

In the '90s, Coolidge became increasingly involved in Native American culture and issues. With Priscilla and Priscilla's daughter Laura Satterfield, she formed the trio Walela, whose debut features a version of "Amazing Grace" sung in Cherokee.

Coolio

Born Artis Leon Ivey Jr., Aug. 1, 1963, Los Angeles, CA

1994—It Takes a Thief (Tommy Boy) 1995—Gangsta's Paradise 1997—My Soul.

With WC and the MAAD Circle: 1991—Ain't a Damn Thang Changed (Priority).

Drawing on real-life experiences (as a teen he ran with members of the L.A. Crips) and using a can't-miss sample (Stevie Wonder's 1976 song "Pastime Paradise") rapper Coolio had a worldwide hit in 1995 with his haunting, cautionary anthem, "Gangsta's Paradise." Originally featured on the soundtrack to the Michelle Pfeiffer film Dangerous Minds and later included on his second album (also called Gangsta's Paradise), the song hit the top of the charts in both the U.S. and the U.K., won Coolio a Best Rap Solo Performance Grammy, and was Billboard's #1 single of 1995. Coolio first achieved fame the previous year with his platinum debut, It Takes a Thief (#8 pop, #5 R&B, 1994), and it's #3 crossover pop single "Fantastic Voyage." Prior to that he had recorded an album with WC and the MAAD Circle (1991's Ain't a Damn Thang Changed).

Raised by his mother in Compton, California, Coolio was a bookworm and star student early on (skipping the sixth grade), but he began hanging out with gang members as a teen to keep from getting beaten up. Not long after he began rapping in high school, he spent 10 months in jail on a larceny charge (he was arrested for trying to cash a stolen money order but maintained he was innocent). He was addicted to crack by the time he was 20, but he went straight after a stint as a firefighter with the California Department of Forestry.

Coolio strived for a positive message in his music, drawing on his past for cautionary tales like "Gangsta's Paradise" ("Tell me why are we so blind to see/That the ones we hurt are you and me") rather than songs glorifying crime and violence. In the late '90s, however, he made headlines several times for incidents that belied his clean image. In 1997 Coolio and several members of his group 40 Thievs were charged with committing theft and assault in Germany, and he spent 10 days in jail in 1999 after pleading guilty to felony possession of a firearm.

After 1997's My Soul (#39), which featured the #12 hit "C U When U Get There" Coolio left Tommy Boy and spent the next few years concentrating on his acting career. He seemed primed for a comeback at the end of the decade, guesting on Blondie's own 1999 comeback album No Exit and signing a deal with Allied Artists Records with plans to release a new album. Coolio.com by the end of the year. It had yet to be released at the time of this writing in mid-2001.

Alice Cooper

Born Vincent Furnier, Feb. 4, 1948, Detroit, MI

The group that was formed in the mid-'60s in Phoenix, AZ: Glen Buxton (b. Nov. 10, 1947, Akron, OH; d. Oct. 19, 1997, Clarion, IA), gtr.; Michael Bruce (b. Mar. 16, 1948), gtr., kybds.; Dennis Dunaway (b. Dec. 9, 1948, Cottage Grove, OR), bass; Neal Smith (b. Sep. 23, 1947, Akron, OH), drums.

1969—Pretties for You (Straight) 1970—Easy Action
1971—Love It to Death (Warner Bros.); Killer 1972—School's Out 1973—Billion Dollar Babies 1974—Muscle of Love; Alice Cooper's Greatest Hits (group disbands; Cooper goes solo with backing musicians.) 1975—Welcome to My Nightmare (Atlantic) 1976—Alice Cooper Goes to Hell (Warner Bros.) 1977—Lace and Whiskey; The Alice Cooper Show 1978—From the Inside 1980—Flush the Fashion 1981—Special Forces 1982—Zipper Catches Skin 1983—DaDa 1986—Constrictor (MCA) 1987—Raise Your Fist and Yell 1989—Trash (Epic) 1991—Hey Stoopid 1994—The Last Temptation 1997—Fistful of Alice (Capitol) 1999—The Life and Crimes of Alice Cooper (Rhino) 2000—Brutal Planet (Spitfire).

Between '50s showman Screamin' Jay Hawkins emerging from a coffin and Kiss' Gene Simmons spitting "blood" in the mid-'70s, no one defined shock rock like Alice Cooper. Cooper used violent (and vile) theatrics—simulated executions, the chopping up of baby dolls, and draping himself with a live boa constrictor—and explicit lyrics to become a controversial yet hugely popular figure in the early and mid-'70s. After a decade of fluctuating record sales, Cooper returned to platinum with the #20 1989 LP Trash. Though he is respected by a new generation of hard-rock fans, he never reached this kind of popularity again.

Vincent Furnier, son of a preacher, assembled his hard-rocking band in Phoenix. They were first known as the Earwigs, then the Spiders, and finally the Nazz (not to be confused with Todd Rundgren's band). They moved en masse to L.A. in 1968. Billing themselves as Alice Cooper (who, according to a Ouija board, was a 17th-century witch reincarnated as Furnier), they established themselves on the Southern California bar circuit with a bizarre stage show and a reputation as the worst band in L.A. Frank Zappa's Straight Records released their first two albums, which sold poorly and, with tour costs, left them $100,000 in debt.

The band members moved to Detroit, where they lived for several months in a single hotel room before the release of their major-label debut and breakthrough album, Love It to Death. Joining Cooper's taboo-defying lyrics to powerful hard rock, the album became the first in a string of gold and platinum releases and included "Eighteen" (#21, 1971). Subsequent hit singles included "School's Out" (#7, 1972), "Elected" (#26, 1972), "Hello Hooray" (#35, 1973), and "No More Mr. Nice Guy" (#25, 1973). Killer (#21, 1971), School's Out (#2, 1972), and Billion Dollar Babies (#1, 1973) are all platinum.

In 1973 Surrealist master Salvador Dalí filmed the singer, wearing diamond necklaces and tара, as he bit the head off a small replica of the Venus de Milo for a holographic work. With such widespread success, even amid the gruesome stage sets and macabre makeup, Cooper seemed less threatening.

The band broke up in 1974 and Cooper began using such musicians as ex-Lou Reed guitarist Dick Wagner and Steve Hunter. (In 1977 former band members Bruce Dunaway and Smith formed Billion Dollar Babies and recorded one unsuccessful album.) Alice Cooper—The Nightmare an April 1975 prime-time TV special, seemed to indicate Cooper's acceptance as a mainstream entertainer, as did a handful of appearances on The Hollywood Squares. His then-current hit, "Only Women Bleed" (#12, 1975), was a ballad, as were two subsequent hits: "I Never Cry" (#12, 1976) and "You and Me" (#9, 1977).

In 1978 Cooper committed himself to a psychiatric hospital for treatment of alcoholism, an experience chronicled on From the Inside, which includes some lyrics by Elton John's songwriting partner Bernie Taupin and the hit "How You Gonna See Me Now" (#12, 1978). Neither the hard-rocking Flush the Fashion nor Special Forces was especially successful, and Cooper took a hiatus. He returned in 1986 with Constrictor, followed by Raise Your Fist and Yell, both deep in the heavy-metal vein. The Nightmare Returns Tour and MTV Halloween special brought Cooper's violent, twisted on-stage fantasies to a new generation, and he closed the '80s with the platinum Trash and "Poison" (#7, 1989), his first Top 20 single in more than a decade.

Cooper, for whom Alice is such a character that he speaks of him in the third person in interviews, has also appeared in several films: Prince of Darkness (1988), Freddy's Dead: The Final Nightmare (1991), and most notably Wayne's World (1992). For The Decline of Western Civilization, Part II—The Metal Years, he rerecorded "Under My Wheels" with Guns n' Roses' Axl Rose, Slash, and Izzy Stradlin. Prominent among Cooper's legion of second-generation fans are Steve Vai, Nikki Sixx, Joe Satriani, and Slash, all of whom guested on

Hey Stupid, Soundgarden's singer, Chris Cornell, was on The Last Temptation, while Sammy Hagar and Rob Zombie appeared on the live recording A Fistful of Alice.

His career flagging in the late '90s, Cooper moved away from the power ballads that had marked his '80s records and reunited with producer Bob Ezrin (who had worked on Love It to Death, Killer, and School's Out, among others) on the indie release Brutal Planet, a science-fiction concept album. But despite the return of a guillotine (a mainstay of his '70s shows) as an accessory on the Live From the Brutal Planet Tour, Cooper seems mild compared to the likes of Slipknot or Marilyn Manson, who arguably were directly inspired by him. Not only does he now play family-friendly places such as state fairs but he also opened a restaurant, Alice Cooper's town, in Phoenix.

Julian Cope/The Teardrop Explodes

Born Oct. 21, 1957, Deri, Wales

1980—Kilimanjaro (Mercury) 1981—Wilder 1990—Everyone Wants to Shag the Teardrop Explodes (Fontana). Julian Cope solo: 1984—World Shut Your Mouth (Mercury); Fried 1986—Julian Cope EP (Island) 1987—Saint Julian; Eve's Volcano EP 1988—My Nation Underground 1990—Skellington (CopeCo-Zippo); Droolian (MoFoCo-Zippo) 1991—Peggy Suicide (Island) 1992—Floored Genius: The Best of Julian Cope and the Teardrop Explodes 1979-91; Jehovah Kill 1994—Autogeddon (American); Floored Genius, vol. 2 (Dutch East); Head On (Ma-Gog) 1995—20 Mothers (Autogeddon) 1996—Interpreter (Cooking Vinyl) 1997—Rite2 (Head Heritage, U.K.); The Followers of Saint Julian (Island Masters) 1999—Leper Skin (PolyGram International).

As the singer of the neopsychedelic Liverpool band the Teardrop Explodes, Julian Cope was a wildly eccentric frontman whose lyrics were often maddeningly inscrutable and stage manner unpredictable. While attending college in Liverpool, Cope discovered punk and joined the Teardrops in 1978, earning U.K. pop hits ("Reward," "Treason," and "Passionate Friend") in the early '80s. He left the band in 1983 during the recording sessions for what would have been the group's third album (eventually released unfinished in 1990 as Everyone Wants to Shag the Teardrop Explodes). Cope then continued on an even more bizarre career path.

Prior to the Teardrops, Cope had played in two short-lived bands with future Echo and the Bunnymen singer Ian McCulloch. Shortly after the Teardrops imploded, his solo career began on a rough note when he intentionally jabbed himself in the stomach with a microphone stand onstage at London's Hammersmith Palais. Cope became well known for his experimentation with psychedelic drugs, which began during his days with the Teardrop Explodes and led some observers to liken him to two of his musical heroes, the acid casualties Syd Barrett and Roky Erickson. Mercury dropped Cope after his second album and refused to release his completed third one, Skellington (which later came out independently and included a song called "Out of My Mind on Dope and Speed").

In 1987, after moving to Island Records, Cope got his first slight crack at mainstream acceptance with "World Shut Your Mouth" (#84), from his most critically acclaimed album Saint Julian (#105, 1987). Cope's mental state continued to be an issue. In 1990, during a three-year hiatus from music, he appeared at London's anti-Poll Tax demonstration disguised as an alien named Mr. Squubbsy. The oddball double-length album Peggy Suicide, was a resounding artistic success, though its theme—an ambitious but confused political/environmental statement—was as convoluted as anything the singer had previously done. By 1992, it appeared as if Cope's fans had grown weary of his eccentricities. Following a compilation of solo and Teardrops material. Cope released Jehovah Kill to critical indifference and much less media attention. Autogeddon completed Cope's musical trilogy that began with Peggy Suicide and Jehovah Kill—this time with a theme on the evils of the automobile.

By 1995, Cope may have been appearing in public with half his head shaved, but he was also living quietly in the village of Wiltshire as a husband and father, releasing 20 Mothers that same year. He had given up psychedelics a decade earlier at the request of his mother-in-law. In 1996 Cope authored Krautrock Sampler (published by his own Head Heritage imprint), a book that pays tribute to German electronic music by the likes of Can, Faust, Kraftwerk, and Tangerine Dream. In 1999 he published a book on Neolithic archaeology and embarked on a lecture tour on the same topic wearing three-inch platform boots. In 2000 Cope was dabbling in "glambient" with a band called Queen Elizabeth and "false metal" with Brain Donor.

Chick Corea established himself as a major, influential jazz keyboardist, including a three-year stint with Miles Davis, before turning to rock fusion with Return to Forever. In the late '70s he returned to acoustic piano. Corea's distinctively brittle and precise tone on the piano has been widely imitated.

The son of a musician, Corea began studying classical piano at four and played with his father's band. As a teenager, he also played with a Latin band. He briefly attended Columbia University and the Juilliard School of Music but quit to go professional. Corea's first major job was with Mongo Santamania in 1962, followed by work with Blue Mitchell, Stan Getz, Herbie Mann, and Sarah Vaughan. In 1968 Miles Davis Quintet drummer Tony Williams invited him to sit in for an ailing Herbie Hancock, and Corea wound up working for Davis for three years. At Davis' behest, he began playing the electric Fender Rhodes piano, appearing on Filles de Kilimanjaro and the landmark jazz-rock albums In a Silent Way and Bitches Brew.

Corea formed the avant-garde Circle with bassist Dave Holland, drummer Barry Atschul, and reedman Anthony Braxton in 1971. Circle recorded three albums, while Corea recorded two solo sessions. Corea was introduced to Scientology, which led him to adopt the idea of "communication"—in practice, playing simpler music. He then formed Return to Forever with fellow Scientologist Stanley Clarke [see entry], whom Corea met during a brief stint with saxophonist Joe Henderson. Corea had written some of the group's initial material for a Stan Getz band (on Getz's album Captain Marvel) that included Clarke, percussionist Airto Moreira, and drummer Tony Williams. When Corea recorded the material on his own, Joe Farrell replaced Getz. Moreira played both drums and percussion, and Moreira's wife, Flora Purim, sang. The result was a Corea album called Return to Forever, followed by Light as a Feather. The two albums contained melodic pop jazz, full of buoyant melodies and quasi-Latin rhythms.

When Moreira and Purim left to start their own group, Fingers, in 1973, Farrell went back to session work and Corea and Clarke revamped Return to Forever with drummer Lenny White and guitarist Bill Connors. Openly modeled on the Mahavishnu Orchestra (Corea had performed with Mahavishnu John McLaughlin in Davis' band), the new group made bombastic use of electric instruments, including Corea's synthesizers. After guitarist Al DiMeola replaced Connors, Return to Forever reached a peak of popularity on the rock circuit. Clarke and DiMeola went solo in 1976, and Corea briefly expanded Return to Forever to a 13-piece ensemble before retiring the group name. Corea, Clarke, White, and DiMeola did a reunion tour in 1983.

During the late '70s and through the '80s, Corea played mostly acoustic piano as half of a duo with fellow pop refugee Herbie Hancock [see entry] and with various acoustic groups that have included drummer Steve Gadd, bassist Eddie Gomez, Henderson, Farrell, Moran, and others, including a trio reuniting him with bassist Miroslav Vitous and drummer Roy Haynes, who had recorded earlier on Now He Sings, Now He Sobs. He also recorded solo albums and duets with vibraharpist Gary Burton and wrote a monthly column for Contemporary Keyboard magazine.

The Chick Corea Elektric Band formed in 1985 with two top-rated L.A. musicians, bassist John Patitucci and drummer Dave Weckl; guitarist Frank Gambale and others have joined over the years. In order to accommodate his fusion/traditional jazz mind-split, Corea formed the Akoustic Band in 1989 with Patitucci and Weckl. This trio performed jazz standards as well as Corea originals, including a reworking of his classic "Spain." Patitucci and Weckl left the Elektric Band in 1993 and were replaced by bassist Jimmy Earl and drummer Gary Novak.

Corea started his own label, Stretch Records (a subsidiary of GRP), in 1992 to record like-minded musicians including Patitucci and guitarist Robben Ford. That same year he teamed with vocalist Bobby McFerrin on the Grammy-winning Play; five years later he formed a new sextet, Onegin, to showcase his acoustic piano work. In 1999, with the London Philharmonic Orchestra and members of Onegin, he recorded the Grammy-winning Corea Concerto, drawing on his passion for Mozart.

1993—Lock Stock & Double-Barrel EP (Wiiija) 1995—Hold On It Hurts; Woman's Gotta Have It (Luaka Bop) (– A. Singh; – Chambers; + Peter Bengry, perc.; + Nick Simms, drums)

1997—When I Was Born for the 7th Time.

Clinton: 1999—Disco & the Half Way to Discontent (Luaka Bop/Astralwerks).

London-based Cornershop began its career as concerned with social activism as it was with pop music. The band mixed alternative rock and British dance beats with traditional Indian music (and occasional lyrics in Punjabi), and in 1997 enjoyed the modern rock hit "Brimful of Asha," a tribute to Indian film singer Asha Bhosle.

Tjinder Singh was born in the U.K. to an immigrant family from northern India. He grew up in Wolverhampton, in the center of England, where he was frequently confronted about his ethnicity. While a teenager, he learned to play Indian instruments and discovered American R&B. He attended Preston University, where he met Ben Ayres and formed a band called General Havoc. Both explored Western and Eastern instruments and evolved into Cornershop (after the stereotype that all British Asians run "cornershops") with drummer David Chambers, guitarist Avtar Singh, and multi-instrumentalist Anthony Saffery. Cornershop was signed to the Wiiija label, but the band was still largely a vehicle for social issues, burning posters of Morrissey onstage and outside his label's offices in the early '90s, when the singer seemed to adopt a near-skinhead look and recorded the allegedly racist songs "Asian Rut" and "Bengali in Platforms."

Cornershop released several EPs before issuing the 1995 album, Hold On It Hurts. David Byrne signed the band in the U.S. to his Luaka Bop label, releasing Woman's Gotta Have It in 1995—the same year Tjinder Singh was assaulted in London for having a non-Indian girlfriend. Two years later came When I Was Born for the 7th Time (#144), which included "Brimful of Asha" and "Good to Be on the Road Back Home." When not touring, Saffery kept his job as a social worker, and T. Singh and Ayres formed a dance music side project called Clinton, releasing Disco & the Half Way to Discontent in 1999.

Guitarist Larry Coryell's penchant for high volume and fast fingerwork led him to jazz rock early. Coryell played piano as a child, switching to guitar in his teens. After studying journalism at the University of Washington, he moved to New York City in 1965, where he worked with drummer Chico Hamilton in 1966 and cofounded an early jazz-rock band, the Free Spirits. In 1967 he joined vibraphonist Gary Burton's band, two years later he recorded "Memphis Underground" with flutist Herbie Mann.

Coryell began leading his own bands in 1969. He toured Europe and the U.S. that year with a band that included ex-Cream bassist Jack Bruce, ex-Jimi Hendrix Experience drummer Mitch Mitchell, and Coryell's longtime keyboardist Mike Mandel. In 1970 he joined John McLaughlin, Billy Cobham, Chick Corea, and future Weather Report bassist Miroslav Vitous on Spaces. Barefoot Boy (1971) was a virtual tribute to Hendrix.

Coryell formed a variety of bands in the '70s, including the Mahavishnu Orchestra-styled Eleventh House, and later toured playing solo acoustic guitar and in a duo with ex-Focus guitarist Philip Catherine or session guitarist Steve Khan. Although he returned briefly to the electric fusion format, Coryell mainly concentrated on acoustic guitar. Aside from continued duets with Catherine, Coryell played in tandem with Al DiMeola, John McLaughlin, John Scofield, and others.

Coryell's leanings toward traditional jazz surfaced during the late '80s and '90s. Coryell toured and recorded in acoustic quartet settings with such jazz heavyweights as bassists Buster Williams and George Mraz, pianists Stanley Cowell and Kenny Barron, and drummers Beaver Harris and Billy Hart. He recorded Live From Bahia in Brazil with drummer Billy Cobham, saxophonist Donald Harrison, trumpeter Marcio Montarroyos, and vocalist Don Caymmi. The album was a blend of samba, rumba, rock, and funk, with African and Caribbean rhythms. In 1993 Coryell shifted direction once again, recording Larry Coryell and the Fallen Angels, using horns and synthesizers. Eclecticism remains Coryell's signature. He has recorded works by Stravinsky and Rimsky-Korsakov, explored Brazilian music, and with his two guitar-playing sons, Murali and Julian, formed a trio, the Coryells.

Elvis Costello

Born Declan Patrick McManus, Aug. 25, 1954, London, Eng. 1977—My Aim Is True (Columbia) 1978—This Year's Model 1979—Armed Forces 1980—Get Happy!; Taking Liberties 1981—Trust; Almost Blue 1982—Imperial Bedroom 1983—Punch the Clock 1984—Goodbye Cruel World 1985—The Best of Elvis Costello and the Attractions 1986—King of America; Blood and Chocolate 1989—Spike (Warner Bros.) 1990—Girls Girls Girls (Columbia) 1991—Mighty Like a Rose (Warner Bros.) 1993—The Juliet Letters; 2½ Years (Rykodisc) 1994—Brutal Youth (Warner Bros.); The Very Best of Elvis Costello and the Attractions (Rykodisc) 1995—Kojak Variety (Warner Bros.) 1996—All This Useless Beauty 1997—Extreme Honey—The Very Best of the Warner Brothers Years 1998—Painted From Memory (with Burt Bacharach) (Mercury).

Elvis Costello arrived as part of a late-'70s new wave of singer/songwriters, who reinvigorated the literate, lyrical traditions of Bob Dylan and Van Morrison with the raw energy and sass that were principal ethics of punk. Early in his career, Costello listed "revenge and guilt" as his primary motivations, but what really counted was the construction of his songs, which set densely layered wordplays in an ever-expanding repertoire of styles. Since Costello's melodic instincts were as sure as his gifts as a lyricist, his musical experiments generally drew kudos, enhancing his reputation as a quintessential critics' favorite. (Rock singer David Lee Roth once remarked that critics liked the bespectacled, nerdy Costello so much because they all looked liked him.) Granted, some members of the pop intelligentsia never forgave Costello for moving beyond the brash minimalist urgency of his first few albums, but it's just this progress that has allowed the singer to remain a relevant, respected artist.

Costello's father was a successful big-band singer and trumpet player. While attending Catholic school in working-class London, Costello tried playing violin and several other instruments before discovering the guitar at 15, at which point he was already interested in songwriting. Soon after, he moved to Liverpool to live with his mother, who'd divorced his father. In the early '70s, he and his high school sweetheart married and had a son, settling in London. There, Costello continued to write, record demos, and perform (sometimes under the name D.C. Costello, his mother's maiden name), while supporting his family as a computer operator. In 1975 he quit his job, became a roadie for Brinsley Schwarz, and got friendly with their bass player, Nick Lowe.

Elvis Costello

Stiff Records signed Costello in 1976 on the advice of staff producer Lowe; one of the label's owners, Jake Riviera, became his manager and rechristened him Elvis Costello.

Costello's debut single, "Less Than Zero," was released in April 1977 and was included on My Aim Is True, which Lowe produced. Soon Top 20 in England, Aim (#32 U.S.) made Costello a major British cult star and attracted critical kudos in the U.S. Costello then assembled the Attractions: keyboardist Steve "Nieve" Nason, drummer Pete Thomas, and bassist Bruce Thomas. Bolstered by his new cohorts on This Year's Model (#30, 1978), he rocked harder, while maintaining his distinctively wounded, clipped vocal delivery. Meanwhile, his "angry young man" image was amplified by punk-friendly habits like onstage rudeness, brief sets, and an aversion to the press. In late 1978 Costello left his wife and young son, only to return to them a year later. His next release, the Top 10 Armed Forces (originally titled Emotional Facism), repeatedly equated love affairs with military maneuvers ("Oliver's Army"). By then Costello's style encompassed lush, Beatlesque arrangements and more diverse influences.

While he toured the U.S. to promote Armed Forces in 1979, Costello's onstage contrariness and dark moods—sometimes induced by drinking—reached alarming proportions. In Columbus, Ohio, that March, a minor but much-publicized conflict with American singers Bonnie Bramlett and Stephen Stills occurred in a hotel bar after Costello reportedly referred to Ray Charles as a "blind, ignorant nigger." Besides tainting his work with the Rock Against Racism organization, this outburst brought the wrath of the previously supportive press. Costello lay low for a while, producing the Specials' 1979 debut and appearing at the Concert for Kampuchea.

Trust (#28, 1981) brought Costello back to frontline duty, and his subsequent American tour revealed an uncharacteristically polite and reserved stage manner, as if experience had mellowed the performer, who was still in his mid-20s. His touring partners were Squeeze, a critically acclaimed pop band whose 1981 LP East Side Story Costello coproduced. Later that same year Costello released Almost Blue (#50), an album of country & western covers recorded in Nashville that got mixed reviews. (A C&W aficionado, Costello later re-covered a version of his "Stranger in the House" with George Jones, while Costello's own songs have been covered by Dave Edmunds and Linda Ronstadt.)

Imperial Bedroom (#30, 1982), in contrast, earned raves. Full of wry, elegant, haunted ballads, the album marked Costello's most sophisticated pop craftsmanship yet, garnering comparisons to such pre-rock bards as Cole Porter and Rodgers and Hart. With 1983's Punch the Clock (#24), Costello continued to move beyond the punk minimalism of his early work, serving up soulful, accessible pop ("Everyday I Write the Book," a Top 40 U.S. hit) and serious balladry (the politically astute "Shipbuilding"). While less consistent, 1984's Goodbye Cruel World (#35) also found him diversifying in this vein.

Costello's personal life was also undergoing changes. Estranged again from his wife, he struck up a relationship with the Pogues' bassist Caitlin O'Riordan while the Irish band toured with him in the fall of 1984. (Costello also produced the Pogues' 1985 album, Rum, Sodomy & the Lash.) Costello divorced his wife in 1985 and married O'Riordan in 1986. Also in 1986, Costello temporarily traded in the Attractions for a pickup band he called the Confederates—former Elvis Presley musicians guitarist James Burton, drummer Ronnie Tutt, and bassist Jerry Scheff—who appeared with him on all but one cut (on which the Attractions appeared) on the lushly melodic King of America (#39). Later that year, Costello reenlisted the Attractions for the more raucous Blood and Chocolate (#84). The tour to promote both these albums alternated between sets featuring the Attractions, the Confederates, and Costello performing solo, acoustically. In addition, Costello designed the Spinning Songbook, a device through which audience members could "choose," by luck of the draw, songs from his vast repertoire.

In 1987 Costello cowrote a bunch of songs with Paul McCartney, several of which materialized two years later on Spike (#32). Costello's 1989 album—which also included support from Roger McGunn, Chrissie Hynde, and the Dirty Dozen Brass Band—produced a Top 20 hit in the McCartney-Costello collaboration "Veronica" (#19, 1989) and went gold. Some critics found Spike inconsistent, though, preferring the subsequent collection Girls Girls Girls, on which Costello chronicled his career thus far with his own favorite material.

Like Spike, 1991's Mighty Like a Rose (#55) was made without the Attractions, and was perceived as lacking focus. In 1993, though, Costello found a new sense of direction in perhaps his most ambitious project yet. The Juliet Letters (#125), a song cycle he wrote and performed with the string players in England's Brodsky Quartet, inspired by an article about letters sent to Shakespeare's character Juliet Capulet, received by a Veronese academic. The album and subsequent tour drew wild praise from some, while baffling or putting off others. Meanwhile, in the '90s, Rykodisc began releasing the early Costello albums on compact disc, with extra tracks consisting of live and previously unreleased recordings.

In 1994 Costello reunited with the Attractions for Brutal Youth (which also featured Nick Lowe), the maturely rocking results garnered almost unanimous acclaim, and the album climbed to #34. That summer, Costello began touring with the Attractions, marking a reconciliation between Costello and bassist Bruce Thomas, whose published memoirs had enraged the singer. In 1995 Costello was back on his own (with some help from Attractions drummer Pete Thomas and a handful of studio musicians) with Kojak Variety (#102), a cover album featuring songs by Screamin' Jay Hawkins and Bob Dylan, among others. The following year he covered himself on All This Useless Beauty (#53), which highlighted several original Costello songs that had been recorded by other artists.

Also in 1996 the cynical Costello surprised critics and fans by collaborating with '60s love-song composer Burt Bacharach for the soundtrack to the film Grace of My Heart. Their cowritten effort, "God Give Me Strength," was featured in the movie, nominated for a Grammy, and paved the way for the duo to write enough songs to record their own album, Painted From Memory (1998). A track from that album, "I Still Have That Other Girl," won the pair a Grammy for Best Pop Collaboration With Vocals. Costello and Bacharach became so well known as artistic partners that they appeared together in a cameo as themselves in the comedy Austin Powers: The Spy Who Shagged Me in 1999. Costello lightened up enough to appear as himself in the Spice Girls movie Spice World (1997) and the '80s nostalgia flick 200 Cigarettes (1999). The artist continues to tour, sometimes as a duo with Attractions keyboardist Nieve. He has recorded with his son Matthew and Supergrass drummer Danny Goffrey. In the late '90s and 2000, he contributed original songs to movie soundtracks and returned to dabbling in classical music. He played on classical saxophonist John Harle's 1997 album Terror & Magnificence and in 2000 produced songs for Swedish mezzo-soprano Anne Sofie von Otter.

James Cotton

Born July 1, 1935, Tunica, MS

1967—The James Cotton Blues Band (Verve) 1968—Pure Cotton; Cotton in Your Ears; Cut You Loose! (Vanguard) 1971—Taking Care of Business 1974—100% Cotton (Buddah) 1975—High Energy 1975—Superharp Live and on the Move 1980—Take Me Back (Blind Pig) 1984—High Compression (Alligator) 1986—Live From Chicago 1987—Live at Antone's (Antones) 1990—Mighty Long Time 1994—Living the Blues (PolyGram/Verve) 1995—The Best of the Verve Years 1996—Deep in the Blues 1999—Superharps (with Charlie Musselwhite, Billy Branch, and Sugar Ray Norcia) (Telarc) 2000—Fire Down Under the Hill.

A blues harmonica player, Cotton has played for years with Muddy Waters and frequently contributed to the records of rockers such as Johnny Winter. He has also led his own band, supporting himself on club dates and recording sporadically.

Cotton began playing blues harmonica after meeting Sonny Boy Williamson (Alec "Rice" Miller). He left home at nine to seek out Williamson, whom he had heard on radio station KFFA in West Helena, Arkansas; he spent the next six years playing with him. For two years after that he was with Howlin' Wolf and then formed his own band with Willie Nix before joining Muddy Waters, with whom he worked for 12 years. In 1966 he left Waters to form his own band. Over the next few years he worked with several rock acts, including Paul Butterfield, Janis Joplin, Steve Miller, Boz Scaggs, Johnny Winter, Edgar Winter, Elvin Bishop, and the J. Geils Band's Peter Wolf. He has also recorded with Howlin' Wolf, Otis Spann, Big Mama Thornton, and Muddy Waters (he appeared on the latter's Hard Again Tour in the late '70s).

In the '80s Cotton was nominated for three Grammy Awards and won several WC Handy International Blues Awards. He has continued to tour and record in the '90s, appearing with numerous rock acts, including the Grateful Dead. Living the Blues features Dr. John and Jerry Garcia, along with blues artists Lucky Peterson and John Primer. Deep in the Blues won Cotton a WC Handy Award and a 1997 Grammy for Best Traditional Blues Album.

The Count Five

Formed ca. 1965, San Jose, CA

Ken Ellner (b. 1948, Brooklyn, NY), voc.; John "Mouse" Michalski (b. 1948, Cleveland, OH), gtr.; Sean Byrne (b. 1947, Dublin, Ire.), gtr.; Roy Chaney (b. 1948, Indianapolis, IN), bass; Craig "Butch" Atkinson (b. 1947), drums.

1966—Psychotic Reaction (Double Shot).

A psychedelic garage band, the Count Five scored one major hit, "Psychotic Reaction" (#5, 1966). They emerged from the same California Bay Area bar circuit that spawned the Syndicate of Sound ("Little Girl") and the Golliwogs (later Creedence Clearwater Revival). In 1966 they signed with the L.A.-based Double Shot label. Followups to "Psychotic Reaction" failed to make national impact, although the band remained popular for a while regionally. Byrne continued his music career in his homeland, joining two fairly obscure groups, Public Foot the Roman and later Legover.

Counting Crows

Formed 1989, San Francisco, CA

Adam Duritz (b. Aug. 1, 1964, Baltimore, MD), voc., kybds.; David Bryson (b. Nov. 5, 1961), gtr.; Charlie Gillingham (b. Jan. 12, 1960, Torrance, CA), kybds., accordion; Matt Malley (b. July 4, 1963), bass, gtr.; Steve Bowman (b. Jan. 14, 1967), drums. 1993—August and Everything After (DGC) (+ Dan Vickrey [b. Aug. 26, 1966, Walnut Creek, CA], gtr.) 1994—(- Bowman; + Ben Mize (b. Feb. 2, 1971), drums) 1996—Recovering the Satellites 1998—Across a Wire: Live in New York 1999— (+ David Immergluck, gtr., mandolin, pedal steel gtr.) This Desert Life (Desert Life).

Released in the fall of 1993—smack in the middle of the alternative grunge boom—the Counting Crows' debut album August and Everything After sounded like a blast from rock's more organic, rootsier past. Dreadlocked frontman Adam Duritz managed to simultaneously draw comparisons to Bob Dylan and Van Morrison with his literate songwriting and soulful vocals, while the band's music seemed tapped from the same Americana wellspring that nourished the Band. The album spawned a handful of Modern Rock hit singles—"Mr. Jones" (#2, 1993) and "Round Here" (#7, 1994)—climbed to #4, and went on to sell 7 million copies as the band seemed to connect with fans of both alternative and classic rock.

Duritz and guitarist David Bryson met in 1989 and started writing songs together, the following year they began performing under the Counting Crows banner as an acoustic duo in the San Francisco Bay Area. They expanded into a band the following year with the addition of bassist Matt Malley, drummer Steve Bowman, and multi-instrumentalist Charlie Gillingham, and recorded a demo that eventually netted the band a record deal.

After recording August and Everything After with producer T Bone Burnett (but prior to the album's release), Counting Crows performed at the 1993 Rock and Roll Hall of Fame Induction Ceremony, representing absent inductee Van Morrison. The debut album was released later that year and began its 93-week chart run at the beginning of 1994, a year that found them opening for the Rolling Stones. That same year Duritz cowrote and recorded a duet, "Going Back to Georgia," with Texas folk-country singer Nanci Griffith for her Flyer album. Counting Crows—now featuring additional guitarist Dan Vickrey and new drummer Ben Mize—began recording its second album, Recovering the Satellites, at the end of 1995. It debuted at #1 in the fall of 1996, eventually going double platinum behind the Modern Rock hits "Angels of the Silences" (#3, 1996), "A Long December" (#5, 1996), "Daylight Fading" (#26, 1997), and "Have You Seen Me Lately?" (#34, 1997).

In 1998 Counting Crows released a double live album, Across a Wire: Live in New York (#19), with one disc spotlighting an intimate performance for VH1's Storytellers and the second a more uptempo set recorded for MTV's Live From the 10 Spot. Produced by Cracker frontman David Lowery, This Desert Life debuted at #8 in 1999 and spawned the #28 hit "Hangaround."

Country Joe and the Fish

Formed 1965, San Francisco, CA
Country Joe McDonald (b. Jan. 1, 1942, Washington, DC), voc., gtr.; Chicken Hirsch (b. 1940, CA), drums; Bruce Barthol

Country Joe and the Fish were one of the most overtly political bands to emerge from San Francisco's late-'60s folk-turned-psychedelic scene. Joe McDonald (named after Stalin by left-leaning parents) wrote his first song, "I Seen a Rocket," as a campaign song for a friend's high school class presidency attempt. At age 17 he joined the navy for three years. After a year at Los Angeles City College he moved to Berkeley and wrote protest songs while occasionally publishing a magazine, Et Tu, Brute.

McDonald made his first record, The Goodbye Blues, in 1964 with Blair Hardman. He then joined the Berkeley Strung Quartet and the Instant Action Jug Band, which included Barry Melton. The two started Country Joe and the Fish in 1965 to make a series of political EPs for Takoma, including the first appearance of the notorious "F-U-C-K" cheer ("Gimme an F!" etc.).

The group started as a loose-knit jug band but switched to electric instruments late in 1966. As the Summer of Love loomed, the Fish were signed to Vanguard and settled into a stable lineup for two years. The "Feel-Like-I'm-Fixin'-to-Die Rag," a black-humored electric shuffle about the Vietnam War, brought them notoriety with their second album; the "F-U-C-K" cheer was changed to "F-I-S-H."

The band appeared at the Monterey Pop Festival (and in the film of it), and at Woodstock. McDonald, solo, led nearly 500,000 people in the cheer. The Fish continued to tour and record, but by 1969, they were getting fewer bookings after their arrest in Worcester, Massachusetts, for inciting an audience to lewd behavior (the cheer). The group began to unravel, although McDonald and Melton (who also had a 1969 marijuana bust) kept a lineup together to appear in the 1971 film Zachariah. The Fish disbanded in 1970. McDonald tried some film scores and continued his solo career, sometimes in tandem with Melton, who released his own solo album in 1971, Bright Sun Is Shining. Melton became a public defender in Mendocino County, north of San Francisco. He ran unsuccessfully for a city judgeship in Mendocino in 1992.

McDonald continued to tour and in late 1975 signed with Fantasy and recorded Paradise With an Ocean View. The Fish regrouped for 1977's Reunion, but McDonald was solo again for Rock and Roll Music From the Planet Earth. In the '80s McDonald began releasing albums on his own Rag Baby label. Though still a pacifist, he also became a champion of Vietnam veterans' causes. From the '90s through 2000 he worked to erect memorials in the notoriously antiwar Bay Area. Vietnam Experience is a thematic concept work featuring a new version of the "Feel-Like-I'm-Fixin'-to-Die Rag." Both Superstitious Blues and Carry On are studio albums that boast guest guitar by Jerry Garcia. In 1998 McDonald went to England and recorded Eat Flowers and Kiss Babies, a collaboration with the indie-psych band the Bevis Frond.

Wayne/Jayne County

Born Wayne Rogers, July 13, 1947, Dallas, GA
1978—The Electric Chairs (Safari, U.K.); Storm the Gates of Heaven 1979—Things Your Mother Never Told You 1980—Rock 'n' Roll Resurrection 1986—Private Oyster (Revolver, U.K.) 1995—Deviation (Royalty); Rock 'n' Roll Cleopatra.

Rock & roll's most famous transsexual. Jayne County started out as rock & roll's most famous transvestite, Wayne County. His life in the spotlight began when he moved to New York from his native Georgia in the late '60s. County appeared playing a female role opposite Patti Smith in an off-Broadway production of Femme Fatale before tackling the role of Florence Nightingale in World—Birth of a Nation. In 1970 Andy Warhol cast County in his show Pork, with which County traveled to England. David Bowie was impressed and signed County to his Mainman management company.

On returning to New York, County's first band, Queen Elizabeth, began performing in lower Manhattan clubs like Max's Kansas City, where groups like the New York Dolls were forging a new union between camp and rock & roll. Queen Elizabeth's drummer, Jerry Nolan, was a late addition to the Dolls' lineup and later a member of the Heartbreakers. County's stage wardrobe consisted of skimpy pink dresses, fishnet stockings, heavy makeup, and a platinum-blond wig, but in spite of the sexual spoofis, County's performances were more rock & roll show than drag show.

In 1975, after being dropped by Mainman, County cut an album for ESP-Disk; its release was delayed, and then the tracks were lost in a fire. His vinyl debut was three tracks on the double-album compilation Max's Kansas City. He formed the Electric Chairs in 1977 and toured Britain that year. In 1978 the Electric Chairs were signed up by a German label, Safari, and released their first album. County disappeared for some time after that, reemerging in 1980 after starting the hormone treatment for a sex-change operation (County never had the final operation). Rock 'n' Roll Resurrection was a live set that included "Cream in My Jeans," "If You Don't Want to Fuck Me, Baby, Fuck Off!" and "Bad in Bed." By the late '80s County, who had spent several years in Germany, was living in London, England. She had recorded several European solo releases and was planning to forsake music for a religious college, to study Biblical archaeology. In the '90s, County resurfaced and became a fixture on the glam rock and drag/transsexual scenes. Her autobiography, Man Enough to Be a Woman, was published in 1996 (it had appeared the previous year in England). A new, domestic studio album, Deviation, and a career-spanning anthology, Rock 'n' Roll Cleopatra, coincided with the book. County's latest effort is a remix single entitled "Fuck Off 2000."

Don Covay

Born Mar. 1938, Orangeburg, SC
1964—Mercy (Atlantic) 1966—Seesaw 1969—The House of Blue Lights (with the Jefferson Lemon Blues Band) 1970—Different Strokes for Different Folks (with the Jefferson Lemon Blues Band) (Janus) 1973—Super Dude I (Mercury) 1974—Hot Blood 1976—Travelin' in Heavy Traffic (Philadelphia International) 1992—Checkin' in With Don Covay (Mercury) 2000—Adlib (Cannonball).

As a soul singer with a high gospel-inspired voice, Covay had a handful of hits in the '60s and '70s, but is best known for a songwriting catalogue that includes Aretha Franklin's "Seesaw" and "Chain of Fools." The son of a Baptist minister who moved the family to Washington when Covay was a child, he sang with the family gospel quartet the Cherry-Keys. When he was 17, he joined the Rainbows, who had already had a local hit, "Mary Lee." His solo career got underway two years later when he opened a Washington concert for Little Richard, who named him Pretty Boy and took him to Atlantic Records. Atlantic issued Covay's first Pretty Boy disc, "Bip Bop Bip," in 1957.

Covay recorded under his own name and with his group, the Goodtimers, for Sue, Columbia, Epic, RCA, Arnold, Cameo, Parkway, Landia, and Roseart, placing four singles on the pop chart—including "Pony Time" (#60, 1961) and "Mercy Mercy" (#35, 1964)—before Atlantic reacquired him in 1965. With Atlantic he scored his first soul hit, "Please Do Something" (#21, 1965). "Seesaw" was both an R&B hit (#5, 1965) and a pop hit (#44). Covay continued to record for Atlantic until 1971, when he signed with Janus. In 1972 he joined Mercury, both as an artist and A&R director. He returned to the charts in 1973 with "I Was Checkin' Out, She Was Checkin' In" (#29 pop, #6 R&B) and followed it the next year with "It's Better to Have (and Don't Need)" (#21 R&B). In 1981 he toured with Wilson Pickett and Solomon Burke in a package called the Soul Clan. Covay, who suffered a major stroke in 1992, was the subject of a critically acclaimed tribute album, Back to the Streets: Celebrating the Music of Don Covay, in 1993. By 2000 the R&B great had recovered enough to release his first new album in 25 years, Adlib. Credited to Don Covay and Friends, the record features Huey Lewis, Paul Rodgers, Wilson Pickett, and numerous other guests.

Cowboy Junkies

Formed 1985, Toronto, Can.

Michael Timmins (b. Apr. 21, 1959, Montreal, Can.), gtr.; Alan Anton (b. Alan Alizojovic, June 22, 1959, Montreal), bass; Margo Timmins (b. Jan. 27, 1961, Montreal), voc.; Peter Timmins (b. Oct. 29, 1965, Montreal) drums.
 1986—Whites Off Earth Now! (Latent; reissued by RCA in 1990)
 1988—The Trinity Session (RCA) 1990—The Caution Horses
 1992—Black-Eyed Man 1993—Pale Sun, Crescent Moon
 1995—200 More Miles: Live Performances 1985–1994
 1996—Studio: Selected Studio Recordings 1986–1995; Lay It Down (Geffen) 1998—Miles From Our Home 1999—Rarities, B-Sides and Slow, Sad Waltzes (Latent) 2000—Waltz Across America 2001—Open (Zoë/Rounder).

The Cowboy Junkies play slow, pensive country- and blues-based songs rendered unearthly by Margo Timmins' angelic drawl. The band is based around its sibling trio and an old musical partnership between Michael Timmins and Alan Anton, childhood friends who moved to New York and then London to play in punk bands in the early '80s. When neither situation worked out, Michael moved back to Toronto and began jamming with his brother, soon they were joined by Anton and Margo. They chose their name and the title of their first album specifically to provoke attention. It worked; the self-released debut and the band's local following won them a deal with RCA.

The Trinity Session, recorded in a 14-hour session in an old church on a shoestring budget, became a sensation on college radio, helped by some video play and Lou Reed's endorsement of their version of the Velvet Underground's "Sweet Jane." The album also included covers of Hank Williams' "I'm So Lonesome I Could Cry," Patsy Cline's "Walking After Midnight," and a reworking of "Blue Moon."

On The Caution Horses, Michael wrote more songs and proved that his obsession with country music had trained his ear for lyric twists and simple melodies. The album was recorded live, but in a professional studio.

On Black-Eyed Man, Michael continued to develop his narrative style in a country vein, writing about "Southern Rain" and murder in a trailer park. Townes Van Zandt wrote two songs for the album, and "Crescent Moon," the opening track of the band's 1993 album, was dedicated to the Texas singer/songwriter. That album's literary pretensions—two tracks quoted William Faulkner and Gabriel García Márquez—were balanced by a cover of Dinosaur Jr.'s "The Post."

Lay It Down was the group's first album for Geffen and their first to enlist an outside producer, John Keane (R.E.M., Indigo Girls); it also yielded the Modern Rock hit "A Common Disaster." Miles From Our Home, recorded in London with producer John Leckie (Radiohead, the Verve), featured songs that reflected on the death of Van Zandt and the Timmins'

94-year-old grandfather. In 1999 the group revived their Latent imprint and released a collection of odds and ends, including covers of songs written by Bob Dylan and the Grateful Dead.

The Cowsills

Formed mid-'60s, Newport, RI

Barbara Cowsill (b. 1929; d. Jan. 31, 1985); Bill Cowsill (b. Jan. 9, 1948, Newport); Bob Cowsill (b. Aug. 26, 1950, Newport); Dick Cowsill (b. Aug. 26, 1950, Newport); Paul Cowsill (b. Nov. 11, 1952, Newport); Barry Cowsill (b. Sep. 14, 1954, Newport); John Cowsill (b. Mar. 2, 1956, Newport); Susan Cowsill (b. May 20, 1960, Newport).
 1967—The Cowsills (MGM) 1968—We Can Fly; Captain Sad and His Ship of Fools 1969—The Best of the Cowsills; The Cowsills in Concert 1971—On My Side (London).

This musical family from Rhode Island provided the inspiration for TV's The Partridge Family. Under father William "Bud" Cowsill's direction, the Cowsill kids and mom played the New York City clubs regularly in the mid-'60s, attracting the attention of MGM, which released their debut album in November 1967. By early 1968 they had had their first hit single, "The Rain, the Park, & Other Things" (#2). Lots of touring, network TV appearances, and a few more hits, including the theme from the rock musical Hair (#2, 1969), preceded their disbandment in early 1970. Mother Barbara died in 1985; three of the brothers and Susan reunited to tour and record demo five years later.

In the '90s Barry Cowsill worked as a solo artist. Bill Cowsill formed the band Blue Shadows, which released several albums in Canada. In 1991 Susan Cowsill and ex-Bangle Vicki Peterson formed the L.A.-based Psycho Sisters. The duo performed together and sang with such artists as Giant Sand, Steve Wynn, and the Continental Drifters, the latter of whom they would eventually join. Susan Cowsill married fellow Drifter Peter Holsapple (ex-dB's), they split up in 2000. Bob, John, Susan, and Paul revived the Cowsills in 1994 and contributed a new track to the compilation Yellow Pills, Volume One Global, their 1998 comeback album, was released only through the Internet. Various Cowsill siblings occasionally reunite to perform together.

Kevin Coyne

Born Jan. 27, 1944, Derby, Eng.

1972—Case History (Dandelion, U.K.) 1973—Marjory Razorblade (Virgin) 1974—Blame It on the Night 1975—Matching Head and Feet 1976—Heartburn; In Living Black and White 1978—Dynamite Daze; Millionaires and Teddy Bears; Beautiful Extremes 1979—Babble (with Dagmar Krause) 1980—Bursting Bubbles 1982—Pointing the Finger 1982—Politcz; Dandelion Years 1983—Beautiful Extremes Etcetera; Legless in Manila (Rough Trade) 1990—Peel Sessions (Strange Fruit).

British songwriter Kevin Coyne released several albums in the '70s, but his unconventional song formats and abrasive vocal style have proven commercially unsuccessful. Born and raised in England, he attended art school in the early '60s. In 1965 he began working as a social therapist in a psychiatric hospital in Preston, England, and his experiences were the subject of several of his songs. After appearing sporadically in Preston clubs, he moved to London in 1969.

In 1972 Coyne abandoned social work for a musical career. He was already known as lead vocalist with the group Siren, which recorded two albums for Dandelion. His first solo effort, Case History, was released on Dandelion in the U.K. and has since become a collector's item. He signed with Virgin in 1973 and drew critical kudos for his double set Margory Razorblade, which was reduced to a single disc for U.S. release. Throughout the mid-'70s he continued to record regularly and generally kept his own band together. His strongest backing aggregation played on 1976's Heartburn and the following year's double live set, In Living Black and White. Group personnel included Zoot Money (keyboards and vocals) and Andy Summers (guitar), who joined the Police shortly thereafter. Coyne has also written and appeared in several theatrical productions. He is also a painter and artist. Throughout the '80s and '90s he has released numerous albums on small labels in the U.K. and Germany. These include 1992's Burning Head, a limited-edition CD, and 1995's The Adventures of Crazy Frank, which formed the basis of an improvised musical about English comic Frank Randle. Coyne continues to tour and record, often with his sons, Robert and Eugene.

The Cramps

Lux Interior (b. Erick Lee Purkhiser, Oct. 21, 1946, Akron, OH), voc.; Poison Ivy Rorschach (b. Christine Marlana Wallace, Feb. 20, 1953, Sacramento, CA), gtr.; Bryan Gregory (b. 1955, Detroit, MI; d. Jan. 10, 2001, Anaheim, CA), gtr.; Pam "Balam" Gregory (b. Detroit), drums.

The Cramps: Poison Ivy, Lux Interior, Slim Chance, Harry Drumdini

+ Harry Drumdini, drums) Flamejob (Warner Bros.) 1997—Big Beat From Badsville (Epitaph).

The Cramps combine rockabilly psychedelia, sex, and B-movie sleaze into a thick, swampy stew. They were conceived in Cleveland by Erick Purkhiser (who took the name Lux Interior) and Christine Wallace (Poison Ivy Rorschach), who had met in Sacramento and moved together to Lux's native Ohio. Lux and Ivy moved to New York in 1975, and started the Cramps after enlisting brother and sister Bryan Gregory and Pam "Balam" the following year. Aspiring journalist Minam Linna, who'd known Lux and Ivy in Ohio, replaced Balam on drums after a few months. With their energetic two-guitar, no-bass attack and Lux's energetic, slightly deranged stage presence, the Cramps quickly became mainstays of the CBGB scene. Linna left in 1977 to join Nervus Rex (she has since played with the Zantees and the A-Bones, and founded Kicks magazine and Norton Records with fellow A-Bone Billy Miller), and was replaced by drummer Nick Knox.

With this lineup, the band went to Ardent studios in Memphis to record its Alex Chilton-produced 1977 singles "Surfin' Bird" b/w "The Way I Walk" and "Human Fly" b/w "Domino." In 1979 they combined them, along with "Lonesome Town," also from the Chilton sessions, for an EP Gravest Hits. Signed to I.R.S. with Chilton again producing, they released Songs the Lord Taught Us, its echoey psychobilly powering originals ("TV Set"), '50s classics (Johnny Burnette's "Tear It Up"), and oddities ("Strychnine"). These recordings, as well as the band's wild performances, earned them a rabid cult following, including a fan club, Legion of the Cramped (one of its founders was future Smiths frontman, Morrissey).

In May 1980 Bryan Gregory left the band under mysterious circumstances; soon after, he released a single with Beast and unsuccessfully sought to become an actor. Reportedly, his post-Cramps occupations ranged from coven warlock to sex-shop entrepreneur to tattoo artist. He died of heart failure in 2001. After the Cramps relocated to L.A., Gregory was replaced by then-Gun Club guitarist and founding member Kid Congo Powers, who played on the aptly named, self-produced Psychedelic Jungle (1981).

By late 1981, the band filed a $1.1 million suit against I.R.S. charging the company and its owner, Miles Copeland, with thwarting their industry growth. The case was settled out of court, details untold, but effectively releasing the band from the label. With the exception of the 1983 live EP, Smell of Female (released within a week after the case was settled), and the Bad Music for Bad People compilation, the Cramps' recordings were not released domestically until 1990. With only Lux and Ivy remaining, the Cramps toured extensively, using a revolving cast of (usually female) guitarists and, in later years, bass players. Cramps albums emphasized the band's sexual obsessions, with songs that could be offensive were it not for their good-humored tastelessness.

In 1991 Lux and Ivy, with help from Iggy Pop, released Look Mom, No Head!, and toured Europe and the States, with bassist Slim Chance and former Teenage Jesus and sometime Bad Seed drummer Jim Sclavunos. With Harry Drumdini replacing Sclavunos, the band recorded two albums, Flamejob (1994) and Big Beat From Badsville (1997). While neither album was a big seller, the Cramps remain a popular touring unit.

The Cranberries

Formed 1990, Limerick, Ire.

Dolores O'Riordan (b. Sep. 6, 1971, Limerick), voc.; Noel Hogan (b. Dec. 25, 1971, Limerick), gtr.; Mike Hogan (b. Apr. 29, 1973, Limerick), bass; Fergal Lawler (b. Mar. 4, 1971, Limerick), drums.

1993—Everybody Else Is Doing It, So Why Can't We? (Island)

1994—No Need to Argue 1996—To the Faithful Departed

1999—Bury the Hatchet (PolyGram).

The Celtic-tinged music of the Cranberries combines the vocal strength of their chanteuse Dolores O'Riordan with a simple acoustic guitar-driven sound. In the mid-'90s the band became Ireland's most successful musical export since U2 when the band's atmospheric pop single "Linger" hit the U.S. Top 10. Embroiled in infighting, the band has struggled to duplicate its early success.

In 1990 brothers Mike and Noel Hogan formed a band with drummer Fergal Lawler called the Cranberry Saw Us. They soon recruited O'Riordan, who had been writing songs since she was 12. After listening to guitarist Noel Hogan's instrumental demos, O'Riordan quickly composed the lyrics and melody to "Linger."

Following their signing with Island Records, the Cranberries had a falling-out with their original manager/producer Pearse Gilmore. In 1992, replacing Gilmore with a new manager and a new producer, they recorded their debut album, Everybody Else Is Doing It, So Why Can't We? (#18, 1993). The Cranberries' U.S. tour included an appearance at Woodstock '94, that performance and heavy MTV rotation of the "Linger" video help propel the single to #8. No Need to Argue (#6, 1994) produced more hit singles, including "Zombie" and "Ode to My Family," and was certified gold or platinum in more than 25 countries.

In the wake of international success, the Cranberries fell prey to dissension, which was fueled by O'Riordan's increased profile as the band's frontperson. The recording of To the Faithful Departed (#4, 1996) was reportedly acrimonious, and the accompanying tour had to be curtailed; the Cranberries then decided to take off several months before recording Bury the Hatchet (#13, 1999). While No Need to Argue and especially To the Faithful Departed attempted to mix rock and social commentary, Bury the Hatchet was a return to the band's more introspective pop side.

In the '80s guitarist and singer Robert Cray revitalized the audience for contemporary blues. With a lean style owing much to Albert Collins, Cray is also capable of Jimi Hendrix-like pyrotechnics; a player of unarguable conviction, he has managed to evade the myopia of the "blues purist" by incorporating funk, R&B, and jazz touches. With Cray displaying a passion for soulful vocalists like O.V. Wright, his lyrics also introduce an emotion that was rare in the blues: remorse.

Of middle-class background, Cray learned the blues secondhand, through his parents' collection of Otis Rush, Buddy Guy, and Chicago blues records, as well as gospel and R&B classics. By 1974 the Robert Cray Band (then featuring bassist Richard Cousins and drummer Tom Murphy) had established itself on the Pacific Northwest blues scene; in 1978 Cray appeared in Animal House, playing in the movie's fictional band. Also that year, he signed with Tomato, which released his debut two years later.

Due in part to Tomato dissolving, Who's Been Talkin' died commercially, but Bad Influence and False Accusations brought Cray a growing following among musicians (Eric Clapton later covered "Bad Influence"). The latter album was Cray's breakthrough, a Top 200 release. Strong Persuader fared even better, entering the Top 20 and winning a Grammy. Don't Be Afraid of the Dark confirmed Cray's maturity.

While hailed as a songwriter of emotionally complex material, Cray continued to draw notice chiefly for his guitar work: He played with Clapton and Keith Richards in the Chuck Berry documentary Hail! Hail! Rock 'n' Roll, and with Steve Cropper at a 1992 Guitar Legends concert in Spain. Backed by the Memphis Horns, Midnight Stroll and I Was Warned showed the guitarist and a new lineup of players moving even further from their blues base. While trying out gospel- and Stax-inflected numbers, Cray ensured nonetheless that the music retained its grit. His critical stature remained high: Since 1998, each of his albums has been nominated for Grammy Awards.

Cream

Eric Clapton (b. Mar. 30, 1945, Ripley, Eng.), gr., voc.; Jack Bruce (b. May 14, 1943, Glasgow, Scot.), bass, harmonica, voc.; Ginger Baker (b. Peter Baker, Aug. 19, 1939, Lewisham, Eng.), drums, voc.

1966—Fresh Cream (Atco) 1967—Disraeli Gears 1968—Wheels of Fire 1969—Goodbye; The Best of Cream 1970—Live Cream 1972—Live Cream, vol. 2; Off the Top (Polydor) 1975—The Best of Cream Live 1983—Strange Brew; The Very Best of Cream.

Cream was the prototypical blues-rock power trio. In a mere three years, it sold 15 million records, played to SRO crowds throughout the U.S. and Europe, and redefined the instrumentalist's role in rock. Cream formed in mid-1966 when drummer Ginger Baker left Graham Bond's Organisation, bassist Jack Bruce (formerly of Bond's band) left Manfred Mann, and Eric Clapton, already a famous guitarist in the U.K., left John Mayall's Bluesbreakers.

Debuting at the 1966 Windsor Jazz and Blues Festival, Cream established its enduring legend on the high-volume blues jamming and extended solos of its live shows. Its studio work, however, tended toward more sophisticated original rock material, most of it written by Bruce with lyricist Pete Brown. Cream's U.S. hit singles included "Sunshine of Your Love" (#5, 1968), "White Room" (#6, 1968), and a live version of the Robert Johnson country blues "Crossroads" (#28, 1969). Wheels of Fire, made up of a live LP and a studio LP (both recorded in the U.S.), was #1 for four weeks in summer 1968, just as the group was coming apart.

Tension within the band led to a quick breakup. Cream gave its farewell concert, which was filmed as Goodbye Cream, on November 26, 1968, at London's Royal Albert Hall. After patching together the Goodbye LP—which featured "Badge," cowritten by Clapton and George Harrison—Clapton and Baker subsequently formed Blind Faith [see entry], and Bruce went solo [see entry]. Clapton and Baker soon also went on to solo careers [see entries]. In 1993 the trio was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. Clapton, Baker, and Bruce reunited to perform three songs at the ceremonies.

Creed

Formed 1995, Tallahassee, FL

Scott Stapp (b. Aug. 8, 1973, Orlando, FL), voc., gr.; Mark Tremonti (b. Apr. 18, 1973, Detroit, MI), gr.; Scott Phillips (b. Feb. 22, 1973, GA), drums; Brian Marshall (b. Apr. 24, 1973, MS), bass.

1997—My Own Prison (Blue Collar Records; Wind-Up) 1999—Human Clay 2000—(— Marshall).

Creed emerged from the same North Florida club circuit that spawned fellow chart-champions Matchbox Twenty. Led by singer Scott Stapp, Creed's mainstream rock sound was heavily influenced by the Doors, Pearl Jam, and the Christian psalms Stapp's father once forced him to copy down as punishment. On the band's multimillion-selling debut album, My Own Prison (#26), Stapp's dramatic baritone tackled themes of unity, tolerance, and his own spiritual crises.

The son of a Pentecostal preacher, Stapp grew up in a devoutly Christian home where rock & roll was not tolerated. Soon after leaving home, he quit his prelaw studies at Florida State University and drifted from job to job, even living in his car for a time. In Tallahassee, Stapp reunited with high school friend Mark Tremonti, who had been playing guitar for 10 years. They recruited drummer Scott Phillips and bassist Brian Marshall and began playing club shows, drawing on lyrics that Stapp had already been writing.

The band spent $6,000 to record an album that was independently released in April 1997 on Blue Collar Records. The album had sold 6,000 CDs when Creed signed to the BMGdistributed Wind-Up Records, which had the band back in the studio to refine the album's sound. My Own Prison eventually sold 4 million copies, becoming the best-selling hard-rock album in 1998. "One" (#70) and the title song became rock-radio hits.

Though pointedly not a Christian pop band, Creed has attracted a large following partly for its music's existential and theological content. The debut was followed in 1999 by the heavier Human Clay (#1), which included the hit "Higher" and "With Arms Wide Open" (#1, 2000), which won a 2000 Grammy for Best Rock Song. Creed produced the soundtrack for Scream 3, which included a new Creed song, "Is This the End?" and "What If" from Human Clay. The band also performed "Riders on the Storm" on 2000's Stoned Immaculate tribute to the Doors. By now the band endured the open disdain of critics and such contemporaries as Limp Bizkit and Blink-182. Marshall left the band in August 2000 after criticizing Pearl Jam on a Seattle radio show. He was temporarily replaced on a subsequent tour by singer/guitarist Brett Hestla (Virgos Merlot).

John Fogerty's fervent vocals and modernized rockabilly songs built on his classic guitar riffs made Creedence Clearwater Revival the preeminent American singles band of the late '60s and early '70s. The Fogerty brothers were raised in Berkeley, where John studied piano and at the age of 12 got his first guitar. He met Cook and Clifford at the El Cerrito junior high school they all attended. They began playing together, and by 1959 were performing at local dances as Tommy Fogerty and the Blue Velvets. In 1964 the quartet signed to San Francisco-based Fantasy Records, where Tom had been working as a packing and shipping clerk. The label renamed them the Goliwogs and began putting out singles. "Brown-Eyed Girl" sold 10,000 copies in 1965, but the followups were flops. Greater success came after they adopted the CCR moniker in 1967.

Several Fogerty compositions appeared on Creedence Clearwater Revival, but cover versions of Dale Hawkins' "Suzie Q" and Screamin' Jay Hawkins' "I Put a Spell on You" were the group's first hit singles. With the release of Bayou Country it became the most popular rock band in America. Beginning with the two-sided gold hit "Proud Mary" (#2, 1969) b/w "Born on the Bayou," Creedence dominated Top 40 radio for two years without disappointing the anticommmercial element of the rock audience.

CCR's rough-hewn rockers often dealt with political and cultural issues, and the quartet appeared at the Woodstock Festival. Creedence had seven major hit singles in 1969 and 1970, including "Bad Moon Rising" (#2, 1969), "Green River" (#2, 1969), "Fortunate Son" (#14, 1969), "Down on the Corner" (#3, 1969), "Travelin' Band" (#2, 1970), "Up Around the Bend" (#4, 1970), and "Lookin' Out My Back Door" (#2, 1970).

Although Creedence's success continued after Cosmo's Factory, it was the group's artistic peak. Internal dissension, primarily the result of John Fogerty's dominant role, began to pull the band apart in the early '70s. Tom left in January 1971, one month after the release of the pivotal Pendulum, which became the group's fifth platinum album. The band earned on as a trio, touring worldwide; Live in Europe was the recorded result. CCR's final album, Mardi Gras, gave Cook and Clifford an equal share of the songwriting and lead vocals. It was the band's first album not to go platinum. Creedence disbanded in October 1972, and Fantasy has subsequently released a number of albums, including a live recording of a 1970 Oakland concert, which upon original release was erroneously titled Live at Albert Hall (it was later retitled The Concert).

Creedence Clearwater Revival: Tom Fogerty, Doug Clifford, Stu Cook, John Fogerty

Tom Fogerty released a number of albums on his own and with his band Ruby, and worked occasionally in the early '70s with organist Merle Saunders and Grateful Dead guitarist Jerry Garcia. He moved to Arizona in the mid-'80s and died there from respiratory failure brought on by AIDS in 1990 at age 48. Clifford released a solo album in 1972 of '50s-style rock & roll. Thereafter, he and Cook provided the rhythm section for Doug Sahm on his 1974 LP and the Don Harrison Band after 1976. In the mid-'80s Cook joined country group Southern Pacific, which had several hits.

Not surprisingly, John Fogerty's solo pursuits have attracted the greatest attention. Immediately after the breakup he released a bluegrass/country album, The Blue Ridge Rangers, on which he played all the instruments. Two songs, the Hank Williams classic "Jambalaya (On the Bayou)" and "Hearts of Stone," made the Top 40. Nearly three years passed before his next LP, another one-man show titled John Fogerty. It sold poorly, and his next album, to be called Hoodoo, was rejected by Asylum Records. Fogerty and his family retired to a farm in rural Oregon. Except for two brief Creedence reunions he was not heard from for 10 years.

He emerged with Centerfield (#1, 1985), a typically simple, tuneful collection that sold 2 million copies and produced hit singles in "The Old Man Down the Road" (#10, 1985), "Rock and Roll Girls" (#20, 1985), and "Centerfield" (#44, 1985). "Old Man" and another song from the album, "Zanz Kant Danz," landed Fogerty in legal trouble however. The latter, a thinly veiled attack against Fantasy owner Saul Zaentz ("Zanz can't dance but he'll steal your money"), led Zaentz to sue for $142 million, not only over that song, but over "Old Man"; Fantasy claimed the song plagiarized the music of the 1970 CCR B side "Run Through the Jungle." In 1988 a jury ruled in Fogerty's favor; six years later the Supreme Court ordered Fantasy to reimburse Fogerty for over $1 million in lawyers' fees.

For years Fogerty refused to perform CCR songs live; he'd had to surrender his artist's royalties on them to get out of his Fantasy contract in the '70s. But during a July 4, 1987, concert for Vietnam veterans in Washington, DC, he broke his boycott, singing eight Creedence classics. He then dropped out of sight again, surfacing only for the annual Rock and Roll Hall of Fame induction ceremonies; in 1993 his own turn came when CCR were inducted into the hall. Fogerty refused to perform with Cook and Clifford that evening.

After a decade remission, Fogerty released Blue Moon Swamp (#37, 1997); inspired by several trips to the Mississippi Delta, the album had taken over four years to make. It went on to win a Grammy for Best Rock Album, while the single "Southern Streamline" hit #67 on the C&W chart. Fogerty followed up the release with an extensive U.S. tour on which he played many CCR classics such as "Proud Mary" and "Fortunate Son" along with his new material; the live album Premonition (#29) was released the following year.

In 1995 Cook and Clifford started touring as Creedence

Clearwater Revisited. Fogerty sued and won a temporary injunction barring them from using that name, but his former bandmates ultimately prevailed in the case.

Marshall Crenshaw

Born Marshall Howard Crenshaw, Nov. 11, 1953, Detroit, MI

1982—Marshall Crenshaw (Warner Bros.) 1983—Field Day 1985—Downtown 1987—Mary Jean & 9 Others 1989—Good Evening 1991—Life's Too Short (Paradox/MCA) 1994—My Truck Is My Home (Razor & Tie) 1996—Miracle of Science 1998—The Nine Volt Years: Battery Powered Home Demos & Curios (1979–1987) 1999—#447.

As he did in his portrayal of John Lennon in the traveling '70s stage show Beatlemania and as Buddy Holly in the 1987 film La Bamba, Marshall Crenshaw has breathed new life into old pop forms. His solidly crafted rootsy albums have been praised for their tunefulness, spirit, and romantic lyrics.

Crenshaw grew up in a musical family (his brother, Robert Crenshaw, has drummed in his band) in suburban Detroit, where he listened to '60s AM rock radio and rockabilly. He began playing guitar when he was six. After high school he performed in oldies bands until he moved to L.A. and got the role in Beatlemania. He quit after two years and moved to New York City in 1980, where he gigged around town and won praise for his original tunes and solid musicianship. His debut, released to much acclaim, contains his biggest hit to date, "Someday, Someway" (#36).

Crenshaw's songs have been covered by Bette Midler, the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band, Robert Gordon, Freedy Johnston, Kelly Willis, Marti Jones, and the Gin Blossoms. In the U.K., Owen Paul took the Crenshaw B side "My Favorite Waste of Time" to #3. A music aficionado, Crenshaw has recorded songs by Richard Thompson, John Hiatt, Bobby Fuller, the Isley Brothers, and Chris Knox. By Good Evening, his lack of commercial success had eroded his relationship with Warner, and he was barely writing songs; in one last (unsuccessful) bid for stardom, he recorded a Diane Warren tune, then moved to MCA.

Crenshaw's acting career includes an appearance in Peggy Sue Got Married. He turned down the lead in the London stage production of Buddy; however, because he considered the show blindly nostalgic. Enlisting fellow pop-culture trivia buffs, Crenshaw oversaw and wrote reviews for Hollywood Rock: A Guide to Rock 'n' Roll in the Movies (1994). He issued My Truck Is My Home, a live album, the same year.

In 1996 Crenshaw released the self-produced Miracle of Science, most of it recorded at his home studio. Along with original material, the set included covers of songs by Ray Price, Billy Fury, Dobie Gray, and ex-Hüsker Dü drummer Grant Hart. Crenshaw also recorded the theme song to the 1996 TV sitcom Men Behaving Badly. Since then he has released a collection of demos and rarities and a new studio album, #447.

Jim Croce

Born Jan. 10, 1943, Philadelphia, PA; died Sep. 20, 1973, Natchitoches, LA

1969—Approaching Day (Capitol); Croce 1972—You Don't Mess Around With Jim (ABC) 1973—Life and Times; I Got a Name 1974—Photographs and Memories: His Greatest Hits (21 Records/Atlantic); The Faces I've Been (Lifesong) 1977—Time in a Bottle: Jim Croce's Greatest Love Songs (21 Records/Atlantic).

Singer/songwriter Croce had several early-'70s hits before he died in a plane crash. Croce began playing guitar professionally at 18, when he entered Villanova University. There he hosted a folk and blues show on campus radio and played in local bands. After graduation he did construction work and had to alter his guitar technique after breaking a finger with a sledge hammer. By 1967 he was living in New York and playing the coffeehouse circuit. He and his wife, Ingrid, released Approaching Day on Capitol that year. When it failed to chart, he returned to club work and drove trucks.

In 1971 he submitted some songs to producer Tommy West, an old college chum. With partner Terry Cashman, West helped Croce cut You Don't Mess Around With Jim. Released in early 1972, it produced two hit singles, "Operator" (#17, 1972) and the title track (#8, 1972). Life and Times and "Bad, Bad Leroy Brown" (#1, 1973) followed. He was killed when his chartered plane crashed into a tree soon after take-off on September 20, 1973, in Louisiana. Among the five other victims of the crash was his longtime guitarist Maury Muehleisen. (Croce, in fact, had supported Muehleisen on his own Capitol album, Gingerbread.)

I Got a Name, completed before Croce's death and released in late 1973, went gold, as did its #10 title track and "Time in a Bottle" (#1, 1973). Within months of Croce's death, three of his LPs were in the Top 20: Life and Times, I Got a Name, and You Don't Mess Around with Jim. The latter reigned at #1 for five weeks in early 1974. As of this writing, the singer's widow Ingrid owns a San Diego club called Croce's, where his son A.J. performs.

The close, high harmonies and soft-rock songs of David Crosby, Stephen Stills, and Graham Nash, sometimes joined by Neil Young, sold millions of albums and were widely imitated throughout the '70s. The members were as volatile as their songs were dulcet, and since 1970 have continually split up and regrouped. Crosby, Stills and Nash—all singer/songwriter/guitarists—had already recorded before their debut LP, Crosby, Stills and Nash, was released in 1969. Crosby with the Byrds [see entry], Stills and Young with Buffalo Springfield [see entry], and Nash with the Hollies [see entry].

Crosby had worked as a solo performer before joining the Byrds in 1964. In 1967 he quit because of differences with leader Roger "Jim" McGuinn, among them McGuinn's refusal to allow onto Notorious Byrd Bros. Crosby's "Triad," a song about a ménage à trois that the Jefferson Airplane recorded on Crown of Creation, Crosby sang it on Four Way Street (and the Byrds' recording of it eventually surfaced on the 1990 Byrds box set). Crosby began preparation for a solo album, which eventually appeared in 1971 as If I Could Only Remember My Name. He also produced Joni Mitchell's debut album in 1968; Mitchell's "Woodstock" later became a hit for Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young.

Young had quit Buffalo Springfield on the eve of the 1967 Monterey Pop Festival, and Crosby sat in for him at that concert. After the Springfield broke up in May 1968, Stills and Crosby began jamming together and were soon joined by Nash. Nash, who had been dissatisfied with the Hollies—they had refused to record his "Marrakesh Express" and "Lady of the Island"—joined Crosby and Stills. The three first sang together at a party in the L.A. home of Cass Elliot of the Mamas and the Papas.

Recorded early in 1969, Crosby, Stills and Nash was an immediate hit, with singles "Marrakesh Express" (#28) and Stills' "Suite: Judy Blue Eyes" (#21) (about Judy Collins). At the helm was Stills, playing nearly every instrument on the album, a feat that earned him the nickname Captain Manyhands. Although the trio's harmonies were less than perfect outside the recording studio, Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young began touring in midyear (Young joined them in summer 1969; Stills had originally asked John Sebastian, formerly of the Lovin' Spoonful, to round out the group). Their second live appearance was before half a million people at the Woodstock Festival in August 1969.

The quartet's first album, Déjà Vu, took two months to make and had advance orders for 2 million copies—it eventually went on to sell over 7 million—and included three hit singles: "Woodstock" (#11, 1970), "Teach Your Children" (#16, 1970), and "Our House" (#30, 1970). A few weeks after Déjà Vu's release, the National Guard shot and killed four students during an antiwar demonstration at Kent State University. In response, Young wrote "Ohio," which the group recorded and released as a single (#14, 1970). They toured that summer, but by the time the double live album Four Way Street was released, they had disbanded. The planned next album, Human Highway, was started in 1973 but was left unfinished. Young later recorded a single and produced a motion picture of the same title. Released in 1982, it failed to find a distributor, but came out on video in 1995.

Crosby and Nash released solo and duo albums in the early '70s and toured together, while Young returned to his solo career, and Stills started his. Stills' solo debut, which included "Love the One You're With" (#4, 1971), featured guest guitarists Eric Clapton and Jimi Hendrix. In 1974 the quartet toured together for the first time since 1970; Young traveled separately. Stills and Young made a duet album, Long May You Run, in 1976, but Young suddenly left Stills mid-tour.

In 1977 Crosby, Stills and Nash regrouped for the quadruple-platinum CSN, which included "Just a Song Before I Go" (#7, 1977). The next summer they toured as an acoustic trio, and in the fall of 1979 they performed at the antinuclear benefit concerts sponsored by Musicians United for Safe Energy (MUSE). In 1980 the British-born Nash was granted American citizenship. In 1982 the trio released Daylight Again, for which Stills wrote most of the songs, and toured arenas once more. Daylight was a Top 10 LP and boasted two Top 20 singles, "Wasted on the Way" (#9) and "Southern Cross" (#18).

In 1985 Crosby—who'd already had a number of run-ins with the law and been charged with drug and weapons possession—was sentenced to prison for nine months after leaving the drug rehabilitation program he was allowed to enter instead of serving a five-year prison sentence for possessing cocaine and carrying a gun. He appeared with Stills, Nash and Young at Live Aid while out on appeal bond. Shortly after his release from prison in 1986, he wrote a compelling account of his long-term drug abuse entitled Long Time Gone, which was published in 1990. The four reunited to record American Dream (#16, 1989), after which Young refused to tour with his ex-band mates. The trio's next release, CSN—a reissue with unreleased tracks—did not crack the Top 100.

By the '90s, Young's solo status as "Godfather of Grunge" had been established. Nash had been successful with Nash Editions, specializing in digital fine-art printing, as a photographer, and as a host of his own cable television talk show. Crosby had received a liver transplant in 1994 shortly after the release of After the Storm. In 1995 he reunited with a son, James Raymond, whom the child's mother had given up for adoption in 1962, as CPR. David and Raymond have recorded three albums. By the decade's end, Crosby had also achieved notoriety as the sperm donor for celebrity lesbian mothers Melissa Etheridge and Julie Cypher.

In 1999, largely at the instigation of Stephen Stills, CSN&Y re-formed to record Looking Forward. Earlier that year, Nash had broken both legs in a boating accident, but the group's spirts and creativity were sufficiently high for the album to garner critical praise. It was followed by the band's first tour since 1974, a heavily hyped cross-country trek entitled the CSNY2K Tour that featured studio veteran Jim Keltner on drums and Donald "Duck" Dunn of Booker T. and the MG's on bass.

Christopher Cross

Born Christopher Geppert, ca. 1951, San Antonio, TX
 1995—Window (Rhythm Safari) 1998—Walking in Avalon (CMC International) 1999—Red Room.

Christopher Cross was reared an army brat in Texas. By his late teens he was fronting a copy band in Texas clubs that, in 1972, was ranked Austin's leading cover band. Cross kept writing his own songs as well, and was finally signed by Warner Bros. in fall 1978. When his debut LP was released two years later, it went quadruple platinum and yielded four Top 20 hits: "Sailing" (#1); "Ride Like the Wind" (#2), which featured backing vocals by Michael McDonald of the Doobie Brothers; "Never Be the Same" (#15); and "Say You'll Be Mine" (#20). Christopher Cross also featured backing vocals by Nicolette Larson and Valerie Carter.

In 1981 Cross won five Grammy Awards, including Best Record, Best Album, and Best Song. His debut LP was still going strong on the chart in late 1981. In the fall of that year Cross had another massive hit with "Arthur's Theme (The Best That You Can Do)" (from the hit film Arthur), a song cowritten by Cross, Peter Allen, Burt Bacharach, and Carole Bayer Sager. It received an Academy Award for Best Original Song. His star soon faded: Every Turn of the World (#127, 1985) met mediocre sales, and yielded only a minor hit single in "Charm the Snake" (#68, 1985). Back of My Mind featured McDonald on backing vocals again, but still flopped.

Many die-hard fans consider the European-only Rendezvous to be Cross' finest work. Window, from 1995, is the result of an attempted American comeback. The double-CD Walking in Avalon contains a studio album and a live disc of greatest hits. The new songs were also issued separately as Red Room.

Sheryl Crow

Born Feb. 11, 1962, Kennett, MO

1993—Tuesday Night Music Club (A&M) 1996—Sheryl Crow

1998—The Globe Sessions 1999—Sheryl Crow and Friends: Live From Central Park.

Once a backup singer for Michael Jackson and Don Henley, Sheryl Crow gained mass popularity as a solo artist almost a year after the release of her 1993 debut album, Tuesday Night Music Club. Two more well-received records brought her respect for her rootsy pop rock.

Crow grew up in a rural farming community in Missouri. Exposed to music all her life—her parents were amateur musicians who often played in big bands in Memphis, Tennessee—she started singing in rock groups at 16. After receiving a degree in classical piano from the University of Missouri, Crow taught music at a St. Louis elementary school. Then, in 1986, the aspiring singer/songwriter moved to L.A. to pursue a career in the music business. Her first big gig was singing backup on Michael Jackson's 1987–88 Bad tour. She was also a backup singer for Don Henley, George Harrison, Joe Cocker, Stevie Wonder, and Rod Stewart.

In 1991 Crow signed with A&M. She recorded a self-titled debut album the next year but then convinced the record company to scrap it because of its slick production. She replaced it with the rawer Tuesday Night Music Club (#3, 1994), which was recorded with a loose-knit group of musicians that gathered on Tuesday nights at producer Bill Bottrell's L.A. studio. The supportive atmosphere encouraged Crow to focus her writing on her personal experiences: The album's "What I Can Do for You" discusses sexual harassment, and "No One Said It Would Be Easy" deals with a relationship's dissolution. The often-boozy evenings also produced more lighthearted songs, including "Leaving Las Vegas," a group collaboration written on the first Tuesday get-together, and "All I Wanna Do" (#2, 1994). The latter received a Grammy as 1994's Record of the Year. Crow also received the Best New Artist and Best Female Pop Vocal Performance awards that year. Bolstered by that song's huge success and Crow's constant touring (she played 542 shows between September 1993 and December 1995), the album went on to sell 9 million copies worldwide.

But while Crow was receiving critical accolades and commercial success, she also had a bitter falling-out with the members of the Tuesday Night Music Club, who accused her of trying to take sole credit for what they felt had been a collaborative effort.

Crow addressed her critics head-on by writing and recording most of her next album, symbolically named Sheryl Crow (#6, 1996), on her own. Yet controversy struck again almost immediately. In "Love Is a Good Thing," the singer wrote about children killing each other "with a gun they bought at a Wal-Mart discount store," leading the chain to pull the record from its stores in protest. In spite of that, the album showed that its predecessor was no fluke: A critical success, it also went on to sell 6 million copies with the help of the singles "If It Makes You Happy" (#10, 1996) and "Everyday Is a Winding Road" (#11, 1997). Crow, who had relocated from L.A. to New York, then released the confessional The Globe Sessions (#5, 1998) and its flagship single "My Favorite Mistake" (#20, 1998).

Testifying to the respect in which she is held by her peers, the "friends" on the 1999 live recording Sheryl Crow and Friends included Keith Richards, Eric Clapton, Chrissie Hynde, and Stevie Nicks (the latter of whom Crow has produced).

Crowded House

Formed July 1985, Melbourne, Austral.

Neil Finn (b. May 27, 1958, Te Awamutu, N.Z.), voc., gtr.; Paul Hester (b. Jan. 8, 1959, Melbourne), drums; Nick Seymour (b. Dec. 9, 1958, Benella, Austral.), bass.

Neil and Tim Finn: 1996—Finn Brothers (Discovery).

Neil Finn solo: 1998—Try Whistling This (Work Group/Sony).

Tim Finn solo: 2000—Say It Is So (Periscope Recordings).

Formed by two ex-members of the eccentric, cult-favored pop outfit Split Enz, Crowded House quickly eclipsed that band's popularity, thanks to a debut album of buoyant, impeccably crafted guitar pop. With their radiant melodies and breezy wit, the songs written by Crowded House's singer/guitarist Neil Finn invited references to the work of such smart-pop icons as Squeeze, the Kinks, and the Beatles.

Finn got his start playing in Split Enz [see entry], which was fronted by his big brother Tim, as a teenager. After the group's demise—precipitated by Tim's decision to pursue a solo career—Neil decided to form a band with Paul Hester, a drummer who had joined the latter-day Enz. After enlisting bassist Nick Seymour, the trio Crowded House released its eponymous debut album in 1986, to widespread acclaim. Commercial success wasn't immediate, but the album spawned two Top 10 hits in 1987, the wistful ballad "Don't Dream It's Over" (#2) and the more upbeat "Something So Strong" (#7). A moodier sophomore album, 1988's Temple of Low Men (#40), got some good notices but sold poorly.

In 1991 Crowded House resurfaced as a quartet: Tim Finn joined as keyboardist and vocalist/songwriter for Woodface. The album did well on the Modern Rock charts, but again yielded no pop hits; after touring with the group that year, the elder Finn returned to his critically praised (but commercially less distinguished) solo career. Crowded House remained a four-piece band, though, replacing Tim with American musician Mark Hart for 1993's Together Alone.

During a 1996 tour and just a few weeks before the release of the band's greatest-hits collection, Neil, citing a lack of creative inspiration, disbanded the group. More than 100,000 fans attended Crowded House's televised farewell concert in Sydney Australia, in November of that year; Hester, who had quit touring in 1995, returned to make the gig a reunion, and Tim joined the others for an encore.

At that time, Neil and Tim had recently released their own collaboration, Finn Brothers. Each brother went on to record a solo effort as well. Neil continued to tour on his own, while Tim dabbled in a side project called alt and composed music for a touring tap-dance show called Steel City in 1998. Hester became the drummer for the Australian group the Largest Living Things, and co-ran a recording studio and a cafe; Seymour played with the Melbourne-based band Deadstar, and Hart joined the re-formed Supertramp.

Rodney Crowell

Born Aug. 7, 1950, Houston, TX
 1978—Ain't Living Long Like This (Warner Bros.) 1980—But What Will the Neighbors Think 1981—Rodney Crowell
 1986—Street Language (Columbia) 1988—Diamonds & Dirt
 1989—Keys to the Highway; The Rodney Crowell Collection (Warner Bros.) 1992—Life Is Messy (Columbia) 1993—Greatest Hits 1994—Let the Picture Paint Itself (MCA)
 1995—Jewel of the South 2001—The Houston Kid (Sugar Hill).

Rodney Crowell is a country-rock singer/songwriter best known for his production work and his compositions performed by other singers, particularly Rosanne Cash, to whom he was married for 13 years. Crowell's performance of his own confessional songs, many of which were inspired by his rocky marriage to Cash, have earned him more critical acclaim than country- or pop-chart success.

He began drumming in his father's Houston rockabilly band when he was 11 years old, and he played with garage rock & roll bands in his high school and college years before moving to Nashville in the early '70s. Jerry Reed got him a staff songwriting job and recorded several of his songs.

In 1975 Crowell joined Emmylou Harris' Hot Band as backup singer and guitarist, and Harris subsequently recorded more than a dozen Crowell originals ("Leaving Louisiana in the Broad Daylight," "Amanillo"). In 1978 Crowell left the Hot Band to make his recording debut, produced by Harris' then-husband, Brian Ahern; guest musicians included Willie Nelson, Ry Cooder, and Mac Rebennack (Dr. John). The album sold fewer than 20,000 copies, but two years later the title song hit #1 on the country charts twice, in separate versions by Waylon Jennings and the Oak Ridge Boys. Other Crowell interpreters have included Carlene Carter, Willie Nelson, the Dirt Band, Bob Seger, Alan Jackson, Trisha Yearwood, Jimmy Buffett, and Foghat.

In 1979 Crowell began producing Rosanne Cash [see entry], whom he married later that year. He had a hit of his own in 1980 with "Ashes by Now," which made the pop Top 40. In addition to his own albums and his wife's '80s LPs, he has produced albums by Guy Clark, Bobby Bare, Carl Perkins, Johnny Cash, Jerry Lee Lewis, and Jim Lauderdale, among others. In 1985, along with his wife, he ended a cocaine dependence.

Crowell finally attained country chart success with his 1988's Diamonds & Dirt, which netted him five #1 C&W singles, including a duet with Rosanne Cash, "It's Such a Small World" (his first-ever Top 10 country single). Crowell became the first country artist to have five self-penned #1 C&W hits from one album. His increasingly confessional songs, many of whose lyrics reflected the tumultuous state of his marriage, turned up on his wife's albums as well as his own. Keys to the Highway (1989) was a moving testament to his father, who had died just prior to the album's recording.

In 1992 Crowell and Cash divorced, resulting in many of the songs on Life Is Messy. The album featured such guest artists as Linda Ronstadt and Steve Winwood. Crowell left Columbia for MCA in 1994, releasing the more upbeat Let the Picture Paint Itself. He recorded Jewel of the South for MCA the following year, but departed soon after and returned to Warner Bros. He left that label before completing an album, however, convinced the project he had in mind—a loosely autobiographical song cycle inspired by his Houston roots—wouldn't fit in with the boundaries of mainstream country radio. He ended up financing The Houston Kid on his own and releasing it in early 2001 on the independent label Sugar Hill. The critically well-received set features a guest appearance by Johnny Cash on "I Walk the Line (Revisited)."

The Crows

Formed ca. 1951, New York, NY
 Daniel "Sonny" Norton (d. 1972), lead voc.; William Davis (d. N.A.), baritone voc.; Harold Major (d. N.A.), tenor voc.; Jerry Wittick (d. N.A.), tenor voc.; Gerald Hamilton (d. ca. '60s), bass voc.
 1952—(– Wittick; + Mark Jackson, gr., tenor voc.).

The Crows' 1954 pop hit "Gee" (#14 pop, #6 R&B) was one of the first records by a black group to cross over into the pop market. The group, which perfected its sound on Harlem street corners, released two flop sides with singer Viola Watkins ("Seven Lonely Days" b/w "No Help Wanted") for the newly formed Rama Records in 1953. Under the guidance of label head George Goldner, the group next recorded William Davis' "Gee," the Crows' only pop hit. Its success prompted Goldner to launch a subsidiary label, Gee, in 1956 (its roster included Frankie Lymon and the Cletones). The flip side of "Gee," "I Love You So," was a Top 50 hit for the Chantels in 1958. After a quick succession of failed singles (including 1954's "Mambo Shevitz"), Davis joined the Continentals, and the Crows disbanded. There are no surviving original members.

Arthur "Big Boy" Crudup

Born 1905, Forrest, MS; died Mar. 28, 1974, Nassawadox, VA

1968—Look on Yonder's Wall (Delmark) 1969—Mean Ole Frisco (Trip) 1970—Crudup's Mood (Delmark) 1971—Father of Rock 'n' Roll (RCA) 1974—Roebuck Man (Liberty).

Bluesman Arthur "Big Boy" Crudup wrote "That's All Right, Mama"—one of the first songs Elvis Presley recorded and his first hit—and other rock standards, including "My Baby Left Me" and "Rock Me Mama." Crudup grew up in the Deep South, where he sang in church as a child. In the late '30s he joined a gospel group called the Harmonizing Four and moved with them to Chicago. In 1939 he began playing the guitar and the blues. A year later he was discovered by Okeh and Bluebird Records talent scout Lester Melrose, who helped Crudup get a record deal, but also took advantage of his client's naiveté and never paid him royalties. Crudup stayed with Melrose until 1947 when he realized that he was being cheated. Melrose sold Crudup's contract to RCA, but Crudup recorded only sporadically, and often on other labels under the name Elmore Jones or Percy Crudup (his son's name).

Crudup recorded through the mid-'50s until he quit in disgust. "I just give it up," he said later. He was retired from music, digging and selling sweet potatoes, when during the '60s Philadelphia blues promoter Dick Waterman took an interest in him and his business problems. Waterman began working with the American Guild of Artists and Composers in an attempt to collect some of the royalties Melrose (by then deceased) had withheld from Crudup. Waterman eventually collected $60,000 from BMI and reached a settlement with the music publisher Hill and Range.

Crudup resumed his music career in 1968 and toured the U.S. and Europe until his death from a heart attack in 1974. During his lifetime he had supported a family of 13 children, only four of whom were actually his.

After 15 years of playing under the name of the Jazz Crusaders and being overlooked by pop, jazz, and soul audiences, in the '70s the Crusaders became one of pop music's hottest instrumental bands, as well as in-demand session players. Wilton Felder, Joe Sample, and Nesbert Hooper first played together in their Houston high school marching band. They then formed the Swingsters, a bebop jazz and Texas-style R&B group. While attending Texas Southern University, they met Wayne Henderson and, with two other students, formed the Modern Jazz Sextet (a tuxedoed outfit modeled on the Modern Jazz Quartet). In 1958 the four future Crusaders moved to L.A., where as the Nighthawks, they backed Jackie DeShannon at one point and played dance clubs as far away as Las Vegas until 1961, when they returned to jazz. As the Jazz Crusaders, they landed a record contract from World Pacific Jazz and during the next decade built a modest following. In 1969, frustrated by lack of recognition, the quartet took a year off.

When they reemerged as the Crusaders, their music had changed to a blend of funk vamps and riffs, terse solos, and dance rhythms. Their singles began placing in the R&B Top 40—"Put It Where You Want It" (#39, 1972), "Don't Let It Get You Down" (#31, 1973), "Keep That Same Old Feeling" (#21, 1976), and "Street Life" (#17, 1979), sung by Randy Crawford—and the pop Top 100. Most of their '70s albums went gold, and in 1975 they became the only instrumental band chosen by the Rolling Stones as an opening act. As studio players, the Crusaders backed Steely Dan, Curtis Mayfield, Joni Mitchell, Ray Charles, Van Morrison, Joan Baez, B.B. King, and Barry White, among others. Other vocalists who have appeared on their albums include Joe Cocker and jazz great Nancy Wilson.

In 1971 Carlton became the first new full-fledged member in over 15 years. Felder played both bass and sax in recording sessions until Popwell's induction in 1976. Henderson left in 1975 to work in production; Carlton left for a solo career in 1976. With Popwell's departure, the band was back to the three founders; this core remained constant until Hooper's departure in 1983, when Leon "Ndugu" Chancler joined as drummer. (The chronology above tracks only the comings and going of key members.) In 1986 the Crusaders celebrated their 30th anniversary with The Good and Bad Times. For 1991's Healing the Wounds the group included Sample, Felder, and Marcus Miller on bass and synthesizer. While the Crusaders officially dissolved soon after that album, Henderson and Felder reappeared in 1995 and revived the original name, the Jazz Crusaders for Happy Again.

The Crystals

Formed 1961, Brooklyn, NY

Original lineup: Dee Dee Kennibrew (b. Delores Henry, 1945, Brooklyn), voc.; Dolores "La La" Brooks (b. 1946, Brooklyn), voc.; Mary Thomas (b. 1946, Brooklyn), voc.; Barbara Alston (b. 1945, Brooklyn), voc.; Patricia Wright (b. 1945, Brooklyn), voc.

1963—He's a Rebel (Philles) 1992—The Best of the Crystals (Abkco).

One of producer Phil Spector's first successful groups, the Crystals had a sultry image. The group was formed by Brooklyn schoolgirls. In 1961 they met Spector while auditioning in New York, and they became the first act signed to his Phillies Records. Their first two releases—"There's No Other (Like My Baby)" (#20, 1961) (the B side of "Oh Yeah Maybe Baby") and Barry Mann and Cynthia Weil's "Up-town" (#13, 1962)—were hits, but their third, "He Hit Me (And It Felt Like a Kiss)," was denied airplay when radio programmers objected to the violent implications of its title and lyrics ("He hit me and I was glad . . .").

The group's only #1 hit, Gene Pitney's "He's a Rebel," was not recorded by the Crystals but by a group of L.A. session singers, the Blossoms, fronted by Darlene Love [see entry], who also sang on the followup, "He's Sure the Boy I Love" (#11, 1963). The original Crystals were featured on the 1963 hits "Da Doo Ron Ron" (#3) and "Then He Kissed Me" (#6). But their 1964 releases—"Little Boy" and "All Grown Up"—were unsuccessful, and Spector lost interest in them. They bought their contract back from him and signed with United Artists, but their Motown-influenced singles also failed to hit.

Kennibrew has kept the Crystals active. Gretchen Gale and Marilyn Byers have accompanied her since the mid-'80s.

The Cult

Formed 1983, Brixton, London, Eng.

Ian Astbury (b. Ian Lindsay, May 14, 1962, Heswell, Merseyside, Eng.), voc.; Billy Duffy (b. William H. Duffy, May 12, 1959, Manchester, Eng.), gtr.; Jamie Stewart, bass; Nigel Preston (b. 1959; d. May 7, 1992), drums.

1984—Dreamtime (Beggars Banquet) 1985—(– Preston) Love (Sire) (+ Les Warner [b. Feb. 13, 1961], drums) 1987—Electric 1989—Sonic Temple (– Stewart; – Warner; + Matt Sorum [b. Nov. 19, 1960, CA], drums) 1990—(– Sorum) 1991—Ceremony (+ Craig Adams [b. Apr. 4, 1962, Otley, Yorkshire, Eng.], bass; + Scott Garrett [b. Mar. 14, 1966, Washington, DC], drums) 1994—The Cult 1999—(– Garrett; – Adams; + Sorum; + Martyn Lenoble [b. Apr. 14, 1969, Neth.], bass) 2000—The Cult: The Best of Rare Cult (– Lenoble). Holy Barbarians (Astbury, voc.); Matt Garret, bass; Patrick Sugg, gtr., voc.; Scott Garrett, drums: 1996—Cream. Ian Astbury solo: 2000—Spirit Light Speed (Beggars Banquet).

When the Cult first surfaced on the British indie label Beggars Banquet in the early '80s, its music attempted to bridge the gap between heavy metal and goth-style punk. It wasn't until the group decided to claim the heavy-metal tag in earnest, however, that it finally found its signature sound, which combines the pseudo-mysticism of the Doors and Led Zeppelin with the hard-rock crunch of AC/DC. For some listeners, the Cult is a brilliant parody; for others, it is the real thing.

Ian Astbury, son of a merchant navy man, formed Southern Death Cult in Bradford, England, in 1981. Two years later he recruited ex-Theatre of Hate guitarist Billy Duffy, a Manchester native who had played in a pre-Smiths combo with Morrissey, and changed the group's name to simply the Cult.

Although the lineup was rounded out on Dreamtime by bassist Jamie Stewart and drummer Nigel Preston, the group's roster was never etched in stone. Preston was replaced by Les Warner. Thereafter, the Cult underwent a succession of drummers, both onstage and in the studio, including Mickey Curry, Big Country's Mark Brzezicka, and future Guns n' Roses drummer Matt Sorum. Over the years, Warner would resurface now and again. By Ceremony, both Stewart and Warner were gone for good, and the band's official lineup was back down to original members Astbury and Duffy, soon joined by Craig Adams and Scott Garrett.

The dreamy, layered, almost experimental music on the Cult's 1984 debut kept the band obscure. The group's 1985 major-label debut, Love, however, reached #87 and spawned two U.K. Top 20 singles, "She Sells Sanctuary" and "Rain." With producer Rick Rubin (Beastie Boys, Run-DMC.) behind the mixing board for Electric (#38, 1987), the Cult was propelled out of cultdom and into the lucrative heavy-metal arena. The band's subsequent albums fared much better: The platinum-selling Sonic Temple reached #10 in 1989, with the singles "Edie (Ciao Baby)" (#93, 1989), a tribute to the late Andy Warhol star/model Edie Sedgwick, and "Fire Woman" (#46, 1989). On Ceremony (#25, 1991) Astbury continued his Native American/Robert Bly bonding philosophy in songs such as "Wild Hearted Son" (containing an Indian dance chant), the environmentalist "Earth Mofo," and "Indian."

After a three-year hiatus, Astbury and Duffy returned with a new version of the band for The Cult (#69, 1994), an album closer in sound and spirit to Love, but the album was met with mixed reviews while interest in the band had seemingly diminished in the grunge era. While touring behind the album, the Cult broke apart once again when Astbury abruptly quit after a 1995 show in Rio de Janeiro. The singer reemerged in 1996 with a new band called Holy Barbarians (including Garrett), which released one album, Cream. Astbury also would release a solo album in 2000. But by 1999, the Cult had re-formed once again (this time including Sorum and ex-Porno for Pyros bassist Martyn Lenoble), playing its most popular material to sold-out audiences.

Culture Club/Boy George

Formed 1981, London, Eng.

Boy George (b. George Alan O'Dowd, June 14, 1961, Bexley, Eng.), voc.; Roy Hay (b. Aug. 12, 1961, Southend-on-Sea, Eng.), gtr., kybds.; Mikey Craig (b. Feb. 15, 1960, London), bass; Jon Moss (b. Jonathan Aubrey Moss, Sep. 11, 1957, London), drums.

1982—Kissing to Be Clever (Virgin) 1983—Colour by Numbers 1984—Waking Up With the House On Fire 1986—From Luxury to Heartache (Virgin/Epic) 1993—At Worst . . . The Best of Boy George and Culture Club (SBK) 1998—VH1 Storytellers/Greatest Moments (Virgin).

Boy George solo: 1987—Sold (Virgin) 1989—High Hat 1991—The Martyr Mantras 1995—Cheapness & Beauty (EMI) 1999—Unrecoupable One Man Bandit (Nu Gruv/Finetune).

Led by soulful tenor and ever-quotable androgynous Boy George, Culture Club took its blue-eyed soul to the top of the charts. An exponent of London's postpunk New Romantic club scene, which saw disaffected youths sporting flamboyant clothes and makeup, Boy George charmed with his disarming playfulness and basically wholesome wit. Culture Club's music, ridden with sensual rhythms and irresistible hooks, proved equally accessible. George's decidedly feminine makeup, long braided locks, and penchant for long, dresslike tunics clearly stood out amid the other acts in heavy rotation on the then-nascent MTV, where for a time Culture Club was a staple. But after two huge albums, the band and its frontman began a downward spiral that culminated in one of the biggest pop star drug scandals of the 1980s.

George appeared briefly in the Malcolm McLaren-managed pop outfit Bow Wow Wow before meeting bassist Mikey Craig. The two enlisted drummer Jon Moss, who had played with Adam and the Ants and the Damned, and guitarist/keyboardist Roy Hay. Culture Club had its first major hit with the reggae-laced 1982 single "Do You Really Want to Hurt Me," which went to #1 in England and #2 in the U.S. The group's debut album reached America in early 1983, yielding two more Top 10 singles that year, "Time (Clock of the Heart)" (#2, 1983) and "I'll Tumble 4 Ya" (#9, 1983). A second album, 1983's Colour by Numbers, shot to #2 and spawned the hits "Church of the Poison Mind" (#10, 1983), "Karma Chameleon" (#1, 1983), "Miss Me Blind" (#5, 1984), and "It's a Miracle" (#13, 1984). Culture Club won the 1983 Grammy for Best New Artist.

A disappointing third album, which contained the simplistic single "The War Song" (#13 U.S., #2 U.K.) followed, and before long rumors were circulating that George was addicted to heroin. Pressured by police raids, the singer publicly revealed his drug habit in July 1986, months after the release of Culture Club's fourth and final album. George was arrested on possession charges, and sought treatment with Dr. Meg Patterson, who had helped Eric Clapton and Pete Townshend overcome dependencies. Once weaned off heroin, however, George turned to prescription narcotics. Later that year two of his friends died of drug overdoses—one, musician Michael Rudetsky, at George's home.

After being cleared of charges implicating him in Rudetsky's death, George successfully completed another drug rehabilitation program. Several solo albums followed, producing dance hits in Europe (including a reggae-inflected cover of Bread's "Everything I Own"), but George failed to reemerge significantly on the U.S. pop chart until his cover of Dave Berry's 1964 British hit "The Cryin' Game" was featured in the 1992 film of the same name. Buoyed by the movie's success, the single reached #15.

In 1995 George released a new solo album and a telling autobiography, Take It Like a Man, in which he wrote openly about his homosexuality and revealed that he'd had a romantic relationship with drummer Moss during the band's heyday (Moss later married and maintained that he was heterosexual.) George became a successful DJ on the London club scene and ran a small, independent, British dance-music label called More Protein Records. Then in 1998, Culture Club reunited for a nostalgia tour with other '80s acts; the band's first comeback performance was a taping of VH1 Storytellers, which was recorded as half of a new double-disc set. George released another solo album the following year.

Dubbed the "masters of mope rock," the Cure rose from Britain's late-'70s punk scene to become one of the biggest-selling "underground" acts of the '80s. Frontman Robert Smith, who has been described as the "messiah of melancholy" and the "guru of gloom," is known for wearing death-white facial makeup, crimson lipstick, and teased black hair; he is rivaled only by Mornissey as a heartthrob for the discontented. The Cure's goth-pop style is characterized by self-obsessed lyrics, minor-key melodies, and Smith's vexatious whine.

Robert Smith grew up in working-class Crawley, Sussex, a suburb of London. He recalls his childhood years as difficult, a time of run-ins with his parents and the law. At 17 he formed the Easy Cure with childhood friends Laurence Tolhurst and Michael Dempsey as a sort of catharsis for his feelings of frustration. The group's music has remained therapeutic for Smith.

The Cure made its initial splash in the U.K. with the 1979 single "Killing an Arab," which stirred controversy when it reappeared on the mid-'80s retrospective Standing on a Beach: The Singles. Some U.S. radio DJs used the song, which was inspired by Albert Camus' The Stranger, to advance anti-Arab sentiments; the group included a disclaimer with subsequent pressings stating that the song "decries the existence of all prejudice and consequent violence."

While the Cure toured in 1979 as the support act to Siouxsie and the Banshees, the headliner's guitarist quit the band. Smith was recruited to fill in on the tour, beginning an active collaboration with the Banshees. He ultimately devoted much of 1983-84 as a full-time member of the band, recording both the live Nocturne and a studio album, Hyaena. In 1983, he also joined Banshees bassist Steve Severin for a side project called the Glove, releasing one album, Blue Sunshine.

When Smith once again devoted himself to the Cure, the music evolved from the sparse punk pop of that song and other early singles ("Boys Don't Cry," "Jumping Someone Else's Train," "The Lovecats") to the dirgy, moody music of Faith and Seventeen Seconds, to the more focused hits on the later albums Kiss Me, Kiss Me, Kiss Me, Disintegration, and Wish.

While the Cure had been a top hitmaking indie band in the U.K. since the early '80s, it wasn't until the release of Standing on a Beach (and its CD-only counterpart, Staring at the Sea) (#48, 1986) that the band moved beyond its cult status in the U.S. The double-album Kiss Me, Kiss Me, Kiss Me (#35) debuted in June 1987, spawning the minor hits "Why Can't I Be You?" (#54, 1987), "Just Like Heaven" (#40, 1987), and "Hot Hot Hot!!!" (#65, 1988). In 1989 Disintegration reached #12 and included the group's biggest hit yet, "Love Song" (#2). Wish is the band's most successful album to date, reaching #2 and including the surprisingly upbeat "Friday I'm in Love" (#18). The subsequent tour was documented on record and a film, both titled Show (an additional live collection, Paris, culled from the same tour was also released in 1993).

The Cure: Simon Gallup, Perry Bamonte, Boris Williams, Robert Smith

In 1996 the Cure released Wild Mood Swings (#12) which attempted to broaden the band's sound to include a track of Latin-flavored pop, earning mostly negative reviews, and with "The 13th" (#44) its highest-charting single. Another best-of, Galore (#32), followed in 1997. Then, in 2000, Smith unveiled the band's best-reviewed album in years, Bloodflowers. That same year, Smith launched a world tour by announcing that it would be the band's last. But the bandleader soon began to hedge on that promise, saying all the subsequent attention and sudden acclaim made him strangely happy.

Sen Dog with SX-10: 1998—Get Wood Sampler (Flip) 2000—Mad Dog American (Latin Thug/X-Ray).

A Latino rap trio based near South Central L.A., Cypress Hill made a controversial name for itself in the early '90s by speaking out in favor of marijuana legalization. The trio's songs—characterized by smooth and funky bass-heavy rhythms, a nasal vocal delivery reminiscent of the Beastie Boys, and hard-hitting musical mixes filled with screaming sirens and car alarms—feature constant references to pot ("cheeba," "blunts," "buddha") and guns. Lyncs also tap into B-Real's experiences growing up surrounded by gangs and crime, including his own days selling drugs and being hit with a .22-caliber bullet during a deal gone bad (an incident later recounted in 1993's "Lick a Shot").

In 1986 Cuban-born Sen Dog and his younger brother, rapper Mellow Man Ace, formed a group called DVX, which included homeboys B-Real and Muggs. Pioneers of the Latin lingo style, "Spanglish," they became a trio and renamed the group for a neighborhood street when Ace departed for a solo career.

Cypress Hill's self-titled debut reached #31 pop and #4 R&B in 1992 and remained on the pop chart for 89 weeks. It contained the controversial single "How I Could Just Kill a Man" (#77, 1992) b/w "The Phuncky Feel One" (#94, 1992). Their highly successful followup, the pessimistic Black Sunday (#1 pop, #1 R&B, 1993), gave the group a Top 20 single via "Insane in the Brain" (#19 pop, #27 R&B, 1993). Cypress Hill III: Temples of Boom (#3 pop, #3 R&B, 1995) leaned more on live players and sold respectably but failed to spawn a signature hit single. ("Boom Biddy Bye Bye" got only as far as #87 pop, #73 R&B). That failure initially seemed to spell the end of Cypress Hill: Sen Dog quit in 1996, while Muggs focused on a critically praised solo album, Muggs Presents . . . Soul Assassins (#20 pop, #6 R&B, 1997), an all-star gathering that included B-Real, Dr. Dre, Wyclef Jean, and KRS-ONE. Sen Dog formed an alternative rock band called SX-10, and was temporarily replaced for live Cypress performances by rapper Shag G. The Unreleased & Revamped EP reached #21 pop, #15 R&B in 1996.

Sen Dog returned in time for Cypress Hill's IV (#11 pop, #15 R&B, 1998), followed a year later by Los Grandes Éxitos en Español, which collected Spanish versions of Cypress hits, as translated with the help of Mellow Man Ace. By then percussionist Enc Bobo (the son of noted Latin percussionist Willie Bobo), who had joined in 1994, was a full member of the group. Cypress Hill experienced a commercial comeback with the two-disc Skull & Bones (#5 pop, #4 R&B, 2000). Half the album was dedicated to straight-ahead hip-hop, with the other half mixing rap and metal guitars, spawning two versions of their song "Superstar," one rap, the other rock.

Billy Ray Cyrus

Born Aug. 25, 1961, Flatwoods, KY
1992—Some Gave All (Mercury) 1993—It Won't Be the Last 1994—Storm in the Heartland 1996—Trail of Tears 1997—The Best of Billy Ray Cyrus: Cover to Cover 1998—Shot Full of Love 2000—Southern Rain (Monument).

Not since white rapper Vanilla Ice has an entertainer become so hot so fast, or inspired as much derisive backlash, as country singer Billy Ray Cyrus did in 1992. Cyrus' ticket to superstardom was a catchy #1 country single called "Achy Breaky Heart," (#4 pop, 1992) penned by Don Von Tress, which propelled the singer's debut album Some Gave All to the top of both the pop and country charts. The album sold over 9 million copies, and Cyrus eclipsed Garth Brooks—for a while, anyway—as contemporary country's biggest crossover star. For years, he looked to be a one-hit wonder, though eventually, he enjoyed a more modest degree of success.

Cyrus began playing guitar at 20, forming a band called Sly Dog. He moved to L.A. soon afterward to pursue a recording contract. He wound up selling cars instead and eventually moved back East to Huntington, West Virginia. Cyrus was signed to Mercury in 1990, and recorded Some Gave All with the members of a re-formed Sly Dog. The "Achy Breaky Heart" single and video premiered in early 1992, and Mercury promoted them with dance-club contests that made "the Achy-Breaky" a national line dance craze. But Cyrus' music, much of which he wrote, was dismissed as fluff by critics and by several of his Nashville peers. The singer's good ole boy simplicity and macho good looks earned him an unfortunate reputation as a dumb hunk. In a nod to his skeptics, Cyrus called his 1993 sophomore album It Won't Be the Last (and it wasn't). The album was actually better received than its predecessor, but it didn't spawn any monster hits on the order of "Achy Breaky." Neither did 1994's Storm in the Heartland.

Cyrus took a more roots-oriented approach to Trail of Tears (#125, 1996), but ironically, it was his greatest-hits collection (#23 C&W, 1997) that sparked a country comeback. "It's All the Same to Me," a new track off the album, hit #19 on the country singles chart. In late 1998, he released Shot Full of Love (#32 C&W) and had another country hit, the #3 "Busy Man." Yet Cyrus' redemption was short-lived. His longtime label, Mercury, dropped him in 1999. Afterward, Cyrus turned his attention to acting, scoring roles in the TV movies Mullholland Drive (a failed David Lynch series pilot) and Doc, as well as the feature films Radical Jack and Wish You Were Dead.

Dick Dale

Born Richard Monsour, May 4, 1937, Boston, MA
1962—Surfer's Choice (Deltone) 1963—King of the Surf Guitar (Capitol); Checkered Flag 1964—Mr. Eliminator; Summer Surf 1984—The Tigers Loose (Balboa) 1986—Greatest Hits (Crescendo) 1989—King of the Surf Guitar: The Best of Dick Dale and His Del-Tones (Rhino) 1993—Tribal Thunder (HighTone) 1994—Unknown Territory 1996—Calling Up Spirits (Beggars Banquet) 1997—Better Shred Than Dead: The Dick Dale Anthology (Rhino) 2000—Spacial Disorientation (Dick Dale).

Guitarist Dick Dale's 1961 West Coast hit "Let's Go Trippin'" (#60 pop), released two months before the Beach Boys' "Surfin'," is considered the harbinger of the '60s surf-music craze. Billed as the "King of the Surf Guitar," Dale pioneered a musical genre that Beach Boy Brian Wilson and others would later bring to fruition. His twangy, heavily reverbed tone on the 1962 "Misirlou" (which, like "Trippin'," the Beach Boys covered on their early LPs) influenced Beach Boy Carl Wilson and many other California guitarists; his signature staccato slide down the strings was copied by the Chantays to open their surf instrumental classic "Pipeline." Dale said he created this style to mirror the feeling of surfing, which he'd first discovered as a teenager, when his family moved from Boston to Southern California.

"Misirlou" had originally been a Greek pop standard in the '40s; Dale, whose father was Lebanese, often worked Middle Eastern melodies into his music (even recording "Hava Nagila" on the flip side of one early single), translating mandolin-style rapid double-picking to his highly amplified Fender Stratocaster. The left-handed Dale played his Strat upside-down; he later claimed the young Jimi Hendrix often came to see him perform at the Rendezvous Ballroom in Balboa. Dale developed a close relationship with the Fender company. He was the first to road-test its portable reverb unit, and he designed the Showman amplifier with Leo Fender.

Dale and his band the Del-Tones were so popular in Southern California's Huntington Beach/Balboa area that he felt no need to tour nationally. Though he appeared on TV's Ed Sullivan Show in 1963, Dale never reaped the commercial rewards of the surf boom; his only other appearance on the chart came in 1963 with "The Scavenger." By 1965, disillusioned with the music business, he retired. The following year doctors found six cancerous tumors in his intestines; he was told he had only months to live, but he survived surgery. He re-formed the Del-Tones in 1970 and continued performing around Southern California with different versions of the group (ranging from seven to 12 pieces) through the '80s. Dale rerecorded many of his best-known tunes on the 1986 Greatest Hits, and recorded The Tigers Loose [sic] live in Huntington Beach.

Dale's comeback began with a guest appearance in the 1987 Frankie Avalon-Annette Funicello movie Back to the Beach (he had appeared in several of their '60s beach-party epics), in which he and Stevie Ray Vaughan performed "Pipeline." Their version was nominated for a Best Rock Instrumental Grammy. He returned in earnest in 1993, with critics acclaiming the speed-metal ferocity of Tribal Thunder, which added a Native American feel to Dale's Bedouin-surf mix, prompted the first nationwide tour of his career, and even brought him to MTV with his first music video, "Nitro." Dale gained even more prominence via his "Misirlou," which opened the hit film Pulp Fiction (1994). Calling Up Spirits (1996) was similar in inspiration to Tribal Thunder. Dale continues to record and perform, to the delight of fans who call themselves Dick Heads.

Captain Sensible solo: 1984—A Day in the Life of Captain Sensible (A&M).

The Damned were the first British punk band to record, to chart, and to tour America. Their history goes back to early 1975, when Brian James joined Mick Jones in the London S.S., a punk group whose members included Paul Simonon and Terry Chimes (a.k.a. Tory Crimes), who later formed the Clash with Jones; Tony James, who went on to Chelsea and Generation X; and Rat Scabies, with whom Brian James joined Nick Kent's Subterraneans. When Kent returned to writing for the New Musical Express, James, Sensible, and Scabies stayed together as the Masters of the Backside. They were managed by Malcolm McLaren (who later managed the Sex Pistols), and their singer was Chrissie Hynde, who later formed the Pretenders [see entry]. Scabies enlisted Vanian, a gravedigger, into the group after overhearing him sing, "I Love the Dead" at his sister's funeral.

The four first performed in London in July 1976. They were notorious for their stage act, with Sensible dressed in a tutu and prodding front-row spectators with his bass, Scabies bounding from behind his drums to exchange blows with onlookers, and Vanian as Dracula in a black cape. Stiff Records signed them in September, and in October they released a single, "New Rose," one month before the Sex Pistols' first record. Early in 1977 they released their first album (produced by Nick Lowe, as was "New Rose") and played clubs in New York, L.A., and San Francisco.

Their second album (produced by Nick Mason of Pink Floyd) got a poor reception. Scabies left to form a group with Patti Smith pianist Richard Sohl and former Clash/future Public Image Ltd. guitarist Keith Levene. He was replaced by Jon Moss for a tour of Britain with the Dead Boys, but by April 1978 the Damned had fallen apart. James formed Tanz der Youth, Moss and second guitarist Lu went to the Edge, and Sensible formed King. Moss would later turn up in Adam and the Ants [see entry] and Culture Club [see entry].

In late 1978 Scabies, Sensible, and Vanian got together again, after joining to play a one-off date with Lemmy of Motörhead. With bassist Henry Badowski of King, they toured Britain as the Doomed—James owned the name "the Damned" and only later relinquished it. Their new records were the most popular of their four years: "Love Song" hit #20 on the U.K. singles chart, and "Smash It Up" made the Top 40. Later in the year, they returned to the U.S., and in 1980, after Ward had been replaced by Paul Gray, formerly of Eddie and the Hot Rods, they cut their first American-released album. In 1982 Captain Sensible released a solo album in the U.K., Women and Captains First (A&M), which included the hit single "Wot" (#26 U.K.). His U.S. solo debut album, A Day in the Life of Captain Sensible contained tracks from his first two albums, which were not released here. James and Dead Boys vocalist Stiv Bators formed the Lords of the New Church [see the Dead Boys entry].

In 1984 Captain Sensible left the band, and Merrick joined. The group's next few singles went Top 40 in the U.K.: "Gnmlly Fiendish," "The Shadow of Love," and "Is It a Dream" (1985); "Anything" (1986); "Gigolo" and a cover of Love's "Alone Again Or" (1987). The biggest single of the Damned's career was 1986's "Eloise," which went to #3 in their homeland. In the summer of 1989 the group made its farewell concert tour—only to reunite several times through the '90s. Tension erupted between Vanian and Scabies over creative control of 1996's Not of This Earth, and Scabies was not a part of the band's 1998 U.S. tour. On the other hand, Captain Sensible did return to the Damned fold. Since 1996 he and Vanian have anchored the band's lineup, which also includes former Fun Club and Sisters of Mercy (and Vanian's wife) Patricia Morrison on bass.

Since the late '80s Vanian has fronted the Phantom Chords, a side project that performs a variety of tunes from the '30s through the '60s. In 2000 Brian James formed Mad for the Racket with MC5 guitarist Wayne Kramer: their debut album. The Racketeers, featured Stewart Copeland, Clem Burke, and Duff McKagan.

Damn Yankees

Formed Apr. 1989, New York, NY

Ted Nugent (b. Dec. 13, 1948, Detroit, MI), gtr., voc.; Jack Blades (b. Apr. 24, 1954, Palm, CA), bass, voc.; Tommy Shaw (b. Sep. 11, 1953, Montgomery, AL), gtr., voc.; Michael Cartellone (b. June 7, 1962, Cleveland, OH), drums.
1990—Damn Yankees (Warner Bros.) 1992—Don't Tread.

Damn Yankees was the most successful of a spate of late-'80s groups formed by aging rock stars such as Bad English (vocalist John Waite with ex-Journey guitarist Neal Schon) and the Firm (ex-Led Zeppelin guitarist Jimmy Page with ex-Bad Company vocalist Paul Rodgers). Damn Yankees added Ted Nugent's trademark metallic crunch to the polished AOR melodicism of Styx and Night Ranger (of "Sister Christian" fame), the respective former bands of Tommy Shaw and Jack Blades.

Nugent and Shaw met at a record-label convention in 1988, began casually jamming and composing together, then recruited Blades. They later maintained that Damn Yankees was not the record-company-boardroom-product it seemed and, in fact, they were turned down by every major label at their first New York City audition.

They finally landed a deal with Warner Bros., and the group's debut album (#13, 1990) went platinum, thanks largely to the anthemic power-ballad "High Enough" (#3, 1990). Don't Tread (#22, 1992) yielded the chart single "Where You Goin' Now" (#20, 1992). Nugent, meanwhile, became famous—or infamous—for his outspoken espousal of guns and bow-hunting (which he practiced himself to feed his family) and his verbal attacks on such animal-rights advocates as k.d. lang and Chrissie Hynde [see Ted Nugent entry]. When the group took a hiatus in 1993, Shaw and Blades continued as an eponymous act, and released Hallucination (1995).

D'Angelo

Born Michael D'Angelo Archer, Feb. 11, 1974, Richmond, VA
1995—Brown Sugar (EMI) 2000—Voodoo (Virgin).

Comparing D'Angelo to Prince is almost unavoidable: Both are multitalented, sexy soul-singers studied in the art of the groove. Along with Maxwell, D'Angelo emerged in the '90s as one of the few male vocalist/songwriters to perfect the hybrid of hip-hop and R&B.

The son of a Baptist preacher, D'Angelo began experimenting with keyboards around the age of three. In addition to playing church music on Sundays, D'Angelo spent much of his childhood mimicking artists such as Stevie Wonder, George Clinton, James Brown, and Prince. At 17, D'Angelo rocked the crowd on Amateur Night at the Apollo with an energetic rendition of Johnny Gill's "Rub You the Right Way" and won $500—most of which he used to purchase a four-track recorder. At his mother's house he began writing and recording much of the material that would constitute Brown Sugar (#22 pop, #4 R&B, 1995)—a collection of afro-tantric grooves that feature D'Angelo playing virtually all of the instruments. The title track "Brown Sugar" (#27 pop, #5 R&B, 1995), "Cruisin'" (#53 pop, #10 R&B, 1995), and "Lady" (#10 pop, #2 R&B, 1996) all enjoyed chart success and radio rotation.

D'Angelo disappeared from the pop limelight for a few years in the late '90s, making scattered cameos on albums by Lauryn Hill, the Roots, and Method Man. D'Angelo resurfaced with the highly anticipated Voodoo (#1 pop and R&B, 2000), featuring appearances by Roots drummer Ahmir-Khalib "Questlove" Thompson and jazzmen Charlie Hunter and Roy Hargrove. Merging the worlds of hip-hop, jazz, and down-home funk, Voodoo yielded the hit "Untitled (How Does It Feel)" (#25 pop, #2 R&B, 2000).

Sessionman-turned-bandleader Charlie Daniels worked his way up to platinum sales with heavy touring, an instinct for quasi-political novelty singles and an eclectic repertoire that touched on boogie, bluegrass, country, blues, hard rock, and a touch of Tex-Mex.

The son of a North Carolina lumberman, guitarist and fiddler, Daniels turned pro at 21 when he formed the Jaguars. For the next decade (except for five weeks when he worked in a Denver junkyard), he played in Southern bars and roadhouses. In 1964 a song he cowrote, "It Hurts Me," became the B side of Elvis Presley's double-sided Top 30 hit "Kissin' Cousins." Daniels disbanded the Jaguars and in 1967 settled in Nashville, where he became a session musician, playing guitar, fiddle, bass, and banjo on albums by Bob Dylan, Ringo Starr, Leonard Cohen, Pete Seeger, and numerous country sessions. His songs were covered by Tammy Wynette, Gary Stewart, and others. He also worked as a producer, most notably on four albums by the Youngbloods.

In 1971 he started the Charlie Daniels Band, modeled after the Allman Brothers Band with two drummers and twin lead guitars. Honey in the Rock included the talking-bluegrass novelty "Uneasy Rider," a 1973 Top 10 hit. The band played nearly 200 shows a year and built a loyal following in the South and West. Night rider included the definitive rebel rouser "The South's Gonna Do It" (#29, 1975). Daniels began his annual Volunteer Jam concerts in 1974 in Nashville, and several have been recorded for live albums.

In 1975 Daniels moved to Epic for a reported $3 million contract, recorded Saddle Tramp, then realigned his band with three new members. He continued a grueling tour schedule (including benefits in 1976 for presidential candidate Jimmy Carter, he later performed at Carter's inaugural ball) and recorded albums. His multimillion-selling breakthrough, Million Mile Reflections, yielded "The Devil Went Down to Georgia" (#3, 1979), for which Daniels received the Best Country Vocal Grammy Award.

Daniels' music often has a politically conservative edge. During the Iranian hostage crisis, he had a hit with "In America" (#15 pop, #13 C&W, 1980), two years later his version of Dan Daley's "Still in Saigon," concerning the traumas of a Vietnam vet, was a Top 25 hit. The title cut of Daniels' 1990 Simple Man (#2 C&W) called for the lynching of drug dealers, and for rapists and child abusers to be left in swamps to be gnawed to death by alligators and snakes. Daniels often expands on these themes in articles running on his own Web site. In 1993 he switched to Nashville's Liberty Records, with another patriotic anthem in the title cut of America, I Believe in You. The following year, Daniels released his first gospel recording. Entitled The Door, it featured a songwriting collaboration between Daniels and Steven Curtis Chapman; Steel Witness followed in 1996.

In 1997 Daniels created his own label, Blue Hat, which was available only in Wal-Mart stores before securing national distribution. Since 1998 he has been taking his Volunteer Jam on the road, touring with like-minded groups such as the Marshall Tucker Band and Little Feat. He also paid tribute to Southern rock on 1999's Tailgate Party, covering songs by Lynyrd Skynyrd and Stevie Ray Vaughan.

Danny and the Juniors

Formed 1957, Philadelphia, PA

Danny Rapp (b. May 10, 1941; d. Apr. 5, 1983, AZ), lead voc.; Joe Terranova (b. Jan. 30, 1941), baritone voc.; Frank Maffei, second tenor voc.; Dave White (b. David White Tricker), first tenor voc.

1958—Rock and Roll Is Here to Stay (Singular) 1992—Rockin' With Danny and the Juniors (MCA).

A harmony group, Danny and the Juniors are best remembered for their 1958 #1 hit "At the Hop." The foursome, all from Philadelphia, came together in high school as the Juvenairs and were subsequently discovered by music entrepreneur Artie Singer, who became their manager. Together they wrote "At the Hop" and recorded it for the local Singular label. ABC-Paramount picked it up, and it went gold on both sides of the Atlantic. The group toured frequently over the next few years (often as part of disc jockey Alan Freed's revue) and scored a few minor hits, notably the Top 20 followup "Rock and Roll Is Here to Stay" (1958). By the beginning of the '60s the Juniors had switched to the Swan label, where they last charted in early 1963. David White Tricker released a solo album on Bell Records in 1971 under his full name. Rapp committed suicide in 1983. Original members Terranova and Maffei decided to perform with Danny and the Juniors on the oldies concert circuit.

Danzig

Glenn Danzig (b. June 23, 1955, Lodi, NJ), voc.; John Christ (b. Feb. 19, 1965, Baltimore, MD), gr.; Eerie Von (b. Aug. 25, 1964, Lodi), bass; Chuck Biscuits (b. Apr. 17, CA), drums. 1988—Danzig (Def American) 1990—Danzig II—Lucifuge 1992—Danzig III: How The Gods Kill 1993—Thrall-demonsweatlive EP 1994—Danzig 4 (American) (- Biscuits; + Joey Castillo [b. Mar. 30, 1966, Gardena, CA], drums) 1995—(- Von; - Christ; + Tommy Victor, gr.; + Josh Lazie, bass) 1996—Blackacidevil (Hollywood) 1999—6:66 Satan's Child (Evilive/E-Magine) 2000—Sacrifice EP (- Lazie, + Howie Pyro, bass).

Before there was Marilyn Manson and before there was Limp Bizkit (although after Alice Cooper), Danzig embodied everything about heavy metal that parents fear. Satanic, profane, antiauthoritarian music played by people who are no doubt proud of their "cult" status. Stentorian, muscular, multitalented vocalist Glenn Danzig was a member of the Misfits, part of the late-'70s New York punk scene. Though now cited as an influence by many metal bands, the Misfits never escaped the hardcore ghetto and dissolved. In 1982 Danzig formed Samhain with Eerie Von, a drummer turned bassist. The addition four years later of Chuck Biscuits and John Christ completed the quartet.

In 1986, Rick Rubin signed Danzig to his Def American label. While critics consider Danzig's music more meaty, varied, and compelling than other metal, stardom eluded the band, although its third LP, Danzig III—How the Gods Kill, peaked at #24 in 1992.

In 1994, Danzig garnered attention via Thrall-demonsweatlive's live version of "Mother" (#43, 1994) which got a thumbs-up from MTV's Beavis and Butt-head. That same year, a song penned by Danzig, "Thirteen," was featured on Johnny Cash's American Recordings. Near the year's end, the band's new album, Danzig 4, entered the charts at #29.

In 1996 Danzig shuffled the band's lineup, adding ex-Prong guitarist Tommy Victor and bassist Josh Lazie to the returning Castillo, and left Rubin and Def American for Hollywood Records. But the Disney-owned imprint's Blackacidevil (1996) sank without a trace.

Danzig next took a three-year recording hiatus, but his songs appeared on the soundtracks for the X-Files (1996) and The Crow: Salvation (1998). He returned in 1999 with 6:66

Satan's Child, released on his own Evilive label, followed by a world tour, during which he recorded a live album. Danzig returned to the studio in 2000 to record a seventh studio album, with former D-Generation bassist Howie Pyro replacing Lazie.

Terence Trent D'Arby

Born Terence Trent Darby, Mar. 15, 1962, New York, NY

1987—Introducing the Hardline According to Terence Trent D'Arby (Columbia) 1989—Terence Trent D'Arby's Neither Fish nor Flesh 1993—Terence Trent D'Arby's Symphony or Damn (Exploring the Tension Inside the Sweetness) 1995—TTD Vibrator.

American-born, British-based rock & soul singer Terence Trent D'Arby has a voice so flexible that it has been compared to Sam Cooke, Smokey Robinson, Al Green, even Roberta Flack. A media manipulator from day one, D'Arby proclaimed his first album among "the most brilliant debuts from any artist in the past 10 years" before its 1987 release. Reaction to D'Arby's braggadocio and widely publicized "discrepancies" in his early bio was cool. Yet few critics or R&B aficionados failed to note the encyclopedic references to '60s rock and soul in his style.

Born into a musical Manhattan family—his father played guitar and was a rock & roll fan before becoming a Pentecostal minister—D'Arby (then known as Terry Darby) spent his teen years in DeLand, Florida, where he sang with the DeLand High School Modernaires. He also was an avid boxer.

After studying journalism at the University of Central Florida for a year, he quit to join the army in 1980 so he could continue boxing as a Golden Gloves contender. When he refused paratrooper training, the Army assigned Darby to a supply clerk post in the Third Armored Division in Germany (Elvis Presley's old unit). His interest in Frankfurt's nightlife and renewed desire to sing coincided with an increasing frustration with military life. Shortly after joining the nine-piece, pop-soul combo Touch (in 1989 IMP-Polydor released an album of the group's music, The Touch With Terence Trent D'Arby: Early Works), Darby went AWOL. He turned himself in just before his solo signing to Columbia.

In October 1987, D'Arby (with new spelling) released his first single from Hardline (#4, 1987), "If You Let Me Stay" (#68), it wasn't until the following January that the handsome, androgynous singer hit #1 with "Wishing Well," whose blend of rock and funk drew comparisons to Prince. His subsequent hit was the romantic "Sign Your Name" (#4, 1988), released in May.

Two years after D'Arby's debut, the more experimental Neither Fish nor Flesh met with critical kudos but was a commercial flop, yielding no hit singles and reaching only #61. Four years later D'Arby returned with 1993's Symphony or Damn (#119), which fared even worse, though it did manage to score a Top 100 single, "Delicate" (#74). In 1995, he released TTD's Vibrator, a typically eclectic blend of soul and funk, with hard rock, gospel, and Latin flavors. Its commercial failure led D'Arby to threaten to retire as a performer and turn toward work behind the scenes as a producer.

Bobby Darin

Born Walden Robert Cassotto, May 14, 1936, Bronx, NY; died Dec. 20, 1973, Los Angeles, CA
 1959—That's All (Atco) 1960—This Is Darin; Darin at the Copa
 1961—The Bobby Darin Story; Two of a Kind: Bobby Darin With Johnny Mercer 1967—If I Were a Carpenter (Atlantic)
 1972—Bobby Darin (Motown) 1974—Darin 1936–1974
 1989—Capitol Collector's Series (Capitol) 1991—Splish Splash: The Best of Bobby Darin, vol. 1 (Atco); Mack the Knife: The Best of Bobby Darin, vol. 2 1995—As Long as I'm Singing: The Bobby Darin Collection (Rhino).

Although Bobby Darin began his career as one of the most popular '50s teen idols, he viewed himself as a serious singer, musician, and songwriter. Dann briefly attended Manhattan's Hunter College before dropping out to pursue a music career. He wrote some songs for Don Kirshner's Aldon Music and landed an Atco recording contract in 1957. His records met with little success until label president Ahmet Ertegun produced "Splish Splash," a song that Darin had written in 12 minutes. (He eventually wrote over 75 songs.) Reaching #3 in 1958, it sold over 100,000 copies in less than a month. Three more gold singles followed: "Queen of the Hop" (#9, 1958), his own "Dream Lover" (#2, 1959), and "Mack the Knife" (#15, 1959), for which Darin won two Grammy Awards. Dann was also extremely successful in the U.K., where "Dream Lover" went to #1.

"Beyond the Sea," a remake of a 1945 French hit "La Mer," clearly indicated the direction Dann was headed. Its swinging, big band-style arrangements sounded more at home in Vegas than on American Bandstand, and in fact, Darin moved quickly onto the nightclub circuit, with appearances at the Copacabana in New York and the Sahara and Flamingo hotels in Las Vegas. The year 1960's "Clementine" (#21), "Won't You Come Home Bill Bailey" (#19), and "Artificial Flowers" (#20) were all in this more "adult" vein.

Brash, outspoken, and ambitious (he said he wanted to be "bigger than Sinatra"), Dann was, by many accounts, a man in a hurry. He suggested that this was because he was certain he would die at an early age from a congenital heart defect. He went to Hollywood and made several movies, beginning in 1960 with Come September (he later married his leading lady Sandra Dee) and 1963's Capt. Newman, M.D. for which he received an Oscar nomination. He appeared in approximately eight more films, including State Fair (1962).

Dann later scored hits with "You Must Have Been a Beautiful Baby" (#5, 1961), "Irresistible You" (#15, 1961), "What'd I Say" (#24, 1962), his own "Things" (#3, 1962), "You're the Reason I'm Living" (#3, 1963), and "18 Yellow Roses" (#10, 1963). A string of nonhit singles led to Darin's 1965 move to folk-rock material by writers like Randy Newman and Tim Hardin, whose "If I Were a Carpenter" (#8, 1966) provided Darin with his first Top 10 single since 1961 and last major hit. (Ironically, Hardin's sole, albeit minor, hit single, "Simple Song of Freedom," was written by Darin.)

He continued to appear in Las Vegas and on TV through the mid-'60s and worked extensively for Robert Kennedy during his 1968 presidential campaign. Dann claimed to have had a mystical-religious experience at Kennedy's funeral service that prompted him to stop working, sell his possessions, and retreat to a mobile home at Big Sur, California. He had also discovered that the woman he believed was his sister was actually his mother. After more than a year of contemplation he reemerged, blue-jeaned and mustachioed, to start his own short-lived label, Direction Records.

Working in a soft-rock vein, he cut an unsuccessful politically oriented album called Born Walden Robert Cassotto. The early '70s found Dann signed to Motown and playing Las Vegas again. His Motown releases were commercially unsuccessful (allegedly, the label still has a number of unreleased tracks), and critics consider them the nadir of his career. He married legal secretary Andrea Joy Yeager in June 1972 (he had divorced Dee in 1967). He died during heart surgery to repair a faulty heart valve in 1973. He was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1990.

Das Furlines

Formed 1985, Black Forest, Ger.

Wendy Wild (b. Aug. 31, 1956; d. Oct. 26, 1996, New York, NY), voc., banjo, gtr.; Holly Hemlock (b. Oct. 10, 1956), gtr., voc.; Liz Luv (b. Aug. 24, 1960), bass; Deb O'Nair (b. May 7, 1957), kybds., voc.; Rachel Schnitzel (b. Mar. 11, 1958), drums., voc.
 1985—Das Furlines Go Hog Wild (Palooka) 1986—Lost in the Translation 1987—Das Furlines Live at Paddles 1988—The Angry Years 1992—Bratwurst, Bierhalls & Bustiers: The Box Set.

One of the most compelling and sensually alluring live bands on the New York postpunk scene, the five-girl Das Furlines pioneered the punk-polka genre, making their initial splash with Go Hog Wild, a sloppy but inspired set of the sort of adrenalized polka that would become the group's signature.

Not much is known about the quintet's early days in its homeland, the Black Forest region of Germany. Soon after its formation, though, the band relocated to New York and quickly assimilated into the East Village postpunk music scene. The fetching fivesome—Wendy Wild, Holly Hemlock, Liz Luv, Deb O'Nair, and Rachel Schnitzel—became renowned for their elaborate costumes and frenetic performances, which included a storytelling segment and chicken-polka-dancing contests. Though Das Furlines seemed the toast of the town—featured on such TV shows as Entertainment Tonight and Andy Warhol's 15 Minutes—a record deal eluded them. Impatiently, they released their debut, Das Furlines Go Hog Wild, on their own vanity label. The promise suggested by such Hog Wild cuts as "Polka Palooka" and "Honk 'n' Holler" was more than realized on the frankly sexual second LP, Lost in the Translation, on which the comely lasses did breathy polka versions of "Funkytown" ("Polkatown"), "The Immigrant Song," and "Magic Carpet Ride" ("Hofbrau Haus"). With 1987's Live at Paddles, the Furlines transferred the musky heat of their infamous live performances to vinyl. The Angry Years, an ambitious concept album based on the self-help classic Women Who Love Too Much, sums up the group's erotic command, personal exhaustion, and gluttony into a brilliant rock & roll statement.

The group split up after a 1988 U.S. tour (each Furline had been horribly betrayed by her mate while on the road, causing irreparable rifts among them). The Das Furlines' contribution to 20th-century American culture is expertly documented on Bratwurst, Bierhalls & Bustiers, a four-CD collection of B sides, rare singles, G-strings, outtakes, and spoken-word recipes. The carefully annotated track listings and liner notes written by their fan-club president, Bebe Dahl, provides each band member's vital statistics and preferences of all sorts. (The band's work can also be found on various polka anthologies.) The group reunited for a few performances in the early '90s, to raise funds for lead singer Wendy Wild's medical bills. Wild succumbed to breast cancer in 1996.

Cyril Davies

Born 1932, Eng.; died Jan. 7, 1964, Eng.
1970—The Legendary Cyril Davies (Folklore, U.K.).

Cyril Davies was a catalyst of the early-'60s British R&B scene. He began his professional career in the early '50s as a banjoist in traditional jazz bands and later moved into skiffle, which led him to blues and R&B in the late '50s. By then Davies was concentrating on singing and playing blues harmonica. He and Alexis Korner opened a series of blues clubs in London's Soho district and jammed with visiting blues performers like Sonny Terry, Brownie McGhee, Memphis Slim, and Muddy Waters.

In the early '60s Korner and Davies went electric and in 1961 cofounded Blues Incorporated, which proved an important breeding ground for future stars like Mick Jagger, Charlie Watts, and Brian Jones (Rolling Stones), and Jack Bruce and Ginger Baker (Cream). Blues Incorporated was the house favorite at London's Marquee Club by the end of 1962, but Davies left the group to form his Cyril Davies All-Stars. Guitarist Jeff Beck, keyboardist Nicky Hopkins, and drummer Mickey Waller were all, at some time, members of the All-Stars, and the group's live performances and recordings inspired a cult following. After Davies died of leukemia, All-Stars vocalist Long John Baldry shaped his Hoochie Coochie Men from the remains of Davies' band.

Dave and Ray Davies: See the Kinks

The Reverend Gary Davis

Born Apr. 30, 1896, Laurens, SC; died May 5, 1972, Hammonton, NJ

N.A.—Pure Religion (Prestige); The Guitar and Banjo of Rev. Gary Davis 1972—When I Die I'll Live Again (Fantasy) 1973—O, Glory (Adelphi); A Little More Faith (Prestige) 1990—Reverend Gary Davis at Newport (Vanguard) 1992—From Blues to Gospel (Biograph) 1993—Blues and Ragtime (Shanachie) 2001—Demons and Angels.

Influential in both blues and folk, the Reverend Gary Davis' percussive finger-picked guitar style lives through the work of Ry Cooder, Taj Mahal, and Jorma Kaukonen. Davis was born into a poor family. He suffered from ulcerated eyes, was partially blind throughout his youth and totally blind by age 30. When he was five, he taught himself to play the harmonica, and during the next two years he learned banjo and guitar. At 19 Davis enrolled in a school for the blind in Spartanburg, South Carolina.

He jammed the blues with Sonny Terry, Blind Boy Fuller, Big Red, and others, spending the '20s as an itinerant musician in the Carolinas. By the close of that decade, though, Davis had decided the blues was the "Devil's music." He was ordained in 1933 at the Free Baptist Connection Church in Washington, North Carolina, and soon became a popular gospel singer on the revival circuit. In 1935 he was discovered by a talent scout for the New York "race" label Perfect Records, for whom he recorded religious songs. He lived as a street singer for the next three decades in Harlem, recording occasionally (the most noteworthy sessions in 1956 and 1957), and subsisting off his small royalties, music lessons, and passing the plate whenever he had a congregation. He emerged in 1959 at the Newport Folk Festival, then toured America and England and moved his family to Jamaica, Queens. Davis died of a heart attack in 1972.

Mac Davis

Born Jan. 21, 1942, Lubbock, TX
1971—I Believe in Music (Columbia) 1972—Baby Don't Get Hooked on Me 1973—Mac Davis 1974—Song Painter; Stop and Smell the Roses 1975—All the Love in the World; Burnin' Thing 1976—Forever Lovers 1977—Thunder in the Afternoon 1978—Fantasy 1979—Greatest Hits 1980—It's Hard to Be Humble 1981—Midnight Crazy (Casablanca) 1982—Forty 82 1984—Soft Talk 1985—Till I Made It With You 1994—Will Write Songs for Food (Sony) 1995—A Man Don't Cry 2000—The Best of Mac Davis (Razor & Tie).

Mac Davis is a country-pop singer/songwriter whose songs, recorded by himself and by others, have sold millions of records. His father bought him his first guitar at age nine, but it wasn't until after a year at Emory University in Atlanta and after working in Atlanta's probation department that he formed his first rock band.

In the early '60s Davis became Vee-Jay Records' Southern regional sales manager; four and a half years later he worked for Liberty Records. Liberty later sent him to Hollywood to work in its music publishing division. There he sold several of his tunes to major artists: "In the Ghetto," "Memories," and "Don't Cry Daddy" (Elvis Presley); "Friend, Lover, Woman, Wife" (O.C. Smith), "Watching Scotty Grow" (Bobby Goldsboro); "Something's Burning" (Kenny Rogers and the First Edition).

Since he first recorded it, "I Believe in Music" has sold millions of copies in cover versions by over 50 artists. In 1972 a #1 hit, "Baby Don't Get Hooked on Me," started a streak that continued through the mid-'70s with "Rock and Roll (I Gave You the Best Years of My Life)" (#15, 1975), "One Hell of a Woman" (#11, 1974), and "Stop and Smell the Roses" (#9, 1974). In December 1974 he began hosting his own television variety program, The Mac Davis Show.

Later recordings—"Burnin' Thing" (1975), "Forever Lovers" (1976), "It's Hard to Be Humble," "Texas in My Rear View Mirror" (1980)—were less successful.

Davis made his film debut in 1979, costarring with Nick Nolte as a quarterback in North Dallas Forty. He later starred in the romantic comedy Cheaper to Keep Her. In 1981 he signed a personal performance contract at the MGM Grand Hotel in Las Vegas. While he put recording on hold for the latter half of the '80s, Davis became a fixture on TV talk shows. In 1992 he made his Broadway debut playing the title character in Will Rogers Follies. The following year Dolly Parton recorded Davis' "Slow Dancing with the Moon" as the title track of a new album, which also included another Davis composition, "Full Circle."

Miles Davis played a crucial and inevitably controversial role in every major development in jazz since the mid-'40s, and no other jazz musician has had so profound an effect on rock. He was the most widely recognized jazz musician of his era, an outspoken social critic and an arbiter of style—in attitude and fashion—as well as music.

Davis was raised in an upper-middle-class black home in an integrated East St. Louis neighborhood. His father was a dentist, his mother, a onetime music teacher. In 1941 he began playing semiprofessionally with St. Louis jazz bands. Four years later, his father sent him to study at New York's Juilliard School of Music. Immediately upon arriving in New York City, Davis sought out alto saxophonist Charlie Parker, whom he had met the year before in St. Louis. He became Parker's roommate and protégé, playing in his quintet on the 1945 Savoy sessions, the definitive recordings of the bebop movement. He dropped out of Juilliard and played with Benny Carter, Billy Eckstine, Charles Mingus, and Oscar Pettiford as well as with Parker.

As a trumpeter Davis was far from virtuosic, but he more than made up for his technical limitations by emphasizing his strengths: his ear for ensemble sound, unique phrasing, and a distinctive haunted tone. He started moving away from speedy bop and toward something more introspective. His direction was defined by his collaboration with Gil Evans on the Birth of the Cool sessions in 1949 and early '50, playing with a nine-piece band that included Max Roach, John Lewis, Lee Konitz, and Gerry Mulligan using meticulous arrangements by Evans, Mulligan, Lewis, Davis, and Johnny Carisi.

By 1949 Davis had become a heroin addict. He continued to perform and record over the next four years, but his addiction kept his career in low gear until he cleaned up in 1954. The following year, he formed a group with drummer Philly Joe Jones, bassist Paul Chambers, pianist Red Garland and, in his first major exposure, tenor saxophonist John Coltrane. The Miles Davis Quintet quickly established itself as the premier jazz group of the decade.

Between 1958 and 1963 the personnel in Davis' groups—quintets, sextets, and small orchestras—shifted constantly and included pianists Bill Evans and Wynton Kelly, saxophonists Cannonball Adderley, Sonny Stitt, and Hank Mobley, and drummer Jimmy Cobb. Continuing the experiments begun with Birth of the Cool, Davis' work moved toward greater complexity—as on his orchestral collaborations with Gil Evans [Miles Ahead, 1957; Porgy and Bess, 1958; Sketches of Spain, 1959; Quiet Nights, 1962]—and greater simplicity, as on Kind of Blue [1959], where he dispensed with chords as the basis for improvisation in favor of modal scales and tone centers.

In 1963 Davis formed a quintet with bassist Ron Carter, pianist Herbie Hancock [see entry], drummer Tony Williams [see entry], and saxophonist George Coleman, who was replaced by Wayne Shorter in 1965. This group stayed together until 1968. In that time, it exerted as much influence on the jazz of the '60s as the first Davis quintet had on the jazz of the '50s. Davis and his sidemen—especially Shorter—wrote a body of original material for the quintet.

In 1968 Davis began the process that eventually brought him to a fusion of jazz and rock. With Miles in the Sky, the quintet introduced electric instruments (piano, bass, and George Benson's guitar on one piece) and the steady beat of rock drumming to their sound. With Filles de Kilimanjaro, on which Chick Corea [see entry] substituted on some tracks for Hancock, and Dave Holland replaced Carter, the rock influence became more pronounced. In a Silent Way featured three keyboardists—Hancock, Corea, and composer Joe Zawinul, on electric pianos and organs—and guitarist John McLaughlin [see Mahavishnu Orchestra entry] in addition to Williams, Shorter, Holland, and Davis. For his next recording sessions he put together what he called "the best damn rock & roll band in the world"—Shorter, McLaughlin, Holland, Corea, and Zawinul, plus organist Larry Young, bassist Harvey Brooks, bass clarinetist Bennie Maupin, and percussionists Jack DeJohnette, Lenny White, Don Alias, and Jim Riley—and, with no rehearsals and virtually no instructions, let them jam. The result was the historic Bitches Brew, a two-LP set that sold over 400,000 copies.

In the three years following Brew's release, Davis amassed a rock star-level following and performed in packed concert halls in America, Europe, and Japan. As his sidemen (who in the early '70s included pianist Keith Jarrett and percussionists Billy Cobham and Airto Moreira) ventured out on their own, in such bands as Weather Report [see entry] and the Mahavishnu Orchestra [see entry], jazz-rock fusion became one of the dominant new forms.

A car crash that broke both his legs in 1972 put a temporary stop to Davis' activity and marked the beginning of his growing reclusiveness. The recordings he made between 1972 and 1975 advanced the ideas presented on Bitches Brew, extracting the percussive qualities of tuned instruments, making greater use of electronics and high-powered amplification, and deemphasizing solos in favor of ensemble funk. His sidemen in the mid-'70s included bassist Michael Henderson, guitarists Reggie Lucas and Pete Cosey, drummers Al Foster and Mtume, and saxophonists Sonny Fortune and Dave Liebman. Agharta, recorded live in Japan in 1975, was his last album of new material for five years. He spent much of that time recuperating from a hip ailment. With the encouragement of his new wife, actress Cicely Tyson, he reemerged in 1981 with a new album and concert appearances. While many old supporters were disappointed by his newly acquired pop clichés (including some vocals), The Man With the Horn was his most popular release since Bitches Brew and marked his return to live concerts. We Want Miles was a live set. Star People reenlisted Gil Evans as arranger along with Davis' '80s sextet: Mike Stern on John Scofield on guitar, Marcus Miller or Tom Barney on electric bass, Bill Evans on saxophone, Al Foster on drums, and Mino Cinelu on percussion.

Davis' music took increasingly commercial turns; he recorded material by Cyndi Lauper and the rock band Scritti Politti (Davis guested on the group's Provision), later experimenting with hip-hop and go-go rhythms. Critics generally lambasted the lukewarm funk of Davis' new music, but the trumpeter had reached new heights of popularity: his concerts selling out all over the world and his recordings even making dents in the pop charts. Davis continued to surround himself with young musicians; among them, saxophonists Kenny Garrett and Bob Berg, and keyboardist Joey DeFrancesco.

Tutu, Davis' first recording for Warner Bros. after ending his 30-year tenure with Columbia, was a purely studio-created project with Davis' horn the only "live" instrument. Aura (recorded in 1985) had Davis in front of Danish arranger Palle Mikkelborg's big band for pieces that harkened back to the profusion experiments of the late '60s.

In 1985 Davis contributed to the antiapartheid Sun City recording, and the next year he and his band appeared at the televised Amnesty International Concert at Giants Stadium. Davis devoted increasing time to visual art—his paintings were exhibited in galleries and a book devoted to them was published. In 1988 Davis' marriage to Tyson ended, and Gil Evans, his close friend and musical associate, died, the long-rumored adaptation of Tosca that the two had been discussing for years never came to fruition.

Davis' quest for increased public recognition led him to TV and film. He appeared on Miami Vice made commercials for a New York jazz radio station, and had a featured role in the 1990 film Dingo. Davis also worked on the soundtracks for Siesta, The Hot Spot, and Scrooged (in which he played a street musician). In 1989 Davis' controversial autobiography (cowritten with poet Quincy Troupe) was published. While detailing Davis' drug problem and romantic involvements, the book was noticeably skimpy in its praise for important Davis collaborators. In 1990 Davis received the Grammy Award for Lifetime Achievement.

In failing health, Davis began to look backward for the first time in his career. The summer before his death Davis participated in a career retrospective—something he had always studiously avoided—held at La Villette in Paris. Joining Davis and his current band were important Davis-associated instrumentalists including Jackie McLean, John McLaughlin, Chick Corea, Herbie Hancock, and Wayne Shorter. Shortly after that concert, Davis performed at the Montreux Jazz Festival with a big band led by Quincy Jones, re-creating the legendary Davis-Gil Evans collaborations.

Davis died in September 1991, reportedly suffering from pneumonia, respiratory failure, and a stroke. The posthumously released Doo-Bop, a jazz/hip-hop collaborative project with rapper Easy Mo Bee, proved that Davis continued experimenting to the end.

Spencer Davis Group

Formed 1963, Birmingham, Eng.

Original lineup: Spencer Davis (b. July 17, 1942, Swansea, Wales), voc., gtr., harmonica; Pete York (b. Aug. 15, 1942, Middlesborough, Eng.), drums; Steve Winwood (b. May 12, 1948, Birmingham), voc., gtr., kybds.; Muff Winwood (b. Mervyn Winwood, June 14, 1943, Birmingham), bass.

1965—1st Album (Fontana, U.K.) 1966—Second Album; Autumn '66 1967—Gimme Some Lovin' (United Artists); I'm a Man (- S. Winwood; - M. Winwood; + Eddie Hardin, drums, voc.; + Phil Sawyer, gtr.; - York; + Nigel Olsson, drums; - Hardin; + Dee Murray [d. Jan. 14, 1992, Atlanta, GA], bass) 1968—The Very Best of the Spencer Davis Group; Spencer Davis Greatest Hits; With Their New Face On 1969—Heavies 1973—Gluggo (Vertigo) 1974—Living on a Back Street (Mercury) 1987—The Best of the Spencer Davis Group (Rhino). Spencer Davis solo: 1972—Mousetrap (United Artists) 1984—Crossfire (Allegiance). World Classic Rockers (with Spencer Davis): 1999—Live (WCR).

The Spencer Davis Group was a British R&B-influenced rock band best known for introducing Stevie Winwood [see entry] to the pop audience with "Gimme Some Lovin'" and "I'm a Man." Various Spencer Davis groups continued to record into the '70s.

Davis was a lecturer on German at the University of Birmingham who moonlighted as a musician. In 1963 he met drummer Pete York and persuaded brothers Steve and Muff Winwood to leave their trad-jazz band. They toured England and parts of the Continent, then moved to London and released "Keep On Running" in 1965. "Gimme Some Lovin'" (written by Davis and the Winwood brothers) went to #7 on early 1967; two months later "I'm a Man" (by Steve Winwood, Davis, and J. Miller) went to #10. Both were driving, repetitive songs that featured young Steve Winwood's lead vocals.

In 1967 Steve Winwood left to form Traffic, and his brother Muff moved into producing and A&R work. His credits include producing Dire Straits, Sparks, Squeeze, and the Bay City Rollers. After a few personnel changes, Davis was joined by Nigel Olsson and Dee Murray, who in 1969 went on to join Elton John's band. At that point, Davis ended the group.

From 1969 to 1972 Davis performed in acoustic duos with Alun Davies (later with Cat Stevens) and Peter Jameson, with whom he recorded two bluegrass-influenced albums. He re-formed the Spencer Davis Group with York in 1972, but their albums were ignored. By the late '70s Davis was working as an independent producer and as a publicist for Island Records. In 1970 he moved to the United States, where he has worked in various capacities in the record business. His solo album Crossfire featured such guests as Dusty Springfield and Booker T. Jones. In 1984 he toured the world with his own band, then with Brian Auger and Chris Farlowe. Later in the decade he opened shows for Hall and Oates, among others, and he guested on the television series Married With Children.

Although he heads his own management firm in L.A., Davis finds time to perform over 200 dates a year. From 1993 to 1995 he toured with Mike Pinera, Peter Rivera, and Jerry Corbetta in a group called the Classic Rock Allstars, then left it to reunite with drummer York and embark on a world tour with the Spencer Davis Group (which also included Miller Anderson, Colin Modgkinson, and keyboardist Zoot Money). In 1997 Davis formed the World Classic Rockers with the Eagles' Randy Meisner and Steppenwolf's Nick St. Nicholas and Michael Monarch. Both the Spencer Davis Group and the World Classic Rockers are currently active.

Tyrone Davis

Born May 4, 1938, Greenville, MS

1969—Can I Change My Mind (Dakar) 1970—Turn Back the Hands of Time 1972—I Had It All the Time; It's All in the Game; Tyrone Davis' Greatest Hits 1973—Without You in My Life 1976—Love and Touch (Columbia) 1977—Let's Be Closer Together 1978—I Can't Go On This Way 1979—In the Mood With Tyrone Davis 1980—I Just Can't Keep On Going 1981—Everything in Place 1982—The Best of Tyrone Davis; Tyrone Davis (Highrise) 1991—I'll Always Love You (Ichiban) 1992—The Best of Tyrone Davis (Rhino); Something's Mighty Wrong; The Best of the Future Years 1994—You Stay on My Mind 1997—Pleasing You (Malaco).

Romantic mid-tempo ballads like 1969's "Can I Change My Mind" made Davis one of the top black singers of the '70s. He spent his early years in Mississippi, then at age 14 moved with his family to Saginaw, Michigan. Five years later he went to work in a Chicago steel factory, and there he began to get involved with the local music scene, making friends with Otis Rush, Freddie King, Mighty Joe Young, and Otis Clay. Through Clay he met producer Howard Burrage, who named him Tyrone the Wonder Boy and recorded him for the Four Brothers and Hit Sound labels.

After Burrage died, Davis continued to record but without major success until 1968's "Can I Change My Mind" (#5 pop). Its brassy flourishes, relaxed rhythms, and aggressive horns perfectly complemented Davis' style. More hits followed. "Is It Something You've Got" in spring 1969, and his biggest song, "Turn Back the Hands of Time" (#3, 1970). Davis' later releases ("I'll Be Right Here," "Let Me Back In," "Could I Forget You") were essentially MOR soul. In the mid-'70s he left Dakar for Columbia Records, where he enjoyed a number of R&B hits, including "In the Mood," "Give It Up (Turn It Loose),” and “Get On Up (Disco).” Davis continues to record and tour.

Taylor Dayne

Born Leslie Wunderman, Mar. 7, 1963, Baldwin, NY
 1988—Tell It to My Heart (Arista) 1989—Can't Fight Fate
 1993—Soul Dancing 1995—Greatest Hits 1998—Naked Without You (Platinum Productions/Intersound).

Unlike most female dance-pop divas, big-voiced Taylor Dayne is a white Jewish girl from Long Island. In 1985 fellow Baldwinian Dee Snider of Twisted Sister suggested that Leslie Wunderman change her name to something more glamorous. By that time, she had sung with various high school and local bands, recorded two unsuccessful singles under the name “Leslee,” and studied music and singing.

As Taylor Dayne, she was discovered singing in Russian-American clubs in Brooklyn's Brighton Beach. Her debut album hit #21, thanks to its title track (#7, 1987). The album yielded such other disco-ish hits as “Prove Your Love” (#7, 1988), “I'll Always Love You” (#3, 1988), and “Don't Rush Me” (#2, 1988). Can't Fight Fate (#25, 1989), on which Dayne tried to sound more mature, included “With Every Beat of My Heart” (#5, 1989), “Love Will Lead You Back” (#1, 1990), “I'll Be Your Shelter” (#4, 1990), and “Heart of Stone” (#12, 1990). Dayne wrote much of the music for Soul Dancing (#51), which also contained a remake of disco heavyweight Barry White's “Can't Get Enough of Your Love” (#20). Anista repackaged these and others for Greatest Hits. She pursued acting and appeared in feature films (Love Affair, in theater [Archie and Mehitabel]), and on television (Martial Law, Rude Awakening). Dayne returned to recording in 1998 with Naked Without You. Released on the Atlanta-based Intersound, a label strongly associated with black gospel music, the album included a bonus disc of remixes.

The dB's

Formed 1978, New York, NY

Will Rigby (b. Mar. 17, 1956, Winston-Salem, NC), drums, voc.; Peter Holsapple (b. Feb. 19, 1956, Greenwich, CT), gtr., organ, voc.; Gene Holder (b.  Will Rigby solo: 1985—Sidekick Phenomenon (Egon) 1996—Untitled EP (Hello).

Ironic pop-rockers, the dB's met at elementary school in Winston-Salem, North Carolina. Peter Holsapple and Chris Stamey brought their first group together in 1972, and as members of Rittenhouse Square they recorded an album for an independent label the next year. In 1975 Will Rigby joined a group that Stamey formed at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, called Sneakers. The band released an EP. Mitch Easter joined on guitar, and the group traveled to New York to play Max's Kansas City in 1976 before breaking up. (A Sneakers LP, In the Red, came out posthumously in 1978; in 1992 a Sneakers anthology, Racket, was released.)

In early 1977 Stamey moved to New York, where he played with Alex Chilton's band, and did a one-off project with Television guitarist Richard Lloyd. He recorded a Chilton-produced single for Ork Records and set up his own label, Car Records. Rigby and Gene Holder moved to New York, and as Chns Stamey and the dB's, the trio began playing locally in June 1978 and released a single, “If and When”. Holsapple joined the group that fall.

The dB's were favorites of the New York club scene and rock press, but U.S. record companies shied away. Their first two albums were originally released only in Bntam by the U.K. label Albion. Stamey left to pursue a solo career in 1983. Finally, the band scored a deal with a U.S. label, Bearsville, but its recording career was legally stalled for three years after label chief Albert Grossman died intestate, not long after the release of Like This. In the meantime, Holder moved from bass to guitar, and a succession of new players began coming in. The band opened for R.E.M. [see entry] on its 1984 and 1987 U.S. tours. Eventually, the dB's signed to I.R.S., releasing The Sound of Music (#171, 1987). They toured for the next six months, and I.R.S. rereleased their Albion albums in 1989, not long after the dB's had unofficially called it quits. (Ride the Wild Tom Tom and Pans Avenue are compilations of early and late demos, respectively.)

Holsapple then played keyboards and guitar on R.E.M.'s Green tour, and also guested on Out of Time. He later recorded Mavericks with Chris Stamey, and joined the Continental Drifters, a roots-rock combo that also included former member of the Cowsills Susan Cowill (to whom Holsapple was married for several years), Vicki Peterson of the Bangles [see entry], and ex-Dream Syndicate [see entry] bassist Mark Walton, among others. Holsapple also toured as a sideman with Hootie and the Blowfish [see entry], appearing on the group's Fairweather Johnson (1996), Musical Chairs (1998), and Scattered, Smothered & Covered (2000). As a sideman, Holsapple has contributed to many other artists' recordings, including John Hiatt, Nanci Griffith, Indigo Girls, and the Troggs.

Stamey released several solo albums and toured sporadically. He also guested on recordings by the Golden Palominos, Matthew Sweet, and Freedy Johnston, among others.

Beginning in the late '90s, he worked mainly as a producer, including albums by Alejandro Escovedo and Whiskeytown.

Rigby went on to make a solo album and play drums with such artists as Matthew Sweet, Kelly Willis, Cheri Knight, and Steve Earle, whose band, the Dukes, Rigby joined following the recording of Earle's 2000 album Transcendental Blues. Since the late '80s, Holder has worked as a producer for such artists as Freedy Johnston and Yo La Tengo.

The Dead Boys

Formed 1976, Cleveland, OH

Cheetah Chrome (b. Gene Connor), gr.; Stiv Bators (b. Stivin Bator, Oct. 22, 1949, Cleveland; d. June 4, 1990, Paris, Fr.), voc.; Jimmy Zero, gr.; Jeff Magnum, bass; Johnny Blitz, drums. 1977—Young, Loud and Snotty (Sire) 1978—We Have Come for Your Children 1981—Night of the Living Dead Boys (Bomp) 1998—All This and More. Stiv Bators solo: 1980—Disconnected (Bomp). Lords of the New Church, formed early '70s: Stiv Bator, voc.; Brian James, gr.; Dave Tregunna, bass; Nick Turner, drums. 1982—Lords of the New Church (I.R.S.) 1983—Is Nothing Sacred? 1984—The Method to Our Madness 1985—Killer Lords 1988—Live at the Spit (Illegal).

The Dead Boys, Cleveland natives (Chrome and Blitz had played in the seminal Rocket from the Tombs), emigrated to New York when the Bowery scene first gained national attention in 1976. Managed by CBGB's owner, Hilly Kristal, they were adopted by scenemakers for their raucous, impish brand of punk, fully captured by the title of their debut album if not exactly by the music on it. Genya Ravan's production couldn't hide the fact that, for all their highjinks, the Boys had little to offer musically, making them the American counterparts to England's the Damned.

After Johnny Blitz was seriously injured in a mugging, the band regrouped for the Felix Pappalardi-produced We Have Come for Your Children, then dissolved. Bators, who released several solo singles on Bomp and had an album released on Lolita in France in 1983 (The Church and the New Creatures), did an album with Sham 69 members as the Wanderers. He then hooked up with ex-Damned Brian James; calling themselves the Lords of the New Church they combined '70s punk with '80s apocalypics to create a postpunk sound. The band fell apart in the mid-'80s. On June 4, 1990, Bators was struck by a bus on a Paris street and died later that night. He'd been recording there with a new band featuring ex-members of Hanoi Rocks, Sigue Sigue Sputnik, and other groups, and had reportedly planned to include Cheetah Chrome in the sessions and on a subsequent U.S. tour.

The Dead Kennedys/Jello Biafra

Formed 1978, San Francisco, CA

Jello Biafra (b. Eric Boucher, June 17, 1958, Boulder, CO), voc.; East Bay Ray (b. Raymond John Pepperell), gr.; Klaus Fluoride (b. Geoffrey Lyall), bass; Ted (b. Bruce Slesinger), drums.

1980—Fresh Fruit for Rotting Vegetables (I.R.S.) 1981—(- Ted; + D.H. Peligro [b. Derron Henley], drums) In God We Trust, Inc. EP (Alternative Tentacles) 1982—Plastic Surgery Disasters 1985—Frankenchrist 1986—Bedtime for Democracy 1987—Give Me Convenience or Give Me Death. Jello Biafra solo: 1987—*No More Cocoon*s (Alternative Tentacles) 1989—High Priest of Harmful Matter 1991—Blow Minds for a Living 1994—Beyond the Valley of the Gift Police 1998—If Evolution Is Outlawed, Only Outlaws Will Evolve. Jello Biafra with D.O.A.: 1989—Last Scream of the Missing Neighbors (Alternative Tentacles). Jello Biafra with Lard: 1989—The Power of Lard EP (Alternative Tentacles) 1990—The Last Temptation of Reid 1997—Pure Chewing Satisfaction 2000—70's Rock Must Die EP. Jello Biafra with Tumor Circus: 1991—Tumor Circus (Alternative Tentacles). Jello Biafra with NOMEANSNO: 1991—The Sky Is Falling and I Want My Mommy (Alternative Tentacles). Jello Biafra with Mojo Nixon: 1994—Prairie Home Invasion (Alternative Tentacles). Jello Biafra with the No WTO Combo: 2000—Live From the Battle in Seattle (Alternative Tentacles).

Formed in the volatile San Francisco punk scene of the late '70s, the Dead Kennedys became one of the West Coast's most visible punk bands, pioneering hardcore. Fueled by a cutting political preoccupation, lead singer Jello Biafra's quavering vocals conveyed the excess that marked such songs as "Drug Me" and "California Über Alles." Biafra and company directed diatribes against the Moral Majority, creeping U.S. imperialism and fascism, and their perceptions of a plastic suburban lifestyle. The band's rapid-fire instrumental overkill attracted punk fans in the U.S. and abroad; they even matched the Sex Pistols on their home turf, going to #36 in England with the airplay-banned "Too Drunk to Fuck." Biafra, the son of a psychiatric social worker, ran for mayor of San Francisco in 1979; one of his campaign planks was that businessmen wear clown suits downtown. The Dead Kennedys formed their own record label, Alternative Tentacles, which in 1982 released a compilation album, Let Them Eat Jellybeans, consisting of tracks by various unsigned American bands.

The DKs' Frankenchrist album made free-speech history when, on April 15, 1986, Biafra's apartment was raided by nine cops; the singer and others associated with Alternative Tentacles were soon charged in an L.A. courtroom with distributing pornography ("harmful matter") to minors under the nation's revised obscenity laws; the album included the H.R. Giger painting, Landscape #XX, which featured genitalia and sex acts in a surreal, assembly-line setting. The case ended in a hung jury and was dismissed. Former L.A. deputy city attorney Michael Guarino later admitted the case was "a comedy of errors." But the drawn-out legal battle put such a strain on the Kennedys that they split up after Bedtime for Democracy. Biafra took full ownership of the label after the band dissolved in 1986. Give Me Convenience or Give Me Death collects the band's more accessible material. The Dead Kennedys made the news again in 1993 when a box of reissues of their first album were mixed up with a package of Christian radio broadcast CDs, and inadvertently shipped to Christian stations around the country.

Biafra has persisted with his political ranting—which often revolves around free speech issues—on his spoken-word albums, college-lecture tours, and occasional collaborations with other artists. Among those collaborations was the band Lard (including Al Jourgenson and other members of Ministry). Biafra also appeared on the Offspring's Lnay on the Hombre. In 1994 he was beaten and his knee permanently damaged by "fundamentalist punks" at the Berkeley 924 Gilman club, once the home turf of Green Day. Mostly, he tends to the business of running Alternative Tentacles, which continues to put out music by button-pushing rock bands. Klaus Fluonde formed the politically charged acoustic band Five Year Plan, and East Bay Ray plays with hard rockers Skrapyard and a surf instrumental band—with East Bay Ray and Fluonde—called Jumbo Shrimp.

Running the label has often been a struggle. In 1997 a federal judge ordered Biafra and Alternative Tentacles to pay $2.2 million to the Philadelphia Fraternal Order of Police after the label printed a photograph of police on the back of a Crucifucks album. The singer also was found liable for failing to promote the Dead Kennedys' catalogue (when he refused to license "Holiday in Cambodia" for a Levi's commercial) and for paying insufficient royalties to his former bandmates, a jury awarded East Bay Ray, Fluonde, and Pelgro about $220,000 in damages. In a countersuit filed by Biafra, a jury ruled in his favor that Ray had mismanaged the business partnership and had to pay Biafra $5,000. The ruling also stated that Decay Music, not the individual songwriters, owns the band's work and that the partnership can now make decisions based on a majority vote.

In 2000 Biafra toured as part of the Spitfire spoken word tour, founded by Nirvana's Krist Novoselic, and he ran in the New York state primary for the Green Party's presidential nomination. Alternative Tentacles released a live recording by the No WTO Combo, featuring Biafra, Novoselic, and Soundgarden guitarist Kim Thayil, in a protest of policies of the World Trade Organization.

DeBarge/Chico DeBarge

Formed 1978, Grand Rapids, MI

Aug. 22, 1963, Grand Rapids], voc.) All This Love 1983—In a Special Way 1985—Rhythm of the Night 1986—Greatest Hits (Motown) 1988—(- El DeBarge; - Bunny DeBarge) Bad Boys (Striped Horse) 1997—The Ultimate Collection (Motown). Bunny DeBarge solo: 1987—In Love (Motown).

El DeBarge solo: 1986—El DeBarge (Gordy) 1989—Gemini

(Motown) 1992—In the Storm (Warner Bros.) 1994—Heart, Mind and Soul (Reprise).

Chico DeBarge (b. Jonathan DeBarge, 1966, Grand Rapids) solo: 1986—Chico DeBarge (Motown) 1997—Long Time No See (Kedar/Universal) 1999—The Game (Motown).

At its peak in the mid-'80s, the family act DeBarge was touted as a fledgling pop-soul dynasty and often compared to the Jacksons. El DeBarge was singled out as a la Michael Jackson for his superb singing and dancing skills. The Jackson association continued: Jermaine Jackson was instrumental in the group's signing to Motown's Gordy Records subsidiary, and in 1984 James DeBarge and Janet Jackson eloped (within seven months they filed for an annulment).

DeBarge landed its first record deal as a quartet, four of 10 siblings raised by a black mother and a white father. The family was religious, and the group members began singing in church. In the late '70s they set their sights on pop and moved to Hollywood in pursuit of a contract with Motown Records. (Two older brothers, Bobby and Tommy DeBarge, already played in a Motown band called Switch.) In 1979 brothers El, Marty, and Randy DeBarge and sister Bunny were signed to Gordy. The vocal group released its debut, The DeBarges, in 1981, establishing its penchant for creamy love songs. Two gold albums followed, 1982's All This Love (with brother James added to the lineup) and 1983's In a Special Way.

DeBarge's most successful album was 1985's Rhythm of the Night. The catchy title track became a #3 single, and "Who's Holding Donna Now" went to #6. El then left DeBarge; his biggest solo hit was 1986's "Who's Johnny" (#3), from the Short Circuit soundtrack. Meanwhile, El's brothers switched to Striped Horse Records, while Bunny stayed on at Motown, releasing the solo album, In Love.

Another brother, Chico (who had never been part of the group), joined Motown in 1986 and released a harder-edged funk album, featuring "Talk to Me" (#21 pop, #7 R&B, 1986). Unfortunately, Chico got press for more dubious accomplishments: He and brother Bobby were arrested and convicted on cocaine-trafficking charges in 1988. El himself served jail time in 1987, after failing to complete a sentence he'd received after allegedly hitting a woman who had rejected his advances. The sentence involved performing a benefit concert.

By the early '90s, the group's collective star and El's individual one, had fallen, thanks to legal problems and what was generally perceived as a lack of creative progress. By late 1994, El DeBarge showed signs of a comeback with the Babyface production Heart, Mind and Soul, which received critical praise.

In the late '90s, Chico carved out his own niche as a soul singer. After serving five years and eight months in prison, he attracted a following with the release of the appropriately titled Long Time No See (#86 pop, #14 R&B, 1997), featuring "No Guarantee" (#18 R&B, 1998). Meanwhile, El collaborated with the jazz quartet Fourplay on a 1998 cover of Marvin Gaye's "Sexual Healing" (#56 R&B) and with producer/arranger Quincy Jones on a 1999 duet with Siedah Garrett,

"I'm Yours" (#73 R&B). Both El and Chico played on and contributed to the production of R&B singer Grenique's debut album in 1999, the same year that Chico returned to Motown with The Game.

Joey Dee and the Starlitters

Formed 1958, Passaic, NJ

Joey Dee (b. Joseph DiNicola, June 11, 1940, Passaic), voc.; Carlton Latimor, organ; Willie Davis, drums; Larry Vernieri (d. Dec. 7, 1999), voc., dancer; David Brigati, voc., dancer. 1961—Doin' the Twist at the Peppermint Lounge (Roulette) 1962—Hey, Let's Twist!

Joey Dee solo: N.A.—Joey Dee (Roulette); Dance, Dance, Dance.

In 1960 Joey Dee and the Starlitters (sometimes misspelled "Starlighters") were the house band at New York's famed Peppermint Lounge. When Dee noticed that everyone there was gyrating to Chubby Checker's "The Twist," he and R&B producer Henry Glover decided to personalize the dance fad, and they came up with the "Peppermint Twist." Released in late 1961, the song was a #1 smash and landed the group cameo roles in two quickie fad films, Hey Let's Twist and Two Tickets to Paris. The group scored a few more hits ("Hey Let's Twist," "Shout," "What Kind of Love Is This," "Hot Pastrami with Mashed Potatoes") before sinking back into lounge-band anonymity in late 1963.

By then, however, the Starlitters featured three of the four future Young Rascals: Felix Cavaliere, Gene Cornish, and Eddie Brigati (whose brother David had been with Dee from the beginning). A psychedelic twist. In 1966 the group included Jimi Hendrix. And a showbiz twist. An earlier version of the group had actor-to-be Joe Pesci on guitar and backing vocals. In 1987 Dee established the Foundation for the Love of Rock 'n' Roll—later renamed the National Music Foundation—which tried to find health insurance and a retirement community for needy musicians. Dee continues to perform. By the '90s, Dee's act included his wife Lois and son Ronnie, and played cruise liners and Atlantic City resorts. Brigati is a popular backup singer and part of the all-star New York Rock and Soul Revue.

Deee-Lite

Formed 1986, New York, NY

Lady Miss Kier (b. Kier Kirby, Youngstown, OH), voc.; Super DJ Dmitry (b. Dmitry Brill, ca. 1964, Kirovograd, Ukraine), DJ; Jungle DJ Towa Towa (b. Towa Tei, Tokyo, Jap.), DJ. 1990—World Clique (Elektra) 1992—Infinity Within 1994—(- DJ Towa Towa; + DJ Ani, DJ, bass) Dew Drops in the Garden 1996—Sampladelic Relics and Dancefloor Oddities. Towa Tei solo: 1995—Future Listening (Elektra) 1998—Sound Museum.

Deee-Lite combines techno, ambient, house, rap, and funk with a sense of style that borrows equally from '60s psychedelia and '70s kitsch. After four years of notoriety on New York's hip underground club scene, the trio scored mainstream success with its infectious dance hit "Groove Is in the Heart" (#4, 1990).

Kier Kirby and her three sisters and brother grew up in various spots across the eastern U.S., including Pittsburgh. Her mother, an urban planner and political activist, divorced her father, a food manufacturer, when Kier was seven, and remarried a former Navy commander. At 18 Kier moved to New York to study textile design at the Fashion Institute of Technology but dropped out after becoming disillusioned with the program. In 1982 she met Dmitry Brill, a classically trained Ukrainian émigré who had discovered pop music early on, learning "Stairway to Heaven" on guitar at age 12. With a mutual interest in dance music, the two began writing songs together, and formed Deee-Lite, named for Cole Porter's "It's Delovely," in 1986. One year later, they added Towa Tei, a club DJ who had recently moved from Japan.

Deee-Lite became a hot ticket among New York's club culture, attracting large, multiracial, pansexual crowds to shows in which the trio would dress outrageously and throw flowers from the stage. Elektra signed the group and released World Clique in 1990 to commercial and critical success; the album reached #20 and sold a half-million copies, fueled by the catchy "Groove Is in the Heart," which featured such guests as bassist Bootsy Collins, Q-Tip (of A Tribe Called Quest), and saxman Maceo Parker. In addition to that breakthrough track, World Clique contained the minor hit, "Power of Love" (#47). Deee-Lite's visual style and sex appeal won the group plenty of photo spreads in music and fashion magazines. The trio followed up two years later with Infinity Within (#67, 1992), whose songs carried more obvious political messages—touching on the environment, voting, and safe sex. The 1994 album Dew Drops in the Garden was coproduced by a new collaborator, DJ Ani (DJ Towa Towa went on sabbatical). At this point, Deee-Lite wholeheartedly embraced rave culture, headlining Ravestock (Friday night to early Saturday morning) at Woodstock '94 (the Orb, Aphex Twin, and Orbital also performed). As the band's commercial fortunes faded, Deee-Lite released the 1996 remix album Sampladelic Relics and Dancefloor Oddities and broke up.

The breakup only drove its members deeper into the club culture from whence they came. Both Towa and Dmitry continued spinning. Kier moved to London and became a DJ herself on the thriving UK jungle/drum-and-bass scene. She also appeared on "Accelerate," a song from Jonny L's Magnetic album, and in 1999 announced plans for a solo album. But the most prolific recording artist of the trio has been DJ Towa, back to calling himself Towa Tei, who released Future Listening (1995) and Sound Museum (1998), an album rich with old-school funk and reggae, with such guest vocalists as Kylie Minogue and Biz Markie, and a samba-infected take on Hall and Oates' "Private Eyes."

Deep Purple shifted halfway through its career from rock with pseudo-classical keyboard flourishes to guitar-dominated heavy metal; in the latter, vastly popular phase, it was listed as loudest rock band by the Guinness Book of World Records. In the wake of a highly publicized regrouping of the classic lineup, Deep Purple has emerged as one of the longest-lived (with a few interruptions) U.K. hard-rock/metal outfits and a showcase for some of the most successful hard-rock stars of the '70s, '80s, and '90s, including guitarist Ritchie Blackmore and singer David Coverdale.

After woodshedding in Hertfordshire, England, Deep Purple had its first success with an American hit, a version of Joe South's "Hush" (#4, 1968), followed by Neil Diamond's "Kentucky Woman" (#38, 1968). The group's popularity couldn't keep its label, Tetragrammaton, from going under after the band's 1968 tour. In 1969, with a new lineup including Ian Gillan, who had sung in Jesus Christ Superstar, Deep Purple recorded Lord's Concerto for Group and Orchestra, but after it failed to sell, Ritchie Blackmore began to dominate the band. His simple repeated guitar riffs helped make Deep Purple one of the most successful groups of the early '70s, but his personality clashes with other band members, particularly Gillan, precipitated several personnel shifts in between.

In Rock and Fireball attracted attention, and Machine Head made the U.S. Top 10 (#7), thus adding to the band's success in England, Europe, Japan, and Australia. One year after Machine Head was released, "Smoke on the Water"— about the band's near-disastrous Montreux concert with Frank Zappa—became a #4 hit single, and the album returned to the Top 10, eventually selling over 2 million copies. By late 1974, Deep Purple had sold nearly 15 million albums. But the band had begun to fall apart. Gillan left for a solo career in 1973. He released a number of albums in the U.K. In 1975 he formed the Ian Gillan Band and after it dissolved in 1983, joined Black Sabbath. Roger Glover followed Gillan, moving on to session and production work (for Judas Priest, Elf, Nazareth, Ian Gillan, Spencer Davis, Michael Schenker of UFO, Barbi Benton, and Blackmore's Rainbow). Gillan's replacement, David Coverdale, sang on Burn and Stormbringer. He would find greater fame, however, in the '80s with Whitesnake [see entry] and his collaboration with Jimmy Page. Jon Lord recorded a British solo album, Gemini Suite (1974). Blackmore left in 1975 to form Ritchie Blackmore's Rainbow [see entry]. He was replaced by Tommy Bolin, with whom the group recorded one LP, Come Taste the Band, before announcing its retirement in 1976.

In 1980 a bogus reincarnation of Deep Purple led by original vocalist Evans popped up on the West Coast bar circuit. Blackmore and Glover took legal action to prohibit Evans from using the name. In 1984 they reclaimed the name for themselves, reuniting for their first new LP since 1976, the Top 20, platinum Perfect Strangers, which included "Knocking at Your Back Door." Despite being welcomed warmly by its fans, Deep Purple was plagued by personal tensions, and Gillan again departed in 1989. He pursued a solo career, only to return again for 1994's The Battle Rages On, but left again shortly thereafter.

Def Leppard

Formed 1977, Sheffield, Eng.

Joe Elliott (b. Aug. 1, 1959, Sheffield), voc.; Pete Willis (b. Feb. 16, 1960, Eng.), gtr.; Rick Savage (b. Dec. 2, 1960, Sheffield), bass; Rick Allen (b. Nov. 1, 1963, Sheffield), drums; Steve Clark (b. Apr. 23, 1960, Sheffield; d. Jan. 8, 1991, London, Eng.), gtr. 1980—On Through the Night (Mercury) 1981—High 'n' Dry (– Willis; + Phil Collen [b. Dec. 8, 1957], gtr.) 1983—Pyromania 1987—Hysteria 1991—(– Clark) 1992—Adrenalize (+ Vivian Campbell [b. Aug. 25, 1962, Belfast, N. Ire.], gtr.) 1993—Retro Active 1995—Vault—Greatest Hits 1985–1990 1996—Slang 1999—Euphoria.

In the beginning a chart-breaking debut album, tours with more established heavy-metal bands, and pinup good looks made Def Leppard one of the leaders of the '80s British heavy-metal renaissance. The members, barely out of their teens when their first album debuted, soon became one of the most consistently successful pop-metal groups of the decade and beyond, becoming, as one Goldmine article put it, "The Heavy Metal Band You Can Bring Home to Mother."

Pete Willis and Rick Savage started the group in Sheffield in 1977. Joe Elliott had coined the name Deaf Leopard before joining them; Willis and Savage changed the spelling. As a quartet with a since-forgotten drummer, Def Leppard built a local pub following, and in 1978, after being joined by Steve Clark and hiring a temporary drummer, the group produced its first record, an EP called Getcha Rocks Off, released on its own Bludgeon Riffola label. The record got airplay on the BBC and sold 24,000 copies.

The members' self-made success and precociousness (Elliott, the group's eldest member, was 19, and Rick Allen, who became their permanent drummer after playing with several professional Sheffield bands, was 15) brought them the attention of the British rock press. AC/DC manager Peter Mensch added them to his roster and got them a contract with Mercury. Their first album was a hit in the U.K. and reached #51 in the U.S. The group toured Britain with Sammy Hagar and AC/DC, played the 1980 Reading Festival, and first toured the U.S. opening for Ted Nugent, Pat Travers, Judas Priest, and AC/DC. A second U.S. tour, with Blackfoot, Ozzy Osbourne, and Rainbow, coupled with heavy coverage in the U.S. metal press, created a growing American audience.

The group's second album, High 'n' Dry was the first of a string of platinum and multiplatinum LPs, hitting #38 in 1981 and selling over 2 million copies. (It was remixed and rereleased in 1984 with two more tracks, a remixed "Bringin' on the Heartbreak" and "Me and My Wine.") By early 1982 the group had reentered the studio to record Pyromania, which would eventually sell a phenomenal 10 million copies. Midway through the recording, founding guitarist Pete Willis was fired for alcoholism and replaced by Phil Collen, formerly of Girl. At the same time co-lead guitarist Steve Clark was beginning a slide into the extreme alcohol addiction that would eventually kill him.

Shortly after Pyromania's release, the band embarked on its first world tour. MTV, undeniably a factor in the band's U.S. success, began airing "Bringin' on the Heartbreak," and within the next few years virtually all the band's videos (beginning with Pyromania's "Rock of Ages," "Photograph," and "Foolin'") would go into heavy rotation. When producer Mutt Lange, with whom the group had recorded since its major-label debut, was unavailable to work on their next album, Def Leppard turned to Jim Steinman, most famous for his work with Meat Loaf. When Steinman proved incompatible, High 'n' Dry engineer Nigel Green stepped in. Just one month later, drummer Rick Allen lost his left arm in a New Year's Eve car accident after he attempted to pass another driver at high speed. Surgeons reattached the limb, but after infection set in, it was amputated. Def Leppard's future was in doubt, but by the spring of 1985 Allen was learning to play drums again with the help of a specially adapted Simmons kit. (For a while he performed with special electronic equipment, using prerecorded tapes of his drumming for some parts, then returned to a regular acoustic kit with customized foot pads in 1995.) The band continued recording, but when Lange heard the tapes, he suggested the band scrap them and start again. In August 1986 Allen performed for the first time since his accident on the European Monsters of Rock Tour.

In early 1987 the band finally completed work on the long-awaited Hysteria, which spun off six Top 20 singles: "Animal" (#19, 1987, and their first Top 40 hit in the U.K.), "Hysteria" (#10, 1988), "Pour Some Sugar on Me" (#2, 1988), "Love Bites" (#1, 1988), "Armageddon It" (#3, 1988), and "Rocket" (#12, 1989). Though longtime fans and some critics found it disappointingly poppish, on the verge of bubblegum, that change in direction no doubt contributed to it selling over 16 million copies worldwide and topping the U.S. LPs chart for six weeks.

Tragedy struck the group again when on January 8, 1991, guitarist Steve Clark died of a fatal mixture of drugs and alcohol. Beginning in 1982, he had undergone treatment for his alcoholism several times. His addiction was so disabling that Phil Collen had done most of the leads on Hysteria, and later the group forced Clark to take a lengthy sabbatical. Once in 1989, after being found comatose in a gutter, he was admitted to a psychiatric hospital, but he seemed beyond help. The group continued recording and even made the video for "Let's Get Rocked" as a foursome.

Clark's replacement, Vivian Campbell, who had previously played with Ronnie James Dio and Whitesnake, joined in 1992, weeks after the release of Adrenalize. Another #1 LP, Adrenalize spawned a flurry of hit singles: "Have You Ever Needed Someone So Bad" (#12, 1992), "Let's Get Rocked" (#15, 1992), "Make Love Like a Man" (#36, 1992), and "Stand Up (Kick Love Into Motion)" (#34, 1992). Retro Active (#9, 1993), a platinum collection of B sides, rarities, and covers, yielded the hit singles "Two Steps Behind" (#32, 1994) (also on the Last Action Hero soundtrack) and "Miss You in a Heartbeat" (#39, 1994). The album also included one Mick Ronson song, "Only After Dark." As the band wanted to explore new directions on its next studio album, it decided to release a greatest-hits collection before embarking on the next stage of its career. Vault (#15, 1995) went on to sell close to 2 million copies. Unfortunately its successor, Slang, which added industrial and even touches of soul to the musical mix, did not fare as well and peaked at #14. The band retreated to its classic '80s pop-metal style on Euphoria (#11, 1999).

1973—Heartbeat—It's a Lovebeat (20th Century-Fox) 1974—Save the Last Dance for Me.

Modeled after wholesome family acts like the Osmonds, the Cowsills, and the Jackson 5, the Canadian-born DeFranco Family was sponsored by Laufer Publications (publishers of Tiger Beat and Fave magazines), which managed the group and distributed fan-club material featuring 10-year-old lead singer Tony DeFranco. "Heartbeat—It's a Lovebeat" sold 2.5 million copies in 1973, becoming the year's top single. The next year, the family charted two more singles: "Abra-Ca-Dabra" (#32) and a remake of the Drifters' classic "Save the Last Dance for Me" (#18). But the family's career was ultimately distinguished by its brevity.

Desmond Dekker

Born Desmond Dacres, July 16, 1941, Kingston, Jam.
 1969—The Israelites (Uni) 1970—You Can Get It (Trojan)
 1974—Double Dekker 1978—Sweet 16 Hits 1980—Black and Dekker (Stiff) 1981—Compass Point 1992—Rockin' Steady: The Best of Desmond Dekker (Rhino); Music Like Dirt (Trojan) 1994—Action! (Lagoon) 1995—King of Kings (Trojan) 1996—Moving Out 1997—Intensified (Lagoon) 1998—Writing on the Wall (Trojan) 2000—Halfway to Paradise; Desmond Dekker (Recall).

Desmond Dekker was one of the pioneers of reggae and the creator of one of the genre's best-known songs, 1969's "The Israelites." As a teenager in Jamaica, he worked in the same welding shop as Bob Marley, who encouraged him to audition for producer Leslie "King" Kong. Kong helped Dekker put together a group, the Aces, and produced their first record, "Honour Thy Father and Mother," in 1963. Eventually a #1 hit in Jamaica, it was followed by a score of Caribbean hits that won Dekker the title "King of the Bluebeat" and the annual Golden Trophy (awarded to Jamaica's top singer) five times between 1963 and 1969.

In 1964 Chris Blackwell released "Honour Thy Father and Mother" in Britain on his Island label. Dekker's first U.K. Top 20 hit was a 1967 single on Pyramid, "007 (Shanty Town)," later featured on the soundtrack of The Harder They Come (1972). Dekker's only U.S. hit, "The Israelites" (#9 pop, 1969), personalized imagery from the Biblical Exodus story. It sold over a million copies worldwide, reaching #1 in Britain. (Twenty years later, it was featured prominently in the Gus Van Sant film Drugstore Cowboy, starring Matt Dillon.)

A handful of British hits followed "The Israelites," including "It Miek" (#7, 1969) and "You Can Get It If You Really Want" (#2, 1970), written for him by Jimmy Cliff. A reissue of "The Israelites" returned him to the British Top 10 in 1975. "Sing a Little Song" made the Top 20 later that year. Dekker didn't record again until 1980, when Stiff Records signed him at the height of the ska and rock-steady revival. His comeback album, Black and Dekker, featured one of the original rock-steady groups, the Pioneers, and Graham Parker's band the Rumour in supporting roles. Its followup, Compass Point, was produced by singer Robert Palmer.

In 1984 Dekker was declared bankrupt by a British court. He claimed that his former manager had withheld funds. Things looked up for Dekker, however, when a 1990 British TV ad for Maxell Tapes used the melody of "The Israelites" for its jingle, and the song was reissued once again. Dekker capitalized on his renewed fame, spending the '90s touring and recording.

Delaney and Bonnie

Bonnie Bramlett, born Nov. 8, 1944, Acton, IL; Delaney Bramlett, born July 1, 1939, Pontotoc County, MS
 1969—Accept No Substitute: The Original Delaney and Bonnie (Elektra); Home (Stax) 1970—On Tour With Eric Clapton (Atco); To Bonnie From Delaney 1971—Motel Shot; Genesis (GNP-Crescendo) 1972—D and B Together (Columbia) 1973—The Best of Delaney and Bonnie (Atco) 1990—The Best of Delaney and Bonnie (Rhino).

Bonnie Bramlett solo: 1973—Sweet Bonnie Bramlett (Columbia) 1975—It's Time (Capricorn) 1976—Lady's Choice 1978—Memories.

Delaney Bramlett solo: 1972—Something's Coming (Columbia) 1973—Mobius Strip 1975—Giving Birth to a Song (MGM) 1977—Delaney and Friends—Class Reunion (Prodigal) 1998—Sounds From Home (DK/Zane).

This husband-and-wife duo's best songs fused gospel, country, funk, and rock, but the pair was overshadowed by its Friends, a backup crew that occasionally included Eric Clapton, Leon Russell, Dave Mason, and George Harrison. The couple met in L.A. in 1967. Bonnie Lynn had worked as a bewigged, blackfaced Ikette with Ike and Tina Turner in the mid-'60s; Delaney had fallen in with a group of Southwestern musicians, including Russell and J.J. Cale, contacts that netted him a brief stint with the Champs and then a steady job with the Shindogs, house band for ABC's Shindig. The Shindogs were moonlighting at an L.A. bowling alley when Bramlett met Lynn, a week later they married.

Although the group's first album went largely unnoticed, Blind Faith offered Delaney and Bonnie an opening slot on its 1969 tour. Clapton began riding in the couple's tour bus, which turned into a rolling jam session. After Blind Faith disbanded, Clapton began to perform regularly with the duo, assuming a low-key, sideman-only stance.

Clapton brought Delaney and Bonnie to England, where Harrison, Mason, and others came onstage for shows that resulted in Delaney and Bonnie's best-selling album, On Tour With Eric Clapton (#29, 1970). The entourage briefly participated in John Lennon's Plastic Ono Band in late 1969 and toured Europe with Clapton. They returned to America as headliners in 1970, but their drawing power plummeted when Clapton left, and Leon Russell then hired most of the Friends to tour with Joe Cocker's Mad Dogs and Englishmen. The Bramletts canceled their tour.

They appeared on Clapton's solo debut in 1970, produced by Delaney, and continued to record their own albums, which included two major hits, "Never Ending Song of Love" (#13, 1971) and Dave Mason's "Only You Know and I Know" (#20, 1971).

In 1972 they signed with Columbia and made their last album, Together, before their marriage dissolved. Delaney made two solo LPs for Columbia to fulfill contractual obligations (Something's Coming and Mobius Strip) as well as 1975's Giving Birth to a Song on MGM and 1977's Class Reunion for Motown's Prodigal label. Bonnie, backed by the uncredited Average White Band, made one album for Columbia (Sweet Bonnie Bramlett) before signing with Capricorn. While touring with Stephen Stills in 1979, she punched Elvis Costello in a Columbus, Ohio, bar when he called Ray Charles "a blind, ignorant nigger." She later had a recurrent acting role in the hit '90s TV sitcom Roseanne. She had by then changed her surname to Sheridan.

Delaney overcame alcoholism at his Rock and Roll Ranch in Shadow Hills, California, became a born-again Christian, and recorded commercial jingles. In 1993 Delaney and Bonnie's daughter Bekka Bramlett briefly replaced Stevie Nicks in Fleetwood Mac. In the late '90s Delaney recorded and toured with his wife, Kim Carnel Bramlett.

De La Soul

Formed 1985, Amityville, NY

Posdnuos (b. Kelvin Mercer, Aug. 17, 1969, Bronx, NY), voc.;

Trugoy the Dove (b. David Jolicoeur, Sep. 21, 1968, Brooklyn, NY), voc.; Maseo (b. Vincent Mason, Mar. 24, 1970, Brooklyn), DJ, voc.

1989—Three Feet High and Rising (Tommy Boy) 1991—De La Soul Is Dead 1993—Buhloöne Mindstate 1996—Stakes Is High 2000—Art Official Intelligence (Mosaic Thump).

De La Soul made rap history as the first group to go against the hip-hop grain of macho braggadocio, hectoring social comment, and mammoth beats, all while winning respect and acclaim from inside and outside of the hip-hop community. With its middle-class suburban Long Island roots, light rhythms, laid-back raps, thoughtfully irreverent lyrics, esoteric sampling, and quasihippie attitude, De La Soul paved the way for a steady stream of gently adventurous "alternative" rap groups (A Tribe Called Quest, P.M. Dawn, Basehead, and Digable Planets).

De La Soul began as three high school friends whose stage names reflected their sense of whimsical in-jokery: through backward spelling David Jolicoeur became "Trugoy the Dove" (yogurt, his favorite food, spelled backwards), Kelvin Mercer derived "Posdnuos" (his nickname as a high school DJ, "Sound-Sop"). Their first demo, "Plug Tunin'," attracted the attention of Paul "Prince Paul" Houston, of local rap group Stetsasonic. He played the tape for colleagues on New York's rap scene, and soon De La Soul signed with Tommy Boy. Houston produced the group's debut album, a mock-game show soundtrack that introduced such De La terms as "the D.A.I.S.Y. Age (Da Inner Sound, Y'all)." De La Soul were labeled "hippies"—a term at which the group bridled—but also hailed as ingenious revolutionaries. The album brimmed with off-center inventiveness, its samples taken not from the usual James Brown rhythm tracks but from TV shows and obscure recordings, many from De La Soul's parents' collections. "Transmitting Live From Mars" set a sample from a French-lesson record atop a sample from the 1968 Turtles hit "You Showed Me." The former Turtles filed a $1.7 million lawsuit, charging their music was sampled without their permission; the case was settled out of court for an undisclosed sum. Three Feet (#24 pop, #1 R&B, 1989) yielded a hit single in "Me Myself and I" (#34 pop, #1 R&B, 1989), set to a sample of Funkadelic's 1979 "not just Knee Deep." De La Soul then formed "Native Tongues," a loose alliance with A Tribe Called Quest, the Jungle Brothers, Queen Latifah, Monie Love, and Black Sheep.

De La Soul's second album was an obvious reaction to the perception that its debut, however innovative, was "soft." Titled De La Soul Is Dead (#26 pop, #24 R&B, 1991), it took a darker, more serious tone with songs about drug abuse ("My Brother's a Basehead"), incest ("Millie Pulled a Pistol on Santa"), and the vicissitudes of fame ("Ring Ring Ring [Ha Ha Hey]" [#22 R&B, 1991]). Critical and commercial reaction to the album was mixed. De La Soul came back strong in late 1993, however, with Buhloöne Mindstate (#40 pop, #9 R&B), hailed as a return to the group's quirky, groundbreaking form. A more conventional effort, the 1996 album Stakes Is High found the group stuck in neutral. Three singles—"The Bizness" (#53 R&B), "Stakes Is High" (#70 R&B), and "It-soweezee (Hot)" (#60 R&B)—failed to stir sustained interest. De La Soul wasn't dead, however, as the trio returned to the studio for a 2000 release, Art Official Intelligence (Mosaic Thump). Guest artists include Chaka Khan, the Beastie Boys, Busta Rhymes, and Redman.

The Delfonics

Formed 1964, Philadelphia, PA

William Hart (b. Jan. 17, 1945, Washington, DC), lead voc.;

Wilbert Hart (b. Oct. 19, 1947, Philadelphia), baritone voc.; Ricky Johnson, bass voc.; Richard Daniels, tenor voc.

1965—(– Daniels; – Johnson; + Randy Cain III [b. Herbert Randal, May 2, 1945, Philadelphia], tenor voc.) 1968—La-La Means I Love You (Philly Groove) 1969—The Sound of Sexy Soul; The Delfonics Super Hits 1970—The Delfonics 1972—Tell Me This Is a Dream 1973—(– Cain; + Major Harris [b. Richmond, VA], tenor voc.) 1974—Alive and Kicking (– Harris; + John Johnson, voc.) 1975—Let It Be Me (Sounds Superb) 1997—La-La Means I Love You: The Definitive Collection (Arista).

The Delfonics' late-'60s MOR soul hits were among producer Thom Bell's earliest works and set standards for elegant black pop. Originally the Orphonics, the group formed in the mid-'60s around chief songwriter William Hart in a Philadelphia high school. Their high-pitched harmony style shone on medium-tempo ballads like "He Don't Really Love You," a local hit in 1967, shortly after they'd signed with manager Stan Watson, who persuaded them to call themselves the Delfonics. They worked East Coast clubs until early 1968, when Watson formed the Philly Groove label and brought in budding producer Thom Bell.

Their first collaboration with Bell, "La-La Means I Love You" (a phrase Hart picked up from his young son), was an instant #4 smash in spring 1968. Bell also worked on subsequent Delfonics hits ("I'm Sorry," "Break Your Promise," "Ready or Not, Here I Come," "You Get Yours and I'll Get Mine" and their 1970 Top 10 landmark "Didn't I (Blow Your Mind This Time)").

R&B veteran Major Harris ("One Monkey Don't Stop No Show") joined the group in 1973, when Cain retired due to illness; he left the following year. In 1975 Harris had a solo hit with "Time Won't Let Me Wait" (#5 pop, #1 R&B, 1975). Although no charting singles followed 1974's "Lying to Myself," the group continued to perform.

Harris, the Hart brothers, and Cain eventually regrouped. In the early '90s Wilbur Hart left and formed his own version of the Delfonics. Throughout the decade the Fugees, Prince, and Missy Elliott covered Delfonics songs, while vocal acts like Boyz II Men cited them as a primary influence. Thanks to praise from director Quentin Tarantino, who used "Didn't I" in his 1997 film Jackie Brown, a younger audience embraced the group's music.

The Del-Lords: See the Dictators

The Dells

Formed 1952, Harvey, IL

Marvin Junior (b. Jan. 31, 1936, Harrell, AK), first tenor voc.; Michael "Mickey" McGill (b. Feb. 17, 1937, Chicago, IL), baritone voc.; Johnny Funches (b. ca. 1937; d. Jan. 23, 1998), lead voc.; Chuck Barksdale (b. June 11, 1935, Chicago), bass voc.; Verne Allison (b. Laverne Allison, June 22, 1936, Chicago), tenor voc.; Lucius McGill (b. 1935, Chicago), tenor voc.
 1955—(-L. McGill) 1958—(-Funches; + Johnny Carter [b. June 2, 1934, Chicago], lead voc.) 1968—There Is (Cadet) 1969—The Dells Greatest Hits 1970—Like It Is 1972—Freedom Means 1973—Give Your Baby a Standing Ovation 1974—The Mighty Mighty Dells; The Dells vs. the Dramatics (Chess/MCA) 1975—No Way Back (Mercury); The Dells Greatest Hits, vol. 2 (Cadet) 1976—They Said It Couldn't Be Done (Mercury) 1977—Love Connection 1980—I Touched a Dream (20th Century-Fox) 1981—Whatever Turns You On 1984—One Step Closer; The Dells (Chess) 1988—The Second Time (Urgent/Ichiban) 1992—On Their Corner: Best of the Dells (MCA); I Salute You (Philadelphia International) 1994—You Gotta Have Soul: vol. 2 (Vee-Jay) 1996—Bring Back Love: Classic Dells Soul (Chess) 1998—Oh, What a Night! The Great Ballads 2000—Reminiscing (Voll).

The Dells are a black vocal group that has been together nearly 50 years and whose story and perseverance inspired filmmaker Robert Townshend's The Five Heartbeats. The original members began singing together as freshmen at Thornton Township High School in the Chicago suburb of Harvey. A street-corner a cappella doo-wop group, they called themselves the El Rays and picked up their style from records by the Clovers and the Dominoes. Harvey Fuqua of the Moonglows took them as protégés, and within months the El Rays were including Michael McGill's and Marvin Junior's originals in their club sets.

In late 1953 they recorded their first single for Chess, the a cappella "Darling Dear, I Know" b/w "Christine." The resulting $36 in royalties sent the group back to the street-corners, but the quintet continued to record for Chess until 1955, when, billing itself as the Dells, it switched to Vee-Jay Records. Their second release for that label, "Oh, What a Night," became a Top 10 R&B hit. Barksdale did not sing on this single, since he had left the group to join Otis Williams and the Charms; he soon rejoined the Dells.

En route to a gig in 1958, the group had an auto accident that left McGill in the hospital for six months, forced Funches to retire, and put the band out of commission for nearly two years. In 1959 Funches was replaced by ex-Flamingo falsetto Johnny Carter.

The early '60s found the Dells slowly regrouping and label-hopping between Vee-Jay and Chess. By mid-decade they had become a contemporary soul group à la the Temptations and the Impressions; they hit the pop chart in 1963 with three Top 20 hits: "There Is" (#20), "Always Together" (#18), and their biggest hit, "Stay in My Corner" (#10 pop, #1 R&B). Hits in 1969 included a medley of "I Can Sing a Rainbow"/"Love Is Blue" (#22) and a Top 10 remake of "Oh, What a Night." They hit occasionally in the early '70s ("Give Your Baby a Standing Ovation," "The Love We Had [Stays on My Mind]"). All told, the Dells have had 30 R&B Top 40 and eight pop Top 40 hits.

Through the years the group has backed countless singers, including Jerry Butler, Dinah Washington, and Barbara Lewis (they sang on her 1963 hit "Hello Stranger"). Although pop hits have eluded them for decades, the Dells have recorded consistently and remain a live attraction. Their 1992 LP, I Salute You, was produced by Kenny Gamble and Leon Huff. "The Heart Is the House of Love" (#13 R&B, 1991) was included on the Five Heartbeats soundtrack. Signed to the newly reactivated Volt imprint of Stax, the Dells released Reminiscing in 2000.

The Del-Vikings/Dell Vikings

Formed 1956, Pittsburgh, PA

Clarence Quick (b. Brooklyn, NY), voc.; Dave Lerchey (b. New Albany, IN), voc.; Norman Wright (b. Oct. 21, 1937, Philadelphia, PA), voc.; Don Jackson, voc.; Corinthian "Kripp" Johnson [b. Cambridge, MA; d. June 22, 1990], voc.
 1957—(- Jackson; + Donald "Gus" Backus [b. Southampton, NY], voc.) (numerous personnel changes follow).

One of rock's first racially integrated groups, the Del-Vikings were a vocal quintet that came together at a Pittsburgh Air Force base and scored two Top 10 hits in 1957, "Come Go with Me" (#5) and "Whispering Bells" (#9). The group first recorded for Lumiverse (owned by Dickie Goodman of the "Flying Saucer" novelty hits) in 1956 with little success. The following year, after adding Knipp Johnson, it recorded the R&B-tinged million-seller "Come Go With Me." The group toured widely, and in mid-1957 scored again with "Whispering Bells."

But after that, ex-Del-Viking Knipp Johnson formed his own group of Del-Vikings and added a second "I" to their name, thus sparking confusion that has plagued rock historians ever since. Among these new Dell Vikings was Chuck Jackson, who had soul hits in the '60s ("I Don't Want to Cry," "Any Day Now," "Tell Him I'm Not Home") and '70s ("Seeing You"). Under threat of legal action, this group then recorded as the Versatiles. The first group, with some personnel shifts, continued to tour and record, breaking up in the mid-'60s, then regrouping in 1970. In the '70s Johnson, Lerchey, Wright, and others were touring internationally. Despite a dizzying sequence of personnel changes, the Del-Vikings continue and as late as 1991 had released a new single, "My Heart" b/w "Rock & Roll Remembered."

Iris DeMent

Born Iris Luella DeMent, Jan. 5, 1961, Paragould, AR
1992—Infamous Angel (Philo/Rounder) 1994—My Life
(Warner Bros.) 1996—The Way I Should.

Iris DeMent's spare, unaffected blend of country and folk music couldn't have been more out of sync with the ironic shrug that greeted the early '90s—or more welcome.

The youngest of 14 children, DeMent was only three years old when her parents' farm went belly up and they moved the family to a suburb of L.A. DeMent's father, who found work as a gardener and janitor, played the fiddle; her mama sang in the Pentecostal church the family attended. Iris grew up singing old-time country and gospel but also listened to the records of Bob Dylan, Joni Mitchell, and Aretha Franklin. She dropped out of high school at 17 to see the country, working odd jobs and obtaining her GED. While living in Topeka, Kansas, she took a course in creative writing that inspired her to try her hand at songwriting and, after moving to Kansas City, Missouri, in 1986, started playing open-mike nights at local clubs.

After DeMent moved to Nashville, songwriter/producer Jim Rooney helped her obtain a deal with folk label Rounder Records. Rooney also produced DeMent's debut, Infamous Angel (1992), a mostly autobiographical bluegrass- and gospel-inflected affair that got a big boost from singer/songwriter John Prine, whose liner notes gave the record a resounding endorsement. Ultimately, however, it was the devastating catch in DeMent's Ozark twang, her strong populist leanings, and her writerly command of narrative and detail that had critics scurrying for superlatives.

Critical praise for Infamous Angel, plus a duet performance of the song "Let the Mystery Be" by Natalie Merchant and David Byrne on MTV's Unplugged, led to a contract with Warner Bros. The label promptly reissued her debut and booked DeMent on tours with Prine, Nanci Griffith, and country hitmaker Mary Chapin Carpenter. The exposure also earned DeMent an invitation to perform at the Presidential Inauguration of fellow Arkansan Bill Clinton. "Our Town," a song from Infamous Angel, later appeared on the final episode of the TV series Northern Exposure.

DeMent's second album, My Life (1994), was another stripped-down record produced by Rooney, and it drew even more raves than its predecessor. But in place of the fond memories of home and sense of wonder that marked DeMent's debut, My Life conveyed mostly doubt and loss, especially the gut-wrenching "No Time to Cry," a song subsequently recorded by Merle Haggard that found DeMent confronting the recent death of her father. This personal searching turned political on DeMent's next album, The Way I Should (1996). Unlike her first two records, the album received mixed reviews, due on the one hand to Randy Scruggs' somewhat heavy-handed, country-rock production, and on the other to the often stunted, preachy tone of DeMent's lyrics.

In the late '90s DeMent appeared on various tribute albums and as a guest vocalist on recordings by Prine and Steve Earle, among others. In 2001 DeMent made her acting debut in the movie Songcatcher, which won the Special Jury Prize for Ensemble Cast at the Sundance Film Festival.

Sandy Denny

Born Jan. 6, 1947, Wimbledon, Eng.; died Apr. 21, 1978, London, Eng.
1968—All Our Own Work (Pickwick) 1970—Fotheringay (A&M);
Sandy Denny (Saga) 1971—The Northstar Grassman and the Ravens (A&M) 1972—Sandy; Rock On 1973—Like an Old Fashioned Waltz (Island) 1977—Sandy Denny (Nova); Ren-dezvous (Island) 1985—Who Knows Where the Time Goes? (Hannibal) 1987—The Best of Sandy Denny 1991—Sandy Denny and the Strawbs (Rykodisc) 2000—No More Sad Relations: The Anthology (A&M).

Sandy Denny's smoky alto made her one of England's most popular singer/songwriters of the early '70s, both as a member of the electric folk group Fairport Convention [see entry] and on her own. She studied classical piano, and while working as a nurse after graduating high school, she learned guitar. She later enrolled in Kensington Art School (classmates included Jimmy Page, Eric Clapton, and John Renbourn) and began frequenting London's folk pubs and coffeehouses. Denny jammed with the then-struggling Simon and Garfunkel, who encouraged her to start performing regularly.

By the mid-'60s she was playing London folk clubs and had recorded one privately distributed LP. Dunning 1967, she belonged to the nascent Strawbs [see entry] (later an art-rock aggregate but then a country-folk group) for six months, recording one unreleased album. She also wrote "Who Knows Where the Time Goes?," later the title track of a gold album by Judy Collins. In May 1968 Denny joined Fairport Convention, with whom she recorded three albums. She quit the group in December 1969, following the release of its landmark Liege and Lief.

Denny hesitantly announced a solo career and formed Fotheringay (named after a song on Fairport Convention) with American guitarist Jerry Donahue, bassist Pat Donaldson, guitarist Trevor Lucas (whom she married in 1973), and drummer Gerry Conway. Though Fotheringay was moderately successful, the group disbanded late in 1970 before completing a second album.

Denny, voted top British female vocalist in the 1970 and 1971 Melody Maker polls, started her solo career in earnest, touring Europe, the U.S., and Britain frequently over the next few years, usually backed by Fairport and Fotheringay alumni. In 1972 she joined the Bunch, a casual aggregation of electrified folkies (including Richard Thompson and Fairport percussionist Dave Mattacks), and recorded an album of rock oldies, Rock On. She also contributed vocals to Led Zepelin's "The Battle of Evermore."

Around the time of Like an Old-Fashioned Waitz, Denny rejoined Fairport Convention, although she had already played a low-key support role in the group's 1973 tour. (Lucas and Donahue had preceded her into the group.) Though she contributed to 1975's Rising for the Moon, the reunion never quite clicked, and Denny and Lucas left Fairport in February 1976. She released Rendezvous in May 1977 and died the next year from head injuries sustained in a fall down a flight of stairs in her home. In 1989 Lucas died of a heart attack.

John Denver

Born John Henry Deutchendorf Jr., Dec. 31, 1943, Roswell, NM; died Oct. 12, 1997, Monterey Bay, CA

1969—Rhymes and Reasons (RCA) 1970—Whose Garden Was This; Take Me to Tomorrow 1971—Poems, Prayers and Promises; Aerie 1972—Rocky Mountain High 1973—John Denver's Greatest Hits; Farewell Andromeda 1974—Back Home Again; A John Denver Songbook; Beginnings With the Mitchell Trio (Mercury) 1975—An Evening With John Denver (RCA); Windsong; Rocky Mountain Christmas 1976—Spirit; Rocky Mountain Christmas 1977—I Want to Live; John Denver's Greatest Hits, vol. 2 1979—John Denver, John Denver and the Muppets: A Christmas Together 1980—Autograph 1981—Some Days Are Diamonds 1982—Seasons of the Heart 1983—It's About Time 1985—Dreamland Express 1986—One World 1990—The Flower That Shattered the Stone (American Gramophone); Christmas, Like a Lullaby (Windstar) 1991—Different Directions 1995—The Wildlife Concert (Legacy) 1996—Reflections: Songs of Love & Life (RCA) 1997—The Best of John Denver Live (Legacy) 1998—Greatest Country Hits (RCA); The Best of John Denver (Madacy); Forever, John (RCA).

Through the '70s, country-pop singer/songwriter John Denver was one of the most successful recording artists in the world. Of his albums, 12 are gold and four are platinum, and in the mid-'70s he had a string of gold singles.

Denver was raised in an Air Force family and lived in various Southern and Southwestern towns. In his early teens his grandmother gave him a 1910 Gibson acoustic guitar. He enrolled at Texas Tech in 1961, majoring in architecture and playing in local clubs. In 1964 he dropped out of college and moved to L.A., and after he adopted Denver as his stage name, he replaced Chad Mitchell in the Chad Mitchell Trio in 1965. The Trio, a major draw on the early-'60s hootenanny circuit, was $40,000 in debt upon Denver's arrival, which he later helped it pay back. The group recorded for Mercury (which later repackaged the results under Denver's name as Beginnings) and toured widely. At a 1966 Trio concert at Gustavus Adolphus College in Minnesota, Denver met sophomore Ann Martell, who married him the next year (they would divorce in 1983).

Rhymes and Reasons included "Leaving on a Jet Plane," a #1 hit that year for Peter, Paul and Mary. Denver shared their producer, Milt Okun. His own rise began with the million-selling "Take Me Home Country Roads" (#2, 1971). After he had moved to Aspen, Colorado, Rocky Mountain High sold over a million copies. The #1 "Annie's Song" (written for his wife) and "Sunshine on My Shoulders," plus "Back Home Again" (#5) made Denver the best-selling pop musician of 1974. Greatest Hits sold over 10 million copies worldwide and stayed in the Top 100 for two years. The governor of Colorado proclaimed John Denver the state's poet laureate.

While the hits continued—"Thank God I'm a Country Boy" (#1, 1975), "I'm Sorry" (#1, 1975)—Denver tried TV and film appearances, with vanity specials, dramatic roles, and a screen debut costarring with George Burns in 1977's Oh, God! He started Windsong Records (distributed by RCA) in 1976, and signed the Starland Vocal Band ("Afternoon Delight," #1, 1976), whose Bill and Taffy Danoff had written "Take Me Home . . ." with him.

Denver did volunteer work for ecological causes, the ERA, and space exploration (he was a board member of the National Space Institute) and against nuclear power. In 1984 he made the first of several tours of the then-Soviet Union; he recorded a special version of "Let Us Begin (What Are We Making Weapons For?)," from One World, in Moscow with Soviet singer Alexandre Gradsky. In 1987 he returned to the USSR, where he performed a benefit concert for victims of the Chernobyl nuclear power plant disaster.

From the mid-'80s until his death in 1997, Denver never regained a commercial foothold (1985's Dreamland Express reached only #90, 1990's The Flower That Shattered the Stone, only #185); he had a brief return to prominence in late summer 1993 when he was arrested for drunk driving in Aspen, Colorado. The following year he was arrested on similar charges. A second marriage ended in divorce in 1991. As his musical career waned, Denver devoted more attention to humanitarian causes and his first love, flying. In 1993 Denver became the first nonclassical musician given the Albert Schweitzer Music Award, for lifetime humanitarianism. In 1994 he published Take Me Home: An Autobiography. A pilot for over 20 years, Denver died on October 12, 1997, when the experimental plane he was flying suddenly dove into Monterey Bay, killing him instantly. After his death, some of those close to him revealed that Denver had suffered bouts of depression and insecurity throughout his life. His ashes were spread throughout his beloved Rocky Mountains.

Depeche Mode

Formed 1980, Basildon, Eng.

Vince Clarke (b. July 3, 1960, South Woodford, Eng.), kybds.; Andrew Fletcher (b. July 8, 1961, Nottingham, Eng.), kybds.; Dave Gahan (b. David Gahan, May 9, 1962, Epping, Eng.), voc.; Martin Gore (b. July 23, 1961, Basildon), gtr., kybds., voc. 1981—Speak and Spell (Mute) (- Clarke) 1982—A Broken Frame (+ Alan Wilder [b. Perhaps the quintessential '80s electropop band, Depeche Mode—the name was inspired by a French fashion magazine—parlayed a fascination with synthesizers into huge success on the British charts (where all its albums went Top 10) and eventually on the U.S. pop chart. Whereas a more traditional four-piece rock band might feature three members playing instruments and the fourth singing and perhaps playing guitar or bass, the lineup of this British group was thus described in a 1993 press release: "Dave (Gahan) is the singer, Martin (Gore) the songwriter, Alan (Wilder) the musician, and Andrew (Fletcher) the coordinator." Though Depeche Mode's stark, synthetic sound and often moody, provocative lyrics buck classic pop convention, the hooks that distinguish its most popular songs are among postmodern rock's most ingratiating. For a time, the group did share an unfortunate trait with numerous conventional rock bands, however: a troubled, drug-addicted lead singer.

When the group's original members united in 1980, in a working-class suburb of London called Basildon, they gravitated toward synthesizers and drum machines in part because they were easy to carry around and didn't require amplifiers. In fact, they took the train to their early gigs in local pubs. The group's recording career began auspiciously: 1981's dance beat-ridden Speak and Spell (#10 U.K.) became one of the year's best-selling albums in England. Shortly after its release, though, principal songwriter Vince Clarke left. He eventually formed the techno-driven bands Yazoo and, later, Erasure [see entry].

But Depeche Mode bounced right back with 1982's A Broken Frame (#8 U.K.), on which Gore assumed chief songwriting duties; soon after, Alan Wilder, who had toured with the band earlier, joined as a full-time member. Two years later the band released the critically and commercially groundbreaking Some Great Reward (#5 U.K.), whose content ranged from the bitter and shocking "Blasphemous Rumours" to "People Are People," a catchy plea for tolerance that went to #13 in the U.S., where Depeche Mode had previously been considered an obscure alternative act.

In spite of its success on the American tour circuit, where they were selling out arenas, Depeche Mode didn't have another U.S. hit until "Personal Jesus" (#28, 1990), its first gold single. Violator (#7, 1990), the album that single introduced, yielded the group's first Top 10 single, "Enjoy the Silence" (#8, 1990). Songs of Faith and Devotion (1993) was heralded by critics as a bold foray into warmer musical textures and more spiritual imagery. It also entered the American pop album chart at #1, boding well for Depeche Mode's future on both sides of the Atlantic.

However, after another successful tour, that promising future was in doubt. Gore and Fletcher were physically exhausted from the band's 18 months on the road. Wilder had become disenchanted and left the group (he later formed the largely instrumental project Recoil), and most disturbingly, Gahan slashed his wrists in a suicide attempt in August 1995. The now-trio had already begun to record its next album when Gahan took a near-lethal overdose of heroin and cocaine in May 1996, he actually flatlined for a few minutes. Soon after regaining consciousness, the singer was arrested for drug possession and sentenced to rehab. He emerged from the program clean and sober, and later spoke frankly in interviews about how he had believed he had to live the pain of Depeche Mode's songs to perform them (although Gore wrote the lyrics).

The group released Ultra in 1997 and enjoyed a resurgence: The album went to #5 in the U.S., and the singles "Barrel of a Gun" and "It's No Good" were popular Modern Rock tracks (#11 and #4, respectively, on that chart). The band declined to tour in consideration of Gahan's still-new sobriety. They did return to the stage to support The Singles 86-98 (#38) the following year.

Rick Derringer

Born Rick Zehringer, Aug. 5, 1947, Union City, IN
With the McCoys: 1965—Hang On Sloopy (Bang) 1966—You Make Me Feel So Good 1968—Infinite McCoys (Mercury); Human Ball 1970—Outside Stuff 1974—Rick Derringer and the McCoys.
Solo: 1973—All American Boy (Blue Sky) 1975—Spring Fever (Blue Sky) 1976—Derringer 1977—Sweet Evil; Live 1978—If I Weren't So Romantic, I'd Shoot You 1979—Guitars and Women 1980—Face to Face 1983—Good Dirty Fun (Passport) 1993—Back to the Blues (Blues Bureau Int'l) 1994—Electra Blues 1998—Blues Deluxe 2000—Jackhammer Blues.

A teen star with the '60s prototype garage band, the McCoys ("Hang On Sloopy"), singer/guitarist Rick Derringer joined Johnny and Edgar Winter for several successful albums in the early '70s. He has conducted an uneven solo career since.

Rick Zehringer formed the McCoys at age 13 after he and his younger brother, drummer Randy, persuaded the kid next door to buy a bass. Producer/songwriter Bert Berns brought them to New York, where they recorded "Hang On Sloopy." In mid-1965 that song became the McCoys' only #1 hit. "Fever" hit #7 later that year.

A few minor hits followed, and in the late '60s Zehninger produced a couple of psychedelic blues-rock albums for the group. By 1969, the McCoys were the house band at Steve Paul's club, the Scene, in New York. Paul soon became their manager and introduced them to Johnny Winter. After changing his name to Derringer, Rick produced and played on several Winter albums (including Johnny Winter And and the gold Johnny Winter And Live). When Johnny quit touring to kick a heroin habit in late 1971, Derringer joined Johnny's brother Edgar Winter and his band White Trash for a seven-month tour (he appears on Roadwork). Derringer then produced Edgar's They Only Come Out at Night and the #1 instrumental single "Frankenstein." By December 1973 he was back on the road with Edgar and cobilled as a feature attraction.

Derringer's first solo album, All American Boy (#25, 1973), featured his best-known composition, "Rock and Roll Hoochie Coo" (previously recorded by both Winters), which went to #15 as a single. In 1973 he produced Johnny Winter's "comeback" LP, Still Alive and Well. He continued studio work with Johnny (Saints and Sinners) and Edgar throughout the '70s. In addition, he played guitar on sessions with Steely Dan, Alice Cooper, Bette Midler, Todd Rundgren, and many others.

Derringer's unsuccessful second solo album prompted the 1976 formation of a group called Derringer, featuring second guitarist Danny Johnson and a rhythm section consisting of Carmine Appice's brother Vinnie on drums and bassist Kenny Aaronson. The group produced four albums (Derringer, Sweet Evil, If I Weren't So Romantic, I'd Shoot You, and Derringer Live) and toured constantly through the late '70s, opening for Blue Öyster Cult, Aerosmith, and Foghat. But the group never clicked, and Rick ended the decade playing East Coast clubs with makeshift pickup bands that for a while included guitarist Neil Giraldo and drummer Myron Grombacher, who later joined Pat Benatar's band. After Good Dirty Fun, Derringer would not release another album for 10 years.

Behind the scenes through the '80s, Derringer produced demos for Cyndi Lauper's first solo album; produced and played on singles and albums by "Weird" Al Yankovic (from 1983's "I Love Rocky Road" to 1990's UHF), and sang on and produced a single for professional wrestler Hulk Hogan ("Real American") and a version of "Rock and Roll Hoochie Coo" by Wrestlemania.

Back to the Blues (1993) kicked off a series of more subdued, rootsier albums. Derringer also continued to tour and to collaborate with Edgar Winter. As of 2000 he was experimenting with contemporary Christian stylings.

Jackie DeShannon

Born Aug. 21, 1944, Hazel, KY

1968—Laurel Canyon (Imperial) 1969—Put a Little Love in Your Heart 1972—Jackie (Atlantic) 1974—Your Baby Is a Lady 1975—New Arrangement (Columbia) 1978—You're the Only Dancer (Amherst); Songs (Capitol) 1991—The Best of Jackie DeShannon (Rhino) 2000—You Know Me (Varèse Sarabande).

Singer/songwriter Jackie DeShannon is one of the most important songwriters of her time, and many of her songs, made hits by other artists, are classics: from Brenda Lee's "Dum Dum" (1961), the Byrds' "Don't Doubt Yourself, Babe" (1965), the Searchers' "Needles and Pins" and "When You Walk in the Room" (both 1964), and Kim Carnes' "Bette Davis Eyes" (1981). In the course of a career that has spanned more than four decades, DeShannon recorded in a wide range of pop styles, from folk to standards.

Born into a musical Kentucky family, she had her own local radio show by age 11 and scored a regional hit when she moved with her family to Chicago. She landed on the West Coast in 1960. There she sang backed by a group called the Nighthawks, which eventually evolved into the Crusaders.

DeShannon's first songwriting success came in the early '60s with hits for Brenda Lee (including "Dum Dum," #4, 1961) and the Searchers ("When You Walk in the Room," #35, 1964; a minor hit for DeShannon as well). In 1965 the Byrds included her "Don't Doubt Yourself, Babe" on Mr. Tambourine Man. DeShannon began recording in 1960, though, as she later remarked, her record company tolerated rather than encouraged her. In 1963 she and Ry Cooder formed a short-lived and unrecorded band. In 1964 she opened for the Beatles during their first American tour. Later that year, she met Jimmy Page in England, and they wrote several songs in early 1965 that were recorded by Marianne Faithfull (for whom Jackie penned the British hit "Come Stay With Me"). Page plays on her "Don't Turn Your Back on Me." DeShannon's single of Burt Bacharach's "What the World Needs Now Is Love" was a #7 hit in 1965 and earned four Grammy nominations. Her next hit was the 4-million-selling "Put a Little Love in Your Heart" (#4) in 1969.

In the early '70s DeShannon recorded Your Baby Is a Lady and Jackie in a slick country-soul style, but neither LP sold well. She also sang background vocals on some Van Morrison sessions. Morrison later produced some of her sessions. She switched to Columbia in 1975 for New Arrangement, which also sold poorly. In 1977 DeShannon released an album on the small Amherst label. Her songwriting prowess was still being recognized into the '80s: Bruce Springsteen has performed "When You Walk in the Room" in concert, and DeShannon and Donna Weiss cowrote Kim Carnes' 1981 international hit, "Bette Davis Eyes," which won a Grammy for Song of the Year.

DeShannon, who for a time also headed a production company, Raider Music and Film, returned to the studio with 2000's You Know Me, her first new album in roughly two decades.

Destiny's Child: Kelly Rowland, Beyoncé Knowles, Michelle Williams

Destiny's Child

Formed 1989, Houston, TX

Beyoncé Knowles (b. Sep. 4, 1981, Houston), lead voc.; Kelly Rowland (b. Kelendria Rowland, Feb. 11, 1981, Houston), voc.; LeToya Luckett (b. Mar. 11, 1981, Houston), voc.; LaTavia Roberson (b. Nov. 1, 1981, Houston), voc.

1998—Destiny's Child (Columbia) 1999—The Writing's on the Wall 2000—(– Luckett; – Roberson; + Farrah Franklin [b. May 3, 1981, Houston], voc.; + Michelle Williams [b. Tenetria Michelle Williams, July 23, 1980, Houston], voc.) (– Franklin) 2001—Survivor.

Destiny's Child emerged from a pack of late-'90s girl groups with a formula that was fresh yet surprisingly familiar. An enterprise based on childhood friendship and dreams of stardom, Destiny's Child were a new-generation Supremes (tapes of whose performances they studied as part of being, in their words, "divas in training") in more ways than one. However, despite a flurry of personnel changes (complete with lawsuits alleging conflict of interest on the part of the group's manager, Beyoncé Knowles' father, Mathew Knowles), Destiny's Child emerged a winner, with a string of hit singles and over 7 million albums sold in the U.S.

The four original members—Knowles, Kelly Rowland, LeToya Luckett, and LaTavia Roberson—first joined forces in 1989 when they were all around nine years old. After a few years of name changes (GirlsTyme, Somethin' Fresh, Cliché, and Da Dolls) and a shattering loss on Star Search, the group signed a deal with Elektra and writer/producer Darryl Simmons in 1994. By then the girls had become Da Dolls, and Knowles' father, a medical equipment salesman, was their manager. (In 1992 Rowland's mother agreed to let her reside with the Knowles family.) Simmons never completed the group's first album, and Elektra canceled their contract in 1995. Despite having virtually no prior experience in show business, Mathew Knowles landed the girls a deal with Columbia in 1997.

Now known as Destiny's Child, the quartet hit platinum with its eponymous debut album (#67 pop, #14 R&B, 1998), which featured a Wyclef Jean-remixed "No, No, No" (#3 pop, #1 R&B, 1997). Released in summer 1999, The Writing's on the Wall (#6 pop, #2 R&B) was the group's breakthrough, spinning off "Bills, Bills, Bills" (#1 pop, #1 R&B, 1999), "Bug a Boo" (#33 pop, #15 R&B, 1999), "Say My Name" (#1 pop, #1 R&B, 1999), and "Jumpin' " (#3 pop, #8 R&B, 2000).

Media coverage of the still-teen foursome focused on the girls' wholesome Christian values and the role of Knowles' parents (her mother Tina, a Houston salon owner, is their stylist and designs their wardrobe) in guiding the group. But the fairy tale soon turned soap opera after Roberson and Luckett, upon reaching age 18 in late 1999, informed Mathew Knowles that they were terminating their management contracts with him and seeking independent management. By early 2000 the pair was out of the group, replaced by Tenetria Williams (a former backup singer for Monica) and Farrah Franklin (a singer/actress who had been a dancer in one of the group's early videos). When Mathew Knowles suggested that Tenetria sounded too ethnic, Williams began using her middle name, Michelle. In March 2000 Roberson and Luckett sued, accusing Mathew Knowles of "greed, insistence on control, self-dealing, and promotion of his daughter's interest at the expense of the plaintiffs." The pair also charged that they were not aware that they were officially out of the group until they saw the "Say My Name" video with Williams and Franklin in their places. (As of this writing, the lawsuit remains unresolved, and Roberson, Luckett, and a third singer have formed Angel and signed with Ansta.)

Within five months, however, Franklin was dismissed after allegedly missing performances. Now a trio, Destiny's Child opened for Christina Aguilera during her summer 2000 tour, and the group's "Independent Women, Part 1" from the Charlie's Angels soundtrack became a #1 pop and R&B smash that fall. Of five nominations, the group won two Grammy Awards for "Say My Name": Best R&B Performance by a Duo or Group With Vocal and Best R&B Song (the group members, including Roberson and Luckett, are cowriters). Group members, particularly Knowles, also write and produce some of Destiny's Child's material. Both Knowles and Rowland have worked on outside projects with other artists and indicate that they see Destiny's Child as a stepping stone to possible solo careers. The double-platinum Survivor (#1, 2001) continued the group's winning streak with its #1 title track and "Bootylicious" (#7 pop, #17 R&B).

Sporting an original tongue-in-cheek world view proclaiming man to be in a state of genetic and cultural "de-evolution," Devo made the unlikely step from novelty act to real contender—an ironic new wave version of Kiss, whose marketing was as important as its music. The group exploited film and video from the beginning of its career, yet was never sufficiently pop-oriented to earn much play on MTV. Indeed, when Devo proved unable to follow up its one big hit, 1980's "Whip It," the group faded from view, and its smart-alecky view of America as a happy-faced toxic-waste dump eventually found expression in the (dysfunctional) sitcom world of The Simpsons.

The details of the members' pre-Devo existence were intentionally obscured as part of their automatonlike image. (They always performed in uniform, favoring futuristic yet sturdy ensembles that featured yellow reactor-attendant suits, overturned red flowerpots for hats, and roller-derby style protective gear.) Mark Mothersbaugh and Jerry Casale met while studying art at Kent State University. Neither was musical, so to build their band, the two recruited their "Bob I" and "Bob II" brothers and drummer Alan Myers and produced a 10-minute video clip entitled The Truth About De-Evolution, which won a prize at the Ann Arbor Film Festival in 1975. They followed up with club dates.

In summer 1977 Devo released its first single, "Jocko Homo" b/w "Mongoloid," on its own Booji Boy Records. The infantile robot Booji was the group's corporate mascot, and was often featured in videos and concerts. Devo's cutting-edge status was confirmed when David Bowie introduced the band at its New York debut, at Max's Kansas City. In early 1978 its second single, a syncopated version of the Rolling Stones' "Satisfaction," increased the band's growing cult and garnered the group a record deal with Warner Bros.

Q: Are We Not Men? A: We Are Devo!, produced by Brian Eno, was released in fall 1978, and the group hit the road in earnest. Freedom of Choice provided Devo's 1980 commercial breakthrough by eventually going platinum with the million-selling single, "Whip It." Devo continued to revive rock chestnuts with noteworthy success. The group covered Johnny Rivers' "Secret Agent Man" in 1980 and received substantial airplay in mid-1981 with a hiccuppy rendition of Lee Dorsey's "Working in the Coalmine." The group also changed its identity. Clad in leisure suits and crooning boom-again lounge music, Devo occasionally opened its own concerts disguised as Dove, the Band of Love.

Neither New Traditionalists nor Oh No! It's Devo produced a hit single. (Devo's last charting single was "Theme from Doctor Detroit" [#59, 1983], for the Dan Aykroyd comedy film.) The band lost its Warner Bros. contract and disappeared for four years. Mark Mothersbaugh began composing and producing music for commercials and television shows, including CBS' Pee Wee's Playhouse, Nickelodeon's Rugrats, and MTV's Liquid Television. He also scored the '90s videogame Crash Bandicoot (and three unreleased Devo tunes ended up on the videogame Interstate '82).

With Alan Myers replaced by David Kendrick, Devo re-formed for Total Devo (1988), which barely charted. A subsequent tour of small halls and large clubs, with no expensive high-tech theatrics, yielded the live album Now It Can Be Told. Devo's next studio album, Smooth Noodle Maps, failed to chart at all, and the band once again vanished—just as its songs began being covered by alternative-rock bands (Nirvana with "Turnaround", Soundgarden and Superchunk with "Girl U Want"). In 1992 two bands—L.A.'s Clawhammer and Chicago's Honeywagon—emerged, playing nothing but Devo songs (echoing the 1980 Rhino collection KROQ Devo-tees Album). By then Rykodisc had begun issuing archival live and studio Devo tracks, including the E-Z Listening Disc (originally available only through Devo's fan club), on which the band recorded Muzak versions of its own songs.

Devo reunited in 1991 for a 30-city European tour, and again for several dates on the 1996 and 1997 Lollapalooza tours. Jerry Casale continued to direct the occasional music video, such as the Foo Fighters' "I'll Stick Around." Mark Mothersbaugh and Bob Casale produced 2000's Heroes & Villains, an album of music inspired by Cartoon Network's Powerpuff Girls, with Devo's "Go Monkey Go" plus tracks by David Byrne, Frank Black, and Shonen Knife.

Pop songwriter Neil Diamond, a veteran of the Brill Building song factory, became one of the best-selling MOR performers of the '70s. Singing his own melodramatic quasi-gospel songs in a portentous bantone, he has sold over 92 million records worldwide, amassing over 35 Top 40 singles and 18 platinum albums.

Diamond recorded his first single soon after graduating from Brooklyn's Erasmus Hall High School. He attended NYU as a premedical student on a fencing scholarship until 1962, when he dropped out and began hawking songs to Broadway publishers, one of whom soon hired him as a $50-a-week staff songwriter. Diamond worked for various publishers, including Don Kirshner's Aldon Music, where he wrote the Monkees' #1 1967 hit "I'm a Believer." Fellow songwriters Jeff Barry and Ellie Greenwich helped him sign with Bang Records in 1965, for whom he recorded a string of Top 20 hits: "Cherry, Cherry" (#6, 1966), "I Got the Feeling" (#16, 1966), "You Got to Me" (#18, 1967), "Girl, You'll Be a Woman Soon" (#10, 1967), "Thank the Lord for the Night Time" (#13, 1967), and "Kentucky Woman" (#22, 1967).

Bang lost interest after Diamond began looking for significance with songs like "Shilo." He moved to California in 1966, where Uni Records promised him full artistic control. His Uni (later MCA) debut, Velvet Gloves and Spit, sold poorly, but subsequent singles—"Brother Love's Traveling Salvation Show" (#22, 1969), "Sweet Caroline" (#4, 1969), "Cracklin' Rosie" (#1, 1970), and "Song Sung Blue" (#1, 1972)—established him as a major star. He toured the U.S., Europe, and Australia in 1972 and placed two albums in the U.S. Top 5: Moods and the live Hot August Night (which also became Australia's best-selling album at the time, 3 million sales in a country of 14 million people). He also played a 20-performance one-man show on Broadway in 1972.

The following year Diamond signed with Columbia for a record-breaking $5 million; his first album for his new label, the soundtrack to Jonathan Livingston Seagull, grossed more money than the film itself. He returned to touring in February 1976 and appeared in the Band's Last Waltz concert on Thanksgiving Day. Band guitarist Robbie Robertson produced Diamond's Beautiful Noise, a tribute to Diamond's '60s songwriting days. It was his 11th album in a row to go gold.

NBC aired a TV special of Diamond in concert on February 24, 1977; subsequent television specials proved popular with viewers. In 1980 he starred in a poorly received remake of The Jazz Singer. Nonetheless, his soundtrack LP for that film went platinum five times over, yielding Top 10 singles in "Love on the Rocks," "America," and "Hello Again." Heartlight was another Top 5 album, and the title track (#5, 1982) became a long-running staple of "lite FM" adult-contemporary radio. Primitive (#35, 1984), Headed for the Future (#20, 1986), Hot August Night (#59, 1987), and The Best Years of Our Lives (#46, 1989) all went gold. Lovescape (#44, 1991) included a duet with Kim Carnes, "Hooked on the Memory of You." Diamond's first duet since his chart-topping 1978 "You Don't Bring Me Flowers" with Barbra Streisand. Up on the Roof found Diamond singing the Brill Building pop of his early days; critics panned the album but gave glowing reviews to Diamond's subsequent tour, which as always, was attended by intensely devoted throngs. Meanwhile, Diamond continues to collect royalties for the many cover versions of his songs, including Deep Purple's "Kentucky Woman." UB40's chart-topping '80s version of "Red, Red Wine," and Urge Overkill's "Girl, You'll Be a Woman Soon," from the 1994 Pulp Fiction soundtrack.

In 1996 Diamond made a somewhat radical departure into country with Tennessee Moon (#14 pop, #3 C&W). The same year Columbia released the 70-song In My Lifetime, a career-spanning box set. The Movie Album (#31 pop, 1998) contains Diamond's renditions of 20 famous songs from classic motion pictures.

 1972—Soul Makossa (Atlantic) 1973—Makossa Man; O Boso (London) 1975—Makossa Music (Creole) 1976—Manu '76 (Decca); Super Kumba 1978—Afrovision (Island); Sin Explosion (Decca) 1980—Gone Clear (Island); Reggae Makossa 1981—Ambassador (Mango) 1983—Melodies Africanes, vols. 1 & 2 (Sonodisc) 1984—Deadline (RCA) 1985—Electric Africa (Celluloid) 1986—Afrjazzy 1990—Trois Kilos de Café 1990—Polysonik (Soundwave) 1994—Wakafrika (Giant); Live '91 (Stern's Music); Seventies (Sonodisc); Tropical Garden 1995—Negropolitaines, vol. 2 (Melodie) 1996—Bao Bao (M.I.L. Miltime); Lamastabtani (Celluloid) 2000—Abele Dance.

Manu Dibango's "Soul Makossa" was one of the first African pop songs to catch on in America. Dibango moved from Cameroon to Europe at age 15 and studied piano and music theory in Paris and Brussels. At age 20 he took up the saxophone and over the next 15 years maintained a career as a jazz and R&B musician in Europe. In the late '60s Dibango returned to Africa, settling in Kinshasa, Zaire. There he assembled a band composed of African, European, and Caribbean musicians to play an array of Western instruments (horns, keyboards, electric guitars, and basses) and traditional African instruments on music that drew on jazz, R&B, calypso, Cuban, rock, and traditional and modern African forms.

Beginning in the early '70s, he and his bands toured and recorded in Europe and Africa. "Soul Makossa," recorded in France by La Société Française du Son in 1972 and released in the U.S. the following year, reached #35 pop and #21 R&B on the American singles chart. In 1974 Dibango toured the U.S. He traveled to the West Indies in 1980 and 1981, and there recorded with reggae musicians Sly Dunbar and Robbie Shakespeare.

Dibango returned to France in 1983 and recorded the solo piano compositions released as Melodies Africanes, vols. 1 & 2. He collaborated with Herbie Hancock and New York avant-funk producer/bassist Bill Laswell on Deadline and Electric Africa. Laswell also produced a remake of "Soul Makossa" on Afrjazzy.

Trois Kilos de Café, Dibango's autobiography, was published in 1990, the same year he also released an identically titled retrospective album containing rerecorded versions of his past work. In 1991, leading the Soul Makossa Gang, Dibango continued to keep his sound contemporary. Adding to the African music sung in what Dibango calls the "Negropolitan" languages, the band included the English raps of MC Mello.

Wakafrika (1995) continued Dibango's move toward internationalism. A collection of what Dibango called "African classics" (including "Soul Makossa"), it featured guest appearances by western musicians such as Sinéad O'Connor and Peter Gabriel, and African expats such as Angelique Kidjo and Papa Wemba.

Dibango continues to tour and makes the occasional guest appearance on other acts' records, but his own time in the studio has been limited. He appears on Zap Mama's 1999 album A Ma Zone and produced an album for South Africa's Mahotella Queens.

The Dickies

 Chuck Wagon (d. 1981), kybds.; Stan Lee (b. Sep. 24, 1956), gtr.; Billy Club, bass; Leonard Graves Phillips, voc.; Karlos Kaballero, drums; Jonathan Melvoin (b. Dec. 6, 1961; d. July 12, 1996, New York, NY), drums; Enoch Hain, gtr.; Charlie Alexander, bass; Lorenzo Buhrne, bass; Cliff Martinez, drums.
 1979—The Incredible Shrinking Dickies (A&M); Dawn of the Dickies 1983—(—Wagon) Stukas Over Disneyland (PVC) 1986—We Aren't the World! (ROIR) 1988—Killer Clowns From Outer Space EP (Enigma) 1989—Great Dictations (A&M); Second Coming (Enigma) 1991—Live in London: Locked 'n' Loaded (Taang!) 1994—Idjit Savant (Triple X) 1998—Dogs From the Hare that Bit Us (Relativity) 1999—Still Live Even If You Don't Want It (ROIR).

The Dickies are best known for their covers of "classic" rock tunes, which they speed up to comic proportions. Their repertoire includes "Nights in White Satin," "Eve of Destruction," the Banana Splits television cartoon theme song, "Communication Breakdown," "Hair," and Black Sabbath's "Paranoid." The San Fernando Valley group was one of L.A.'s most popular punk bands in the late '70s, although A&M was undoubtedly disappointed that their local following never expanded nationally. Alongside their twisted covers, they have penned such originals as "(I'm Stuck in a Pagoda) With Tricia Toyota" and "Rondo (The Midget's Revenge)"; tunes like "I'm a Chollo" and "Goin' Homo" proved that there were no limits to how low the Dickies would sink for a laugh. In 1988 their perennial B-movie sensibility landed one of their tracks in the movie Killer Clowns From Outer Space. The band has gone through a number of personnel changes, including the 1981 suicide of keyboardist Chuck Wagon, with Lee and Phillips remaining the band's core.

In 1994, just as Green Day and the Offspring were taking Dickies-inspired pop punk to the bank, the band released Idjit Savant, an album of typically cartoonish originals and covers. Dogs From the Hare That Bit Us (1998) was nothing but covers, including disposable fare from the catalogues of Unah Heep, Iron Butterfly, and the Knack. The version of the Human Benz "Nobody But Me" that appeared on the album was featured on the BASEketball soundtrack. In 1999 the Dickies toured the U.S. with their SoCal punk spawn the Offspring.

The Dictators

Formed 1974, Bronx, NY
 Handsome Dick Manitoba (b. Richard Blum, Jan. 29, 1954), voc.; Ross "the Boss" Funicello (b. Jan. 3, 1954, Bronx), gtr., voc.;

Scott "Top Ten" Kempner (b. Feb. 6, 1954, Bronx), gr., voc.; Andy "Adny" Shernoff (b. Apr. 19, 1952, Bronx), kybds., bass, voc.; Stu Boy King, drums.

1975—Go Girl Crazy! (Epic) (— King; + Ritchie Teeter [b. Mar. 16, 1951, Long Island, NY], drums; + Mark Mendoza [b. Patterson, drums) 1998—Live New York New York.

Del-Lords: 1984—Frontier Days (Enigma) 1986—Johnny Comes Marching Home 1988—Based on a True Story 1989—Howlin' at the Halloween Moon (Restless) 1990—Lovers Who Wander (Enigma) 1999—Get Tough: The Best of the Del-Lords (Restless).

Manitoba's Wild Kingdom: 1990—... And You? (Popular Metaphysics/MCA).

The Spinatras (Ross "the Boss" Funicello, gr; Brian Corley, voc.; Richie Fazio, drums; Ron Giordano, bass): 2000—@midnight.com (CMC International).

Loved by some, hated by many more, and misunderstood and/or ignored by the rest, the Dictators straddled heavy metal and punk rock with a slapstick sense of humor. In the early '70s Andy "Adny" Shernoff was editing a mimeographed rock fanzine, Teenage Wasteland Gazette, an influence on Creem and a forerunner of Punk magazine. With virtually no musical experience, he gave up writing to form the Dictators with Scott Kempner and Ross "the Boss" Funicello; the latter had been in a unit called Total Crud. Manitoba, who began as their roadie, soon became their vocalist and frontman.

Though their music was much closer to brazenly amateurish heavy metal than punk, the Dictators were mainstays in the early days at Manhattan's CBGB. In 1976 Manitoba was nearly killed when, after heckling transvestite rocker (now transsexual) Wayne/Jayne County at CBGB, County hit him over the head with a microphone stand. Despite or because of such antics, their debut (recorded with Blue Öyster Cult's producer Sandy Pearlman) was a critical success, but sold only 6,000 copies.

They broke up in late 1978, Teeter resurfacing in a New York band called VHF a year later. Ross "the Boss" went to San Francisco in 1979 and formed Shakin' Street, which released one LP for Columbia in 1980; in 1982 he formed a heavy-metal band called Manowar. Mendoza joined the briefly, incredibly popular Twisted Sister as did Teeter at one point. Shernoff has been involved in off-Broadway theatrical productions and has produced many records for New York bands. Kempner formed the Del-Lords, and Manitoba and Shernoff belonged to Manitoba's Wild Kingdom, which by 1990 also included Ross "the Boss" Funicello.

Despite all these offshoots, the Dictators themselves never really went away. They started playing reunion shows as early as 1980, and the 1998 CD reissue of their 1981 live album Fuck 'Em If They Can't Take a Joke (under the name Live New York New York) included extra tracks recorded in the early '80s. They also performed as part of CBGB's 20th-anniversary celebration in 1994. In 1996 the band released a single, "I Am Right" with Del-Lord's drummer Frank Funaro on board. Funaro played in the Dictators from 1990 to 1997, when he was replaced by Manitoba's Wild Kingdom's J.P. Patterson. The Dictators also contributed a new song, "What's Up With That?," to the Boys Don't Cry soundtrack in 1999. As of late 2000 the band was recording a new album.

Bo Diddley

Born Ellas Otha Bates, later changed to McDaniel, Dec. 30, 1928, McComb, MS

1962—Bo Diddley (Checker) 1963—Bo Diddley Is a Gunslinger; Bo Diddley Rides Again (Pye, U.K.) 1964—Two Great Guitars (with Chuck Berry) (Chess); Hey Good Looking 1965—Let Me Pass 1974—Big Bad Bo (Checker) 1975—Another Dimension 1976—20th Anniversary (RCA) 1983—His Greatest Sides (Chess) 1986—The Super Super Blues Band: With Bo Diddley, Muddy Waters, and Little Walter (Chess); Superblues: Bo Diddley, Muddy Waters, and Little Walter 1989—Breaking Through the B.S. (Triple X) 1990—The Chess Box (Chess/MCA) 1992—This Should Not Be (Triple X) 1994—Promises 1996—A Man Amongst Men (Code Blue/Atlantic) 1997—His Best (Chess).

Bo Diddley's syncopated "hambone" beat—CHINK-a-CHINK-a-CHINK, a-CHINK-CHINK—is a cornerstone of rock & roll songs, from Diddley's own "Who Do You Love," "Mona," "Bo Diddley," and "I'm a Man" to the Who's "Magic Bus," Bruce Springsteen's "She's the One," and the Pretenders' "Cuban Slide." Still a popular live act, Diddley has been on the road for more than five decades.

Adopted by a Mississippi sharecropping family, he moved with them to the South Side of Chicago. As a child, he began studying violin under Professor O.W. Frederick at the Ebenezer Baptist Church. In grammar school he acquired his Bo Diddley nickname (a "diddley bow" is a one-stringed African guitar). By the time he entered Foster Vocational School in his early teens, he had switched to the guitar and regularly played on Chicago's Maxwell Street when he was not in school, where he learned to make violins and guitars. (He also built his first rectangular guitar at age 15.) After several years of performing on streetcorners, he played at the 708 Club in 1951 and became a regular South Side performer for the next four years.

In July 1955 Leonard Chess signed Diddley to his Checker label. Diddley's first single, "Bo Diddley," was an immediate #1 R&B success. "I'm a Man" (1955, later recorded by the Yardbirds and others) also fared well on the R&B chart. His biggest pop success came in 1959, when "Say Man" (#3 R&B) hit the Top 20 late in the year. He had a lesser hit in 1962 with the rollicking "You Can't Judge a Book by the Cover" (#48 pop, #21 R&B).

Diddley toured steadily through the late '50s and early '60s, playing rock package tours and one-nighters at R&B venues. The band that recorded with him in the mid-'50s included drummers Clifton James and Frank Kirkland, pianist Otis Spann, Bo's half sister "The Duchess" on guitar and vocals, and Diddley's eternal sidekick, bassist and maracas shaker Jerome Green (who also provided call-and-response repartee on "Hey Bo Diddley" and "Bring It to Jerome").

Diddley's legacy was enhanced considerably during the mid-'60s, when many of his songs were covered by British Invasion groups like the Rolling Stones. In 1964 the Animals paid tribute to him in an album track entitled "The Story of Bo Diddley." Through the years, his material has also been recorded by countless other artists.

Diddley has recorded erratically since the early '60s, with a catalogue that even includes surfing albums (Surfin' With Bo Diddley). In the mid-'60s he recorded traditional blues with Little Walter and Muddy Waters on Superblues (reissued in 1986). In the early '70s Diddley continued to tour frequently, concentrating on Europe. One such outing was documented in Let the Good Times Roll. Around the same time, he also appeared in DA Pennebaker's Keep On Rockin'. In 1976 RCA released 20th Anniversary of Rock 'n' Roll, a tribute to Diddley that featured over 20 artists. Diddley opened several dates for the Clash on their 1979 U.S. tour. He made cameo appearances in George Thorogood's video "Bad to the Bone" (1982) and played a pawnbroker in the Dan Aykroyd-Eddie Murphy movie, Trading Places. In 1998 he appeared in Blues Brothers 2000. He tried recording over electro-funk grooves on 1992's This Should Not Be; critics agreed with the album's title.

Despite a lack of commercial success, Bo Diddley's stature as a founding father of rock & roll is undiminished. He was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1987. In 1996 he released his first major-label album in two decades, A Man Amongst Men, with guest artists including Ron Wood, Keith Richards, and the Shirelles. That album was nominated for a 1997 Grammy in the Best Contemporary Blues Album category. The following year, he received the National Recording Arts and Sciences Lifetime Achievement Award. He is also the recipient of the Rhythm & Blues Foundation Lifetime Achievement Award.

Ani DiFranco

Born Sep. 23, 1970, Buffalo, NY

1990—Ani DiFranco (Righteous Babe) 1991—Not So Soft
1992—Imperfectly 1993—Puddle Dive; Like I Said 1994—Out of Range 1995—Not a Pretty Girl 1996—Dilate; More Joy, Less Shame EP 1997—Living in Clip 1998—Little Plastic Castle 1999—Up Up Up Up Up Up; To the Teeth
2000—Swing Set EP 2001—Revelling/Reckoning.
With Utah Phillips: 1996—The Past Didn't Go Anywhere
1999—Fellow Workers.

Singer/songwriter Ani DiFranco pioneered the do-it-yourself (DIY) ethic of the '90s. Even when her albums started charting in the Top 100, she turned down major-label offers and released her work on her own Righteous Babe Records instead. DiFranco's personal punk- and funk-influenced folk music—and its often politically charged lyrics—has gained DiFranco a loyal fan base and made her DIY enterprise a smashing success.

Ani DiFranco

DiFranco started singing and playing acoustic guitar in bars around her hometown before she was 10; by 15, she was writing her own songs—as well as living on her own. In 1990 she started Righteous Babe in order to produce her first album, which she sold from the trunk of her car while touring the country's colleges. Proudly feminist and openly bisexual, the singer soon gained a devoted, primarily female fan base and had cracked the Top 100 by her eighth release, Dilate (#87, 1996). At this point, Righteous Babe—which by now had moved operations from DiFranco's living room to an actual office space—had sold 200,000 copies of her releases. By 1999, its sales equaled 2 million, including two Top 30 releases—Little Plastic Castle (#22, 1998) and Up Up Up Up Up Up (#29, 1999). To the Teeth (#76) featured appearances by Prince and Maceo Parker. She has also collaborated with activist folksinger Utah Phillips on two albums and produced a recording by Janis Ian.

Digable Planets

Formed 1989, New York, NY

Butterfly (b. Ishmael Butler, July 3, 1969, Seattle, WA), voc.; Ladybug (b. Katrina Lust), voc.; Squibble the Termite (b. Michael Gabredikan), DJ.
1992—(-Lust; -Gabredikan; + Doodlebug [b. Craig Irving, Feb. 20, 1967, Philadelphia, PA], voc.); + Ladybug, a.k.a. Mecca, [b. Mary Ann Vieira, July 25, 1973, Washington, DC], voc.)
1993—Reachin' (a new refutation of time and space) (Elektra)
1994—Blowout Comb.

Digable Planets were the most successful group to emerge from the 1993 "jazz rap" movement—in which middle-class black bohemians, acutely aware of their cultural heritage

Digable Planets: Doodlebug, Ladybug, Butterfly

and far less angry-sounding than inner-city hard-core rappers, revived a style that went back to the late-'60s Last Poets. Digable Planets briefly crossed over to the pop charts in spring 1993 with the single "Rebirth of Slick (Cool Like Dat)" (#15 pop, #8 R&B), which featured sampled horn riffs from a record by hard-bop jazz great Art Blakey and his Jazz Messengers.

The first version of the group met at City College of New York, according to founder Butterfly, the group name came from the belief that "each person is a planet," and the individual members' names from admiration for the selfless, community orientation of some insect species. Butterfly recruited Doodlebug from the New York City rap/poetry collective Dread Poets Society; Doodlebug brought along his friend Mecca, who became the second Ladybug. Butterfly's father had exposed him to Blue Note jazz as a youth; Doodlebug's father had been a member of the Black Panthers; Ladybug's parents were Brazilian.

Digable Planets emerged from a "hip bop" scene that had been fermenting since at least 1989, when Spike Lee had recruited Gang Starr, which was already mixing jazz samples into its records, to record "Jazz Thing" for his film Mo' Better Blues. Following such jazz-rap hybrids as A Tribe Called Quest and Us3, Digable Planets released the mellow Reachin' (15 pop, #5 R&B, 1993). In addition to the Blakey horns in "Rebirth of Slick," the album included samples from Sonny Rollins, Eddie Harris, the Last Poets, and the Crusaders (as well as K.C. and the Sunshine Band and Curtis Mayfield), and lyrics saluting jazz legends, existentialist authors, Nikki Giovanni, and Jimi Hendrix. Blowout Comb (#32 pop, #13 R&B) and its attendant singles failed to match the success of the debut. Although they have since performed at least one reunion gig, Digable Planets became inactive in the mid-'90s, and Doodlebug went solo under the name Cee Knowledge.

Digital Underground

Formed 1988, Oakland, CA

Shock-G/Humpty Hump (b. Greg Jacobs, Aug. 25, 1963, Queens, NY), voc.; Money B. (b. Ronald Brooks, Sep. 22, 1969, Oakland), voc.; DJ Fuze (b. David Scott, Syracuse, NY), DJ. 1990—Sex Packets (Tommy Boy) 1990—This Is an E.P. Release EP 1991—Sons of the P 1993—The Body-Hat Syndrome 1996—Future Rhythm (Critique) (+ Erika "Shay" Sulpacal, voc.; + Eric Baker, gtr.) 1998—Who Got the Gravy? (Jake/Interscope) (- DJ Fuze) 1999—Lost Files (Lil Butta). Raw Fusion (Money B. and DJ Fuze): 1991—Live From the Styleetron (Hollywood) 1994—Hoochiefied Funk. Money B. solo: 2000—Talkin' Dirty (Bobby Beats).

Digital Underground strives to be the Parliament/Funkadelic of rap. Like P-Funk's George Clinton, D.U. mastermind Shock-G wears colorful costumes onstage and assumes a variety of zany alter egos in the music, most memorably with the chronically congested character in Groucho glasses known as "Humpty Hump." Also like P-Funk, the group is an umbrella organization: With its core membership based in the Bay Area, Digital Underground uses a revolving-door crew of musicians from around the country, some of whom are pseudonymously credited.

Shock-G is the child of a television producer mother and computer executive father. As a boy, he was shuttled between Florida, New York, Pennsylvania, and California. In the late '70s he dropped out of high school and got involved in street life—pimping, selling drugs, and stealing cars. He eventually returned to school, earning his high school diploma and taking college courses in music. In 1987 he put together the first version of Digital Underground in Oakland and scored a #1 hit in the Netherlands with his self-released single, "Underwater Rimes."

In 1990 the current lineup released its debut album, Sex Packets (#24 pop, #8 R&B, 1990), which sold a million copies on the strength of a #11 pop single, "Humpty Dance," rapped by Shock-G's alter ego, Humpty Hump. The album was praised for its clever lyrics and inventive mixes. The gold followup, This Is an E.P. Release, reached #29 on the pop chart and featured rapper 2Pac (Tupac Shakur). Shakur went on to a successful, if troubled, career as a solo artist and actor [see entry] until his murder in 1996.

D.U.'s Sons of the P (#44 pop, #23 R&B, 1991) (P standing for P-Funk) featured George Clinton and included the single "Kiss You Back," which barely made the Top 40. The Body-Hat Syndrome (#79 pop, #16 R&B) continued their socio-political commentary of previous albums (i.e., proposing the use of a mind condom—a Body Hat—for protection from the power structure). After a three-year break, the group returned in 1996 with Future Rhythm (#113), which showed a continued preference for songs about sex, drugs, and politics but disappeared from the charts after only three weeks. The 1998 followup, Who Got the Gravy?, included such old-school guests as KRS-ONE, Biz Markie, and Big Punisher. In 2000 Money B. released the solo album Talkin' Dirty.

The Dillards

Formed 1962, Salem, MO

Rodney Dillard (b. May 18, 1942, Salem), voc., gtr., synth., Dobro; Doug Dillard (b. Mar. 6, 1937, Salem), banjo; Mitchell Jayne (b. May 7, 1930, Salem), bass; Dean Webb (b. Mar. 28, 1937, Independence, MO), mandolin.

1963—Back Porch Bluegrass (Elektra) 1964—Live . . . Almost! (+ Byron Berline [b. July 6, 1944, Caldwell, KS], fiddle) 1965—Pickin' and Fiddlin' (– D. Dillard; + Herb Pederson, banjo; – Berline) 1968—Wheatstraw Suite (– Berline) 1969—(+ Herb Pederson, banjo) 1970—(+ Paul York, drums) Copperfields 1972—(+ Pederson; + Billy Ray Latham, banjo) Roots and Branches (Anthem) 1973—Tribute to the American Duck (Poppy) 1974—(– Jayne; + Jeff Gilkinson, bass) 1976—Best of the Dillards 1977—The Dillards Versus Incredible L.A. Time Machine (Flying Fish) 1979—Mountain Rock (Crystal Clear); Decade Waltz (Flying Fish) 1980—Homecoming and Family Reunion 1985—Rodney Dillard at Silver Dollar City 1988—(group disbands) 1990—(group re-forms: R. Dillard; D. Dillard; Jayne; Webb) Let It Fly (Vanguard) 1992—Take Me Along for the Ride.

Dillard and Clark (Doug Dillard; Gene Clark; others): 1969—Fantastic Expedition (A&M) 1970—Through the Morning, Through the Night.

Doug Dillard and Band: 1968—The Banjo Album (Together) 1973—Dueling Banjos; You Don't Need a Reason to Sing

1976—Heaven (Flying Fish) 1979—Jack Rabbit! 1986—What's That? 1989—Heartbreak Hotel.
Dillard-Dillard-Dillard (Dillard brothers with John Hartford): 1976—Glitter Grass From the Nashwood Hollyville Strings (Flying Fish) 1980—Permanent Wave.
Herb Pederson solo: 1976—Southwest (Epic) 1977—Sandman 1984—Lonesome Feeling (Sugar Hill).

A bluegrass band from the Ozarks that went electric, the Dillards helped pave the way for country rock, the bluegrass revival and newgrass. The original quartet left Missouri for Hollywood in 1962. The Dillards were cast to play a hillbilly band, the Darling Family, on the Andy Griffith Show and were signed by Elektra. Their 1963 debut, Back Porch Bluegrass, included "Duelin' Banjos," which Enc Weissberg later popularized in the 1972 film Deliverance. Their repertoire grew to include Bob Dylan songs as well as traditional bluegrass, and on a 1965 tour with the Byrds the Dillards reportedly helped Roger McGuinn arrange vocal harmonies on Mr. Tambourine Man. By then their lineup included national fiddling champion Byron Berline.

In 1965 Doug Dillard left the Dillards; he played on Gene Clark With the Gosdin Brothers and in 1968 formed the Dillard-Clark Expedition. The Expedition's first album lineup included Bernie Leadon, later of the Flying Burrito Brothers and the Eagles; they toured with another ex-Byrd, drummer Michael Clarke, who then joined the Burrito Brothers. Berline joined the group for its second album, but the Expedition disbanded in 1969. Doug Dillard recorded solo albums in the early '70s and has continued to work as a studio musician. In 1976 the Dillard brothers recorded the first of two albums with their former neighbor John Hartford, and Doug continued to record with his band through the late '80s.

Meanwhile, Rodney maintained the Dillards band name and released increasingly electric albums with a shifting band through the '70s and '80s. By 1987, he was the sole remaining original member, and the next year, the group broke up, but not for long. In 1989 the original quartet reunited, an event captured on the video A Night in the Ozarks. Pederson produced their reunion effort, Let It Fly.

Dinosaur Jr

Formed 1984, Amherst, MA

J Mascis (b. Joseph D. Mascis, Dec. 10, 1965), gtr., voc., drums, bass; Lou Barlow (b. July 17, 1966, Dayton, OH), bass, voc., tapes; Murph (b. Emmett "Patrick" J. Murphy, Dec. 21, 1964), drums.

1985—Dinosaur (Homestead) 1987—You're Living All Over Me (SST) 1988—Bug 1989—Just Like Heaven EP (– Barlow; + various guests) 1991—The Wagon EP (Blanco y Negro, U.K.) 1991—Green Mind (Sire) 1992—(+ Mike Johnson [b. Michael Allen Johnson, Aug. 27, 1965], bass) Whatever's Cool With Me EP 1993—Where You Been 1994—(– Murph) Without a Sound 1997—Hand It Over 2000—The BBC Sessions (BBC, U.K.).

J Mascis solo: 1996—Martin + Me (Reprise/Warner) 2000—More Light (as J Mascis + the Fog) (Artemis).

Mike Johnson solo: 1994—Where Am I? (Up) 1996—Year of Mondays (TAG/Atlantic) 1998—I Feel Alright (Up).

Dinosaur Jr was the vehicle for J Mascis' grungy lead guitar style, ragged vocals, and inward-looking song lyrics—a combination owing as much to Neil Young as to the postpunk fury of such early-'80s alternative pioneers as Hüsker Dü.

From early on, Mascis was known for his lethargic, nontalkative demeanor and reclusive lifestyle, and has often been described as a "slacker." After his hardcore band Deep Wound broke up in 1983, Mascis and bassist Lou Barlow formed Dinosaur in the liberal environment of their hometown, the five-college city of Amherst, Massachusetts. At the time, Mascis played drums. When former All White Jury drummer Patrick "Murph" Murphy joined, Mascis moved to guitar. The band recorded one album for the East Coast independent label Homestead before signing to the West Coast independent SST in 1987. Meanwhile, the attention the band received for its growing cult status got it into legal hot water with another group that called itself the Dinosaurs. When that group (consisting of former members of such '60s bands as Jefferson Airplane and Country Joe and the Fish) sued Mascis and company were forced to change the name, they chose to simply add "Jr."

Bug included the underground smash single "Freak Scene" in 1989 the band scored another underground hit with an unlikely cover of the Cure's "Just Like Heaven." Barlow departed and concentrated on his band, Sebadoh (who later recorded on Sub Pop). Dinosaur Jr went through a revolving-door period upon landing its Sire contract, with temporary members including the Screaming Trees' Van Connor and Gumball's Don Fleming; Mascis, meanwhile, also sat in on drums with other bands, including hometown buddies Gobblehoof.

On Dinosaur Jr's major label debut, Green Mind, Mascis played nearly everything himself. The album was met with mixed reactions in underground circles, and the band found itself overshadowed on a subsequent tour by opening act Nirvana, then on the verge of a popular explosion. After new bassist Mike Johnson joined, the band put out an EP, Whatever's Cool With Me, and followed up with the full-length Where You Been (#50, 1993). That album was greeted with massive critical success. In 1993 Dinosaur Jr appeared on the summer's Lollapalooza Tour. Murph left in 1994, so Mascis was back to playing the drums, etc., himself on Without a Sound (#44, 1994), but, unfortunately, he concentrated on his singing rather than on his fretboard.

The next year, Mascis began a solo career, releasing Martin + Me. He also contributed two Brian Wilsonesque songs to the 1996 Allison Anders film Grace of My Heart. In 1996 Mascis played drums and bass on Johnson's understated, brooding second solo album, Year of Mondays. Another Dinosaur Jr album, Hand It Over, was released that same year. Despite a return to the band's noisy guitar attack, and the production help of My Bloody Valentine guitarist Kevin Shields, the album peaked at #188 on the pop album chart. Soon thereafter, the band split up. Mascis' new backing ensemble, the Fog, has included guitarist/bassist Ron Asheton of the Stooges and bassist Mike Watt of the Minutemen.

Dion and the Belmonts/Dion DiMucci

Formed 1958, Bronx, NY

Easily the suavest of New York City's late-'50s white teen idols, Dion DiMucci broke from that clean-cut pack with an engagingly cool, streetwise swagger epitomized by "The Wanderer." Through the years, he has boldly essayed new musical directions with mixed results, yet endured as an influence on rock singers ranging from Billy Joel to Lou Reed.

He started singing at age five and picked up a guitar a few years later. As a teenager he began singing on street-corners. He also began dabbling in drugs and eventually developed a heroin habit that he didn't kick until 1968. Shortly after dropping out of high school, Dion recorded a demo as a Valentine's Day present for his mother. It reached the producers of the Teen Club TV show out of Philadelphia, where Dion made his performing debut in 1954.

Recording his vocals separately over those of a backing group called the Timberlanes, he released "The Chosen Few," and in early 1958 Dion rounded up some neighborhood friends and dubbed them the Belmonts after Belmont Avenue, a street near the Bronx's Italian Arthur Avenue area. Their second single, "I Wonder Why," skirted the Top 20. "No One Knows" and "Don't Pity Me" followed, but the big break came in the spring of 1959, when "A Teenager in Love" (#5) became an international hit. The next year "Where or When" climbed to #3.

The group toured frequently, often on package tours with other stars; in February 1959 Dion passed up a ride on the chartered plane that later crashed, killing Buddy Holly, Ritchie Valens, and the Big Bopper. At the height of the group's success Dion felt confined, and his drug dependency worsened (When "Where or When" peaked, he was in a hospital detoxifying)

By early 1960 Dion was recording solo, backed by the uncredited Del-Satins. He hit the Top 10 with "Runaround Sue" (#1), "The Wanderer" (#2), "Lovers Who Wander" (#3), and "Little Diane" (#8) in 1962; and "Ruby Baby" (#2), "Drip Drop" (#6), and "Donna the Prima Donna" (#6) in 1963. By then he was recording for Columbia. In 1964 Dion went into near seclusion, releasing a string of unsuccessful covers ("Johnny B. Goode," "Spoonful"). He reappeared in 1965 for another round with the Belmonts (who'd remained active after 1960, achieving moderate success with "Tell Me Why" and "Come On Little Angel"). Together they released "Mr. Movin' Man" and "Berimbau" and an album for ABC.

In early 1968 he moved with his wife, Susan (the real "Runaround Sue," whom he married in 1963) and their daughter to Miami, where, with the help of his father-in-law, he finally kicked heroin. (The couple had two more daughters.) Later that year he recorded "Abraham, Martin and John," a #4 hit ballad tribute to Lincoln, King, and Kennedy; the flop followup was a cover of Jimi Hendrix's "Purple Haze."

Dion spent the next few years on the coffeehouse circuit. His Warner Bros. debut, Sit Down Old Friend, featured just his voice and acoustic guitar on eight songs. He also released the nonalbum single, the antidrug "Your Own Backyard." Both that folksy album and the lush Suite for Late Summer failed to sell, and Dion reunited with the Belmonts. The group played Madison Square Garden in mid-1972, as documented on the Reunion LP. Dion then briefly reentered the show-biz mainstream, frequently guesting on TV variety shows like Cher. The transfusion also helped the Belmonts, whose Cigars Acapella Candy sold respectably. In the mid-'70s Dion recorded with Phil Spector, but their collaboration, Born to Be With You, was released only in the U.K.

Dion attempted to update with Streetheart in 1976. He recorded five albums of Christian music; in 1988 he published his candid autobiography The Wanderer: Dion's Story. The next year he was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, and recorded Yo Frankie!, produced by Dave Edmunds and featuring such guests as Lou Reed, in whose songs Dion's influence had long been apparent. In the mid-'90s for some dates, he formed the Little Kings with Scott Kempner of the Dictators and Del-Lords, Mike Mesaros of the Smithereens, and Frank Funaro of the Del-Lords and Cracker. Déjà Nu is a collection of new songs written in the style of his earlier material and recorded, according to the Wanderer himself, "with the same techniques and equipment" used on his early classics. Dion continues to perform.

Canadian singer Celine Dion was one of the most commercially successful artists of the '90s. The 14th and youngest child of a musical family, Dion started singing in her parents' bar when she was five. At age 12, she sent a demo of a French song she'd written to manager Rene Angelil. Though Angelil ignored the recording until prompted by one of Dion's brothers, he devoted himself to managing Dion immediately upon hearing her sing, even mortgaging his house to pay for her first album.

Following some local and European success, Dion dedicated herself to achieving stardom in America. She reached her goal almost instantaneously. Her 1990 single "Where Does My Heart Beat Now" went to #4, her next Top 10 single, the theme song to the animated film Beauty and the Beast (a duet with Peabo Bryson), went to #9 and won her both a Grammy and an Oscar. She received two more Grammys (Best Pop Album and Album of the Year) for her first #1 album, Falling Into You. But she will perhaps be best remembered for her #1 single "My Heart Will Go On (Love Theme From Titanic)" from the Titanic soundtrack. It also earned an Oscar for Best Original Song. In 1994, at 26, Dion married her then-51-year-old manager; after Angelil was diagnosed with skin and throat cancer in 1999, Dion released a greatest-hits collection, All the Way . . . A Decade of Song (#1, 1999), and then temporarily retired to focus on her family. She gave birth to her first child, a son, in 2001.

British songwriter/vocalist/guitarist Mark Knopfler led Dire Straits to international success with a series of albums full of virtuoso-calibre musicianship and the finely developed songcraft that made some of his best story songs (such as "Romeo and Juliet") irresistible. A touch of wry humor ("Money for Nothing"), a lack of pretentiousness, and a knack for creating groove-driven songs also helped make Dire Straits one of the most successful groups of the mid- to late '80s.

The group's debut album introduced Knopfler's minor-key Dylanesque songs and his limpid mixture of J.J. Cale's and Albert King's guitar styles; the Dire Straits trademark is a dialogue between Knopfler's vocals and guitar lines, as heard in the group's first hit "Sultans of Swing" (#4, 1979).

Mark and David Knopfler, sons of an architect, both learned guitar in their teens. Mark became a rock critic at the Yorkshire Evening Post while working for an English degree. He then taught problem students at Loughton College and an adult extension course, worked in South London pub bands, and wrote some songs.

By early 1977 Mark was teaching literature part-time and jamming with David (then a social worker) and David's roommate, John Illsley, a timber broker who was pursuing a sociology degree at the University of London. In July 1977, after rehearsing with studio drummer Pick Withers, the group made a five-track demo tape that included "Sultans of Swing." Critic and DJ Charlie Gillett played "Sultans" on his BBC radio show, "Honky Tonkin," and listeners and record companies responded.

After opening for Talking Heads on a 1978 U.K. tour, the group spent 12 days and about $25,000 to record Dire Straits (#2, 1979), which eventually sold 3 million copies in the U.S. and approximately 11 million copies worldwide as "Sultans of Swing" became a hit (#4, 1979). Jerry Wexler and Barry Beckett produced the 8-million-selling (again, worldwide) Communicue (#11, 1979).

During sessions for Making Movies in July 1980, David Knopfler left, and Bruce Springsteen's E Street Band pianist Roy Bittan sat in. For the ensuing tour, Dire Straits added Hal Lindes and Alan Clark to play the longer selections from Making Movies (#19, 1980). It included the minor hit and MTV favorite "Skateaway" (#58, 1980). Love Over Gold (#19, 1982), with no singles-length cuts, went gold and topped the U.K. chart. Later, Withers departed and was replaced by ex-Rockpile drummer Terry Williams. Tommy Mandel also joined.

Following an EP (Twisting by the Pool, whose title track went to #14 U.K., 1983) and a live collection (Alchemy, which went to #3 U.K., 1984) came the group's biggest commercial success: the 26-million-selling, worldwide smash Brothers in Arms (#1 pop, #1 U.K., 1985). Featuring three hit singles: "Money for Nothing" (#1, 1985)—on which Sting makes a cameo appearance and sings "I want my MTV"—"Walk of Life" (#7, 1985), and "So Far Away" (#19, 1986). In 1987 Broth- ers in Arms passed the 3-million sales mark in the U.K., becoming one of the best-selling LPs in that nation's history. By then, Knopfler had had his hand in a number of outside projects, including producing Aztec Camera's Knife and Bob Dylan's Infidels, writing one of Tina Turner's comeback hits, "Private Dancer," and scoring a handful of films (Local Hero [1983], Cal [1984], Comfort and Joy [1984], The Princess Bride [1987], and Last Exit to Brooklyn [1989]). Knopfler's film music was anthologized on 1993's Screenplaying.

With Brothers still riding the charts on both sides of the Atlantic, Knopfler continued pursuing his own projects, appearing on Joan Armatrading's The Shouting Stage, coproducing Randy Newman's Land of Dreams, and recording with his idol, country guitar master Chet Atkins. (To date, Knopfler and Atkins have won three Grammys for their duet recordings.) In 1988, following appearances at Nelson Mandela's 70th Birthday Party concert at Wembley and Knopfler's touring with Eric Clapton, Dire Straits went on a two-year hiatus.

Knopfler returned to recording with Guy Fletcher and the Notting Hillbillies, a side project with Brendan Croker, Paul Franklin, Ed Bicknell, and Steve Phillips. The group's debut album, Missing . . . Presumed Having a Good Time, was a phenomenal hit in the U.K., where it entered the chart at #2. It was not nearly as successful in the U.S., peaking at #52, despite an appearance on Saturday Night Live. Meanwhile, Money for Nothing, a Dire Straits greatest-hits compilation, went platinum, peaking at #62 in the U.S. but topping the charts in 28 other countries.

Given the group's high profile in the mid-'80s and the six years that had elapsed between new albums, the platinum On Every Street (#12, 1991) was expected to generate great interest. That was not the case in the U.S., where their tour (captured on 1993's On the Night) was not a hot ticket and no hit single emerged. As critics have pointed out, however, Brothers in Arms was perhaps a fluke, a departure from the group's usual more laid-back style.

In 1996, a year after quietly closing the book on Dire Straits, Knopfler released his first non-soundtrack solo album, Golden Heart (#105). He returned to film scoring in 1998 with Wag the Dog (which spawned a single with the title track) and 1999's Metroland. In February of 2000, Knopfler made the Queen of England's New Year's Honors List and a month later was given an OBE (Order of the British Empire) medal, awarded for outstanding contributions to country, at Buckingham Palace. The year also found him working on the soundtrack to the Robert Duvall/Michael Keaton film Road to Glory. His second solo album proper, Sailing to Philadelphia, was released in 2000.

Disposable Heroes of HipHoprisy/Spearhead

Formed 1990, Oakland, CA

Michael Franti (b. Apr. 21, 1967, Oakland), voc.; Rono Tse (b. Dec. 8, 1966, Hong Kong), perc., electronics.

1992—Hypocrisy Is the Greatest Luxury (Island).
Spearhead: 1994—Home (Capitol) 1997—Chocolate Supa Highway 2001—Stay Human (Six Degrees).

This highly political rap group was formed by two ex-members of the Bay Area interracial punk-rock band the Beatnigs, who'd recorded for Dead Kennedys frontman Jello Biafra's Alternative Tentacles label. Rapper Michael Franti, who stands six-feet-six, had been a University of San Francisco basketball star; percussionist Rono Tse played his own homemade instruments (made from tire rims, grinders, chains, and fire extinguishers, as well as electronic drums) and danced during shows.

The Disposable Heroes formed after the 1989 Persian Gulf War, debuting on Island with the double-A-sided single "Television Is the Drug of the Nation"/"Winter of the Long Hot Summer." Their next single, "Language of Violence," was the first significant rap track to attack homophobia and set Franti apart from the mainstream of rappers, who either condemned homosexuality or let gay-bashing pass unremarked.

On its critically acclaimed debut album the group preached tolerance and attacked prejudice amidst a wide variety of musical settings, ranging from the jazzy to the industrial. The Disposable Heroes opened tours for U2, Public Enemy, and Arrested Development, and in summer 1991 they landed a spot on the first Lollapalooza package tour of alternative rock and rap groups. In 1993 the duo appeared with author William S. Burroughs on an album of his readings called Spare Ass Annie and Other Tales. At the end of the year the group announced an indefinite hiatus, with Franti to record a solo album, and Tse to produce Asian-flavored hip-hop through his Vitamin C production company. In 1994 Franti's new group Spearhead released Home, coproduced by Joe "The Butcher" Nicolo (Schoolly D, Kriss Kross).

Spearhead released a second album, Chocolate Supa Highway in 1997, and the group became one of the signature acts on the Smokin' Groove summer tours of the late '90s—a variation on the Lollapalooza formula that focused on alternative hip-hop acts. Franti also explored spoken-word performances and scoring for movies, and was one of 36 American artists who participated in a 1999 cultural-exchange festival in Havana, Cuba, organized by Music Bridges. Spearhead's Stay Human was influenced by Franti's work as an opponent of the death penalty.

Divinyls

Formed 1981, Sydney, Austral.

Christina Amphlett (b. Oct. 25, ca. 1960, Geelong, Victoria, Austral.), voc.; Mark McEntee (b. July 16, ca. 1961, Perth, Austral.), gtr.; Bjarre Ohlin, gtr., kybds.; Rick Grossman, bass; Richard Harvey, drums.

1982—Monkey Grip EP (WEA, Austral.) 1983—Desperate (Chrysalis) 1985—What a Life! 1988—Temperamental (- Ohlin; - Grossman; - Harvey) 1991—Divinyls (Virgin); Essential Divinyls (Chrysalis) 1996—Underworld (RCA).

Critically acclaimed upon their emergence as a sort of Australian answer to the Pretenders, Divinyls never hit it big in the U.S. until a decade later. By then the band consisted solely of the singer, Christina Amphlett, and her cowriter, guitarist Mark McEntee.

Amphlett left school at age 17 to travel alone to Europe, spending time in Paris and, in Barcelona, Spain, getting jailed for street singing. Back in Sydney, she joined a church choir ("purely "to develop the top range of my voice," she later said). During one choir performance her stool fell over and got tangled in her microphone chord, so she dragged the stool across the stage while singing. McEntee, who was in the audience that night, introduced himself, and the pair began writing songs together and soon formed a band. Amphlett gained instant notoriety with her snarling, nasal voice and trashy onstage look—dumpy schoolgirl uniforms worn over torn fishnet stockings—and her pouty-lipped, heavy-lidded makeup.

Monkey Grip, released in Australia only, contained several songs from a film of the same name in which Amphlett had a costarring role. Three songs from that EP—"Boys in Town," "Only Lonely," and "Elsie"—turned up on Desperate. Despite critical acclaim for Desperate, the band did not catch on commercially, finding the most success with What a Life! (#91, 1985), which yielded a minor hit single in "Pleasure and Pain" (#76, 1986).

Chrysalis dropped Divinyls after Temperamental, the band dissolved, and Amphlett and McEntee—who say their relationship has always been purely professional and platonic—moved to Paris, where they lived in the sleazy Pigalle area and wrote songs. Their demo tapes eventually led to the eponymous album (#15, 1991) that was their biggest hit, thanks to "I Touch Myself" (#4, 1991) a slick double-entendre ode to masturbation and/or romance. Amphlett and McEntee toured using hired musicians as backup. Record label entanglements contributed to the delay in releasing Underworld (1996), which featured tracks recorded with and produced by guitarist Charley Drayton (of Keith Richards' X-Pensive Winos).

Dixie Chicks

Formed 1989, Dallas, TX

Martie Seidel (b. Martha Elenor Erwin, Oct. 12, 1969, York, PA), fiddle, mandolin, voc.; Emily Robison (b. Emily Burns Erwin, Aug. 16, 1972, Pittsfield, MA), gtr., banjo, Dobro, voc.; Laura Lynch (b. Nov. 18, 1958, Dell City, TX), voc., bass, gtr.; Robin Lynn Macy (b. Nov. 27, 1958, Sunnyvale, CA), voc., gtr.

1990—Thank Heavens for Dale Evans (Crystal Clear Sound) 1992—Little Ol' Cowgirl (- Macy) 1993—Shouldn't a Told You That 1995—(- Lynch; + Natalie Maines [b. Oct. 14, 1974, Lubbock, TX], voc., gtr.) 1998—Wide Open Spaces (Monument/Sony) 1999—Fly.

Robin Macy with Domestic Science Club: 1993—Domestic Science Club (Discovery) 1996—Three Women (Crystal Clear Sound).

Robin Macy with Big Twang: 2000—Pastures of Plenty (Big Twang).

The Dixie Chicks were ready when success came knocking in the late '90s in the form of their two back-to-back, multi-platinum, Grammy-winning country albums Wide Open Spaces and Fly. Although singer Natalie Maines was relatively new to the group, sisters Martie Seidel and Emily Robison each had 10 years of Dixie Chicks touring and recording experience behind them. Martie and Emily Erwin were both born in the Northeast but moved with their parents and older sister to Dallas. Each began playing violin at an early age—Martie at five, Emily at seven—and soon after picked up mandolin and banjo, respectively. In 1984, they began performing with the teenage bluegrass band Blue Night Express, a five-year gig that led to opening spots for the likes of Ricky Skaggs and Martie's second-place finish at the 1987 national Old Time Fiddlers Convention. It was on the bluegrass circuit that the sisters met Robin Macy, a math teacher then playing in the Dallas-based group Danger in the Air, and Laura Lynch. Macy and Lynch were each a decade older than the Erwins, but they meshed musically and performed together for the first time on a downtown Dallas street corner in 1989. They returned the following day and were soon drawing big enough crowds to warrant a move to indoor clubs and a band name. "Dixie Chicks" was derived from the Little Feat song "Dixie Chicken."

In their Dale Evans-style cowgirl attire, the Dixie Chicks may have looked like a novelty act, but their seasoned musical chops and a tireless grassroots work ethic earned them considerable regional—and in select circles, national—acclaim. They made their Grand Ole Opry debut in 1991 and performed at President Bill Clinton's 1993 inauguration in Washington, DC. They recorded three independent albums together (1990's Thank Heavens for Dale Evans, 1992's Little Ol' Cowgirl, and 1993's Shouldn't a Told You That). Macy left after the second album over creative differences. She went on to record two albums with singers Sara Hickman and Patty Mitchell Lege as the Domestic Science Club, then moved to Kansas, where she joined the bluegrass group Big Twang.

The Dixie Chicks pressed on and landed a demo deal with Sony Nashville in 1995. It was then that the Erwin sisters decided that the sound (and success) they longed for would require a dramatic change in attitude, and saw their future potential in Lubbock-born Natalie Maines, the daughter of Lloyd Maines, an established Texas producer and veteran steel guitarist with the Joe Ely Band and Jerry Jeff Walker. After asking Lynch to step down, they brought Maines into the fold and spent another two years on the club circuit retooling their act, ditching the cowgirl Western swing shtick in favor of a more rock & roll, honky-tonk edge. Lynch wished them well, retired from music, and married a cattle rancher (and Texas State Lottery winner).

Released in early 1998, the Dixie Chicks' Wide Open Spaces marked a new beginning. The album topped the country chart, went to #4 on the pop chart, and spawned a handful of country radio hits, including three #1s: the title track, "You Were Mine," and "There's Your Trouble." Although the album featured only one Chicks composition (the ballad "You Were Mine"), the group members were widely praised for playing their own instruments on the album. The album sold more than 10 million copies, and the trio graduated from honky-tonks to stadiums while touring with the George Strait Country Music Festival (and reaching an audience outside the country sphere as part of Sarah McLachlan's Lilith Fair). In May 1999, Emily married singer/songwriter Charlie Robison. That year both Maines and Seidel underwent divorces. (Maines married actor Adnan Pasdar in June 2000.)

In September 1999, with Wide Open Spaces still positioned at #3 on the country chart, the Dixie Chicks released Fly; it sold more than 300,000 copies its first week in stores, debuting at the top of both the pop and country charts. In addition to the Top 5 country hits "Cowboy Take Me Away" and "Without You," the album also featured the controversial gold single "Goodbye Earl," a comic Thelma & Louise-style domestic abuse revenge fantasy.

The Dixie Cups

Formed 1964, New Orleans, LA

Barbara Ann Hawkins (b. 1943, New Orleans), voc.; Rosa Lee Hawkins (b. 1946, New Orleans), voc.; Joan Marie Johnson (b. 1945, New Orleans), voc.

1964—Chapel of Love (Red Bird).

The Dixie Cups were a black girl group that hit the top of the chart in 1964 with "Chapel of Love," a song that producer Phil Spector (with Jeff Barry and Ellie Greenwich) had originally written for the Ronettes. The trio—the Hawkins sisters and their cousin—first sang together in the grade school chorus. By 1963 the three had decided to pursue a career in music, and they began singing locally as the Meltones. Within a year, Joe Jones, a successful singer in his own right (notably, the Top 5 1960 release "You Talk Too Much"), became their manager. He groomed them for five months and then took them to New York, where producers/songwriters Jerry Leiber and Mike Stoller signed them to their fledgling Red Bird Records.

Their initial release, "Chapel of Love," proved to be their biggest hit, although they enjoyed subsequent success with such efforts as "People Say" (#12, 1964), "You Should Have Seen the Way He Looked at Me" (#39, 1964), "Iko Iko" (#20, 1965; later a minor hit for Dr. John and the Belle-Stars) and "Little Bell" (#51, 1965), the last of their hits. Red Bird Records went under in 1966; the Dixie Cups then switched to ABC-Paramount and later temporarily retired from show business.

In 1974 the Hawkins sisters moved from New York back to New Orleans, where they pursued successful modeling careers. They resumed touring (with Dale Mickie replacing Johnson).

Dixie Dregs

Formed 1973, Florida

Steve Morse (b. July 28, 1954, Hamilton, OH), gtr.; Andy West

 1977—Free Fall (Capricorn) (– Davidowski; + Mark Parrish, kybds.) 1978—What If (– Parrish; + T Lavitz, kybds.)
 1979—Night of the Living Dregs 1980—Dregs of the Earth (Arista) (– Sloan; + Mark O'Conner [b.  Steve Morse Band: 1984—The Introduction (Elektra/Musician) 1985—Stand Up 1989—High Tension Wires (as Steve Morse solo) (MCA) 1991—Southern Steel 1992—Coast to Coast 1995—Structural Damage (Windham Hill) 1996—Stressfest 2000—Major Impacts (Magna Carta).
 T Lavitz solo: 1986—Storytime (Passport) 1987—From the West 1989—... And the Bad Habitz (Intima) 1991—Mood Swing (Nova) 1996—Gossip (Wild Cat).

A strictly instrumental band of virtuosos, the Dixie Dregs began as a jazz-rock fusion band modeled after the Mahavishnu Orchestra. They have since forged their own unique style of fusion, one that combines stunning technical prowess with flash, wit, and soul. A highlight of their 1992 live album, for example, found them sandwiching a history-of-rock medley that ranged from "Freebird" to "My Sharona" into their own "Take It Off the Top." They have been nominated for five Grammy Awards.

Steve Morse and Andy West had played together since they were 10th-grade classmates in Augusta, Georgia, putting together a conventional rock & roll band called Dixie Gnt. Dixie Grit broke up when Morse was accepted into the University of Miami's School of Music, although he didn't have a high school diploma (having been expelled after refusing to cut his hair). At Miami, he studied in the jazz department with Jaco Pastorius, Pat Metheny, and Narada Michael Walden. There he met Allen Sloan and Rod Morgenstein. Sloan was a classically trained violinist who had played with the Miami Philharmonic and only recently had become interested in pop music. Morgenstein was a jazz drummer. Morse, Sloan, and Morgenstein began playing together, and at Morse's urging West enrolled at the university and joined the group. Their first album, The Great Spectacular, was recorded and produced as a course project. Upon graduation in 1975, they moved to Augusta, and began their professional careers.

After the Dregs opened a Nashville show for Sea Level in 1976, Chuck Leavell persuaded Capricorn Records to sign them. Before the end of the year, Mark Parrish—an original member of Dixie Gnt—replaced Steve Davidowski. In turn he was replaced by T Lavitz in time for the Dregs' appearance at the 1978 Montreux Jazz Festival in Switzerland. Morse let the group's style become increasingly eclectic; Mark O'Conner (a three-time national champion fiddler) brought a more traditional old-time playing style. Industry Standard was the first Dregs (the group dropped the "Dixie" for Unsung Heroes) album to feature vocal performances; guest vocalists included Alex Ligertwood (Santana) and Doobie Brother Patrick Simmons.

After Industry Standard, the group members went their separate ways. Morse, acknowledged as one of the most important guitarists of the past two decades, released several albums with his Steve Morse Band, as well as one proper solo album. He also played with Kansas, appearing on Power (1986) and In the Spirit of Things (1988). He has been named Best Overall Guitarist five times in Guitar Player magazine's readers' poll. Morgenstein, who was a member of Morse's band, went on to join Winger [see entry]. Lavitz released his own solo albums and worked with a number of other groups, including Widespread Panic, the Bluesbusters, Jefferson Starship, and Billy Cobham's band. Lavitz and Morgenstein also play in Jazz Is Dead, whose two late-'90s albums feature fusion interpretations of Grateful Dead material.

The Dixie Hummingbirds reunited in 1992 for a series of shows that produced Bring 'Em Back Alive West, who was a computer programmer, did not join the reunion, and shortly after it began, Sloan returned to his work as an anesthesiologist. His replacement, Jerry Goodman, had belonged to the Mahavishnu Orchestra. West's replacement, Dave LaRue, is also from Morse's band. Full Circle and the Dixie Dregs' supporting tour were met with critical acclaim. Sloan returned to play alongside Goodman on 2000's California Screamin'.

The Dixie Hummingbirds

The Dixie Hummingbirds were the leading Southern black gospel quartet for over 50 years, a seminal force in the development of that genre and in the parallel development of soul music. Clyde McPhatter, Bobby Bland, and Jackie Wilson are only some of the singers influenced by lead Hummingbird Ira Tucker. Even James Brown's sex-machine calisthenics have some precedent in the Hummingbirds' fervid performances.

The quartet was founded by James Davis and became prominent in the Carolinas during the '30s, making its first record for Decca in 1939. That same year the group was joined by two singers from Spartanburg, South Carolina—Tucker, formerly of the Gospel Carriers, and William Bobo, a member of the Heavenly Gospel Singers—when it bettered the Carriers and the Heavenlies in a singing competition.

In 1942 the Hummingbirds moved to Philadelphia and began broadcasting regularly on radio and touring the Northeast gospel circuit. John Hammond began to book them into New York cafes and nightclubs beginning in 1942. In 1945 they began recording for the Apollo and Gotham labels, and in 1952 they signed with Peacock, recording such gospel classics as "Jesus Walked the Water," "In the Morning," and "I Just Can't Help It."

In the early '50s, the Hummingbirds became a sextet with the additions of second lead tenor James Walker and guitarist Howard Carroll, the great Claude Jeter of the Swan Silvertones also joined the group briefly during the '50s.

The Dixie Hummingbirds performed at the Newport Folk Festival in 1966. The '70s found them embracing contemporary pop styles with mixed results. They backed Paul Simon in the studio, and on their We Love You Like a Rock covered Simon's "Loves Me Like a Rock" and Stevie Wonder's "Jesus Children of America" (which featured Wonder's keyboards). "Loves Me Like a Rock" was awarded a Grammy for Best Gospel Performance in 1973. While William Bobo had died in 1976, and James L. Davis finally retired in 1984, Tucker and Walker kept the group going into the late '80s.

Willie Dixon

Born July 1, 1915, Vicksburg, MS; died Jan. 29, 1992, Burbank, CA
1970—I Am the Blues (Columbia) 1973—Willie Dixon—

Catalyst (Ovation) 1988—The Chess Box (Chess/MCA) 1988—Hidden Charms (Bug/Capitol) 1995—The Original Wang Dang Doodle (Chess).

Willie Dixon was an important link between the blues and rock & roll, and he wrote scores of blues classics in the '50s. Growing up in Mississippi, he composed poetry and sang in church before moving with his family to Chicago permanently in 1937. A big man (often weighing 250 pounds), the young Dixon won the city's Golden Gloves championship for his weight class in 1938. But his interest switched to music soon after, when he was introduced to the washtub bass. Dixon soon graduated to a four-string upright and later to a Fender electric. His walking bass lines played a major role in defining the postwar urban blues.

By the early '50s Dixon was selling his songs for $30 apiece and was thus cheated out of thousands of dollars in royalties. He was a prolific composer, and his catalogue includes "You Shook Me," "Little Red Rooster," "Back Door Man," "Bring It On Home," "I'm Your Hoochie Coochie Man," "The Seventh Son," "I Just Wanna Make Love to You," "Wang Dang Doodle," "You Can't Judge a Book by Its Cover," "Spoonful," "I Can't Quit You Baby," and others. They were covered by such rock bands as Led Zeppelin, the Doors, Foghat, Cream, the Allman Brothers, and many others.

Dixon's own recording career, which began in the early '50s, has been relatively unsuccessful. For a while he was the bass player in the house band at Chess Records and regularly backed Chuck Berry, Bo Diddley, Muddy Waters, and others, arranging and later producing them, in addition to Howlin' Wolf, Elmore James, Otis Rush, to name a few. In between takes he'd sell his own songs and act as the business intermediary between black artists and the Polish-born Chess brothers.

Dixon remained sporadically active, touring Europe (where he was revered) almost annually since 1960. He played some U.S. dates in 1975 and 1976 with his tour band the Chicago Blues All-Stars. The 1987 settlement of a long-running dispute with Led Zeppelin over the group's failure to credit Dixon as writer of "Whole Lotta Love" (which was largely based on his "You Need Love") led to his forming the Blues Heaven Foundation, a preservation society for blues music and culture that also worked to secure copyrights and royalties for other artists. His final recording, "Dustin' off the Bass," was included on Rob Wasserman's GRP album Trios (1994), and teamed him with Wasserman and former Chuck Berry drummer Al Duncan. One year after Dixon's death (he'd earlier lost part of his right leg to diabetes), Blues Heaven, with the help of John Mellencamp, managed to buy the original Chess Records studios in Chicago.

DMX

Born Earl Simmons, Dec. 18, ca. 1970, Baltimore, MD
1998—It's Dark and Hell Is Hot (Def Jam); Flesh of My Flesh, Blood of My Blood 1999—... And Then There Was X.

Hailing from the School Street Projects of Yonkers, New York, DMX (short for Dark Man X) became one of the most wildly successful hardcore rappers of the late '90s, crossing over to a mainstream rock audience with gritty, uncompromising lyrics that translated raw street drama into compellingly personal narratives which lived up to his name.

DMX's career began in 1992 with an abortive stint on Columbia, which failed to yield a release. Six years later he appeared on hits by Mic Geronimo, Mase, Onyx, and the Lox, as well as his own "Get at Me Dog" (#39 pop, #19 R&B). His debut album, It's Dark and Hell Is Hot, topped the pop and R&B charts upon its release in 1998. Summer tour plans were interrupted when DMX was arrested on rape charges filed by an exotic dancer. He posted bail and rejoined the tour, and was cleared of the charges in August. He then was cast in the gangsta rap drama Belly: the filmmaking debut of video director Hype Williams.

In early 1999 Flesh of My Flesh, Blood of My Blood reached #1 pop and R&B in its first week, marking the first time a recording artist had his first two albums top the charts within a single year. Despite his success—selling a combined 6 million copies of his first two albums—DMX was hounded by legal problems throughout the year, arrested at various times on weapons charges, as well as for obscenity and assault (as of this writing, the charges had not yet been brought before the courts). He was questioned in a Denver stabbing case, but not charged. In late 1999 DMX's third album, . . . And Then There Was X, was released, again debuting at #1. In 2001 DMX was incarcerated at the Erie County Correctional Facility for driving with a suspended license and possession of marijuana. He was allowed to leave jail briefly to attend the premiere of Exit: Wounds, in which he costarred with Steven Segal.

DNA/Arto Lindsay

Formed 1977, New York, NY

Arto Lindsay (b. May 28, 1953, Richmond, VA), gtr., voc.; Ikue Iie Mori (b. Dec. 17, 1953, Tokyo, Jap.), drums; Robin Crutchfield, kybds., voc.

1978—(- Crutchfield; + Tim Wright, bass, gtr.) 1982—A Taste of DNA (American Clavé) 1993—Last Live at CBGB's (Avant, Jap.).

Ambitious Lovers (Arto Lindsay, gtr., voc; Peter Scherer, kybds.): 1984—Envy (Editions EG) 1988—Greed (Virgin) 1991—Lust (Elektra).

Arto Lindsay solo: 1995—Arto Lindsay (Knitting Factory); Aggregates 1-26 1996—Subtle Body (Bar/None); Mundo Civilizado; Hyper Civilizado (Gramavision) 1998—Noon Chill (Bar/None) 1999—Prize (Righteous Babe).

Ikue Mori solo: 1992—Death Praxis (Tzadik) 1995—Hex Kitchen 1996—Garden 1997—Painted Desert (Avant, Jap.) 1998—B-side (Tzadik) 2000—One Hundred Aspects of the Moon.

DNA was a leader in New York's "no wave" movement. Radically challenging rock conventions, its tightly structured songs, some of them under 30 seconds long, used neither fixed rhythms nor standard harmonies, and the three instrumental parts were usually independent and clashing. Chief writer Arto Lindsay's untuned guitar—he became known as the "sultan of skronk"—was emblematic both of the band's aesthetic adventurousness and the "downtown" sensibility Lindsay carried on in his work after DNA's demise.

Lindsay arrived in New York in 1975, having spent most of his life in a Brazilian village where his missionary father had built a school. While working as a messenger for the Village Voice, he played guitar for the first time when he jammed with James Chance and other "no wave" pioneers in 1977. Out of those sessions emerged the Contortions (Chance's group), Teenage Jesus and the Jerks (Lydia Lunch), and Mars. Lindsay wrote lyrics for Mars and would have joined them as drummer had he not decided to form a band with Ikue Iie Mori and Robin Crutchfield. Mori had just that year arrived from Tokyo. Through Teenage Jesus she met Lindsay, whose unorthodox guitar playing inspired her to try the drums.

DNA debuted with a 1978 single, "Little Ants" b/w "You and You" on the Lust/Unlust label, shortly before contributing four tracks to the "no wave" compilation No New York produced by Brian Eno. At the end of 1978 Crutchfield left to form Dark Day and was replaced by Tim Wright, previously a member of Cleveland's Pere Ubu. Under his influence, DNA's music became even more turbulent and concise before the band broke up in 1981.

In addition to playing with DNA, each member worked with other musicians. Mori played violin, viola, and cello on John Gavanti, an inversion of Mozart's Don Giovanni featuring members of Mars. Wright played bass on David Byrne and Brian Eno's My Life in the Bush of Ghosts (1981).

Lindsay has achieved the largest measure of success. A founder of the "fake jazz" group the Lounge Lizards, he played with them until 1981. He also recorded with James Chance, Kip Hanrahan, and Seth Tillet. He has worked with the Toykillers and Ambitious Lovers; the latter, a duo with keyboardist Peter Scherer, released three albums titled after mortal sins and scored a minor dance hit with a 1991 cover of Jorge Ben's "Umbabarama."

Mainly, Lindsay's role has been that of an avant-garde presence. He played on Better an Old Demon Than a New God, a 1984 album presented by poet John Giorno that showcased musicians with literary leanings. In the late '80s, as curator of the Kitchen, a New York haven for experimentalism, he hosted a new-music series that featured jazz, rap, Latin, and industrial sounds. In 1992 he introduced a new band, Arto. With Melvin Gibbs on bass, Marc Ribot on guitar, Bernie Worrell on keyboards, and Lindsay on vocals and guitar, its sound ranged from psychedelic to Brazilian to funk to noise. Since 1996, his solo albums have fused bossa nova and electronic music; during the decade he also became one of the most celebrated producers on the Brazilian music scene.

Ikue Mori, oftentimes collaborating with experimentalists like Fred Frith and John Zorn, continued working throughout the '90s.

Dr. Dre: See N.W.A

Dr. Feelgood

Formed 1971, Canvey Island, Eng.

1975—Malpractice (Columbia) 1977—Sneakin' Suspicion (– Johnson; + John Mayo, gtr.) 1981—(– Mayo; + Johnny Guitar, gtr.) 1982—(– Sparks; – Martin; + Buzz Barwell, drums; + Pat McMullen, bass) 1983—(– McMullen; + Paul Mitchell; – Guitar; + Gordon Russell, gtr.; numerous personnel changes follow).

British R&B revivalist Dr. Feelgood was one of the leading bands of the British back-to-basics movement of the mid-'70s. Lee Brilleaux, John B. Sparks, and Wilko Johnson hailed from Canvey Island. They drifted around England and made the rounds of pub bands together and separately before forming Dr. Feelgood in 1971. Johnson brought in John Martin, previously a member of Finian's Rainbow. They took their name from a minor early-'60s British hit by Johnny Kidd and the Pirates (not the Aretha Franklin song of the same title) and assembled a repertoire of Johnson originals and standards by Willie Dixon, Bo Diddley, Huey "Piano" Smith, Leiber and Stoller, and other (mostly black) R&B and rock & roll patriarchs.

Dr. Feelgood signed a United Artists (U.K.) contract in 1974. Its acclaimed debut album, Down by the Jetty, was recorded in mono, most of it in one take, with piano and saxes courtesy of Brinsley Schwarz and Bob Andrews of the Schwarz group. A growing concert following and enthusiastic support from people like Pete Townshend boosted its second album, Malpractice into the U.K. Top 20 and a single, "She's a Wind Up," into the Top 40. Dr. Feelgood toured the United States in 1976 but never found a foothold. Malpractice and Sneakin' Suspicion were its only albums released here.

In 1977 Johnson left to form the Solid Senders, he later joined Ian Dury and the Blockheads. Henry McCullough stepped in for him on Dr. Feelgood's 1977 British tour, but John Mayo had replaced him by the time the group recorded Be Seeing You with producer Nick Lowe. "Milk and Alcohol" hit the British Top 10 in 1979 and "As Long as the Price Is Right" reached #40 later in the year.

By 1982 Brilleaux was the only original member left. He continued recording and touring with a succession of musicians. With his death from cancer at age 41, Dr. Feelgood was no more. Its last album, Down at the Doctor's, was recorded at Brilleaux's Dr. Feelgood Music Bar in Canvey Island, three months before he died.

Dr. Hook (and the Medicine Show)

Formed 1968, Union City, NJ

Ray Sawyer (b. Feb. 1, 1937, Chickasaw, AL), voc., gtr.; Dennis

Locorriere (b. June 13, 1949, Union City), voc., gtr.; William Francis (b. Jan. 16, 1942, Mobile, AL), kybds., perc.; George Cummings (b. July 28, 1938, Meridian, MS), pedal steel gtr.; John "Jay" David (b. Aug. 8, 1942, Union City), drums.

1971—Dr. Hook and the Medicine Show (Columbia) (+ Richard Elswit [b. July 6, 1945, New York, NY], gtr.; + Jance Garfat [b. Mar. 3, 1944, CA], bass) 1972—Sloppy Seconds 1973—Belly Up (– David; + John Wolters [d. June 16, 1997, San Francisco, CA], drums) 1974—Fried Face 1975—Ballad of Lucy Jordan; Bankrupt (Capitol) (– Cummings) 1976—A Little Bit More (+ Bob "Willard" Henke, gtr.) 1977—Makin' Love and Music; Street People (Columbia); Revisited 1978—Pleasure and Pain (Capitol) 1979—Sometimes You Win 1980—Greatest Hits; Rising (Casablanca) 1982—Players in the Dark.

Dr. Hook and the Medicine Show are slapstick purveyors of parody rock, whose "Sylvia's Mother" was taken straight by Top 40 listeners and became the first of 10 Top 40 hits in the '70s and '80s. The group began performing professionally in New Jersey doing cover versions. During those years, the two frontmen—ex-Jersey folkie Dennis Locorriere and Ray Sawyer, who wears an eyepatch (hence, Dr. Hook) since having lost an eye after a 1967 car crash—developed a repertoire spiced with off-color material.

Their manager, Ron Haffkine, discovered them while looking for backup musicians to perform Playboy cartoonist humorist, songwriter, and children's book author Shel Silverstein's material in the movie Who Is Harry Kellerman and Why Is He Saying All Those Terrible Things About Me? (1971). The group played "Last Morning" on the soundtrack and also appeared in the movie. After several months of rehearsal Dr. Hook went to California to record another batch of Silverstein's tunes. The group's debut LP featured "Sylvia's Mother" (#5, 1972), which sold 3.5 million copies worldwide but proved to be a mixed blessing. Its lilting style, a too-subtle parody of pop, left the public ill-prepared for the manic, unkempt group behind it. Sloppy Seconds was also written by Silverstein and gave the group another Top 10 hit, "The Cover of Rolling Stone" (#6, 1973), which took a satirical look at the rock culture—and landed Dr. Hook on the cover of ROLLING STONE. By the time of Belly Up, the band members were writing their own material, but with less success. By 1974 Dr. Hook had filed for bankruptcy and switched to Capitol. The group had hit in 1976 with Sam Cooke's "Only Sixteen" (#6) and "A Little Bit More" (#11). The next few years brought several more hits: "Sharing the Night Together" (#6, 1978), "When You're in Love with a Beautiful Woman" (#6, 1979), "Better Love Next Time" (#12, 1979), "Sexy Eyes" (#5, 1980), and "Baby Makes Her Blue Jeans Talk" (#25, 1982).

By late 1979 Dr. Hook had amassed 35 gold and platinum albums in Australia and Scandinavia where the group remained a popular attraction until its breakup in 1985. Three years later Sawyer (who'd recorded a solo country album in 1977) revived the name and has been touring the U.S. and overseas ever since. Drummer John Wolters died of liver cancer in 1997. Locorriere resurfaced in the late '80s as a backup singer on Randy Travis' Always & Forever. In 2000 his solo album was released in the U.K.

Dr. John

Born Malcolm "Mac" Rebennack, Nov. 20, 1942, New Orleans, LA
 1968—Gris-Gris (Atco) 1969—Babylon 1970—Remedies

 (Clean Cuts) 1983—The Brightest Smile in Town 1987—The Ultimate Dr. John (Warner Bros.) 1989—In a Sentimental Mood 1990—Bluesianna Triangle 1991—Bluesianna 2
 (Windham Hill); On a Mardi Gras Day (with Chris Barber) (Great Southern) 1992—Going Back to New Orleans 1993—Mos' Scocius: The Dr. John Anthology (Rhino) 1994—Television (GRP/MCA) 1995—Afterglow (Blue Thumb); The Very Best of Dr. John (Rhino) 1998—Anutha Zone (Pointblank/Virgin).

Combining New Orleans funk, glitter, and voodoo charm, pianist Dr. John was an energetic frontman in the early '70s ("Right Place, Wrong Time") and a behind-the-scenes mover before and since.

Rebennack got his first taste of show biz through his mother, a model who got young Malcolm's face on Ivory Soap boxes; his father ran a record store. By his early teens he was an accomplished pianist and guitarist. From hanging around his dad's store and at Cosimo Matassa's studio, he got to know local musicians.

By the mid-'50s he was doing session work with Professor Longhair, Frankie Ford, and Joe Tex. He also helped form the black artists' cooperative AFO (All for One) Records, and he was the first white man on the roster. By the start of the '60s he had graduated to producing and arranging sessions for others (Lee Allen, Red Tyler, Earl Palmer) and recording some on his own (notably 1959's "Storm Warning" on Rex Records). Rebennack's reputation was based on his guitar and keyboard playing, but a hand wound suffered in a 1961 barroom gunfight forced him to take up bass with a Dixieland band.

In the mid-'60s Rebennack moved to L.A. and became a session regular, notably for producer Phil Spector. He played in various unsuccessful, wildly named bands like the Zu Zu Band (with Jessie Hill) and Morgus and the Three Ghouls. He also developed an interest in voodoo, to which he had been introduced by a mystical voodoo artist named Prince Lala in the '50s at AFO. In 1968 Rebennack unveiled his new public persona of Dr. John Creaux the Night Tripper (later shortened to Dr. John) after a New Orleans crony, Ronnie Barron, decided not to front the act. With New Orleans associates (Hill as Dr. Poo Pah Doo and Harold Battiste as Dr. Battiste of Scorpio of bass clef), he recorded Gns-Gns for Atlantic in 1968. As indicated by the song titles—"I Walk on Gilded Splinters," "Gns Gns Gumbo Ya Ya," "Croker Courtbouillon"—it was a brew of traditional Creole chants, mystical imagery, and traces of psychedelia, an influence underscored by Reben-nack's onstage wardrobe (brightly colored robes, feathered headdresses, and a Mardi Gras-style retinue of dancers and singers).

Dr. John slowly acquired a loyal cult following, including Eric Clapton and Mick Jagger, who played on The Sun, Moon & Herbs. He moved to the more accessible regions of funk (backed by the Meters) on In the Right Place (#24, 1973). Produced by Allen Toussaint (who also played in Dr. John's band on a 1973 tour and who produced Desitively Bonnaroo) "Right Place, Wrong Time" (#9) was his biggest hit, followed a few months later by "Such a Night" (#42). In 1973 Dr. John also worked in Triumvirate, a short-lived trio with Mike Bloomfield and John Hammond Jr. (John Paul Hammond). He appeared in the Band's 1978 farewell concert film, The Last Waltz. In 1981 he released the first of several solo piano LPs, Dr. John Plays Mac Rebennack.

In the late '80s, Dr. John began reaching back to his New Orleans roots—while also subtly mainstreaming his appeal. His 1989 In a Sentimental Mood collected old blues and saloon standards, and earned him his first Grammy, for his duet with Rickie Lee Jones on "Makin' Whoopee!" Bluesianna Triangle detoured into jazz, with drummer Art Blakey and saxophonist David "Fathead" Newman, while Goin' Back to New Orleans—with a cast of New Orleans all-stars featuring Al Hirt, Pete Fountain, Danny Barker, Alvin "Red" Tyler, and the Neville Brothers—won him another Grammy. By that time his gruff bantone voice had become familiar to millions through a succession of TV commercial jingles. In 1991 rap group P.M. Dawn sampled from one of Dr. John's oldest tracks, "I Walk on Gilded Splinters"; two years later Beck sampled the same track for his folk-rap slacker anthem, "Loser." In 1993 Dr. John published his autobiography, Under a Hoodoo Moon. Anutha Zone (1998) features a range of guests, notably members of the UK space-rock band Spiritualized.

Bill Doggett

Born Feb. 6, 1916, Philadelphia, PA; died Nov. 13, 2000, New York, NY

N.A.—Everybody Dance to the Honky Tonk (King); Hot Doggett; A Salute to Ellington.

Pianist/organist Bill Doggett had a #2 hit in 1956 with the instrumental "Honky Tonk." He recorded for King beginning in 1952 and toured roadhouses throughout the decade with a band (including guitarist Billy Butler and saxophonist Clifford Scott, who later enjoyed moderate success as a solo act) that was renowned for its boogie-woogie groove.

Doggett had worked with several jazz bands in the '30s and '40s, including a stint with Louis Jordan's Tympani 5. He followed up "Honky Tonk" with "Slow Walk," which nearly cracked the Top 20 in late 1956 after Doggett's appearance on American Bandstand. Doggett continued to place singles on both the pop and R&B charts over the next five years and to record jazz with artists such as Illinois Jacquet.

Thomas Dolby

Born Thomas Morgan Robertson, Oct. 14, 1958, Cairo, Egypt
 1982—The Golden Age of Wireless (Capitol) 1983—Blinded by Science EP (EMI/Harvest) 1984—The Flat Earth 1988—Aliens Ate My Buick (EMI/Manhattan) 1992—Astronauts & Heretics (Giant) 1994—Retrospectacle (Capitol/EMI); Gate to the Mind's Eye (Giant).

Best known for his first hit, "She Blinded Me With Science," Thomas Robertson is the son of a prominent British archeologist. He got his "Dolby" nickname (after the British laboratory that created the noise-reduction system for audiotapes) from schoolmates impressed by his avid interest in electronics.

Dolby taught himself guitar, piano, and computer programming. After spending time singing in Parisian subways and playing cocktail piano in London clubs, Dolby built his own synthesizers and PA systems, which he used while working as a soundman for such British postpunk bands as the Fall and the Members. In 1979 he cofounded the Camera Club with Bruce Woolley; a year later he joined Lene Lovich's band and wrote her 1981 hit "New Toy." Dolby then played keyboards and synthesizer on Foreigner's 4, Joan Armatrading's Walk Under Ladders, Def Leppard's Pyromania, and Malcolm McLaren's Duck Rock. He also wrote and produced Whodini's "Magic's Wand," one of the first million-selling 12-inch rap singles.

Dolby's debut, The Golden Age of Wireless (#13, 1982), yielded a minor hit in "Europa and the Pirate Twins" (#67, 1983). The followup EP (#20, 1983) featured the comical synth-dance hit "She Blinded Me With Science" (#5, 1983), with guest vocals by British eccentric Magnus Pike, who also starred in the song's Dolby-directed video. In addition, Dolby directed Live Wireless, a long-form tour document, and the video for the manically funky "Hyperactive" (#62, 1984) from The Flat Earth (#35, 1984)—which also included a reverently gentle cover of Dan Hicks and His Hot Licks' "I Scare Myself."

As a producer, Dolby worked on George Clinton's Some of My Best Jokes Are Friends (1984), Joni Mitchell's Dog Eat Dog (1986), three albums for British band Prefab Sprout, and two tracks on Israeli singer Ofra Haza's Wind (1989). Dolby also composed and recorded film scores for Fever Pitch (1985), Gothic (1986), and Howard the Duck (1986). In 1986 Dolby Labs sued him for copyright infringement, eventually letting him use "Dolby" only with "Thomas."

In 1988 Dolby—living in L.A., married to actress Kathleen Beller (Kirby Colby of Dynasty), and backed by a full band—released Aliens Ate My Buick (#70, 1988), for which George Clinton cowrote the track "Hot Sauce." It failed to produce a hit single, as did 1992's Astronauts & Heretics, which featured such guests as Jerry Garcia and Bob Weir of the Grateful Dead, Eddie Van Halen, and Ofra Haza. Dolby formed the high-tech firm Headspace, which in 1993 introduced the interactive virtual-reality music program, The Virtual String Quartet. Along those lines, Dolby released Gate to the Mind's Eye in 1994, a soundtrack to a video compilation of computer graphics and animation. In 1999 Dolby launched a new concern, Beatnik, aimed at providing Web surfers with music remix technology they could use from their home computers.

Fats Domino

Born Antoine Domino, Feb. 26, 1928, New Orleans, LA
 1956—Fats Domino—Rock and Rollin' (Imperial); This Is Fats Domino 1957—Here Stands Fats Domino 1958—Fabulous Mr. D 1959—Let's Play Fats Domino 1960—Fats Domino Sings 1961—I Miss You So 1962—Twistin' the Stomp 1963—Just Domino 1966—Getaway With Fats Domino (ABC) 1968—Fats Is Back (Reprise) 1970—Fats 1972—Legendary Masters Series (United Artists) 1990—They Call Me the Fat Man—Antoine "Fats Domino": The Legendary Imperial Recordings (EMI) 1993—Christmas Is a Special Day (The Right Stuff/EMI).

With 65 million record sales to his credit, New Orleans singer and pianist Fats Domino outsold every '50s rock & roll pioneer except Elvis Presley. Born into a musical family, Antoine Domino began playing piano at nine and a year later was playing for pennies in honky-tonks like the Hideaway Club, where bandleader Bill Diamond accurately nicknamed him Fats. At 14 Domino quit school to work in a bedspring factory so he could play the bars at night. Soon he was playing alongside such New Orleans legends as Professor Longhair and Amos Milburn. He also heard the stride and boogie-woogie piano techniques of Fats Waller and Albert Ammons. He mastered the classic New Orleans R&B piano style—easy-rolling left-hand patterns anchoring right-hand arpeggios. By the age of 20 he was married and a father, had survived a near-fatal car crash, and had almost lost his hand in a factory accident.

In the mid-'40s Domino joined trumpeter Dave Bartholomew's band. It was soon apparent, however, that Domino was more than a sideman, and Bartholomew helped arrange his contract with Imperial and became his producer. Their first session in 1949 produced "The Fat Man," which eventually sold a million and whetted the national appetite for the "New Orleans sound." Domino and Bartholomew cowrote most of Domino's material.

By the time the rock & roll boom began in the mid-'50s, Fats was already an established R&B hitmaker ("Goin' Home," 1952; "Going to the River," 1953), his records regularly selling between half a million and a million copies apiece. His pounding piano style was easily adapted to the nascent rock sound, although he proved less personally magnetic than contemporaries like Elvis Presley, Chuck Berry, Jerry Lee Lewis, or Little Richard, all of whom recorded Domino material. Domino's big breakthrough came in mid-1955, when the Top 10 "Ain't That a Shame" (quickly covered by Pat Boone and revived in the late '70s by Cheap Trick) established his identity with white teenagers. For the next five years Domino struck solid gold with "I'm in Love Again" (#3), "Blueberry Hill" (#2), and "Blue Monday" (#5) in 1956; "I'm Walkin'" (#4, 1957); "Whole Lotta Lovin'" (#6, 1958); and many others. He eventually collected 23 gold singles. His last million-seller came in 1960 with "Walkin' to New Orleans." He left Imperial for ABC in 1963 and subsequently switched to Mercury, Warner Bros., Atlantic, and Broadmoor, all with less success.

In 1968 Domino revived public interest in his ongoing career with his rollicking cover of the Beatles' "Lady Madonna." The Beatles consistently sang the Fat Man's praises, noting that "Birthday" on The Beatles did little more than sort through the old Domino-Bartholomew bag of riffs and tricks. Through the mid-'70s Fats played six to eight months a year. In 1980 he performed at the Montreux Jazz Festival. Domino continues to record and tour periodically. In 1993 he released his first major-label album in 25 years, Christmas Is a Special Day, to critical acclaim but only middling sales. In 1998 he received a National Medal of the Arts from President Bill Clinton. He has lived for many years in a palatial home in New Orleans. Domino has eight children, all of whom have first names beginning with the letter A.

Lonnie Donegan

Born Anthony Donegan, Apr. 29, 1931, Glasgow, Scot. 1961—More Tops With Lonnie (Pye, U.K.) 1962—Golden Age of Donegan (Golden Guinea, U.K.) 1968—Showcase (Marble Arch, U.K.) 1969—Lonnie Donegan Rides Again 1978—Puttin' on the Style (United Artists, U.K.) 1989—Lonnie Donegan (LaserLight) 1994—More Than Pie in the Sky (Bear Family, Ger.).

Banjoist Lonnie Donegan was one of the first British artists to enter the American Top 20, and his 1956 success with "Rock Island Line" inspired a generation of young Britons in the late-'50s English skiffle craze. Anthony Donegan's father was a violinist in the National Scottish Orchestra, and by the age of 13 Donegan was playing the drums. At 17 he became a Dixieland jazz convert, switched to the guitar, and played in an amateur jazz band before entering Britain's National Service. He picked up the banjo while working as a drummer with the Wolverines Jazz Band. Once discharged he moved to London and became banjoist and guitarist with the Ken Colyer Jazz Band, which in 1952 recorded one of the first jazz discs cut in England. By then Donegan had adopted the name Lonnie, in honor of his idol Lonnie Johnson.

In 1953 Colyer's band was renamed Chris Barber's band, the following year they recorded New Orleans Joys, which contained a version of "Rock Island Line" featuring Donegan's vocals. It became an international sensation, selling 3 million and launching Donegan's solo career as the "King of Skiffle" and one of England's top entertainers of the late '50s. Donegan's followup, "Lost John," didn't crack the American Top 20; his only other U.S. hit was "Does Your Chewing Gum Lose Its Flavor (on the Bedpost Overnight)" in 1961. "Lost John" went to #2 on the U.K. chart, beginning Donegan's six-year domination of the English hit parade, during which he enjoyed 17 Top 10 hits. In lieu of a fan club he formed a folk music appreciation society Adam Faith (who later produced some of Donegan's sessions) and the nascent Beatles played at one of the society's 1958 membership drives in Liverpool. By 1963 Beatlemania had eclipsed skiffle, although Donegan continued to tour.

In 1974 Donegan toured the U.S. as an opening act for Tom Jones. He settled in Lake Tahoe and began hanging out on the fringe of the rock crowd. At a backstage party following a Wings concert in 1976, an impromptu jam with Faith, Elton John, Ringo Starr, and Leo Sayer led to the idea of an all-star Donegan reunion LP—Puttin' on the Style—which also featured Ron Wood, Rory Gallagher, Brian May of Queen, Albert Lee, Gary Brooker (Procol Harum), Mick Ralphs (Mott the Hoople, Bad Company), and other Donegan fans.

Donegan subsequently recorded two countryish albums, including one with Doug Kershaw. In 1981, the year he celebrated the silver anniversary of "Rock Island Line," he underwent heart surgery for chronic cardiac problems. Although a resident of California, Donegan continues to tour the U.K. regularly, where he is revered as the father of skiffle. In 2000 he received an MBE (Member of the Order of the British Empire).

Donovan

Born Donovan Leitch, May 10, 1946, Glasgow, Scot. 1965—Catch the Wind (Hickory); Fairytale 1966—Sunshine Superman (Epic) 1967—Mellow Yellow; For Little Ones; Wear Your Love Like Heaven; A Gift From a Flower to a Garden 1968—Donovan in Concert; The Hurdy Gurdy Man 1969—Donovan's Greatest Hits; Barabajagal 1970—Open Road 1973—Cosmic Wheels; Essence to Essence 1974—7-Tease

1976—Slow Down World 1977—Donovan (Arista) 1991—The Classics Live (Great Northern Arts) 1992—Troubadour: The Definitive Collection, 1964–1976 (Epic/Legacy) 1996—Sutras (American).

Though for many years in the '70s and '80s, Donovan's flowery philosophy was considered passé, his compositions ("Catch the Wind," "Sunshine Superman," "Season of the Witch," "Mellow Yellow") still stand as novel examples of folk-rock hippie mysticism.

Donovan Leitch grew up in the Gorbals section of Glasgow. His family moved to the outskirts of London when he was 10; at 15 he completed the British equivalent of secondary school and enrolled in college but stayed only a year. At age 18 he began recording his songs. Talent scouts from the British rock TV program Ready Steady Go heard the demos, and in early 1965 Donovan became a regular on the show. His debut single, "Catch the Wind," hit the Top 25 in mid-1965; like its followups—"Colours" and "Universal Soldier"—the song was almost entirely acoustic. Donovan made his U.S. performing debut at the 1965 Newport Folk Festival.

With producer Mickie Most (with whom he worked until 1969), he left Hickory for Epic. Folklite refrains and exotic instrumentation (sitar, flutes, cellos, harps) kept Donovan's singles in the Top 40. His biggest hit, "Sunshine Superman," hit #1 in 1966 on both sides of the Atlantic. "Mellow Yellow" quickly reached #2 later that year. Some claimed its lyrics referred to smoking banana peels, but Donovan later claimed the song's subject was an electric dildo. Subsequent hits included 1967's "Epistle to Dippy" (#19) and "There Is a Mountain" (#11). By the time of 1968's "Wear Your Love Like Heaven" (#23, later the ad jingle for Love cosmetics) and "Jennifer Juniper" (#26, written for Jenny Boyd, the future Mrs. Mick Fleetwood), Leitch's wardrobe had changed to love beads and flowing robes.

In 1967 Donovan traveled to India to study with the Mahanshi Mahesh Yogi. Shortly thereafter he publicly renounced all drug use and requested that his followers substitute meditation for getting stoned. A few more hits followed—"Hurdy Gurdy Man" (#5, 1968), "Atlantis" (#7, 1969), and "Goo Goo Barabajagal (Love Is Hot)" with the Jeff Beck Group (#36, 1969)—but after 1970 no one paid much attention.

After a period of seclusion in Ireland, Donovan starred in and wrote the music for the 1972 German film The Pied Piper. He also scored If It's Tuesday This Must Be Belgium, then a full-length animation feature, Tangled Details, and Franco Zeffirelli's Brother Sun, Sister Moon in 1973. Following his sparsely attended 1971 U.S. tour, Donovan didn't perform in public until 1974, when he completed 7-Tease a conceptual LP about a young hippie and his search for inner peace.

The next year, 7-Tease toured as a theatrical stage revue. In 1976 Donovan toured U.S. clubs in support of Slow Down World. He has published one book of poetry, Dry Songs and Scribbles. He essentially retired from recording, though he did release two albums in Germany. In 1983 Jerry Wexler produced Lady of the Stars.

Though Donovan sporadically performed in U.S. clubs beginning in the late '80s, his name seemed to appear most often in the U.S. press as a footnote in items about his children. Daughter Lone Skye became an actress; her film credits include River's Edge. Son Donovan Leitch Jr. was the "it" boy of 1993/94, a model, actor, and singer in his group Nancy Boy. In the early '90s, Happy Mondays helped rekindle a U.K. Donovan revival of sorts, and he toured there with them in 1992. Two years later he appeared at a memorial concert in England commemorating the 25th anniversary of Rolling Stone Brian Jones' death. (Donovan is married to one of Jones' former girlfriends, Linda Lawrence, and raised Jones' son Julian.)

In 1996 the 50-year-old attempted a comeback with the Rick Rubin-produced Sutras, which, as the title alludes, still held on to his '60s mysticism. But in the age of shock rock, this album of mellow pop failed to chart.

Fans of the Doobie Brothers' first incarnation as a California country-boogie band had little use for the band's second, even more popular sound: an intricate jazz-inflected white funk. Tom Johnston, who fronted the early Doobies, met John Hartman through Skip Spence of Moby Grape, a group Johnston and Hartman hoped to emulate. They first played together in the short-lived group Pud with bassist Gregg Murphy. When Pud disbanded in 1969, Hartman and Johnston began jamming with local semipro musician Dave Shogren and later with Pat Simmons. They built up an avid following among California Hell's Angels by playing open jam sessions on Sunday afternoons, and dubbed themselves the Doobie Brothers ("doobie" was then popular California slang for a marijuana cigarette).

Warner Bros. A&R man Ted Templeman signed them and produced all their albums through 1980. Their debut LP failed to expand their audience much beyond their local following. With the addition of Michael Hossack and Tiran Porter, the group recorded Toulouse Street, which established the formula for its first hits: a strong beat, high harmonies, and repetition of a single phrase like "Listen to the music." The second and third Doobies albums were both million-sellers, the latter certified double platinum and containing such hits as "Long Train Runnin'" (#8, 1973) and "China Grove" (#15, 1973).

The transformation of Steely Dan into a studio-based duo sent Jeff "Skunk" Baxter, who'd done session work on What Were Once Vices . . . into the Doobies full-time. "Black Water," originally a B side, became the group's first #1 in 1975. Johnston quit touring because of a stomach ailment and was replaced by another Steely Dan alumnus, Michael McDonald. Baxter and McDonald revamped the Doobies' old songs in concert, and McDonald wrote most of their new material, shifting the group toward its later amalgam of funk and pop. McDonald's burly tenor replaced high harmonies as the band's trademark. Johnston rejoined in 1976, but left the next year to try a solo career; he has made two solo albums. Everything You've Heard Is True and Still Feels Good.

The multimillion sales of Minute by Minute (#1, 1978) established McDonald as the clear leader of the band. He sang lead on the Doobies' other #1, "What a Fool Believes." After a 1978 tour of Japan, Baxter left to do session work; he has also produced albums by Livingston Taylor and Carla Thomas. Hartman quit the music business to tend to his California horse ranch. More than a year of auditions enlisted ex-Clover guitarist John McFee and former session drummer (America, Hank Williams Jr., Helen Reddy), Hugh McCracken. Sax player/vocalist Cornelius Bumpus, who'd been in a late version of Moby Grape, also joined. For a 1980 tour, the Doobies were clearly McDonald's backup band; that lineup included session drummer Andy Newmark. The group disbanded in fall 1982 after a farewell tour. Soon afterward McDonald (If That's What It Takes) and Simmons (Arcade) released their first solo LPs. Not surprisingly, McDonald's distinctive voice made him an instant star on his own (see entry).

In 1987 the Doobies reunited around Johnston for a series of concerts; two years later he, Simmons, Hartman, Porter, Hossack, and percussionist Bobby LaKind (formerly a Doobies lighting man) returned to the band's original sound with the gold Cycles (#17) and the Top 10 single "The Doctor." A 1991 release, Brotherhood didn't fare nearly as well, and after a tour, the group claimed to have called it a day. But in 1994, it undertook a major summer tour with a lineup of Johnston, Simmons, Hossack, Knudsen, and McFee. LaKind died of cancer in 1992. McFee joined the popular country group Southern Pacific, which included Stu Cook of Creedence Clearwater Revival. In 1996 the band released Rockin' Down the Highway: The Wildlife Concert, with proceeds going to the Wildlife Conservation Society, and in 1998 it joined the concert bill for Farm Aid. In 2000 the same lineup from the 1994 summer tour released the studio album Sibling Rivalry.

The Doors

Formed 1965, Los Angeles, CA

Jim Morrison (b. Dec. 8, 1943, Melbourne, FL; d. July 3, 1971, Paris, Fr.), voc.; Ray Manzarek (b. Feb. 12, 1935, Chicago, IL), kybds.; Robby Krieger (b. Jan. 8, 1946, Los Angeles), gtr.; John Densmore (b. Dec. 1, 1944, Los Angeles), drums.

The Doors: John Densmore, Robby Krieger, Ray Manzarek, Jim Morrison

Ray Manzarek solo: 1975—The Whole Thing Started With Rock & Roll Now It's Out of Control (Mercury); The Golden Scarab.

Sex, death, reptiles, charisma, and a unique variant of the electric blues gave the Doors an aura of profundity that not only survived but has grown during the 30 years since Jim Morrison's death. By themselves, Morrison's lyrics read like adolescent posturings, but with his sexually charged delivery. Ray Manzarek's dry organ, and Robby Krieger's jazzy guitar, they became eerie, powerful, almost shamanistic invocations that hinted at a familiarity with darker forces, and in Morrison's case, an obsession with excess and death. At its best, the Doors' music—"Light My Fire," "L.A. Woman"—has come to evoke a noirish view of '60s California that contrasts sharply with the era's prevailing folksy, trippy style.

Morrison and Manzarek, acquaintances from the UCLA Graduate School of Film, conceived the group at a 1965 meeting on a Southern California beach. After Morrison recited one of his poems, "Moonlight Drive," Manzarek—who had studied classical piano as a child and played in Rick and the Ravens, a UCLA blues band—suggested they collaborate on songs. Manzarek's brothers, Rick and Jim, served as guitarists until Manzarek met John Densmore, who brought in Robby Krieger; both had been members of the Psychedelic Rangers. Morrison christened the band the Doors, from William Blake via Aldous Huxley's book on mescaline, The Doors of Perception.

The Doors soon recorded a demo tape, and in the summer of 1966 they began working as the house band at the Whisky-a-Go-Go, a gig that ended four months later when they were fired for performing the explicitly Oedipal "The End," one of Morrison's many songs that included dramatic recitations. By then Jac Holzman of Elektra Records had been convinced by Arthur Lee of Love to sign the band.

An edited version of Krieger's "Light My Fire" from the Doors' debut album (#2, 1967) became a #1 hit in 1967, while "progressive" FM radio played (and analyzed) "The End." Morrison's image as the embodiment of dark psychological impulses was established quickly, even as he was being featured in such teen magazines as 16 Strange Days (#3, 1967) and Waiting for the Sun (#1, 1968) both included hit singles and became best-selling albums. Waiting for the Sun also marked the first appearance of Morrison's mythic alter ego, the Lizard King, in a poem printed inside the record jacket entitled "The Celebration of the Lizard King." Though part of the poem was used as lyrics for "Not to Touch the Earth," a complete "Celebration" didn't appear on record until Absolutely Live (#8, 1970).

It was impossible to tell whether Morrison's Lizard King persona was a parody of a pop star or simply inspired exhibitionism, but it earned him considerable notoriety. In December 1967 he was arrested for public obscenity at a concert in New Haven, and in August 1968 he was arrested for disorderly conduct aboard an airplane en route to Phoenix. Not until his March 1969 arrest in Miami for exhibiting "lewd and lascivious behavior by exposing his private parts and by simulating masturbation and oral copulation" onstage did Morrison's behavior adversely affect the band. Court proceedings kept the singer in Miami most of the year although the prosecution could produce neither eyewitnesses nor photos of Morrison performing the acts. Charges were dropped, but public furor (which inspired a short-lived Rally for Decency movement), concert promoters' fear of similar incidents, and Morrison's own mixed feelings about celebrity resulted in erratic concert schedules thereafter.

The Soft Parade (#6, 1969), far more elaborately produced than the Doors' other albums, met with a mixed reception from fans, but it too had a #3 hit single, "Touch Me." Morrison began to devote more attention to projects outside the band writing poetry, collaborating on a screenplay with poet Michael McClure, and directing a film, A Feast of Friends (he had also made films to accompany "Break On Through" and the 1968 single "The Unknown Soldier"). Simon & Schuster published The Lords and the New Creatures in 1971, an earlier book, An American Prayer, was privately printed in 1970 but not made widely available until 1978, when the surviving Doors regrouped and set Morrison's recitation of the poem to music. In 1989 Wilderness: The Lost Writings of Jim Morrison was published. Although Morrison expressed to friends and associates his wish to be remembered as a poet, overall his writings have found few fans among critics. By then some felt especially after "Touch Me," that the band had sold out, and Morrison's dangerous persona was more often ridiculed than not. Critic Lester Bangs once tagged him "Bozo Dionysus."

Soon after L.A. Woman (#9, 1971) was recorded, Morrison took an extended leave of absence from the group. Obviously physically and emotionally drained, he moved to Paris, where he hoped to write and where he and his wife, Pamela Courson Morrison, lived in seclusion. He died of heart failure in his bathtub in 1971 at age 27. Partly because news of his death was not made public until days after his burial in Paris Père-Lachaise cemetery, some still refuse to believe Morrison is dead. His wife, one of the few people who saw Morrison's corpse, died in Hollywood of a heroin overdose on April 25, 1974.

The Doors continued to record throughout 1973 as a trio, but after two albums it seemed they had exhausted the possibilities of a band without a commanding lead singer. Manzarek had hoped to reconstitute the group with Iggy Pop, whose avowed chief influence was Morrison, but plans fell through. After the Doors broke up, Manzarek recorded two solo albums, and one with a short-lived group called Nite City. He produced the first four albums by L.A.'s X, and in 1983 he collaborated with composer Philip Glass on a rock version of Carl Orff's modern cantata, Carmina Burana. Krieger and Densmore formed the Butts Band, which lasted three years and recorded two albums. In 1972 a Doors greatest-hits collection, Weird Scenes Inside the Gold Mine was released, hit #55, and went gold. Krieger released his first solo album in 1981 and toured in 1982.

Ironically, the group's best years began in 1980, nine years after Morrison's death. With the release of the Danny Sugerman-Jerry Hopkins biography of Morrison, No One Here Gets Out Alive, sales of the Doors' music and the already large Jim Morrison cult—spurred by his many admirers and imitators in new-wave bands—grew even more. Record sales for 1980 alone topped all previous figures; as one ROLLING STONE magazine cover line put it: "He's Hot, He's Sexy, He's Dead." And that was just the beginning. The 1983 release of Alive, She Cried, followed by MTV's airing of Doors videos, introduced Morrison and the band to a new generation, and Oliver Stone's 1991 film biography of the group, starring Val Kilmer as Morrison, was a critical and commercial success. The group was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1993. Pearl Jam's Eddie Vedder filled in for Morrison for the Doors' performance at the ceremonies.

The Morrison cult continues to grow, particularly among the young. In 1990 his graffiti-covered headstone was stolen, in 1993, on what would have been his 50th birthday, hundreds of mourners—many not even born before he died—traveled from around the world to pay tribute. Because of the destruction these visitors often wreak on the cemetery during their pilgrimages, many Parisians petitioned to move Morrison's grave when its 30-year lease expired in 2001; French officials, however, opted to leave Morrison's remains in their resting place.

A box set with material chosen by the band was released in 1997. Emphasizing live (the set starts off with the notorious version of "Five to One" recorded at the March '69 Miami concert) and lesser-known tracks ("Albinoni's Adagio in G Minor," a 25-minute free-form jam called "Rock Is Dead"), the four-disc set includes "Orange County Suite," a "Free as a Bird"-style song—i.e., new instrumental tracks were dubbed onto an old Morrison vocal. His vocals were resurrected yet again in 2000, when Fatboy Slim sampled Morrison's reading of "Bird of Prey" for a track on his album

Halfway Between the Gutter and the Stars. That same year, VH1 taped an episode of its Storytellers series in which the Cult's Ian Astbury, Creed singer Scott Stapp, Stone Temple Pilot's Scott Weiland, Days of the New frontman Travis Meeks, and Perry Farrell took turns covering Doors songs. The singers were backed by the surviving members of the Doors; it was the first time the three had played together since their induction into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. The episode aired around the same time Elektra released Stoned Immaculate: The Music of the Doors, which featured Krieger, Manzarek, and Densmore participating in their own tribute album.

Capitalizing on the continual interest in the band, the Doors launched an Internet-based label, Bright Midnight Records, which released The Bright Midnight Sampler at the end of 2000. The Doors Live in Detroit and No One Here Gets Out Alive—a radio interview with the remaining Doors members that originally aired in 1980—followed in 2001.

Lee Dorsey

Born Dec. 24, 1924, New Orleans, LA; died Dec. 1, 1986, New Orleans

1966—The New Lee Dorsey (Amy) 1970—Yes We Can (Polydor) 1978—Night People (ABC) 1985—Holy Cow! (Arista).

New Orleans singer Lee Dorsey's dry voice fronted Allen Toussaint's songs ("Working in a Coal Mine," "Holy Cow") for over a decade. Dorsey had been a boxer and a Marine before signing with the Fury label at the start of the '60s. In late 1961 "Ya Ya" (later covered by John Lennon and others) hit #7. "Do Re Mi" did well (#27) three months later, but Dorsey's promising start was cut short by the collapse of his record company. He met Toussaint, who put him back on the charts in late 1965 with "Ride Your Pony," a moderate hit. The next year marked the zenith of Dorsey's career. His Amy Records releases included "Get Out of My Life Woman", the loping Top 10 smash "Working in a Coal Mine" (a minor hit for Devo in 1981); and "Holy Cow" (later covered by the Band on Moondog Matinee), which rose to #23. Dorsey had two minor hits in 1967 ("My Old Car," "Go Go Girl"), then faded from view.

In 1969 he had another minor hit, "Everything I Do Gonna Be Funky." The following year Dorsey and Toussaint recorded Yes We Can ("Yes We Can Can") was later a hit for the Pointer Sisters) for Polydor Records. Dorsey remained active—mostly in New Orleans—throughout the '70s and made a guest appearance on the debut album by Southside Johnny and the Asbury Jukes. He signed with ABC Records in December 1977, and Toussaint wrote and produced all the songs on 1978's Night People. But ABC was sold, and Dorsey again found himself professionally adrift. In 1980 the Clash hired him to open a U.S. tour, and in 1985—and despite failing health—he performed at the annual Jazz and Heritage Festival in New Orleans. He died approximately a year and a half later after a battle with emphysema.

Doug E. Fresh

Born Douglas Davis, Sep. 17, 1966, New York, NY
 1986—Oh, My God! (Reality) 1988—The World's Greatest Entertainer 1989—Summertime EP 1992—Doin' What I Gotta Do (Bust It) 1995—Play (Gee Street) 1996—Light (Alright) EP.

Doug E. Fresh's claim to fame as the "original human beat box" precedes his musical reputation. His vocal simulation of drums, computer blips, and telephone ringing briefly encouraged a few other rappers in the mid-'80s; by the '90s the technique had become a dated novelty.

Doug Davis' initial version of Doug E. Fresh and the Get Fresh Crew consisted of Ricky D. (who soon left to chart his own career as Slick Rick [see entry]) and the double-DJ team of Barry Bee and Chill Will. But Rick stayed long enough to appear on the group's first smash single, "The Show" (#4 R&B), in 1985, before the debut album was released. By the time Oh, My God! came out the next year, Davis had found religion. Subsequent singles failed to catch fire as "The Show" had, although "All the Way to Heaven" went to #19 R&B. "Lovin' Ev'ry Minute of It" reached only #38, and "Play This Only at Night" failed even to make it into the Top 40. Doug E. Fresh scored a minor comeback in 1988 with "Keep Risin' to the Top" (#17 R&B), from The World's Greatest Entertainer.

While Doug E. Fresh was no longer seen as a cutting edge hip-hop artist in the era of gangsta rap, his albums at least continued to land on the nether reaches of the R&B chart: 1992's Doin' What I Gotta Do made it to #47, and 1995's Play reached #81. By the end of the '90s, the old-school rapper was recruited into a traveling roadshow headed by Prince. Doug E. Fresh closed the decade by appearing on one of Prince's many timely new renditions of his "1999."

Carl Douglas

Born Jamaica
 1974—Kung Fu Fighting and Other Great Love Songs (20th Century-Fox) 1995—Kung Fu Fighting: The Best of Carl Douglas (Hot) 2000—Soul of the Kung Fu Fighter (Castle).

A 4,000-year-old Chinese martial art and a reggae-tinged disco beat provided Carl Douglas the inspiration for his gold hit record, "Kung Fu Fighting." Douglas, a Jamaican raised in the United States and England, got into the record business while studying engineering in London in the early '60s.

His British-based career as a singer and composer was undistinguished (the soundtrack to the 1972 movie Embassy was his major accomplishment) until he cut "Kung Fu Fighting." The song hit first in England, where it made #1 in August 1974. By October it had reached that position on American R&B charts, soon hitting #1 on the pop charts too. It inspired a dance step, the Kung Fu. Douglas appeared only once more on American charts—with a followup, "Dance the Kung Fu," in 1975 (#48 pop, #8 R&B)—but he continued to have hits in England, where "Run Back" made the Top 30 in 1977. Since then, little has been heard from Douglas. "Kung Fu Fighting" was covered in concert by Robyn Hitchcock and the Egyptians in 1993.

The Dovells

Formed 1959, Philadelphia, PA
 Original lineup: Len Barry (b. Leonard Borisoff, Dec. 6, 1942, Philadelphia), lead voc.; Arnie Satin (b. Arnie Silver, May 11, 1943), baritone voc.; Jerry Summers (b. Jerry Gross, Dec. 29, 1942), first tenor voc.; Mike Dennis (b. Mike Freda, June 3, 1943), second tenor voc.; Danny Brooks (b. John Mealey, Apr. 1, 1942; d. early 1970s), bass voc.; Mark Stevens (b. Mark Gordeisky), tenor voc.
 1961—Bristol Stomp (Parkway) 1962—All the Hits for Your Hully Gully Party 1963—You Can't Sit Down; Biggest Hits (Wyncote).

The Dovells were an early-'60s white doo-wop group, formed by students of Philadelphia's Overbrook High School (thus, their first name, the Brooktones). As the Dovells, the group's string of dance hits began in late 1961 with the #2 hit, "Bristol Stomp." Their 1962 hits included "Do the New Continental" (#37), "Bristol Twistin' Annie" (#27), and "Hully Gully Baby" (#25). They reached #3 in 1963 with "You Can't Sit Down." But subsequent releases on Cameo Parkway went nowhere. In their heyday, the Dovells frequently toured as part of Dick Clark's road revue.

In 1965 lead singer Len Barry had several hits, the biggest being "1-2-3," produced by Leon Huff. Barry was known for his wild, manic stage manner, modeled after James Brown's. When the hits stopped coming, he toned down his style and hit the supper-club circuit. The Dovells continued to tour and record through 1974. The 1968 novelty hit, "Here Comes the Judge," was recorded by Dennis and Summers, with a female lead singer, as the Magistrates. Stevens, Summers, and various singers continue to perform as the Dovells. In the '90s they appeared at both of President Bill Clinton's inaugural balls, joined by Clinton himself on sax. The Dovells reunited with Barry twice in 1991.

Nick Drake

Born June 18, 1948, Burma; died Nov. 25, 1974, Birmingham, Eng.
 1969—Five Leaves Left (Island) 1970—Bryter Layter 1972—Pink Moon 1979—Fruit Tree: The Complete Works of Nick Drake 1994—Way to Blue.

Since Nick Drake's death, his eerie, jazz-tinged folk music has had an ever-growing cult following. Born to British parents, Drake spent his first two years on the Indian subcontinent before moving to the English village of Tanworth-in-Arden. He played saxophone and clarinet in school but turned to the guitar at age 16. Two years later he began writing his own songs. He was a student at Cambridge University in 1968, when Ashley Hutchings of Fairport Convention heard him performing at London's Roundhouse. Hutchings introduced him to Joe Boyd, who managed Fairport, John Martyn, and other leaders of the British folk revival. Boyd immediately signed Drake to Island Records and put him on Witchseason concert bills. In 1970 Elton John was hired as a session vocalist to record Drake's songs to use as demos to entice established singers to covet Drake's compositions.

Nick Drake

Drake was a shy, awkward performer and remained aloof from the public and press. By all accounts his isolation and confusion, results of severe mental illness that at times would leave him catatonic and requiring hospitalizations, grew more severe. By the end of 1970 he had stopped doing concerts. He lived for a short while in Paris at the behest of Françoise Hardy (who never released the recordings she made of his songs) and then settled in Hampstead, where he became increasingly reclusive, allowing the company of only his close friends John and Beverly Martyn. He recorded Pink Moon totally unaccompanied, submitted the tapes to Island by mail, and entered a psychiatric rest home. When he left the home months later, vowing never to sing another song, he got a job as a computer programmer. In 1973 he began writing songs again. Drake had recorded four when he died in bed at his parents' home in 1974, the victim of an overdose of antidepressant medication. Suicide was considered probable by the coroner, but Drake's friends and family disagreed. Fruit Tree is a box set containing his three albums plus the four songs recorded in 1973. In 2000 Drake's music reached a much larger audience than during his lifetime after Volkswagen used his "Pink Moon" in a car commercial, which greatly spurred sales of his recordings. This music also turned up on a few film soundtracks and became the subject of tributes performed by such artists as Duncan Sheik. Drake's original albums were remastered and repackaged on CD in late 2000.

The Dream Academy

Formed 1983, London, Eng.

Gilbert Gabriel (b. Nov. 16, 1956, Paddington, London), kybds.; Nick Laird-Clowes (b. Feb. 5, 1957, London), voc., gtr.; Kate St. John (b. Oct. 2, 1957, London), voc., oboe, sax.

1985—The Dream Academy (Warner Bros.) 1987—Remembrance Days (Reprise) 1990—A Different Kind of Weather.

Nick Laird-Clowes solo, as Trashmonk: 1999—Mona Lisa Overdrive (Creation).

Kate St. John solo: 1995—Indescribable Night (Gyroscope) 1997—Second Sight (Thirsty Ear).

Kate St. John with Channel Light Vessel: 1994—Automatic (Gyroscope) 1996—Excellent Spirits.

In the mid-'80s the Dream Academy was among a wave of British acts whose elegant, arty reexamination of psychedelic textures foreshadowed the retro-mania that would consume guitar rock a few years later. In fact, the Academy's self-titled debut album was produced by Pink Floyd's David Gilmour. That album's hit single, 1985's "Life in a Northern Town" (#7), was an unabashedly nostalgic ballad, littered with references to John F. Kennedy and the Beatles.

The three band members were all children of the '60s and had been inspired by what they viewed as pop music's textural eclecticism and daring during that decade's later part. But even as he dressed in velvet suits with Nehru collars, Academy singer/guitarist Nick Laird-Clowes—who shared songwriting duties with keyboardist Gilbert Gabriel—insisted that the band's delicate, diversely textured songs were more contemporary than some of its critics maintained. In any case, the trio released two more albums that generally echoed the first in terms of their arrangements and production values, but neither was commercially successful.

St. John later joined Van Morrison's touring revue and married American singer/songwriter Sid Griffin (ex-Long Ryders). She became a sought-after session musician for such artists as Julian Cope and Blur, formed an avant-garde instrumentalist collective with Roger Eno, among others, and recorded two solo albums in the late '90s. Gabriel formed the band the Color of Love; after releasing two singles under that name in the mid-'90s, the group started fresh with the moniker Futura. Laird-Clowes, who'd found spiritual enlightenment at a Tibetan Buddhist monastery in the Himalayas, dabbled in songwriting, cowriting a track with Gilmour for the 1994 Pink Floyd album The Division Bell. He returned to recording in the late '90s, having been signed to a six-album deal with England's Creation Records. His first release, Mona Lisa Overdrive, was released under the pseudonym Trashmonk in 1999. In addition, he successfully sued Dario G, who had sampled the "Life in a Northern Town" 's chorus on the 1998 dance hit "Sunchyme"; he won 80 percent of that song's royalties.

The Dream Syndicate/Steve Wynn

Steve Wynn (b. Feb. 21, 1960, Santa Monica, CA), gtr., voc.; Karl Precoda (b. ca. 1961), gtr.; Kendra Smith (b. Mar. 14, 1960, San Diego), bass; Dennis Duck (b. Mar. 25, 1953), drums.

1982—The Dream Syndicate EP (Down There); The Days of Wine and Roses (Ruby) 1983—Tell Me When It's Over EP (Rough Trade) (- Smith; + Dave Provost, bass) 1984—Medicine Show (A&M); This Is Not the New Dream Syndicate Album . . . Live! EP (- Precoda; + Paul Cutler [b. Aug. 5, 1954, Phoenix, AZ], gtr.; - Provost; + Mark Walton [b. Aug. 9, 1959, Fairfield, CA], bass) 1986—Out of the Grey (Big Time) 1987—50 in a 25 Zone EP 1988—Ghost Stories (Enigma) 1989—Live at Raji's (Restless) 1992—Tell Me When It's Over: The Best of Dream Syndicate (1982–1988) (Rhino) 1993—3 1/2. The Lost Tapes (1985–1988) (Normal/Atavistic) 1995—The Day Before Wine and Roses: Live at KPFF.

Steve Wynn solo: 1990—Kerosene Man (RNA/Rhino) 1992—Dazzling Display 1994—Fluorescent; Take Your Flunky and Dangle (Normal/Innerstate) 1996—Melting in the Dark (Zero Hour); The Suitcase Sessions (Normal, Ger.) 1998—Sweetness and Light (Zero Hour) 1999—My Midnight; Pick of the Litter (Glitterhouse, Ger.) 2001—Here Come the Miracles (Innerstate).

Steve Wynn with Danny and Dusty: 1985—The Lost Weekend (A&M).

Steve Wynn with Gutterball: 1993—Gutterball (Mute) 1995—Weasel (Brakeout/Energy); Turnyor Hedinkov (Normal).

Kendra Smith solo: 1992—Kendra Smith Presents the Guild of Temporal Adventures (Fiasco) 1995—Five Ways of Disappearing (4AD).

Kendra Smith with Opal: 1985—Northern Line EP (One Big Guitar) 1987—Happy Nightmare Baby (SST) 1989—Early Recordings (Rough Trade).

The Dream Syndicate put L.A.'s early-'80s "paisley underground" on the national music map. The group blended Steve Wynn's Dylanesque poetizing with a potpourri of '60s instrumental influences, including feedback-drenched psychedelia, a Velvet Underground drone, and flat-out, Stooges-like rock attacks.

Steve Wynn met Kendra Smith at the University of California's Davis campus in 1981. Within a year, the two moved to L.A. and formed the Dream Syndicate with Karl Precoda and Dennis Duck. The group's self-released debut EP attracted the attention of L.A.'s thriving underground music scene, but it was the full-length Days of Wine and Roses that earned the Syndicate a national following. By the time Medicine Show appeared on A&M in 1984, Smith had quit the band and Wynn had let his hair grow out and had the band sounding a lot closer to Jim Morrison than to the Velvets. The group's hometown supporters cried "sellout," but the album was highly praised in some corners for its continued commitment to rock & roll. The next year, Wynn recorded The Lost Weekend as part of Danny and Dusty, a side project with Dan Stuart of Green on Red.

The Dream Syndicate regrouped for its 1986 comeback, Out of the Grey, which moved closer to a Neil Young-inspired cow-punk sound. Among the new members was former 45 Grave guitarist Paul Cutler, whose fiery lead work and use of various kitchen utensils along the guitar strings brought new intensity to the band's stage show. Wynn and company went so far as to recruit former Young producer Elliot Mazer for their bare-bones followup, Ghost Stories: Live at Raji's, which was recorded in early 1989 at a favorite L.A. punk-rock dive, spelled the end of the Dream Syndicate.

Wynn immediately embarked on a solo career, recruiting a host of musicians to help out on his highly personal Kerosene Man, followed by the critically acclaimed Dazzling Display. In 1993 Wynn's garagey supergroup Gutterball (also featuring Johnny Hott and Bryan Harvey, formerly of House of Freaks; Stephen McCarthy, ex-Long Ryders; and Bob Rupe, formerly of the Silos) released its self-titled debut, but the next year Wynn returned to his solo work, and by 1995 had left L.A. for New York. His 1996 album Melting in the Dark was a hard-rocking collaboration with Boston's Come. And he was joined by an alt-rock all-star band (Hott, Come guitarist Chris Brokaw, Pere Ubu bassist Tony Maimone, keyboardist Joe McGinty of the Psychedelic Furs, among others) for 1999's My Midnight.

Meanwhile, Kendra Smith joined David Roback in Opal (which later evolved into Mazzy Star) long enough to appear on two EPs and 1987's Happy Nightmare Baby (SST). She then relocated to a solar-powered homestead in rural Northern California, and despite deep reservations with the music industry, she eventually released the acclaimed Five Ways of Disappearing, an atmospheric solo album built on haunting pump organ and acoustic guitar.

Interest in the Dream Syndicate continued in the '90s, with the release of two albums of unreleased tracks and a live radio performance. And in 1996 Out of the Grey was reissued by Normal/Atavistic with bonus tracks.

The Drifters/Clyde McPhatter

Formed 1953, New York, NY

Clyde McPhatter (b. Clyde Lensley McPhatter, Nov. 15, 1933, Durham, NC; d. June 13, 1972, Bronx, NY), lead voc.; David "Little David" Baughan (b. New York; d. 1970), tenor voc.; William Anderson, tenor voc.; David Baldwin, baritone voc.; James Johnson, bass voc.

The Drifters helped create soul music by bringing gospel-styled vocals to secular material. Literally scores of singers (like Clyde McPhatter and Ben E. King) worked with this durable institution. After McPhatter left Billy Ward and His Dominoes [see entry], Atlantic Records' Ahmet Ertegun encouraged the singer to put together his own vocal group. According to an early press release and rock lore, the Drifters' name came from the fact that the original members had drifted from one group to another. The truth is that several members of the first lineup were discovered by McPhatter singing with the Mount Lebanon Singers at the Mount Lebanon Church in Harlem. In fact, they chose to name themselves after a bird called the drifter. Clyde McPhatter, already known to the record-buying public, propelled the group to immediate success. He was among the first to apply the emotional fervency of gospel to pop songs about romance, a stylistic keystone in the creation of modern R&B and soul. At its peak, the first set of Drifters was an extremely popular and influential live act, not only for its stellar vocals but for its flashy choreography. After a string of hits—“Money Honey” (#1 R&B, 1953), later covered by Elvis Presley; “Such a Night” (#2 R&B, 1954); “Honey Love” (#21 pop, #1 R&B, 1954); “White Christmas” (#80 pop, #2 R&B, 1954); “Whatcha Gonna Do” (#2 R&B, 1955)—McPhatter was drafted into the army in late 1954.

Following McPhatter's departure, lead vocals fell briefly to “Little” David Baughan before Bill Pinkney discovered Johnny Moore singing in Cleveland. Although McPhatter and Ben E. King are most often recalled as the group's important lead singers, Moore proved the longest-lasting and enduring of the three vocalists. Moore-led singles of this period include “Hypnotized” and “Fools Fall in Love,” but they were not enough to buoy the flagging group. Other personnel changes occurred, hits became rarer, and Moore and Hughes were drafted in 1957. Group morale was at an all-time low, and so when manager George Treadwell, who owned the group's name, heard a young, new group called the Crowns at the Apollo Theatre one night, he fired the entire Drifters lineup and christened his discoverees the new Drifters.

This lineup, which featured three lead tenors and included Ben E. King, proved even more successful than the original group. The Drifters were assigned to producer/writers Mike Leiber and Jerry Stoller, and their first release, “There Goes My Baby,” was a #2 hit in 1959. The lushly produced song's style—incorporating orchestral strings, a gentle Latin rhythm, and King's yearning romantic lead—became the Drifters' calling card. King was featured on “This Magic Moment” (#16 pop, #4 R&B, 1960), “Save the Last Dance for Me” (#1 pop, #1 R&B, 1960), and “I Count the Tears” (#17 pop, #6 R&B, 1961), but shortly after “Save the Last Dance for Me” hit in October 1960, he left for a solo career [see entry].

Over the next two years, leads on Drifters hits would be split among Rudy Lewis (“Some Kind of Wonderful” [#32 pop, #6 R&B, 1961], “Please Stay” [#14 pop, #13 R&B, 1961], “Up on the Roof” [#5 pop, #4 R&B, 1962], and “On Broadway” [#9 pop, #7 R&B, 1963], Charlie Thomas (“Sweets for My Sweet” [#16 pop, #10 R&B, 1961]), and Johnny Moore (“I'll Take You Home” [#25 pop, #24 R&B, 1963] and “Under the Boardwalk” [#4 pop, #4 R&B, 1964]). During the two years following the recording of 1961's “Some Kind of Wonderful,” additional backing vocals on record were provided by a quartet consisting of Dionne and Dede Warwick, their aunt, Cissy Houston (mother of Whitney), and Dons Troy (of “Just One Look” fame). Lewis died suddenly in 1964; his last-released single was “Vaya con Dios.” From 1964 on, Moore dominated the Drifters' hits, which although produced by Bert Berns (as was “Under the Boardwalk”) retained the sound of the Leiber and Stoller hits and gave the group a consistency regardless of who was in the lineup. The Drifters kept placing R&B chart hits (“I've Got Sand in My Shoes,” “Saturday Night at the Movies”) through the '60s while playing the club circuit. Although the group never had another major U.S. hit after that, a reissue of their 1965 single “Come On Over to My Place” went to #9 in the UK., where the group has enjoyed a large, loyal following since 1960 when “Dance With Me” went to #17 there.

When the Drifters' Atlantic contract expired in 1972, Moore, with a new lineup, moved to England, where they signed with the Bell label and released a string of U.K. Top 10 hits: "Like Sister and Brother" (#7, 1973), "Kissin' in the Back Row of the Movies" (#2, 1974), "Down on the Beach Tonight" (#7, 1974), "There Goes My First Love" (#3, 1975), "Can I Take You Home Little Girl" (#10, 1975), and "You're More Than a Number in My Little Red Book" (#5, 1976).

At the same time, here in America and elsewhere in the world, any number of Drifters aggregations could be found performing in nightclubs. The group's many members have included at least one past or future Swallow, Carol Raven, Diamond, DuDropper, Turban, Ink Spot, Cadillac, Cleftone, Domino, Royal Joker, or Temptation. One version of the group was founded by Pinkney, included the Thrashers and Ferbee (of the '53-era group), and called itself the Original Drifters.

McPhatter emerged from his two years in the service in 1955 to relaunch his solo career. With Atlantic Records' full support, he quickly charted with a duet with Ruth Brown ("Love Has Joined Us Together" [#8, 1955]). His other hits included "Treasure of Love" (#16 pop, #1 R&B, 1956), "Without Love (There Is Nothing)" (#19 pop, #4 R&B, 1957), "Just to Hold My Hand" (#26 pop, #6 R&B, 1957), "A Lover's Question" (#6 pop, #1 R&B, 1958), "Come What May" (#3 R&B, 1958), "Since You've Been Gone" (#38 pop, #14 R&B, 1959), "Ta Ta" (#23 pop, #7 R&B, 1960), "Lover Please" (#7 pop, 1962), and the #1 R&B hit, "Long Lonely Nights" (1957).

Although McPhatter had a few more hits after leaving Atlantic, he never regained a commercial foothold after the mid-'60s. He lived in England for a couple of years in the late '60s, but in 1972 succumbed to a heart attack after years of alcoholism. He was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1987, the Drifters were inducted in 1988.

Duran Duran was one of several British New Romantic bands—that being a fashion-conscious merger of new wave and disco. The movement itself never really caught on in the U.S., but Duran Duran, thanks in part to provocative videos that soon became an MTV staple, quickly became one of the biggest acts of the mid-'80s, with nine Top 10 hits, three platinum albums, and a string of sold-out concert tours.

Named after a character in Roger Vadim's sex-kitten sci-fi movie Barbarella, Duran Duran began as Nick Rhodes, John Taylor, vocalist Stephen Duffy (who eventually went solo and formed the Lilac Time), bassist Simon Colley, and a drum machine. Following numerous lineup changes, Andy Taylor (none of the Taylors in the band are related) joined them when he answered an ad in Melody Maker. Simon Le Bon met the group through a friend of his who worked at Duran Duran's preferred hangout the Rum Runner, a club at which Rhodes had been a DJ. The band's debut single, "Planet Earth," was a hit in Europe in 1981; "Hungry Like the Wolf" (#3), "Rio" (#14), "Is There Something I Should Know" (#4), and "Union of the Snake" (#3) broke the U.S. charts in 1983. Lead singer Le Bon became a popular pinup boy among British and U.S. teens, and the group achieved notoriety for its videos, particularly Godley and Creme's "Girls on Film," which featured female models in various stages of undress. (Andy Warhol once remarked that he masturbated to Duran Duran videos.) The clip was banned by BBC-TV and, in the U.S., by MTV. Seven and the Ragged Tiger, which included the hits "New Moon on Monday" (#10, 1984) and "The Reflex" (#1, 1984), went to #1 in the U.K., hit #4 stateside, and was later certified double platinum.

The next album, the live Arena, also hit #4. It included a studio single "The Wild Boys" (#2, 1984) and a concert version of "Save a Prayer" (#16, 1985). In spring 1985 the group's title theme song to the James Bond film A View to a Kill became its second #1 hit. By then Duran Duran had become almost as familiar to readers of fashion magazines and society columns as to rock fans. Both Nick Rhodes (in 1984) and Simon Le Bon (in 1985) married models, and the latter made international news when his racing boat capsized in 1985. During interviews in the '90s, Duran Duran's members spoke frankly about their glory years being full of emotional turmoil, drug abuse, and a general loss of creative and financial control.

The strain took its toll, as during the year and a half that followed "A View to a Kill," John Taylor and Andy Taylor joined with singer Robert Palmer and Chic drummer Tony Thompson to form the Power Station, which had two of the biggest hits of spring 1985, "Some Like It Hot" (#6) and "Get It On" (#9), the latter a retreat of the T. Rex classic "Bang a Gong (Get It On)." Meanwhile, Rhodes, Le Bon, and Roger Taylor formed Arcadia, and in late 1985 had a #6 hit with "Election Day," which included narration by Grace Jones.

The followup single, "Goodbye Is Forever," peaked at #33, and the album, So Red the Rose (#23), was certified platinum.

That summer Duran Duran appeared together at the U.S. Live Aid concert, but did not release a new studio album until Notorious (#12), which arrived late in 1986. Earlier that year, Roger Taylor announced he was taking a year off from the group; he did not return until 2001. That spring Andy Taylor left to pursue a solo career; he had a Top 30 hit earlier in '86 with "Take It Easy." John Taylor's "I Do What I Do" was also a 1986 Top 30 single, but he remained with Duran Duran through 1996. Notorious spawned "Notorious" (#2, 1987) and "Skin Trade" (#39, 1987). Big Thing featured "I Don't Want Your Love" (#4, 1988) and "All She Wants Is" (#22, 1989).

Although Duran Duran continued to make interesting videos, its commercial hold started to slip. The greatest-hits Decade peaked at #67, and Liberty did not enter the Top 40 and contained no substantial hits. Duran Duran (#7, 1993), released after the addition of former Missing Persons guitarist Warren Cuccurullo, marked a comeback with the singles "Ordinary World" (#3, 1993) and "Come Undone" (#7, 1993).

The 1995 followup, Thank You (#19), an album of covers, included a stab at Grandmaster Flash and the Furious Five's "White Lines (Don't Do It)." The two groups joined forces for a performance on The Late Show With David Letterman. Roger Taylor guested on Duran Duran's version of Lou Reed's "Perfect Day." The next year John Taylor left to form the one-album, hard-rock supergroup Neurotic Outsiders with ex-Sex Pistols guitarist Steve Jones and members of Guns n' Roses. He bailed out on a Power Station reunion shortly before the project unveiled its 1997 sophomore album, Living in Fear. He subsequently resumed his solo career, appeared in films, and led a band called Terroristen.

Le Bon, Rhodes, and Cuccurullo completed 1997's Medazzaland (#58), which included the single "Electric Barbarella" (#52). The following year they parted ways with Capitol/EMI, their label of 18 years, and signed a multialbum deal with Hollywood Records. The first fruit of that union, Pop Trash, hit stores in spring 2000. Since its inception, Duran Duran has sold over 60 million records worldwide. It was announced in mid-2001 that the original lineup had reformed to record an album for a 2002 release.

Ian Dury

Born May 12, 1942, Upminster, Eng.; died Mar. 27, 2000, London, Eng.

1975—Handsome (Dawn, U.K.) 1977—New Boots and Panties!! (Stiff) 1978—Wotabunch (Warner Bros.) 1979—Do It Yourself (Stiff) 1980—Laughter 1981—Lord Upminster (Polydor); Juke Box Dury (Stiff) 1992—Sex & Drugs & Rock & Roll: The Best of Ian Dury and the Blockheads (Rhino); Bus Driver's Prayer & Other (Demon, U.K.) 1998—Mr. Love Pants (CNR).

Though his Cockney accent eluded American audiences, Ian Dury became a superstar in Great Britain with a good-natured mix of pop, funk, reggae, music hall, and general boisterousness.

Stricken by polio at the age of seven, Dury spent two years in the hospital and several more in a school for the physically disabled. He studied at the Royal College of Art and taught painting at the Canterbury Art College. In 1970 he formed his first group, Kilburn and the High Roads, a band specializing in '50s rock & roll spiced with bebop jazz. The High Roads established themselves on the pub circuit, and in 1973 Dury quit teaching.

The group's songs won the support of some influential British critics, among them Charlie Gillett, who became the High Roads' manager. They cut an album for Raft Records, a subsidiary of Warner Bros., but Warners blocked its release until 1978. They released an album on Dawn, a Pye label, before disbanding in 1975. Dury and High Roads pianist/guitarist Chaz Jankel continued to write songs together. Under Dury's name they recorded New Boots and Panties!! with session musicians and former High Roaders such as saxophonist Davey Payne. Then, invited to join the Live Stiffs package tour of Britain in the fall of 1977, Dury and Jankel assembled the Blockheads: Payne, bassist Norman Watt Roy, drummer Charley Charles, pianist Mickey Gallagher, and guitarist John Turnbull. New Boots eventually sold over a million copies worldwide, staying on the British chart for almost two years: "What a Waste" reached #9 in 1978, and a later single, "Hit Me With Your Rhythm Stick," hit #1.

In 1978 Arista released New Boots in America. Sales were unimpressive, and Arista dropped the contract. Back home, Do It Yourself entered the charts at #2 on its mid-1979 release, and "Reasons to Be Cheerful (Part 3)" went to #3. The Blockheads' 1979 tour of Britain included an appearance at the Concerts for Kampuchea. When the tour ended, Jankel left the band; he was replaced by Wilko Johnson, formerly of Dr. Feelgood. After signing with Polydor, Dury reunited with Jankel, who traveled with him to the Bahamas to record Lord Upminster with Sly Dunbar and Robbie Shakespeare. Included on that album was a single, "Spasticus Autisticus," written for the United Nations Year of the Disabled but rejected.

Dury recorded less frequently, turning his attention to acting and writing music for British television programs and commercials. He has acted on stage, on television, and in film (including in The Cook, the Thief, His Wife and Her Lover, 1989). With Gallagher he wrote Apples, a musical in which he also starred, and he also hosted the U.K. late-night program Metro.

In May 1998, as he celebrated his 56th birthday, Dury disclosed to the public that he had been battling colon cancer for several years. He gave countless interviews about his illness, aiming to offer hope to other cancer patients, and he also continued to make many appearances for UNICEF and a variety of other charities. He seemed to have renewed energy, and in 1998 the re-formed Blockheads released Mr. Love Pants and toured England for the first time since the early '80s. Dury died in March 2000 at the age of 57. Just six weeks before his death he had performed with the Blockheads at London's Palladium.

For over 40 years, Bob Dylan has remained the most influential American musician rock has ever produced and unquestionably the most important of the '60s. Inscrutable and unpredictable, Dylan has been both deified and denounced for every shift of interest, while whole schools of musicians took up his ideas. His lyrics—the first in rock to be seriously regarded as literature—became so well known that politicians from Jimmy Carter to Václav Havel have cited them as an influence. By personalizing folk songs, Dylan reinvented the singer/songwriter genre; by performing his allusive, poetic songs in his nasal, spontaneous vocal style with an electric band, he enlarged pop's range and vocabulary while creating a widely imitated sound. By recording with Nashville veterans, he reconnected rock and country, hinting at the country rock of the '70s. In the '80s and '90s, although he has at times seemed to flounder, he still has the ability to challenge, infuriate, and surprise listeners.

Robert Zimmerman's family moved to Hibbing, Minnesota, from Duluth when he was six. After taking up guitar and harmonica, he formed the Golden Chords while he was a freshman in high school. He enrolled at the arts college of the University of Minnesota in 1959; during his three semesters there, he began to perform solo at coffeehouses as Bob Dylan (after Dylan Thomas; he legally changed his name in August 1962).

Dylan moved to New York City in January 1961, saying he wanted to meet Woody Guthrie, who was by then hospitalized with Huntington's chorea. Dylan visited his idol frequently. That April he played New York's Gerdes' Folk City as the opener for bluesman John Lee Hooker, with a set of Guthrie-style ballads and his own lyrics set to traditional tunes. A New York Times review by Robert Shelton alerted A&R man John Hammond, who signed Dylan to Columbia and produced his first album.

Although Bob Dylan included only two originals ("Talking New York" and "Song to Woody"), Dylan stirred up the Greenwich Village folk scene with his caustic humor and gift for writing deeply resonant topical songs. The Freewheelin' Bob Dylan (#22, 1963) included the soon-to-be folk standard "Blowin' in the Wind" (a hit for Peter, Paul and Mary), "A Hard Rain's a-Gonna Fall," and "Masters of War," protest songs on a par with Guthrie's and Pete Seeger's. Joan Baez, already established as a "protest singer," recorded Dylan's songs and brought him on tour, in summer 1963 they became lovers.

By 1964, Dylan was playing 200 concerts a year. The Times They Are a-Changin' (#20, 1964) mixed protest songs ("With God on Our Side") and more personal lyrics ("One Too Many Mornings"). He met the Beatles at Kennedy Airport and reportedly introduced them to marijuana. Another Side of Bob Dylan (#43, 1964), recorded in summer 1964, concentrated on personal songs and imagistic free associations such as "Chimes of Freedom"; Dylan repudiated his protest phase with "My Back Pages." In late 1964 Columbia A&R man Jim Dickson introduced Dylan to Jim (later Roger) McGuinn, to whom Dylan gave "Mr. Tambourine Man," which became the Byrds' first hit in 1965, kicking off folk rock. Meanwhile, the Byrds' Baez liaison fell apart, and Dylan met 25-year-old ex-model Shirley Noznisky, a.k.a. Sara Lowndes, whom he married in 1965.

With Bringing It All Back Home (#6), released early in 1965, Dylan surprised listeners for the first of many times by turning his back on folk punsm; for half the album he was backed by a rock & roll band. On July 25, 1965, he played the Newport Folk Festival (where two years earlier he had been the cynosure of the folksingers) backed by the Paul Butterfield Blues Band, and was booed. The next month, he played the Forest Hills (Queens, New York) tennis stadium with a band that included Levon Helm and Robbie Robertson, which accompanied him on a tour and later became the Band [see entry]. "Like a Rolling Stone" (#2, 1965) became Dylan's first major hit.

The music Dylan made in 1965 and 1966 revolutionized rock. The intensity of his performances and his live-in-the-studio albums—Highway 61 Revisited (#3, 1965), Blonde on Blonde (#9, 1966)—were a revelation. His lyrics were analyzed, debated, and quoted like no pop before them. With rage and slangy playfulness, Dylan chewed up and spat out literary and folk traditions in a wild, inspired doggerel. He didn't explain; he gave off-the-wall interviews and press conferences in which he'd spin contradictory fables about his background and intentions. D.A. Pennebaker's documentary of Dylan's British tour, Don't Look Back, shows some of the hysteria that came to surround him and the cool detachment with which he would always regard his celebrity. As "Rainy Day Women #12 & 35" went to #2 in April 1966, Dylan's worldwide record sales topped 10 million, and more than 150 other groups or artists across a wide range of genres had recorded at least one of his songs.

On July 29, 1966, Dylan smashed up his Triumph 55 motorcycle while riding near his Woodstock, New York, home. With several broken neck vertebrae, a concussion, and lacerations of the face and scalp, he was reportedly in critical condition for a week and bedridden for a month, with aftereffects including amnesia and mild paralysis. Though the extent of Dylan's injuries was later questioned by biographers, he did spend nine months in seclusion. As he recovered, he and the Band recorded the songs that were widely bootlegged—and legitimately released in 1975—as The Basement Tapes (#7), whose droll, enigmatic, steeped-in-American sound would be continued by the Band on their own.

In 1968 Dylan made his public reentry with the quiet John Wesley Harding (#2), which ignored the baroque psychedelia in vogue since the Beatles' 1967 Sgt. Pepper; Dylan wrote new enigmas into such folkish ballads as "All Along the Watchtower." On January 20, 1968, he returned to the stage, performing three songs at a Woody Guthrie memorial concert, and in May 1969 he released the overtly countryish Nashville Skyline (#3), featuring "Lay Lady Lay" (#7, 1969) and "Girl From the North Country," with a guest vocal by Johnny Cash and a new, mellower voice.

Dylan's early-'70s acts seemed less portentous. His 1970 Self Portrait (#4) included songs by other writers and live takes from a 1969 Isle of Wight concert with the Band. Widely criticized, Dylan went back into the studio and rush-released the mild, countryish New Morning (#7, 1970). By mid-1970 Dylan had moved to 94 MacDougal Street in Greenwich Village; on June 9, he received an honorary doctorate in music from Princeton.

George Hanson, with whom Dylan cowrote "I'd Have You Anytime," "If Not for You," and a few other songs that summer, persuaded Dylan to appear at the benefit Concert for Bangladesh, Leon Russell, who also performed, produced Dylan's single "Watching the River Flow." That year he also released his first protest song since the mid-'60s, "George Jackson." In 1971 Tarantula, a collection of writings from the mid-'60s, was published to an unenthusiastic reception.

Dylan sang at the Band concert that resulted in Rock of Ages (1972) but didn't appear on the album; he sat in on albums by Doug Sahm, Steve Goodman, McGuinn, and others. Late in 1972 he played Alias and wrote a score for Sam Peckinpah's Pat Garrett & Billy the Kid (#16, 1973), including "Knockin' on Heaven's Door" (#12, 1973). Writings and Drawings by Bob Dylan, a collection of lyrics and liner notes up to New Morning, was published in 1973. Between Columbia contracts, Dylan moved to Malibu in 1973 and made a handshake deal with David Geffen's Asylum label, which released Planet Waves (#1, 1974). Columbia retaliated with Dylan (#17, 1973), a collection of embarrassing outtakes from Self Portrait. Dylan and the Band played 39 shows in 21 cities, selling out 651,000 seats for a 1974 tour; the last three dates in L.A. were recorded for Before the Flood (#3, 1974).

Dylan scrapped an early version of Blood on the Tracks, recut the songs with local Minneapolis players, and the result hit #1 in 1975. He cowrote some of the songs on the platinum Desire (#1, 1976) with producer Jacques Levy, before making that LP. Dylan had returned to some Greenwich Village hangouts. A series of jams at the Other End led to the notion of a communal tour, and in October bassist Rob Stoner began rehearsing the large, shifting entourage (including Baez and such Village regulars as Ramblin' Jack Elliott and Bobby Neuwirth) that became the Rolling Thunder Revue, which toured on and off—with guests including Allen Ginsberg, Joni Mitchell, Mick Ronson, McGuinn, and Arlo Guthrie—until spring 1976. The Revue started with surprise concerts at small halls (the first in Plymouth, Massachusetts, for an audience of 200) and worked up to outdoor stadiums like the one in Fort Collins, Colorado, where NBC-TV filmed Hard Rain. The troupe played two benefits for convicted murderer Rubin "Hurricane" Carter (subject of Dylan's "Hurricane"), which, after expenses, raised no money. Dylan's efforts helped Carter get a retrial, but he was convicted and one of the witnesses, Patty Valentine, sued Dylan over his use of her name in "Hurricane."

In 1976 Dylan appeared in the Band's farewell concert, The Last Waltz, which was filmed by Martin Scorsese. His wife, Sara Lowndes, filed for divorce in March 1977. She received custody of their five children: Maria (Sara's daughter by a previous marriage whom Dylan had adopted), Jesse, Anna, Samuel, and Jakob (it was revealed in 2001 that in 1986 Dylan had secretly married backup singer Carolyn Dennis, six months after she gave birth to the couple's daughter, Desiree Gabrielle Dennis-Dylan. The couple divorced in 1992).

In 1978 Dylan took a $2 million loss on Renaldo and Clara, a four-hour film including footage of the Rolling Thunder tour and starring himself and Joan Baez. He embarked on an extensive tour (New Zealand, Australia, Europe, the U.S., and Japan, where he recorded Live at Budokan), redoing his old songs with some of the trappings of a Las Vegas lounge act.

In 1979 Dylan announced that he was a born-again Christian, having been introduced to its fundamentalist teachings by McGuinn, the Alpha Band (an outgrowth of Rolling Thunder), and Debby Boone. The platinum Slow Train Coming overtly God-fearing, rose to #3; "You Gotta Serve Somebody" (#24, 1979) netted Dylan his first Grammy (for Best Rock Vocal Performance, Male). His West Coast tour late in 1979 featured only his born-again material; Saved (#24, 1980) and Shot of Love (#33, 1981) continued that message. In late 1981 he embarked on a 22-city U.S. tour, in 1982 amid rumors he had repudiated his born-again Christianity, Dylan traveled to Israel. Infidels (#20, 1983), recorded with a band that included Mark Knopfler, Mick Taylor, and reggae greats Sly and Robbie, answered no questions. Despite its title, the album was more churlish than religious, although Dylan did admit that "Neighborhood Bully" was about Arab-Israeli relations.

Biograph (#33, 1985), a five-disc retrospective with 18 previously unreleased tracks, helped put Dylan's long career in perspective, but Empire Burlesque (#33), released the same year, puzzled listeners with its backup singers and cluttered production by dance-music specialist Arthur Baker. A tour with Tom Petty and the Heartbreakers in 1986 supported the sloppy, cryptic Knocked Out Loaded (#53). Dylan then toured in 1987 with the Grateful Dead as his backup band, yielding the concert album, Dylan & the Dead (#37, 1989). Dylan delayed release of Down in the Groove (#61, 1988) twice in six months. The final product, with guests including Eric Clapton, Steve Jones (Sex Pistols), rappers Full Force, and members of the Dead sounded tentative and unfocused. But as "Lucky," one-fifth of the Traveling Wilburys [see entry], Dylan appeared to genuinely enjoy participating in a group project.

Dylan was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1989 and later that year released his best received album of the '80s, Oh Mercy (#30). Produced by Daniel Lanois (U2, Robbie Robertson) in New Orleans, it was a coherent collection of songs, and Dylan sounded reenergized and engaged. But as he had throughout his career, Dylan defied expectations. On his Never Ending Tour, started in 1988, Dylan recast his songs, at times throwing them away with offhand performances. His appearance on the L'Chaim—To Life telethon led to rumors he had joined a Hasidic sect. Under the Red Sky (#38, 1990), the followup to Oh Mercy, was almost universally panned.

In 1990 Dylan was named a Commandeur dans l'Ordre des Arts et des Lettres, France's highest cultural honor. At the 1991 Grammy ceremony, where he was given a Lifetime Achievement Award, Dylan's whimsical acceptance "speech" and sloppy, almost unintelligible performance of "Masters of War" (the Gulf War had recently raged), left some fans scratching their heads, while others applauded his pug-nacious attitude. Dylan opened up the vaults for The Bootleg Series, vols. 1-3 (Rare & Unreleased) (#49, 1991), its 58 outtakes, live tracks, and demos, which proved his prolific virtuosity.

On October 16, 1992, Columbia marked the 30th anniversary of Dylan's first album with Bobfest, an all-star concert at New York's Madison Square Garden featuring more than 30 artists including Neil Young, Pearl Jam's Eddie Vedder, Tom Petty, George Harrison, Eric Clapton, Johnny Cash, Lou Reed, and Dylan himself. Broadcast live on pay-per-view, it was released as an album and video the next year. As if to bring his career full circle, Dylan then recorded two folkish solo guitar and vocal albums: Good As I Been to You (#51, 1992) and World Gone Wrong (#70, 1993).

In the mid-'90s Dylan revived his live concerts by assembling one of the best bands of his career—he stopped throwing away his songs, instead playing both countryish rock and acoustic string-band versions of his best compositions. He made a triumphant appearance at Woodstock '94, though he had snubbed the 1969 festival. In late 1994 Dylan performed on MTV's Unplugged, with his new band augmented by Pearl Jam's producer Brendan O'Brien on keyboards (highlights were released on the 1995 Unplugged album [#23]).

Hooking up again with producer Lanois, Dylan recorded Delta deep-blues songs for 1997's Time Out of Mind, which debuted (and peaked) on the Billboard chart at #10, becoming his highest-charting release in nearly 20 years. The same year, Dylan found himself on the road touring and crossing paths with his son Jakob Dylan's band the Wallflowers [see entry].

Other highlights of the year for Dylan included performing before Pope John Paul II in Bologna, Italy, the inaugural release on his Egyptian Records label (The Songs of Jimmie Rodgers—A Tribute), and receiving the Kennedy Center Lifetime Achievement Award from President Bill Clinton at the White House. That year he had a brush with death when he suffered a serious heart infection that landed him in the hospital for a few tense days. In 1998 he picked up three Grammys for Time Out of Mind (Album of the Year, Best Contemporary Folk Album, and Best Male Rock Vocal Performance for the track "Cold Irons Bound"), and released The Bootleg Series, vol. 4: Bob Dylan LIVE 1966: The "Royal Albert Hall" Concert. His Time Out of Mind song "To Make You Feel My Love" turned into a #1 country smash by Garth Brooks. In 2000 Dylan received the prestigious Polar Prize from the Royal Swedish Academy of Music. He also wrote and performed a new song, "Things Have Changed," for the soundtrack of Wonder Boys (it was also included on The Essential Bob Dylan double-disc anthology later that year). The song went on to receive a Grammy Award and his first-ever Oscar. As of this writing, a new album was scheduled for release in fall 2001.

Sheila E.

Born Sheila Escovedo, Dec. 12, 1957, Oakland, CA
1984—The Glamorous Life (Warner Bros.) 1985—Sheila E. in Romance 1600 1987—Sheila E. 1991—Sex Cymbal
2001—Writes of Passage (Vista).

A gifted drummer and percussionist, Sheila E. also proved herself at home fronting a band, once her friendship with Prince gave her the chance to do so. In fact, she became the only one of his many female protégées to find anything more than the most fleeting musical success.

Sheila's father Pete Escovedo was a popular Bay Area Latin percussionist, who played with Santana and his own Latin band, Azteca. She picked up percussion herself as a child, but with several brothers also following their father's footsteps (one of whom, Peto, would play with '70s funk band Con Funk Shun), she did not get to perform with her father's band until she was a teenager. An immediate hit with Azteca, she soon quit high school to join the band full-time, also recording two mid-'70s albums with her father. She became an in-demand studio percussionist, recording and touring with Diana Ross, Herbie Hancock, Lionel Richie, and Marvin Gaye in the late '70s and early '80s. In 1978, while touring with jazz-fusion keyboardist George Duke, she met Prince, who had just recorded his first album. They became fast friends (though never lovers, she would later insist), but did not work together until 1984, when she sang a duet with him on "Erotic City," the B side of his #1 pop hit "Let's Go Crazy." Prince convinced her to become a solo act, renaming her and restyling her in his typical scanty-paisley fashion.

Her debut album, The Glamorous Life (#28, 1984), yielded a #7 pop hit in the title track, a Latin take on Prince's pop-savvy funk rock, the poppier "Belle of St. Mark" reached #34. Sheila E. in Romance 1600 (#50, 1985) contained "A Love Bizarre," a duet with Prince (#11, 1985), also heard in the rap movie Krush Groove. Her third album (#56, 1987), which featured many family members, yielded only a minor hit single in "Hold Me" (#68, 1987). Sheila put her solo career on hold to join Prince's band, the Revolution, on drums, for the world tour documented in his Sign o' the Times album and film. A collapsed lung suffered after recording 1991's Sex Cymbal kept her from touring to support it; the album, topping at #146, flopped.

Though the percussionist continued to tour throughout the rest of the decade, her highest-profile appearance was as the bandleader on basketball great Earvin "Magic" Johnson's short-lived late-night talk show, The Magic Hour, in 1998. She returned with a jazz-fusion effort, Writes of Passage, in 2001.

With over 100 million in record sales, the Eagles epitomized commercial Southern California rock in the '70s, and their appeal continues undiminished three decades later. As of early 2001, Their Greatest Hits, 1971-1975—a 1976 best-of that was the first album ever certified platinum—is the best-selling album of all time, its 27 million copies outstripping the previous champ, Michael Jackson's Thriller. The group's well-crafted songs merged countryish vocal harmonies with hard-rock guitars, and lyrics that were alternately yearning ("One of These Nights," "Best of My Love") and romantically jaded ("Life in the Fast Lane," "Hotel California"). During the band's hugely successful career, it had an increasingly indolent recording schedule until its breakup in the fall of 1980. Subsequently, each of the members pursued a solo career, with Henley's the most successful commercially and critically. In the '90s, the band's sound was frequently cited as an influence by young country stars, many of whom contributed tracks to the album Common Thread: The Songs of the Eagles (#3, 1993), which won Album of the Year at the 1994 Country Music Awards. That same year, the Eagles revival culminated in the band's reunion tour and album.

The group originally coalesced from L.A.'s country-rock community. Before producer John Boylan assembled them as Linda Ronstadt's backup band on her album Silk Purse (1970), the four original Eagles were already experienced professionals. Leadon had played in the Dillard and Clark Expedition and the Flying Burrito Brothers; Meisner, with Poco (see entry) and Rick Nelson's Stone Canyon Band. Frey had played with various Detroit rock bands (including Bob Seger's) and Longbranch Pennywhistle (with J.D. Souther, a sometime songwriting partner), and Henley had been with a transplanted Texas group, Shiloh. After working with Ronstadt, Henley and Frey decided to form the Eagles, recruiting Leadon and Meisner.

Intending to take the country rock of the Byrds and Burritos a step further toward hard rock, the Eagles recorded their first album with producer Glyn Johns in England. "Take It Easy" (#12, 1972), written by Frey and Jackson Browne, went gold shortly after its release, as did their debut album. (Another single, "Witchy Woman," reached #9 that year.) Desperado was a concept album with enough of a plot line to encourage rumors of a movie version. The LP yielded no major pop hits, but its title track, a ballad penned by Henley and Frey, has become a classic rock standard, covered by Linda Ronstadt, among others. With On the Border, the Eagles changed producers, bringing in Bill Szymczyk (who worked on all subsequent albums through 1982's Greatest Hits, vol. 2) and adding Felder, who had recorded with Flow in Gainesville, Florida (and who once gave guitar lessons to another Gainesville native, Tom Petty), then became a session guitarist and studio engineer in New York, Boston, and L.A.

The increased emphasis on rock attracted more listeners—mid-'70s hits included "Best of My Love" (#1, 1975), "One of These Nights" (#1, 1975), "Lyin' Eyes" (#2, 1975), and "Take It to the Limit" (#4, 1975)—but alienated Leadon. After One of These Nights, Leadon left to form the Bernie Leadon-Michael Georgiades Band, which released Natural Progressions in 1977. (Leadon went on to become a Nashville session musician, and in the '90s formed Run-C&W, a jokester group who played a blend of country and R&B.)

Leadon was replaced by Joe Walsh, who had established himself with the James Gang [see entry] and on his own. His Eagles debut, Hotel California, was their third consecutive #1 album (the second was their record-breaking 1976 greatest-hits compilation). "New Kid in Town" (#1, 1976), the title cut (#1, 1977), and "Life in the Fast Lane" (#11, 1977) spurred sales of more than 15 million copies worldwide.

Meisner left in 1977, replaced by Schmit, who had similarly replaced him in Poco. Meisner has released two solo albums, Randy Meisner (1978) and One More Song (1980). (In 1981, he toured with the Silveradoes; later, in 1990, Meisner reemerged in the group Black Tie, alongside Billy Swan and Bread's James Griffin.) Henley and Frey sang backup on One More Song, and in the late '70s they also appeared on albums by Bob Seger and Randy Newman. In 1981 Henley duetted with Stevie Nicks on the #6 single "Leather and Lace." Between outside projects and legal entanglements, it took the Eagles two years and $1 million to make the multiplatinum LP The Long Run, their last album of all-new material. Parting hit singles included "Heartache Tonight" (#1, 1979), "The Long Run" (#8, 1980), and "I Can't Tell You Why" (#8, 1980).

Walsh continued to release solo albums [see entry], though his biggest single to date has been 1978's cheeky "Life's Been Good" (#12). Felder and Schmit also put out their own albums and contributed songs to film soundtracks. Schmit's second LP, Timothy B, included "Boys Night Out" (#25, 1987).

In 1982 Don Henley and Glenn Frey both embarked on solo careers. Frey charted with "The One You Love" (#15, 1982) and "Sexy Girl" (#20, 1984) before a movie proved his ticket into the Top 10: "The Heat Is On," featured in Beverly Hills Cop, shot to #2 in 1985. Frey followed this success by becoming an actor, making a guest appearance as a drug dealer on the popular TV series Miami Vice. The episode was based on a track from his album The Allnighter, "Smuggler's Blues," which consequently reached #12 (1985). Later in 1985, Frey's "You Belong to the City" hit #2. While still dabbling in acting with roles in the short-lived TV series South of Sunset, the movie Jerry Maguire, and a guest spot on the Don Johnson post-Miami Vice series Nash Bridges in the '90s, Frey also cofounded a music label, Mission Records, in 1997.

Ultimately, though, Henley was the ex-Eagle who garnered the greatest chart success, and the most critical acclaim as well. His "Dirty Laundry" (from his first solo effort, I Can't Stand Still) made it to #3, but the 1985 album Building the Perfect Beast was to be his true arrival as solo hitmaker and respected singer/songwriter. The kickoff single, "The Boys of Summer," went to #5—supported by an evocative black-and-white video that fast became an MTV favorite—and earned Henley a Grammy for Best Rock Vocal Performance, Male; the hits "All She Wants to Do Is Dance" (#9, 1985) and "Sunset Grill" (#22, 1985) followed. A third album, The End of the Innocence, produced a #8 title track, and the additional singles "The Last Worthless Evening" and "The Heart of the Matter," which both hit #21. The LP won Henley another Grammy, in the same category as before. In the early '90s, he sought release from his Geffen Records contract, initiating a long and bitter legal dispute. After participating in the release of a solo best-of album in 1995, Henley was freed from his contract. Five years later, he released a studio album of all-new material, Inside Job (coproduced by former Tom Petty and the Heartbreakers drummer Stan Lynch), and embarked on a solo tour to support it. Henley had married for the first time in May 1995 and had three children before releasing Inside Job. This life-altering change for the longtime bachelor resulted in a new theme in his songwriting; several of Inside Job's tracks were clearly about marriage and family, including the gentle ballad "Taking You Home" (#58 pop, #1 Adult Contemporary, 2000). Much of the rest of the album, however, still explored Henley's cynicism toward the business world and the media.

In 1990 Henley founded the Walden Woods Project, dedicated to preserving historic lands around Walden Pond in Concord, Massachusetts (where Henry David Thoreau and others reflected and wrote), from corporate development. Among the singer's various fund-raising means were holding charity concerts, featuring other top rock artists, and donating proceeds from some of his own recordings, including a reggae version of the Guys and Dolls standard "Sit Down You're Rocking the Boat" (1993). In 1993 the Walden Woods Project got a big boost from Common Thread: The Songs of the Eagles, coorganized by Henley and featuring Clint Black, Trisha Yearwood, Travis Tritt, and others.

In 1994, after years of fielding off reunion rumors, Henley, Frey, Walsh, Felder, and Schmit—who had appeared together in the video for Tritt's version of "Take It Easy"—hit the road for a massively successful tour, the third-highest grossing concert tour of that year. The tour went on hiatus toward the end of 1994, due to Frey's gastrointestinal surgery, but it continued in 1995. In November 1994, the band released Hell Freezes Over, which featured four new songs, including the singles "Get Over It" (#31, 1994), "Love Will Keep Us Alive" (#1 Adult Contemporary 1994), "Learn to Be Still" (#15 Adult Contemporary, 1995), and 11 of the old hits culled from the band's 1994 live appearance on MTV. Within months the reunion LP had sold more than 10 million copies and gone to #1 on the pop album chart.

In 1998 the Eagles were inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. All seven members of the band performed together for the first time at the induction ceremony. The core members of the group—the ones who had recorded and toured together in the mid-'90s—reunited again for a few concerts at the end of 1999, including a New Year's Eve show in L.A. A four-CD retrospective set, Eagles 1972–1999: Selected Works (#109, 2000), was released in November 2000.

Snooks Eaglin

Born Fird Eaglin Jr., Jan. 21, 1936, New Orleans, LA

Blind blues guitarist/singer Snooks Eaglin has long been a fixture on the New Orleans R&B circuit. His nickname borrowed from that of an old-time mischief-making radio character, Eaglin's singing style recalls Ray Charles' while displaying his own signature wit. Blinded by complications from surgery for glaucoma when he was 19 months old, Eaglin began playing guitar at age six. A Crescent City street singer in the '50s who also played clubs with Sugar Boy Crawford, Allen Toussaint, and Dave Bartholomew, Eaglin began recording country blues for Folkways in 1958. In the '60s he backed up Professor Longhair after releasing, on Imperial, perhaps the strongest of his own recordings, with Bartholomew producing.

While Eaglin remains largely unknown outside Louisiana, his virtuosic guitar work, huge repertoire (he reportedly knows over 2,500 songs), and often humorous versions of New Orleans standards have gained him a cult following and a reputation as a "human jukebox." Fats Domino's rhythm section has appeared on his Black Top albums and bassist George Porter Jr. (the Meters) has played with Eaglin in the '90s.

Steve Earle

Born Jan. 17, 1955, Fort Monroe, VA
 1986—Guitar Town (MCA) 1987—Exit O; Early Tracks (Epic)
 1988—Copperhead Road (Uni/MCA) 1990—Shut Up and Die Like an Aviator (MCA) 1991—The Hard Way 1993—Essential Steve Earle 1995—Train a Comin' (Winter Harvest)
 1996—Ain't Ever Satisfied: The Steve Earle Collection (Hip-O/MCA); I Feel Alright (E-Squared/Warner Bros.) 1997—Johnny Too Bad EP; El Corazón 2000—Transcendental Blues (E-Squared/Artemis).
 With the Del McCoury Band: 1999—The Mountain (E-Squared).

At the start of his career as an opening act for both George Jones and the Replacements, and through his songs—which incorporate the populism of Hank Williams and Bruce Springsteen—Steve Earle bridged country and rock. In the late '80s and through the mid-'90s, however, Earle's personal problems—including his addiction to heroin—temporarily sidetracked what had been a promising career.

Son of an air traffic controller, Earle was raised in South Texas, where he spent a rebellious adolescence as a long-haired Vietnam War opponent with country music sympathies. Leaving home at 16, he married at 19 the first of his five wives, and moved, nearly penniless, to Nashville. Befriending such older proponents of country's "outlaw" movement as Townes Van Zandt and Guy Clark, he wrote songs for Johnny Lee and Patty Loveless and almost managed to place one of his songs on an Elvis Presley album. At age 31 Earle released his critically acclaimed debut, Guitar Town. With his backup band the Dukes recalling the twangy style of Duane Eddy, he assailed Reaganomics and championed society's outsiders, appearing at Farm Aid II and allying himself with Fearless Hearts, a relief group for homeless children. Exit O was also well received: Copperhead Road scored #56 on the pop chart, but that year Earle, as a result of an altercation with a Dallas security guard, was fined $500 and given a one-year unsupervised probation. The tougher guitar sound and darker lyrics of The Hard Way reflected his legal problems; again critics lauded his work, but it fared considerably less well than its predecessor.

In late 1993, after a long hiatus from the studio, Earle began recording demos for a new album, but without a record contract at the time, he showed little sign of soon reclaiming his earlier success. In 1994 Earle was arrested in Nashville for possession of narcotics and sentenced to almost a year in jail. After his release, Earle released the acoustic Train a Comin' on the Nashville indie label Winter Harvest. Boasting such guest vocalists as Emmylou Harris and Nanci Griffith and stalwart picking from Peter Rowan, Norman Blake, and Roy Huskey Jr., the album included covers of songs by Van Zandt, the Beatles, and the reggae harmony group the Melodians.

Train a Comin' garnered great reviews and sold well for an indie, but it was with the swaggering I Feel Alright that Earle returned with a vengeance. "Because I've been to hell and now I'm back again," he snarled on the title track, a hard-won manifesto. The album, his first of entirely new material in five years, found Earle facing and besting his demons. It also launched the E-Squared record label, an imprint that Earle operates with partner Jack Emerson, and marked the debut of the Twangtrust, the production team of Earle and Ray Kennedy whose credits include albums by Lucinda Williams, Chen Knight, and Marah.

In 1996 Earle contributed a song about the human and social costs of the death penalty, "Ellis Unit One," to the movie Dead Man Walking. He has since emerged as a major voice in the campaign to abolish capital punishment. In 1997 Earle released El Corazón, a critically acclaimed album encompassing country, blues, folk, and rock. One of the record's tracks also featured a collaboration with the bluegrass group the Del McCoury Band, presaging Earle's headlong foray (with the McCourys) into the idiom, The Mountain (1999). In 2000 Earle released Transcendental Blues and in 2001 published a volume of short stories, Doghouse Roses.

Innovative yet popular, precise yet sensual, calculated yet galvanizing, Earth, Wind & Fire changed the sound of black pop in the '70s—their encyclopedic sound topping Latin-funk rhythms with gospel harmonies, unerring horns, Philip Bailey's sweet falsetto, and various exotic ingredients chosen by leader and producer Maurice White. Unlike their ideological rivals, the down and dirty but equally eclectic Parliament/Funkadelic, EW&F have always preached clean, uplifting messages.

Maurice White is the son of a doctor and the grandson of a New Orleans honky-tonk pianist. After attending the Chicago Conservatory, between 1963 and 1967 he was a studio drummer at Chess Records, where he recorded with the Impressions, Muddy Waters, Billy Stewart ("Summertime"), and Fontella Bass ("Rescue Me") among others. From 1967 to 1969 he worked with the Ramsey Lewis Trio ("Wade in the Water"), he later wrote and produced Lewis' 1975 hit "Sun Goddess." While with the trio, he took up kalimba, the African thumb piano, which became an EW&F trademark. White moved to L.A. in late 1969 and formed the first Earth, Wind & Fire (White's astrological chart has no water signs), who recorded for Capitol as the Salty Peppers. Warners signed the group for two moderately successful albums, but after 18 months, White hired a new, younger band, retaining only his brother Verdine on bass.

The band's second Columbia LP, Head to the Sky, went to #27 pop and #2 R&B in 1973, starting a string of gold and, later, platinum albums. In 1975 That's the Way of the World (a soundtrack) yielded the Grammy-winning "Shining Star" (#1 pop and R&B, 1975). The band moved up to the arena circuit with elaborate stage shows that included such mystical trappings as pyramids and disappearing acts. (Effects for the 1978 national tour were designed by magician Doug Henning.) Although White's longtime coproducer Charles Stepney died in 1976, EW&F continued to sell. All 'n All became their fifth platinum album, and they won two Grammys in 1978. They were a highpoint of Robert Stigwood's 1978 movie Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band, and their version of the Beatles' "Got to Get You Into My Life" went to #9 pop and #1 R&B.

White began to do outside production in 1975 and worked on albums by the Emotions (Rejoice, 1977), Ramsey Lewis (Sun Goddess, 1975), and Deniece Williams (This Is Niecey, 1976). He did composing and production work on Valerie Carter's Just a Stone's Throw Away (1977). EW&F's 1979 album, I Am, featured the Emotions on "Boogie Wonderland" (#6 pop, #2 R&B, 1979). In 1980 the group toured Europe and South America; 1981's Raise! (#5 pop, #1 R&B) featured the Top 5 hit "Let's Groove." While Touch the World (#33 pop, #3 R&B) went gold, Powerlight (#12 pop, #4 R&B, 1983) yielded their last major hit single, "Fall in Love With Me" (#17 pop, #4 R&B, 1983). Singer Philip Bailey also enjoyed success with his solo career, including a hit duet with Phil Collins, "Easy Lover" (#2 pop, #3 R&B, 1985), and a Grammy-winning gospel LP, Triumph! (1986). Since their inception, Earth, Wind & Fire have sold over 19 million albums.

Heritage (#70 pop, #19 R&B, 1990) featured guest rapper M.C. Hammer. For Millennium (#39 pop, #8 R&B, 1997) the group returned to Warner Bros. Records. Greatest Hits Live (#75 R&B, 1996) documents Maurice's final performances with the band during a mid-'90s Japanese tour. While EW&F continued to perform without their bandleader, Maurice built a recording studio and produced a number of jazz projects, including the Urban Knights albums, which have featured Grover Washington Jr., among others. He also founded his own record label, Kalimba Records.

In 2000, during the week leading up to EW&F's induction into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, Maurice ended speculation as to why he quit the stage by revealing that he had been diagnosed with Parkinson's disease. Despite the neurological disorder, Maurice still functions as a producer, vocalist, and songwriter for the band, and played a major role in 1997's In the Name of Love (#50 R&B).

Sheena Easton

Born Sheena Shirley Orr, Apr. 27, 1959, Bellshill, Scot.
 1981—Sheena Easton (EMI); You Could Have Been With Me
 1982—Madness, Money and Music 1983—Best Kept Secret
 1984—A Private Heaven 1985—Do You 1987—No Sound but a Heart 1988—The Lover in Me (MCA) 1989—The Best of Sheena Easton (EMI) 1991—What Comes Naturally (MCA)
 1993—No Strings 1995—My Cherie (MCA).

Sheena Easton became a pop star in 1981 with a vocal style and image suggesting a new-wave version of easy-rock singers Marie Osmond and Olivia Newton-John. Easton attended the Royal Scottish Academy of Drama and Art and graduated in June 1979 qualified to teach, but instead she began a singing career. (While in school, she had frequently moonlighted in local nightclubs and pubs.) She successfully auditioned for EMI Records in May 1979 and received national exposure when the BBC-TV show Big Time documented her grooming for stardom. Her first single, "Modern Girl," was released in February 1980 and hit the Top 10 in England; that November she performed for Queen Elizabeth at the Royal Variety Show.

Easton's American breakthrough came in the spring of 1981, when "Morning Train" stayed at #1 on the U.S. singles chart for two weeks. Its success propelled the reissued "Modern Girl" up to #18, and at one point Easton had the distinction of having two singles in the Top 10. Her hits continued with the theme song from the James Bond film For Your Eyes Only (#4, 1981) and "When He Shines" (#30, 1982) from her second album, You Could Have Been With Me. She has also received gold records in Japan and Canada, and a Grammy in 1982 for Best New Artist. In 1985 she won a second Grammy, Best Mexican/American Performance, for a duet with Luis Miguel, "Me Gustas Tal Como Eres"; the year before she had released the Spanish-only album Todo Me Recuerda a Ti.

Easton revamped her wholesome image with A Private Heaven (#15, 1984), which included the tough-talking hit single "Strut" (#7, 1984) and "Sugar Walls" (#9, 1984), a highly suggestive track written for her by Prince. She would duet with Prince on his 1987 hit "U Got the Look." She played Don Johnson's wife in several episodes of Miami Vice (1987). In the '90s she appeared in movies (Indecent Proposal), on Broadway (The Man of La Mancha, Grease), and on television (Jack's Place, The Highlander). She designed a line of ceramic angels and did a number of voice-overs for animated features (including 1996's All Dogs Go to Heaven 2). In 2000, after recording several Japanese import albums and playing opposite David Cassidy in the Las Vegas musical show At the Copa, she announced plans to remodel herself into a retro-styled disco diva.

The Easybeats/Flash and the Pan

Formed 1963, Sydney, Austral.
 George Young (b. Nov. 6, 1947, Glasgow, Scot.), gtr.; Gordon Fleet (b. Aug. 16, 1945, Bootle, Eng.), drums; Dick Diamond (b. Dec. 28, 1947, Hilversum, Neth.), bass; Harry Vanda (b. Harry Vandenberg, Mar. 22, 1947, The Hague, Neth.), gtr.; Stevie Wright (b. Dec. 20, 1948, Leeds, Eng.), voc.
 1967—Friday on My Mind (United Artists); Good Friday
 1968—Falling off the Edge of the World; Vigil 1970—Friends
 1985—The Best of the Easybeats (Rhino).
 Flash and the Pan (Vanda, Young): 1979—Flash and the Pan (Epic) 1980—Lights in the Night 1982—Headlines.

The Easybeats, whose members all emigrated to Australia with their families, were the '60s Australian rock band that launched producer/songwriters Harry Vanda and George Young. The group established itself as Australia's leading pop band in 1965 with "She's So Fine," the first of four chart-toppers Down Under. In 1966 the Easybeats returned to England and began recording with producer Shel Talmy (the Kinks, the Who), an association that resulted in the worldwide hit "Friday on My Mind" (#16, 1967). After their initial success, Vanda and Young kept the Easybeats name for a few years and had some moderately successful U.K. hits before officially disbanding in 1969 and forming a production company back in Australia. As Happy's Whiskey Sour they had a British hit with "Shot in the Head," and as the Marcus Hook Roll Band they recorded "Natural Man" in 1972. They produced Stevie Wright's solo debut, Hard Road, and oversaw the early career of Young's brothers Angus and Malcolm's band, AC/DC. Vanda and Young also concocted three studio albums that enjoyed some European success as Flash and the Pan. In 1988 the pair produced AC/DC's Blow Up Your Video.

The standard-bearers of Liverpool's neopsychedelic movement, Echo and the Bunnymen's moody, atmospheric music combined punk's energy and edge with the Doors' poetic theatricality. Self-consciously literary, outspoken, and sometimes arrogant (singer Ian McCulloch was known as "Mac the Mouth"), they never matched their popularity in Europe in the United States. Their influence can be seen in the attitudes and guitar textures of such '90s English bands as Suede.

The Bunnymen were formed when McCulloch was kicked out of an early version of the Teardrop Explodes. (He had earlier played with Teardrop leader Julian Cope [see entry] in the seminal Liverpool punk band the Crucial Three.) Recruiting fellow Doors fan Will Sergeant and Sergeant's friend Les Pattinson, they were originally a trio backed by Echo, a drum machine. An independently released 1979 single, "Pictures on My Wall" b/w "Read It in Books" led to a contract with Sire. Before going into the studio to record "Rescue," Echo was replaced with the flesh-and-blood drummer Pete De Freitas. This all-human version of the band released Crocodiles (#17 U.K., 1980). Early press focused on the strength of the band's songwriting, unadorned sound, and McCulloch's teased, nearly vertical nest of hair.

Heaven Up Here (#10 U.K., 1981) was a darker album, more interested in textures than songs. It reached the bottom of the U.S. charts (#184) but was again widely praised in the press and topped many British polls. Porcupine (#137, 1983), which hit #2 in the U.K., signaled a new direction for the band, as did the singles "The Back of Love" (#19 U.K., 1982) and "The Cutter" (#8 U.K., 1983). Augmented by sitar/violinist Shankar, the music took on an Eastern tint, with modal strings and droning bagpipes. Ocean Rain (#87, 1984), the band's first entry into the U.S. Top 100 albums chart, continued this direction, with a full string section in evidence on the quieter, melodic "The Killing Moon" (#9 U.K., 1984).

The band toured during most of 1985, but tensions arose the following year while it prepared to record Echo and the Bunnymen (#4 U.K., 1987). De Freitas left the band, only to return later (Haircut 100 drummer Blair Cunningham filled in during his absence). The band also had to rerecord the album. A quieter, reflective work, it was the Bunnymen's U.S. best-seller, peaking at #51 in 1987. That year, working with Doors keyboardist Ray Manzarek, Echo recorded a cover of "People Are Strange" for the 1987 movie The Lost Boys. In 1988, following a tour with New Order, McCulloch left to pursue a solo career, releasing Candleland (#18 U.K., 1989) and Mysterio (#46 U.K., 1992), neither of which matched the group's earlier success.

The band soldiered on, choosing St. Vitas Dance singer Noel Burke from thousands of audition tapes. In June 1989, during rehearsals for Echo's first post-McCulloch album, De Freitas was killed in a motorcycle accident. He was replaced by Damon Reece on the Geoff Emerick-produced Reverberation (1990), which failed to make the U.K. or U.S. charts.

McCulloch was publicly offended by the new Bunnymen lineup and did not speak to his former band mates for four years. But a failed collaboration with former Smiths' guitarist Johnny Marr reignited his desire to work with a band, which led to McCulloch's forming Electrafixion with Sergeant in 1994. They released one album Burned (1995), which was followed by a tour. While the album was not commercially successful, it did lead to a Bunnymen reunion in 1997. With Page and Plant drummer Michael Lee replacing De Freitas, the revived Bunnymen released Evergreen (1997). Following the band's tour, Pattinson, who had become a successful businessman, decided he had enough of the rock & roll life and quit the Bunnymen, leaving Sergeant and McCulloch to continue the band as a duo with hired hands backing them up.

Eddy (Capitol) 1993—Twang Thang; The Duane Eddy

 (Bear, Ger.).

Guitarist Duane Eddy had a string of instrumental hits ("Rebel Rouser," #6, 1958; "Peter Gunn," #27, 1960) that invariably featured a staccato signature riff labeled the "twangy" guitar sound. His work has influenced numerous guitarists (the Ventures, Shadows, George Harrison), especially in England.

Eddy began playing the guitar at age five. In 1951 he moved with his family to Phoenix. Shortly after dropping out of Coolidge High School at 16, he got a series of steady jobs working with local dance groups, and he acquired the custom-made Chet Atkins-model Gretsch guitar he still plays. In 1957 Phoenix DJ/producer/entrepreneur Lee Hazlewood became his mentor, and Eddy started touring with Dick Clark's Caravan of Stars. The Hazlewood-produced "Rebel Rouser" (on Clark's Jamie label) began a six-year streak of nearly 20 hits, among them "Ramrod" (#27, 1958), "Cannonball" (#15, 1958), and "Forty Miles of Bad Road" (#9, 1959). Though Eddy and Hazlewood parted company in 1961, they later reunited for comeback attempts.

Eddy switched to RCA in 1962 and had a hit with "Dance With the Guitar Man" (#12, 1962), followed by "Deep in the Heart of Texas" and "The Ballad of Paladin" (#33, 1962). He signed with Colpix in 1965 and released LPs like Duane Does Dylan and Duane a Go-Go. The various back-to-the-roots movements of the '70s (especially the rockabilly revival) rekindled interest in Eddy, who occasionally performs at oldies shows in the U.S. but concentrates primarily in the U.K., where he had a #9 hit in 1975, "Play Me Like You Play Your Guitar."

Eddy's early backup group, the Rebels, included guitarist Al Casey, saxophonist Steve Douglas, and pianist Larry Knechtel, later with Bread. At the height of his success, Eddy made his film debut in Because They're Young (1960), scoring a #4 hit with the theme song. He occasionally worked as a producer in the '70s, including a solo LP by Phil Everly (Star Spangled Springer, 1973). Eddy moved to California in the late '60s and then to Lake Tahoe, Nevada, in 1976. His 1977 comeback single on Asylum, "You Are My Sunshine," was produced by Hazlewood and included vocals by Willie Nelson and Waylon Jennings. Jennings' wife, Jessi Colter, was married to Eddy from 1966 to 1969.

In 1986 Eddy was introduced to a new generation of fans through British avant-dance group Art of Noise, who enlisted him to play on its industrial-disco version of "Peter Gunn" (#50, 1986). The following year, Duane Eddy—his first major-label album in over 15 years—was released. Jeff Lynne, Paul McCartney, George Harrison, and Ry Cooder all helped produce it. In 1994, a year after Rhino released the box set collection Twang Thang, Eddy was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame.

Dave Edmunds

Born Apr. 15, 1943, Cardiff, Wales
 1972—Rockpile (MAM) 1975—Subtle as a Flying Mallet (RCA)
 1977—Get It (Swan Song) 1978—Tracks on Wax 4 1979—Repeat When Necessary 1981—Twangin'; The Best of Dave Edmunds 1982—D.E. 7th (Columbia) 1983—Information 1984—Riff Raff 1987—I Hear You Rockin' 1990—Closer to the Flame (Capitol) 1993—The Dave Edmunds Anthology 1968–90 (Rhino) 1994—Plugged In (Pyramid) 2000—Hand Picked Musical Fantasies (Handpicked).

Guitarist/singer/producer/songwriter Dave Edmunds, an active fan of American rockabilly, spurred Britain's pub-rock movement, cofounded Rockpile, and has sustained a solo career for more than two decades.

Like many of his contemporaries, Edmunds was a rock & roll fan and soon found himself picking out the guitar parts played by James Burton on Rick Nelson's records, Chet Atkins on Everly Brothers hits, and Scotty Moore on early Elvis sides. During the early '60s he played in several British blues-rock bands before forming Love Sculpture in 1967 with bassist John Williams and drummer Bob Jones (the group later included drummer Terry Williams, also of Rockpile and, later, Dire Straits). They played rocked-up versions of light-classical pieces by Bizet and Khachaturian, whose "Sabre Dance" gave them a Top 5 U.K. hit in 1968. They toured the U.S. for six weeks before disbanding the next year.

Back in his native Wales, Edmunds built the 8-track Rockfield Studio in Monmouthshire and taught himself how to re-create Sam Phillips' Sun Records slap echo and Phil Spector's Wall of Sound. He spent the early '70s in the studio producing himself (including a 1971 hit remake of Smiley Lewis' 1955 hit "I Hear You Knockin'") and an album called Rockpile and others, including the Flamin' Groovies, Del Shannon, and pub rockers Deke Leonard, Ducks Deluxe, and, later, Brinsley Schwarz and Graham Parker. When he produced Brinsley Schwarz's last LP in 1974, he met bassist Nick Lowe, later of Rockpile, the fiercely rocking band the two shared and led for their own albums.

In 1975 Edmunds costarred in and scored most of the film Stardust, and he also released Subtle as a Flying Mallet, for which Lowe wrote songs and played bass. After 1977's Get It, Edmunds toured regularly with Rockpile. Most of his albums have consisted primarily of covers. Repeat When Necessary premiered songs by Elvis Costello ("Girls Talk," a minor hit in America, but a gold U.K. hit) and Graham Parker ("Crawling From the Wreckage"), and contained the up-tempo "Queen of Hearts." Though a Top 20 British hit, he could not get Atlantic to release it in the States. Two years later country-pop vocalist Juice Newton took the song to #2 in a near-identical version.

Rockpile broke up acrimoniously in 1981, shortly after releasing its only album under the Rockpile moniker, Seconds of Pleasure. Edmunds resumed his solo career. (Williams later drummed on some of his records, and guitarist Billy Bremner, the fourth member of Rockpile, joined Edmunds' 1983 touring band.) Twangin' produced a minor hit single with a cover of John Fogerty's "Almost Saturday Night," and "The Race Is On" introduced the Stray Cats, a Long Island neo-rockabilly group for whom Edmunds later produced multimillion-selling albums.

D.E. 7th, his first Columbia release, included the raveup "From Small Things (Big Things One Day Come)," written for Edmunds by Bruce Springsteen. Information, one of Edmunds' most successful U.S. LPs, featured two songs written and produced by the Electric Light Orchestra's Jeff Lynne. One of them, "Slipping Away," paired Edmunds' traditional sound with synthesizers, electronically processed vocals, and a drum machine, and became a Top 40 hit in 1983. Lynne stayed on to produce all of the unsuccessful Riff Raff, after which Edmunds returned to his roots-rock bent. He has continued to work as a producer, with the Everly Brothers and the reunited Stray Cats, and played guitar on the three tracks of the soundtrack to Paul McCartney's 1984 film Give My Regards to Broad Street. His other production credits include the Fabulous Thunderbirds (Tuff Enuff), k.d. lang (Angel With a Lariat), and Dion DiMucci (Yo Frankie). In the '90s he toured and recorded with Ringo Starr's All-Starr Band, supplied music to two Nike ads, and donated a tune to the 1995 film This Little Girl of Mine. In 2000 he self-released a new album and survived a triple bypass.

Of the many techno-dance outfits to spring from Manchester in the late '80s, 808 State was the one most committed to emphasizing the "groove" over technical expertise. The group played a major role in developing the techno-rave sound.

808 State grew out of Manchester's legendary Eastern Bloc record shop, where store owner Martin Price also operated his independent label, Creed. It was there that Graham Massey, a former member of the experimental unit Biting Tongues, met the local DJ duo of Darren Partington and Andrew Barker, who were trying to land a deal with Price's label. The four men, along with another local musician, Gerald Simpson, wound up recording together as 808 State (fittingly named after a drum machine). Their first collaboration was the 1988 EP Newbuild, which was quickly followed by remixing gigs for such acts as the Inspiral Carpets. In 1989 they performed the British club smash "Pacific State"; Simpson left soon after to form his own project, A Guy Called Gerald.

The next year 808 State released its U.S. debut, Utd. State 90, which included "Pacific State" and another dance club favorite, "Cubik." The critically acclaimed followup, Ex:el, featured guest vocalists Bernard Sumner of New Order ("Spanish Heart") and Björk Gudmundsdóttir, then of the Sugarcubes ("Ooops" and "Omart"). 808 State's subsequent U.S. tour consisted of a handful of rave appearances.

In 1992 Price left to produce a succession of British rap acts and form the label SunText. Later that year, 808 State released Gorgeous, and has since produced dance remixes for other artists, including David Bowie, Soundgarden, and the British rapper MC Tunes. In 1996 the experimental Don Solaris included sampled bits of wind instruments and guitars, and featured such guest vocalists as M. Doughty of Soul Couphing and James Dean Bradfield of Manic Street Preachers. Thermo Kings is a remix of Don Solaris.

Generally acknowledged as the world's first "industrial" band, Germany's Einstürzende Neubauten—which translates to "collapsing new buildings"—is essentially an avant-garde conceptual/performance-art collective. These hardhat dadaists make their postmodern, neonbital statement with howling vocals and "instruments" that include power tools and large metal industrial objects beaten with hammers, chains, and pipes.

Neubauten's earliest manifestations were in such hit-and-run art statements as Blixa Bargeld and expatriate American N.U. Unruh appearing half-naked, beating on the sides of a hole in a Berlin Autobahn overpass. The Neubauten name took on chillingly prophetic overtones when, a few months after its formation, Berlin's newly constructed, American-built congress hall caved in. The group's earliest, largely freeform recordings—German-issued singles and EPs compiled on 80–83—mixed atavistic, guttural vocals with distorted guitar and bass drones, and thunderous metal percussion.

With the addition of F. M. Einheit—who brought in power drills, jackhammers, amplified air-conditioning ducts, and giant industrial springs—and later, guitarist Alexander Hacke and bassist Mark Chung, Einstürzende Neubauten expanded its sonic range, exerted ever-finer control over its noise elements, and gradually grew closer to conventional rock-band approaches. The group integrated its first actual chord progression into the title track of Drawings of Patient O.T., the cassette-only live album 2 X 4 found Bargeld at times singing plaintively in a near Middle Eastern style; $\frac{1}{2}$ Mensch ("Half-Man") ranged from Bargeld's multitracked a cappella vocal workouts, to soft balladlike interludes and even some off-kilter dance beats; Fuenf auf der Nach Oben Offenen Richterskala ("Five on the Open-Ended Richter Scale"), recorded after a brief breakup, was uncharacteristically quiet and restrained. In 1993 Neubauten released its most accessible album to date, Tabula Rasa, recorded during the Persian Gulf War and including the crackling sounds of burning oil (taped before Iraqis ignited the Kuwaiti oil fields).

The following year brought the import-only Die Hamletmaschine, inspired by avant-garde director Heiner Müller's theatrical production. And in 1996 Ende Neu was recorded for longtime fan and Nine Inch Nails frontman Trent Reznor's nothing label. The album featured strings and a chorus that established a quieter tone alongside the usual industrial rattings. Faustmusik released the same year, was music written to accompany a production of German author Werner Schwab's Faust: My Thorax: My Helmet.

The band enjoyed a rare, and well-received, 1998 American tour before returning to the studio for an atypically titled 2000 release Silence Is Sexy. Neubauten followed up with another U.S. tour.

Outside the group, Bargeld has worked with Nick Cave and the Bad Seeds [see entry], and Hacke with Crime and the City Solution; Einheit formed Berlin's experimental theater-music outfit Stein (Stone), using the sonic properties of friction between rocks and concrete.

Elastica

Justine Frischmann (b. Sep. 16, 1969, London), voc., gtr.; Donna Matthews (b. Dec. 2, 1971, Newport, Wales), gtr., voc.; Justin Welch (b. Dec. 4, 1972, Nuneaton, Eng.), drums; Annie Holland (b. Aug. 26, 1965, London), bass.

1994—Line Up EP (Deceptive, U.K.) 1995—Elastica (Geffen) (– Holland) 1997—(– Matthews) 1999—(+ Paul Jones [b. Oct. 23, 1965, Billerica, Eng.], gtr.; + Mew [b. Sharon Mew, July 5, 1969, Beccles, Eng.], kybds., voc.; + Dave Bush [b. June 4, 1959, Taplovo, Eng.], kybds.; + Holland) 6-Track EP (Deceptive, U.K.) 2000—The Menace (Atlantic).

Elastica stood among Britain's most promising bands in the mid-'90s, performing crisp, edgy pop with roots reaching deep into punk's earliest days. Catchy songs like "Connection" and "Stutter" quickly earned fans both at home and in the U.S. But a variety of problems delayed a followup, so by the time Elastica reemerged with its second album five years later, the band had endured lineup changes, scrapped recordings, the collapse of the alternative-rock boom, and the end of its U.S. record deal.

Singer/guitarist Justine Frischmann was briefly a member of the London Suede [see entry], while dating the band's singer, Brett Anderson. She quit Suede to study architecture at the University of London and soon formed her own band with drummer Justin Welch (another ex-Suede member). They auditioned other players and began playing the British club circuit as Elastica. The band signed to Deceptive Records in late 1993. Between then and 1995, Elastica released the singles "Stutter," "Line Up," "Connection," and "Waking Up"—all hits in England.

Elastica was sued by the song publishers of Wire and the Stranglers—complaining that Elastica's "Connection" was near-identical to Wire's "Three Girl Rhumba," while the band's "Waking Up" stole a key riff from the Stranglers' "No More Heroes." Elastica settled out of court in time for the 1995 release of a self-titled debut (#66 U.S., #1 U.K.). In America, where the band was signed to Geffen, Elastica enjoyed hits with singles "Connection" (#53) and "Stutter" (#67). Heavy touring finally led to bassist Annie Holland quitting from exhaustion in 1995. Then Matthews quit amid stalled efforts to record a followup album.

Frischmann recruited guitarist Paul Jones and keyboardist Mew. Holland returned in 1999. Elastica soon released 6-Track EP, which gathered various tracks recorded over the previous years, including a demo called "Nothing Stays the Same" by the now-absent Matthews, plus tracks recorded by the newest lineup of the band. Among the new songs was a collaboration with the Fall's Mark E. Smith called "How He Wrote Elastica Man." The new lineup made its public debut at the 1999 Reading Festival. The Menace was finally released the following year (on Deceptive in the U.K., on Atlantic in the U.S.), and featured a blend of pop-punk with occasional flashes of modern electronic influences.

The Electric Flag

Formed 1967, San Francisco, CA

Michael Bloomfield (b. July 28, 1944, Chicago, IL; d. Feb. 15, 1981, San Francisco), gtr.; Buddy Miles (b. Sep. 5, 1946, Omaha, NE), drums, voc.; Barry Goldberg, kybds.; Nick Gravenites (b. Chicago), voc.; Harvey Brooks, bass; Peter Strazza, tenor sax; Marcus Doubleday, trumpet; Herbie Rich, baritone sax.

1968—A Long Time Comin' (Columbia) (– Bloomfield) 1969—The Electric Flag 1974—(group re-forms: Bloomfield; Miles; Goldberg; Gravenites; Roger "Jellyroll" Troy, bass, voc.) The Band Kept Playing (Atlantic).

The short-lived Electric Flag intended to combine blues, rock, soul, jazz, and country; it ended up sparking the rock-with-brass trend of Blood, Sweat and Tears and Chicago. Michael Bloomfield [see entry] started the band in 1967 after leaving the Paul Butterfield Blues Band, and he brought Nick Gravenites with him. Goldberg had played with Mitch Ryder and came to the flag after the breakup of the Goldberg-Miller Blues Band (with Steve Miller), bringing Strazza with him. The rest had session backgrounds: Buddy Miles [see entry] in R&B, drumming for Otis Redding and Wilson Pickett; Harvey Brooks as the folk rockers' bassist with Bob Dylan, Judy Collins, Phil Ochs, and Eric Andersen, as well as the Doors; Marcus Doubleday from early-'60s work with the Drifters, Jan and Dean, and Bobby Vinton.

Based in San Francisco, the Electric Flag debuted at the Monterey Pop Festival in June 1967, and its first album made the Top 40. But ego conflicts among the members soon undermined them, and the band lasted only 18 months. Bloomfield quit after the debut album, leaving Miles as leader for the flag's remaining months. Before the breakup, they'd recorded enough material for a second album. The Buddy Miles Express was modeled after the flag, but Miles left it to join Jimi Hendrix's Band of Gypsies. Gravenites turned to songwriting, then joined Big Brother and the Holding Company. The rest returned to work as sidemen.

In 1974 Bloomfield, Miles, Gravenites, and Goldberg (joined by Roger "Jellyroll" Troy) reunited for a two-album deal. The first, produced by Jerry Wexler, re-created the old sound with Dr. John's Bonaroo Brass and the Muscle Shoals Horns. But the band's third incarnation broke up before recording a second album.

Jeff Lynne solo: 1990—Armchair Theatre (Reprise).

The Electric Light Orchestra became a major arena and stadium draw in the mid- and late '70s on the strength of Beatles-like orchestral pop—"Can't Get It Out of My Head" (#9, 1974), "Telephone Line" (#7, 1977), "Evil Woman" (#10, 1975)—and elaborate staging. Formed in 1971 as an offshoot of the Move by leader Roy Wood (who left after ELO's first LP to form Wizzard), drummer Bev Bevan, guitarist/songwriter Jeff Lynne, and bassist Rick Price, ELO initially sought to explore classically tinged orchestral rock. The band has fashioned a series of multimillion-selling LPs and radio hits by sweetening futuristic electronic effects with rich strings, synthesizers, keyboards, and occasional horns. ELO remains based in England, although their greatest success has been in America.

The Electric Light Orchestra has a history of facelessness such that even the most ardent fans generally can't name more than one or two band members (up until 1986 or so, original members Lynne and Bevan were the backbone, with studio assistance from longtime member and multi-instrumentalist Richard Tandy). Wood left the group in 1972, before its first hit, a version of Chuck Berry's "Roll Over Beethoven" (#43, 1973), complete with chugging cellos sending up the opening strains of the Fifth Symphony (they occasionally use fragments of Gneg and others as well).

After Wood quit, Lynne brought the band to the U.S. in 1973 for a 40-date debut tour that was marred by technical problems in miking the cellos (a radical addition to the live rock format). On the Third Day (#52, 1973) produced a moderate hit with "Showdown" (#53, 1973). Eldorado (#16, 1974), a pseudo-concept album, gave ELO a major hit with "Can't Get It Out of My Head." Face the Music (#8, 1975) went gold on the strength of "Evil Woman" (#10, 1975) and "Strange Magic" (#14, 1976). Each subsequent album, including Xanadu, went at least gold, and five (A New World Record, Out of the Blue, Discovery, Greatest Hits, and the Xanadu soundtrack) are platinum. In 1977 ELO's records and tours grossed over $10 million, and A New World Record (#5, 1976) eventually sold 5 million copies worldwide.

By the late '70s ELO was recording for its own label. Jet, whose distribution switch to CBS led ELO to sue the old distributor, United Artists, claiming it had flooded the market with millions of defective copies of the platinum double LP Out of the Blue (#4, 1977), ELO's most elaborate tour was in 1978, when it traveled with a laser-equipped "spaceship" (some said it looked like a giant glowing hamburger) that opened with the group playing inside The Orchestra's live shows were also enhanced by taped backing tracks, and it was accused on more than one occasion of lip-synching the supposed "live parts" (interestingly in another decade this practice would be very common). In 1979 ELO stayed off the road completely (the first time it hadn't toured since 1972). Discovery (#5, 1979) went platinum nonetheless, yielding two hits with "Shine a Little Love" (#8, 1979) and "Don't Bring Me Down" (#4, 1979). In 1980 Lynne contributed an album side's worth of songs to the Olivia Newton-John movie Xanadu soundtrack (#4, 1980). Three of those songs, "I'm Alive" (#16, 1980), "All Over the World" (#13, 1980), and "Xanadu" (#8, 1980) were hits.

ELO toured the U.S. in late 1981 to promote its latest album, Time. Certified gold, Time (#16, 1981) featured the hit single "Hold On Tight" (#10, 1981). Still, it marked the start of ELO's commercial decline. Although it hit #1 in the U.K., Time didn't help draw U.S. fans to concert halls. Although each boasted a Top 20 single, neither Secret Messages (#36, 1983, contains "Rock 'n' Roll Is King" [#19, 1983]) and Balance of Power (#49, 1986, contains "Calling America" [#18, 1986]) revived mass interest. Between the release of these two, Bevan briefly joined Black Sabbath. By 1986 ELO was essentially the trio of Lynne, Bevan, and Tandy.

In the meantime, Lynne had become a sought-after record producer (Dave Edmunds' Information) and over the next few years would amass some impressive credits: George Harrison's Cloud Nine, Roy Orbison's Mystery Girl, Tom Petty's Full Moon Fever, among others. In 1988 he joined Harrison, Petty, Orbison, and Bob Dylan in the Traveling Wilburys [see entry]. His 1990 solo album was a U.K. Top 30 hit, but barely scraped onto the U.S. albums chart.

In 1991 a new, Bevan-led, Lynne-less version of the group (now known as ELO II or Electric Light Orchestra, Part II) released an eponymously titled album. The following year that group recorded a live greatest-hits album with the Moscow Symphony Orchestra. ELO II continued to tour. In early 2001 Lynne released his own new Electric Light Orchestra album, Zoom, which he wrote, produced, and performed himself with assistance from some of the celebrity musicians he had worked with over the years, including Ringo Starr and George Harrison.

The Electric Prunes

Formed 1965, Los Angeles, CA

James Lowe, Autoharp, harmonica, voc.; Mark Tulin, bass, kybds.; Ken Williams, gtr.; Preston Ritter, drums; Weasel Spagnola, gtr., voc.

1967—Electric Prunes (Reprise) (– Ritter; + Quint, drums) Underground (group disbanded; new lineup: John Herren [b. Elk City, OK], kybds.; Mark Kincaid [b. Topeka, KS], gtr., voc.; Ron Morgan, gtr.; Brett Wade [b. Vancouver, Can.], bass, flute, voc.; Richard Whetstone [b. Hutchinson, KS], drums, voc.) Mass in F Minor 1968—Release of an Oath: The Kol Nidre (– Herren) 1969—Just Good Old Rock 'n' Roll.

The Electric Prunes were actually two separate groups. The original was one of the first psychedelic bands from L.A. The Prunes signed to Repnse in 1966 and had a national hit with the reverb-heavy "I Had Too Much to Dream (Last Night)" (#11, 1966). They followed up with "Get Me to the World on Time" (#27) in 1967. For reasons unknown, the group disbanded, and a totally new band calling itself the Electric Prunes emerged in 1967 with Mass in F Minor and Release of an Oath in 1968, both the creations of writer/arranger David Axelrod. Their fifth LP, Just Good Old Rock 'n' Roll, was an attempt to return to roots music but was unsuccessful. The Electric Prunes again disbanded, this time for good.

Eleventh Dream Day

Formed 1983, Chicago, IL

Freakwater, formed 1983, Louisville, KY: Bean, gtr., voc.; Catherine Irwin, gtr., voc.; Dave Gay, bass. 1989—Freakwater (Amoeba) 1991—Dancing Underwater 1993—Feels Like the Third Time (Thrill Jockey) 1995—Old Paint 1998—Springtime 1999—Endtime.

Eleventh Dream Day is one of the Midwest's most enduring alternative bands, having latched onto Neil Young's mordant guitar aesthetic years before it was hip. Janet Beveridge Bean and Rick Rizzo met in 1981 when he was a student at the University of Kentucky at Lexington and she was a teenaged drummer. Rizzo had just discovered punk rock and taught himself to play guitar via the songbook of Young's album Zuma.

The couple (who married in the fall of 1988) moved to Chicago and formed Eleventh Dream Day with bassist Shu Shubat. In spring 1985 Shubat left and was replaced by Douglas McCombs; guitarist/songwriter Baird Figi also joined around this time, giving the band its Television-style twin-guitar sound. The band's first independent records introduced its flat, Americanist narratives (mostly penned by Rizzo) shot through with twisted guitar and an earnest country twang. Prairie School Freakout, recorded in one night with a worn-out, buzzing amp, caught the attention of Atlantic, which signed the band.

Beet, produced by Gary Waleik of Boston alt-rock band Big Dipper, was a modest major-label debut that spent five months on the college-radio charts. On Lived to Tell, Bean wrote and sang several of the best tracks. It was a solid, well-received album, but the band suffered a setback when, while touring to promote it, Figi quit the band. He was replaced by Matthew O'Bannon, Eleventh Dream Day's roadie and an old friend. The Jim Rondinelli-produced El Moodio featured the Rizzo-Bean duet "Makin' Like a Rug" and a cameo by guitarist Tara Key, of punk-pop combo Antietam. (Rizzo and Bean guested on Key's 1993 album Bourbon County.)

Atlantic dropped Eleventh Dream Day from its roster after El Moodio failed to sell well. Turning to producer John McEntire (who plays with McCombs in the "postrock" combo Tortoise [see entry]), the group released Ursa Major, a record that's less country and more experimental than its predecessors. Eighth continued in this vein, incorporating more guitar feedback into the mix. In 2000 Rizzo and Key released an album of instrumentals, Dark Edson Tiger.

Before Bean moved to Chicago, she had been playing country songs with her friend Catherine Ann Irwin. The two, along with Chicagoan Dave Gay on bass and a parade of sidemen on banjo, fiddle, and steel guitar, have continued to collaborate as Freakwater. The two women's unvarnished mountain harmonies and Irwin's incisive originals made the band one of the brightest lights of the '90s alt-country movement.

Missy "Misdemeanor" Elliott

Born Melissa Elliott, July 1, 1971, Portsmouth, VA
1997—Supa Dupa Fly (EastWest) 1999—Da Real World (The Gold Mind) 2001—Miss E... So Addictive.

One of the most influential artists in pop and R&B of the late '90s, Missy "Misdemeanor" Elliott established a formidable presence both behind the scenes (as a songwriter and/or producer for Whitney Houston, Mariah Carey, SWV, Lil' Kim, Jodeci, and Aaliyah, among others) and as a solo artist who toyed with a larger-than-life image in spoofy videos and outrageous costumes.

In the early '90s, Elliott formed the group Sista, taking a cue from the pioneering all-female rap group Salt-n-Pepa. After winning a string of high school talent shows, Sista garnered a contract with Elektra, via Jodeci member DeVante Swing's Swing Mob records. The group recorded an album that was never released, and Sista disbanded. Elliott, meanwhile, began writing and producing tracks for Jodeci [see entry] with friend Tim "Timbaland" Mosley. The pair enjoyed multiplatinum success working with teenage diva Aaliyah ("Are You That Somebody"), and though she was in demand as a producer and guest vocalist, Elliott got her shot at a solo career when she signed as a solo artist to Elektra's EastWest subsidiary in 1996. The arrangement included a production deal for her own company, the Gold Mind. Her debut album, Supa Dupa Fly (#3 pop, #1 R&B, 1997), quickly established Elliott as a colorful personality and a distinctive vocalist whose trademark was a contagiously playful sense of humor. The album's success was driven by several singles: "Sock It 2 Me" (#12 pop, #4 R&B, 1997) (with a B side, "The Rain [Supa Dupa Fly]," featuring a sample from Ann Peebles's Memphis soul classic "I Can't Stand the Rain"); "Beep Me 911" (#13 R&B, 1998); and "Hit 'Em wit da Hee" (#61 R&B, 1998). During summer 1998, Elliott toured as part of Lilith Fair (the first hip-hop artist to do so), and the following year released Da Real World (#10 pop, #1 R&B, 1999). The first two singles "She's a Bitch" (#90 pop, #30 R&B, 1999) and "All n My Grill" (#64 pop, #16 R&B, 1999) charted respectably, but "Hot Boyz" (#5 pop, #1 R&B, 1999), with guest raps from Nas, Eve and Q-Tip, became ubiquitous. Miss E... So Addictive launched the hit "Get Ur Freak On" (#7 pop, #3 R&B).

Ramblin' Jack Elliott

Born Elliott Charles Adnopoz, Aug. 1, 1931, New York, NY
 1962—Ramblin' Jack Elliott Sings Woody Guthrie and Jimmie Rodgers (Monitor) 1968—Young Brigham (Reprise) 1976—The Essential Ramblin' Jack Elliott (Vanguard) 1989—Hard Travelin' (Fantasy) 1995—Me & Bobby McGee (Rounder); South Coast (Red House) 1996—Ramblin' Jack (Topic) 1997—Kerouac's Last Dream (Appleseed); America (with Derral Adams) (A World of Music) 1998—Friends of Mine (Hightone) 1999—The Long Ride; Early Sessions (Tradition) 2000—Best of the Vanguard Years (Vanguard); The Ballad of Ramblin' Jack soundtrack.

Brooklyn-born Ramblin' Jack Elliott is one of the last roaming cowboy-troubadours, a distinction he earned by wandering in the West with Woody Guthrie shortly before the latter was hospitalized with terminal Huntington's chorea.

Elliott left home in 1946 to join the rodeo in Chicago, beginning years of traveling that provided the stories he told onstage. As early as 1953 Elliott was performing regularly in Greenwich Village's Washington Square Park, helping to lay groundwork for the early-'60s folk boom. In the late '50s he settled on the moniker "Ramblin' Jack" (after calling himself "Buck Elliott" for a while). He toured England and Europe for several years, jamming with traditional folk artists like Peggy Seeger and Ewan McColl and with British R&B stalwart Long John Baldry. He often performed Guthrie compositions ("Pretty Boy Floyd") and such flat-picking showcases as "Black Snake Moan."

Upon returning to the U.S. in 1961 Elliott found himself an old hand in the burgeoning folk renaissance, and his Vanguard debut album was received enthusiastically. Bob Dylan, also a Guthrie fan, was heavily influenced by Elliott, who recorded several Dylan songs in the '60s (claiming once that Dylan wrote "Don't Think Twice, It's All Right" for him). He was also part of Dylan's 1975 Rolling Thunder entourage.

Elliott recorded consistently through the '60s and '70s. In 1968 he performed at a star-studded memorial concert for Guthrie at Carnegie Hall. His best work can be found on compilations like Vanguard's Essential Jack Elliott and Folkways' Songs to Grow On (all Guthrie material). Although he didn't record any albums in the '80s (1989's Hard Travelin' was a single-disc reissue of two early-'60s albums for the Prestige label, Sings the Songs of Woody Guthrie and Ramblin' Jack Elliott), the latter-half of the '90s found him enjoying a career resurgence. His 1995 album, South Coast, won a Grammy for Best Traditional Folk Album. In 1998 Elliott released another Grammy-nominated set, Friends of Mine, which featured collaborations with John Prine, Tom Waits, Emmylou Harris, Nancy Griffith, Arlo Guthrie, Jerry Jeff Walker, Bob Weir, Guy Clark, Peter Rowan, and Rosalie Sorrels. The following year's The Long Ride (also nominated for a Grammy) featured Dave Van Ronk, Dave Alvin (of the Blasters), Tom Russell, and Mana Muldaur. In 1999 he received the National Medal of Arts at the White House, and the following year was the subject of a documentary filmed by his daughter Aiyana. The Ballad of Ramblin' Jack premiered at the 2000 Sundance Film Festival and won a Special Jury Prize for Artistic Achievement in Documentary Film.

Joe Ely

Born Feb. 9, 1947, Amarillo, TX
 1977—Joe Ely (MCA) 1978—Honky Tonk Masquerade 1979—Down on the Drag 1980—Live Shots 1981—Musta Notta Gotta Lotta 1984—High Res 1987—Lord of the Highway (HighTone) 1988—Dig All Night 1990—Live at Liberty Lunch (MCA) 1992—Love and Danger 1995—Letter to Laredo 1998—Twistin' in the Wind 2000—Live @ Antones (Rounder).
 With the Flatlanders: 1990—More a Legend Than a Band (Rounder).
 With Los Super Seven: 1998—Los Super Seven (RCA).

Joe Ely's band and his songs are rooted in the traditions of his native West Texas—honky-tonk, C&W, R&B, rockabilly, Western swing, and Tex-Mex. Outside of the Lubbock and Austin, Texas, club circuit, most of his early support came from the rock press until the Clash introduced him to their fans in 1980.

Ely began playing in rock & roll bands in his hometown of Lubbock at age 13. When he was 16, he dropped out of school to wander from Texas to California, Tennessee, New York, Europe, New Mexico, and back to Texas. He worked as a fruit picker, a circus hand, a janitor, a dishwasher, and an itinerant musician. On return trips to Lubbock, he played in bands with Jimmie Dale Gilmore [see entry], with whom he would collaborate off and on for the next three decades. Their best-known group effort, the Flatlanders (which also included noted Lubbock songwriter Butch Hancock), played old-timey country music and recorded an album in 1972 that was not widely released until 1990.

Back in Lubbock in 1974, Ely formed his own band with guitarist Jesse Taylor, steel guitarist Lloyd Maines, bassist Gregg Wright, and drummer Steve Keeton. They became local favorites, then began traveling the state honky-tonk circuit. In 1977 MCA signed Ely, and producer Chip Young took him and his band to Nashville to cut his first album. By then, Ely's repertoire included 300 songs, most his own or written by Gilmore or Hancock.

Ely's second album, the critically acclaimed Honky Tonk Masquerade, featured accordionist Ponty Bone and was even more multifarious than the first. Down on the Drag, produced by Bob Johnston (Bob Dylan, Aretha Franklin, Johnny Cash), focused his image as a tough-skinned-but-gentlehearted singer/songwriter but was no more appealing to radio programmers.

Ely picked up some valuable fans among musicians, however. Merle Haggard took him on a tour of Britain in 1979, and the next year the Clash asked him to open their Texas shows. The Clash's Joe Strummer invited him along for the rest of their American tour and back to England with them: Live Shots was recorded at Clash concerts in England. Due to low sales, Ely was dropped by MCA in the mid-'80s, and began recording for independent HighTone. MCA re-signed him in 1990, however, and promptly released Live at Liberty Lunch (#57 C&W), which documented an Ely performance at one of Austin's best clubs. With Love and Danger, Ely continued to forge his own sound from Texan raw materials, recording his own material as well as two songs by fellow Lonestar State songwriter Robert Earl Keen and a contribution from ex-Blaster Dave Alvin.

Letter to Laredo, a collection of ranchero-flavored story songs (highlighted by Tom Russell's cockfight ballad "Gallo del Cielo"), introduced flamenco guitarist Teyé to the Joe Ely Band and featured background vocals by Bruce Springsteen. Twistin' in the Wind (#55 C&W) continued in the same vein, but its disappointing sales resulted in Ely being dropped by MCA a second time. Nevertheless, 1998 proved a fruitful year for Ely. As part of the Tex-Mex supergroup Los Super Seven (which also included Freddy Fender and members of Los Lobos), he shared a Grammy Award for Best Mexican-American Music Performance. He also reteamed with Gilmore and Hancock to record "South Wind of Summer," the first new Flatlanders song in about 25 years, for the soundtrack to The Horse Whisperer. A newfound enthusiasm for writing together led to the trio's first-ever national tour in the spring of 2000 and talk of a possible new album. In the meantime, Ely released his third live album, Live @ Antones, that summer.

Emerson, Lake and Palmer

Formed 1970, England

Keith Emerson (b. Nov. 1, 1944, Todmorden, Eng.), kybds.; Greg Lake (b. Nov. 10, 1948, Bournemouth, Eng.), bass, gtr., voc.; Carl Palmer (b. Mar. 20, 1947, Birmingham, Eng.), drums, perc. 1970—Emerson, Lake and Palmer (Cotillion) 1971—Tarkus; Pictures at an Exhibition 1972—Trilogy 1973—Brain Salad Surgery (Manticore) 1974—Welcome Back, My Friends, to the Show That Never Ends—Ladies and Gentlemen, Emerson, Lake and Palmer 1977—*Works, vol. Dec. 29, 1947, Cirencester, Eng.], drums) Emerson, Lake and Powell (Polydor) (- Powell) 1987—(+ Palmer; - Palmer) 1988—(+ Robert Barry, gtr.) To the Power of Three (as 3) (Geffen) (- Barry) 1992—(+ Palmer) Black Moon (Victory) 1993—Live at the Royal Albert Hall; The Return of the Manticore 1994—In the Hot Seat 1997—Greatest Hits Live (King Biscuit Flower Hour) 1998—Then & Now (Eagle Entertainment). Greg Lake solo: 1981—Greg Lake (Chrysalis).

Emerson, Lake and Palmer ushered in the classical-flavored progressive rock of the early '70s. With Greg Lake's predominantly acoustic ballads becoming hit singles and Keith Emerson's keyboard excesses supplying pretensions, the trio was enormously popular in its time, although it never regained momentum after a 1975-77 hiatus.

The group was formed after Emerson, then leading the Nice [see entry], and Lake, formerly of King Crimson [see entry], jammed at the Fillmore West in 1969 while both were touring with their respective bands. Emerson had studied classical piano and later dabbled in jazz; he made his professional debut at 19 with British R&B singer Gary Farr and the T-Bones. Two years later he joined the VIPs, some of whose members later surfaced in Spooky Tooth; and in early 1967 he joined American soul singer P.P. Arnold's band, then headquartered in Europe. Emerson formed the Nice in 1967, and broke up the band to work with Lake, whose background included work with various local bands from the age of 12 (the Shame, the Gods, and later, King Crimson).

After plans to work with Jimi Hendrix Experience drummer Mitch Mitchell fell through, in June 1970 Emerson and Lake decided on Carl Palmer, a veteran of Chris Farlowe, Arthur Brown, and Atomic Rooster. ELP debuted on August 25; just four days later the trio appeared at the 1970 Isle of Wight Festival, playing Emerson's transcription of Mussorgsky's Pictures at an Exhibition, which later became the band's third album. Its debut LP, recorded in October 1970, went gold on the strength of Lake's "Lucky Man" (#48, 1971). FM radio play and flamboyantly bombastic concerts—with Emerson's electric keyboards flashing lights and whirling around, Palmer's $25,000 percussion set including xylophone, tympani, and gong as well as an elevator platform, and the usual lights and smoke—cemented the group's following.

Each of ELP's first nine albums went gold. Trilogy, which reached #5, contained the trio's highest-charting single, Lake's gentle "From the Beginning" (#39, 1972). In 1973 the group formed its own Manticore Records, which released albums by Italy's Premiata Fornena Marconi (P.F.M.) and sometime Lake lyricist Pete Sinfield, along with ELP's Brain Salad Surgery (which included the FM staple "Still . . . You Turn Me On"). ELP's 1973–74 world tour required 36 tons of equipment, including a quadrasonic sound system, lasers, and other paraphernalia, and was documented on the triple live set Welcome Back, My Friends, to the Show That Never Ends.

With 6 million in sales behind them, ELP took a two-year break, ending it in 1977 with the release of Works, volume I and, later that same year, volume II. Though advertised as ELP albums, both albums consisted largely of solo pieces, such as Lake's "C'est la Vie" and "I Believe in Father Christmas." A 1977 world tour called for an entourage of 115 people, including full orchestra and choir, but had to be drastically reduced when ticket sales didn't materialize. Shortly after the late-1978 release of Love Beach, the group's only LP to that point not to make the Top 40, ELP announced its breakup.

Of the three, Palmer enjoyed the most successful post-ELP career, joining the progressive-pop supergroup Asia in 1981 [see entry]. Emerson was sporadically active; he scored the 1981 thriller film Nighthawks and issued a little-known album of Christmas music in 1988, while Lake revived the solo career begun during the group's hiatus. He released an eponymously titled album in 1981, toured the U.S., and briefly took John Wetton's spot in Asia for a Far East tour.

Having witnessed fellow progressive rockers Yes' mid-'80s commercial revival, Emerson and Lake put ELP back together in 1985—only this time the P stood for veteran drummer Cozy Powell. Palmer wasn't interested in rejoining at the time. This lineup's lone album produced one memorable song, the single "Touch & Go" (#60, 1986). Following a U.S. tour, Powell left. This time when invited, Palmer accepted, but when rehearsals for a new ELP album proved unproductive, Emerson and Lake recorded instead as "3" with a California guitarist named Robert Barry. This configuration's 1988 LP, To the Power of Three, attracted little attention.

Emerson, Lake and Palmer tried once again, and came up with Black Moon, released in 1992 on the Victory label. Despite dismal sales, ELP discovered a vast audience for its live show: A nine-month 1992–93 world tour took the group to America, Europe, and South America. The Return of the Manticore box set featured new studio recordings of "Pictures at an Exhibition" as well as tracks from each member's pre-ELP days: the Nice's "Hang On to a Dream," King

Crimson's "21st Century Schizoid Man," and Arthur Brown's "Fire."

At the end of 1993, the band started to work on a new album with producer Keith Olsen (Fleetwood Mac, Pat Benatar), but the sessions had to be interrupted when Keith Emerson developed nerve problems in his right arm. The album, In the Hot Seat, had to be pieced together, since Emerson couldn't play, and it was an artistic and commercial failure. After the guitarist had recovered, the band resumed touring—which had always been their greatest strength anyway, as exemplified by the several live albums they have released over the years. The latest, Then & Now, is a 2-CD set combining a show taped at the 1974 California Jam concert and material from the 1997–1998 tour. In 1998 Palmer joined a re-formed Asia, officially belonging to both bands.

1991—Schubert Dip (EMI) 1992—Unexplained EP; Stigma 1995—Cha Cha Cha (Parlophone).

EMF emerged from the sleepy, rural Gloucester area in the West of England in spring 1991 with "Unbelievable," an international rock-dance smash that leapt to the top of the charts.

All five members had played in local bands before meeting at keyboardist Derry Brownson's Cinderford clothing store, Kix. Two months after forming, EMF played its first gig; band members later claimed the name stood for "Epsom Mad Funkers," not the oft-specified "Ecstasy Mother Fuckers" which gave the mistaken impression the group was part of England's rave scene. The group added techno elements to its rock sound only after discovering a cheap Casio sampler/sequencer in a local store.

EMF gradually built a reputation in England, busying fans from its native Forest of Dean area to London for club gigs. EMI signed the group in spring 1990; by the end of the year "Unbelievable" was a smash British hit, and it later went to #1 on the American pop charts, while EMF's debut album (#12, 1991)—titled with a pun on the classical composer and on the British candy sherbet dip^ualso—yielded a lesser hit in "Lies" (#18, 1991). The track drew the ire of Yoko Ono because it included a sample of Mark David Chapman, John Lennon's killer, reciting the lyrics to Lennon's tune "Watching the Wheels." The band paid $15,000 in an out-of-court settlement and deleted Chapman's voice from future editions of the song. While Tom Jones added "Unbelievable" to his stage show, Stigma failed to chart or yield a hit single.

The band returned in 1995 with Cha Cha Cha, which failed to generate any renewed commercial interest, effectively ending EMF's career.

Eminem

Born Marshall Bruce Mathers III, Oct. 17, 1974, St. Joseph, MO
 1997—Infinite (Web Entertainment) 1998—The Slim Shady EP
 1999—The Slim Shady LP (Aftermath/Interscope) 2000—The Marshall Mathers LP.

From Elvis Presley to N.W.A. to Marilyn Manson, many a rock and rap artist has flirted with and even flaunted controversy—but never with the uniform gusto and unapologetic panache of Eminem. On his 1999 major-label debut, The Slim Shady LP (#2 pop, #1 R&B), the Detroit-based white rapper spared nobody his verbal crosshairs, including not only his detractors but himself, Kim, his wife and the mother of his daughter, and his own mother (who later ended up filing a defamation of character lawsuit against him). The following year's doubly venomous The Marshall Mathers LP (#1 pop, #1 R&B) raised/lowered the bar even more, drawing intense protest from gay, lesbian, religious, and women's groups, even as it became the fastest-selling rap album of all time and topped many critics' year-end best-of lists.

Eminem was born Marshall Bruce Mathers III just outside of Kansas City, Missouri. He never knew his father and was raised along with a younger half-brother by his mother, Debbie Mathers-Biggs, who moved the family to a predominantly black neighborhood on the East side of Detroit when Mathers was 11. Although he was bullied and harassed by other kids on a regular basis, Mathers found a handful of friends who recognized his rhyming skills, and after failing ninth grade three years in a row, he dropped out of school and began competing in local freestyle throw-downs with his crew, the Dirty Dozen.

He released his first solo album, Infinite, on the local Web Entertainment label in 1996. It failed to garner much attention, but the followup, 1998's The Slim Shady EP, so impressed N.W.A. alum and rap icon Dr. Dre that he signed Eminem to his Interscope imprint, Aftermath. The EP was expanded into the Dre-coproduced The Slim Shady LP, which debuted on the pop chart at #3 in February 1999 and went on to sell 3 million copies and win Eminem a Grammy for Best Rap Album. Like the EP before it, the album showcased Eminem's maniacal double ego Slim Shady—a homicidal comedian through whom Mathers enacted his most outrageous and perverse revenge fantasies. The catchy lead single "My Name Is" (#18 R&B) was a huge crossover success, climbing to #36 on the Hot 100 and eventually winning a Grammy for Best Rap Solo Performance. Meanwhile, moral watchdogs loudly protested darker fare on the album like "'97 Bonnie and Clyde," in which Eminem sings lovingly to his baby daughter while enroute to dump her murdered mother in a body of water.

The combination of Eminem's unique, behind-the-beat nasal flow (many critics and artists, both black and white, hailed him as one of the best MCs in the world), crossover appeal, and willingness to attack and offend anything in his way without prejudice quickly established the young rapper as a seemingly unstoppable phenomenon—a fact further proven when The Marshall Mathers LP debuted at the top of the chart in 2000 with close to 1.7 million copies sold its first week in stores.

The monster crossover hit came with "The Real Slim Shady" (#4 pop, #11 R&B, 2000), while the Gay and Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation (GLADD) led the protest charge, extremely alarmed over a recurring theme of hateful homophobia throughout the album. The debate peaked when openly gay rocker—and outspoken Eminem fan—Elton John performed with the rapper at the 2001 Grammy Awards ceremony (where Eminem won his second Best Rap Album but lost Album of the Year to Steely Dan). Together, Eminem and John performed the song "Stan," a cautionary tale about a disturbed fan taking Eminem's violent Slim Shady fantasies too seriously. The album version of "Stan" drew its disarmingly pretty chorus from the song "Thank You" by English singer/songwriter Dido, whose own career subsequently took off due to the exposure.

In the midst of all his critical and commercial success and the controversy stirred up over his lyrics, Eminem was besieged by lawsuits and run-ins with the law. In addition to his mother's defamation suit, Mathers was also sued by his estranged wife (the girlfriend he "killed" in "'97 Bonnie and Clyde" and again in "Kim" from The Marshall Mathers LP). The couple later reconciled and his wife dropped the suit, but the pair eventually divorced in 2001. Meanwhile, Mathers pleaded guilty to charges of carrying a concealed weapon in a criminal case stemming from a June 2000 incident in which he allegedly assaulted a man outside of a nightclub for kissing his wife. He received two years' probation.

The Emotions

Formed 1968, Chicago, IL
 Wanda Hutchinson (b. Dec. 17, 1951, Chicago, voc.); Sheila Hutchinson (b. Jan. 17, 1953, voc.); Jeanette Hutchinson (b. 1951, Chicago, voc.)
 1969—So I Can Love You (Stax) 1970—(+ Theresa Davis [b. Aug. 22, 1950, Chicago, voc.]) Untouched 1976—Flowers (Columbia) 1977—(- J. Hutchinson; + Pamela Hutchinson [b. 1958, Chicago, voc.]) Sunshine (Stax) (+ J. Hutchinson); Rejoice (Columbia) 1979—Come Into Our World 1981—New Affair 1984—Sincerely (Red Label) 1985—If I Only Knew (Motown) 1996—Best of My Love: Best of the Emotions (Columbia Legacy).

A gospel-turned-soul family group in the Staples tradition, the Emotions have been entertaining black audiences since they could walk. Their biggest successes (like the #1 "Best of My Love") came in the late '70s under the guidance of Maurice White of Earth, Wind & Fire (with whom they recorded EW&F's 1979 hit "Boogie Wonderland").

Father/manager (and occasional guitarist and vocalist) Joe had his three oldest daughters performing in church as tots. Beginning in 1961 they traveled the gospel circuit as the Heavenly (later the Hutchinson) Sunbeams and occasionally toured with Mahalia Jackson. While attending Chicago's Parker High School in the mid-'60s, they became the Three Ribbons and a Bow (Papa Joe was the "beau") and began concentrating on more secular material, cutting an unsuccessful series of singles for several Midwestern labels, including Vee-Jay. While touring, they met the Staples, who helped them acquire a contract with Stax-Volt in 1968.

Rechristened the Emotions, the group enjoyed substantial R&B success and made occasional modest pop inroads—"So I Can Love You" (#39 pop, #3 R&B, 1969), "Show Me How" (#52 pop, #13 R&B, 1971)—through the early '70s. They appeared in the 1973 film Wattstax and toured with the Jackson 5, Sly and the Family Stone, B.B. King, Stevie Wonder, Bobby "Blue" Bland, and others.

When Stax folded in 1975, the Emotions signed with Maurice White's Kalimba Productions and thus got on the Columbia roster. White wrote the title track and produced their gold debut for the label, Flowers (which prominently featured Wanda's material and lead vocals), as well as the platinum followup, Rejoice (#7, 1977). They enjoyed hit singles with "I Don't Wanna Lose Your Love" (#51 pop, #13 R&B, 1976) and the Grammy-winning disco favorite "Best of My Love," and toured with Earth, Wind & Fire in 1976. Other hits were "Don't Ask My Neighbors" (#44 pop, #7 R&B, 1977) and "Smile" (#6 R&B, 1978). By the late '70s they were writing the bulk of their material themselves. The group recorded briefly for Motown before fizzling out.

The English Beat

Formed 1978, Birmingham, Eng.

Andy Cox (b. Jan. 25, 1956, Birmingham), gtr.; Everett Morton (b. Apr. 5, 1951, St. Kitts), drums; David Steele (b. Sep. 8, 1960, Isle of Wight, Eng.), bass; Dave Wakeling (b. Feb. 19, 1956, Birmingham), gtr., voc.

1979—(+ Ranking Roger [b. Roger Charley, Feb. 21, 1961, Birmingham], voc.); + Saxa [b. ca. 1930, Jam.], sax)

1980—I Just Can't Stop It (Sire) 1981—Wha'ppen 1982—Special Beat Service (I.R.S.) 1983—What Is Beat? 1991—The Beat Goes On 1995—b.p.m.—The Very Best of the English Beat (Arista).

General Public (Wakeling and Roger): 1984—... All the Rage (I.R.S.) 1986—Hand to Mouth 1995—Rub It Better (Epic).

Ranking Roger solo: 1988—Radical Departure (I.R.S.).

Dave Wakeling solo: 1991—No Warning (I.R.S.).

The English Beat (known simply as the Beat everywhere except the U.S., where an L.A. power-pop band also went by that name) originated in the British ska revival of the late '70s. Since the band's breakup in 1983, members of the group have gone on to fame as founders of Fine Young Cannibals.

The three white members of the multiracial Beat, Dave Wakeling, Andy Cox, and David Steele, began playing together in 1978. Reggae and other Jamaican rhythms tempered their punk-rock repertoire when they were joined by Everett Morton, a black West Indian who had drummed for Joan Armatrading. The quartet played its first gig at a Birmingham club in March 1979, opening for a punk group whose black drummer was Ranking Roger, soon after Roger began "toasting" (chanting over the songs) at its gigs and later joined the Beat as second vocalist.

The Specials released the Beat's debut record, a cover of Smokey Robinson's "Tears of a Clown" on their 2-Tone label in late 1979. For that recording session, the group enlisted Saxa, a 50-year-old Jamaican saxophonist who had played with the Beatles in their Liverpool years and with such ska stars as Prince Buster, Desmond Dekker, and Laurel Aitken. When the single went to #6 in the U.K., Saxa joined the Beat.

The group formed its own label, Go Feet, its first two releases, "Hands Off . . . She's Mine" and "Mirror in the Bathroom," made the U.K. Top 10, and the third, "Best Friend," made the Top 30. After recording a debut album, the Beat toured Europe accompanied by David "Blockhead" Wright, who became an unofficial member. The group returned to Birmingham to find I Just Can't Stop It at #3, U.K. Billed as the English Beat, it toured the U.S. in fall 1980, opening for the Pretenders and Talking Heads, and returned to tour as headliners in 1981 and '82. In Britain Wha'ppen (1981) went to #2, and "Too Nice to Talk To" hit #7, while "Drowning" and "Doors to Your Heart" made the Top 40.

Special Beat Service (#39, 1982) was the English Beat's first album to sell well in America, with the track "Save It for Later" receiving FM airplay. Shortly after its release, Saxa announced that he would no longer tour with the group. The remainder of the band split acrimoniously a year later. Cox and Steele went on to form Fine Young Cannibals [see entry], while Wakeling and Roger became General Public.

General Public recorded two albums, . . . All the Rage (1984) and Hand to Mouth (1986), which, even with the help of the Clash's Mick Jones (on Rage) and Saxa (on Hand), failed to make the U.K. or U.S. charts. The group disbanded in 1988, but regrouped in 1994 to record Rub It Better. Roger released a solo LP, 1988's Radical Departure, and with the Specials' Neville Staples toured as Special Beat in 1990.

Wakeling left the music business in 1989 after sessions for an album, The Happiest Man in the World, fell apart (an album, No Warning, was released in 1991). He moved to L.A., where he worked for Greenpeace, and sometimes joined Special Beat for Southern California dates. In 1999, billed as "the English Beat's Dave Wakeling," Wakeling opened for Hootie and the Blowfish, who had been covering his "Save It for Later." He has continued to play occasionally under that name. He also formed the Free Radicals. Plans for a revue featuring members of the Beat, General Public, and Fine Young Cannibals have yet to bear fruit.

Self-described "nonmusician" and studio experimentalist Brian Eno has greatly influenced an encyclopedia of styles—from art rock to punk to world music to techno. A founding member of Roxy Music, he went on to work as a solo artist and a producer/collaborator with U2, Talking Heads, David Bowie, Robert Fripp, and others. His series of ambient music records (by himself and with such composers as Jon Hassell, Harold Budd, and Laraaji) feature an atmospheric instrumental sound that found expression in both New Age and minimalist work. An aesthetic breakthrough, his tape-delay system, developed for Robert Fripp as "Frippertronics," insisted on the conscious use of recording technology as a method of composition and paved the way for the "sampling" used extensively in rap and techno.

The son of a postman and a Belgian emigrant, Eno first heard rock & roll at age seven in the R&B records his older sister got from American servicemen stationed at a nearby air force base. An art-school alumnus, Eno was influenced by contemporary composers John Tilbury and Cornelius Cardew and such minimalists as La Monte Young and Terry Riley; he also participated occasionally in a rock band called Maxwell Demon. In 1971 he helped start Roxy Music (see entry); their synthesizer player and eccentric visual centerpiece, he electronically "treated" the band's other instruments. After working on Roxy Music and For Your Pleasure, he departed in 1973 due to friction with songwriter Bryan Ferry.

After No Pussyfooting (with Robert Fripp), Eno put out two records of free-associative, noisily inventive songs—Here Come the Warm Jets and Taking Tiger Mountain by Strategy—and produced the Portsmouth Sinfonia, an orchestra of quasi-competent musicians playing discordant versions of light classics. His 1974 solo tour ended when he was hospitalized for a collapsed lung, although he appeared on two concert albums: June 1st, 1974 (with Kevin Ayers, John Cale, and Nico) and 801 Live (801 was a group led by Roxy Music guitarist Phil Manzanera).

Although Eno dabbles on all sorts of instruments, he is most accomplished on tape recorder, of which he owns dozens, and is fascinated by the happy accidents of the recording process. He created a deck of tarotlike cards called Oblique Strategies ("Emphasize the flaws"; "Use another color"), and has used them to make artistic decisions.

In 1975 Eno started Obscure Records to release his tapes and works by other composers. His many collaborations of the decade included Evening Star with Robert Fripp; an album by Robert Calvert of Hawkwind; a David Bowie trilogy (Low, "Heroes", and Lodger); albums with the German synthesizer band Cluster. His concurrent production work included Talking Heads (More Songs About Buildings and Food; Fear of Music; Remain in Light); debuts for Ultravox (Ultravox!) and Devo (Q: Are We Not Men? A: We Are Devo!); and a no-wave compilation featuring DNA, Mars, the Contortions, and Teenage Jesus and the Jerks, entitled No New York.

Under his own name, Eno has recorded ambient music albums (Discreet Music, Music for Films, and Music for Airports, which was broadcast for a while at New York's LaGuardia Airport), pop albums (Before and After Science and, with John Cale, Wrong Way Up); and a Top 30 album (My Life in the Bush of Ghosts, which lent a techno edge to the fast-developing genre of world music).

In 1980 Eno began a partnership with producer Daniel Lanois that proved as fruitful as his alliances with Fripp and Talking Heads. Working on Voices with Eno's brother, Roger, and The Plateaux of Mirror with minimalist composer Harold Budd, the pair forged a path into unexplored sonic territory. They went on to craft a new sound for U2, producing the Irish quartet's albums The Unforgettable Fire and The Joshua Tree. For Eno, long regarded as a cult figure, this was an uncharacteristically high-profile enterprise; his collaboration on U2's Achtung Baby and Zooropa saw him moving the rock band in a quasi-ambient direction and also employing industrial noise touches.

By the 1990s, Eno was an established voice in a range of contemporary musics. In Low Symphony, composer Philip Glass spun off themes and variations of Bowie's Low, a work indelibly marked by Eno's stamp; the ambient techno bands like the Orb and Irresistible Force owed an obvious debt to Eno. He has also long been interested in other media, his video installations having been exhibited at the Venice Biennale and the Pompidou Centre in Paris, and his 1996 autobiography, A Year (With Swollen Appendices) having provided an index of his omnivorous interests. He has also developed computer software that facilitates his interest in self-evolving compositions. As composer, producer, keyboardist, and singer, he is responsible less for a new sound in pop than for a new way of thinking about music—as an atmosphere, rather than a statement, an experiment in sound, rather than a virtuosic expression. Combining the cerebral qualities of European high culture with the technological outlook of a futurist, he has also been responsible for an aesthetic movement that incorporates both Western and Third World sounds.

En Vogue

Formed July 18, 1988, Oakland, CA

 (b. Sep. 5, 1966, Houston, TX), voc.; Dawn Robinson (b. Nov.

 1990—Born to Sing (Atlantic) 1991—Remix to Sing
 (EastWest) 1992—Funky Divas 1993—Runaway Love EP
 1997—(– Robinson) EV3 (Elektra/Asylum) 1999—Best of En
Vogue (WEA) 2000—Masterpiece Theater.
 Terry Ellis solo: 1995—Southern Gal (East/West).
 Dawn Robinson with Lucy Pearl: 2000—Lucy Pearl (Pookie).

With its tight four-part harmonies, provocative choreography, shared leads, and retro glamour, En Vogue revived the R&B girl-group tradition. Cindy Herron, Maxine Jones, Terry Ellis, and Dawn Robinson barely knew one another before auditioning for a group being assembled by Bay Area producers Denzil Foster and Thomas McElroy, whose previous credits included Timex Social Club ("Rumors"), Club Nouveau ("Lean on Me"), and Tony! Toni! Toné! They envisioned rejuvenating R&B with hip-hop rhythms, and their New Jack Swing grooves raised En Vogue above the slew of contemporary girl groups (e.g., Sweet Sensation, Exposé).

En Vogue, then just Vogue, sang two songs on FM. Foster and McElroy's Quincy Jones-style concept album. The quartet recorded Born to Sing (#21) in fall 1989. After its release the following spring, the album went platinum, led by the single "Hold On" (#2). En Vogue was nominated for a Grammy and toured with Freddie Jackson and Hammer

That was just a prelude to En Vogue's stunning success with the multiplatinum Funky Divas (#8, 1992), whose Foster and McElroy-produced mix of pop, R&B, rock, rap, and reggae included the hit singles "My Lovin' (You're Never Gonna Get It)" (#2, 1992) and "Free Your Mind" (#8, 1992). Runaway Love (#49 pop, #16 R&B, 1993) featured new versions of tracks from Funky Divas, as well as "Whatta Man," where the women provided the chorus to raps by Salt-n-Pepa.

The group's music and vocals were widely praised by critics, but En Vogue's visual style also played a role. Like its stylistic predecessor, the Supremes, En Vogue performed in chic designer costumes connoting a sexy elegance. In concert the group pays tribute to divas like Aretha, Chaka Khan, and Patti LaBelle. Their glamour has paid off well in the video age: Spike Lee directed their Diet Coke commercial.

Part of En Vogue's image is its unity. Members trade off star vocal turns and cultivate a mystique of separate-but-equal personalities. They profess sister-like affection, and although Cindy Herron, a former Miss Black California, has acted since age 11 (including a role in the film Juice), only one of the singers has flirted with a solo career since En Vogue's formation. Not long after the release of Runaway Love, though, the group took a three-year sabbatical, in part due to conflict among the four members and between the women and their managers Herron and Jones each gave birth to a child, while Ellis made a critically acclaimed solo album, Southern Gal (1995), that didn't sell particularly well.

Most significantly, Robinson left the group to sign a solo deal with Dr. Dre's Aftermath Records (see N.W.A. entry). Herron, Jones, and Ellis carried on as trio, releasing EV3 (#8), an album that featured Robinson on several tracks, including lead vocals on the platinum single "Don't Let Go (Love)" (#2, 1996). The album yielded two other pop hits, "Whatever" (#16, 1997), a song written and produced by Babyface, and "Too Gone, Too Long" (#33, 1997), a Diane Warren power ballad. "No Fool No More" (#57, 1998) appeared in the Frankie Lyman biopic Why Do Fools Fall in Love. In 2000 En Vogue released Masterpiece Theater. Robinson resurfaced as a member of Lucy Pearl, a trio that also included former members of A Tribe Called Quest (DJ Ali Shaheed Muhammad) and Tony! Toni! Toné! (Raphael Saadiq).

Enya

Born Eithne Ní Bhraonain, May 17, 1961, Gweedore, County Donegal, Ire.

1986—Enya (Atlantic) 1987—The Celts (Warner Bros.)
 1988—Watermark (Geffen) 1991—Shepherd Moons (Reprise)
 1995—The Memory of Trees 1997—Paint the Sky With Stars: The Best of Enya 2000—A Day Without Rain.

Enya began her professional career playing keyboards in the successful Insh family act Clannad but eventually achieved greater fame as a solo artist. Combining elements of classical, New Age, and traditional Insh folk music and lending her ethereal voice to lyrics that incorporated both English and

Enya

Gaelic (and sometimes Latin). Enya has produced melodic, gently haunting material that has been better received by New Age—disdaining critics and pop fans than anyone could have expected, making her the second best-selling Irish artist after U2.

One of nine children born to a couple of musicians (her father led the Slieve Foy Band, a noted Irish show band) in a Gaelic-speaking household, Enya received classical piano training during her youth. She joined the group Clannad (Gaelic for "family") in 1979, three years after it was formed by a few of her brothers, sisters, and uncles. In 1982 Enya quit the band—whose theme music for a variety of television shows had by then landed it on the pop charts—in hopes of pursuing what she saw as a more personal, less conventional musical vision. Enya's 1986 debut, composed of music she had originally written for a BBC-TV documentary series, The Celts (which was released as a soundtrack), garnered little attention. But its texturally similar successor, 1988's Watermark (#25), yielded a #1 single in the U.K., "Orinoco Flow (Sail Away)," which reached #24 in the U.S. and sold 3 million copies worldwide. Enya wrote the melodies and played all of the instruments on her recordings, while former Clannad manager Nicky Ryan served as her producer/arranger, and his wife Roma Ryan contributed lyrics. In 1991 Enya topped the success of Watermark with her third album, Shepherd Moons, which went to #17 on the U.S. pop chart.

The Memory of Trees (#9, 1995) was Enya's third consecutive album to go multiplatinum in the U.S. With the release of her mostly greatest-hits album, Paint the Sky With Stars, in 1997, the singer—who was notorious for not touring and rarely giving interviews—performed on late-night talk shows and spoke with the media about her music, though her personal life remained a mystery. She also played for the Queen of England, the King of Denmark, and the Pope in the late '90s. Though the general public may never hear Enya live in concert, her unique, ethereal sound has been used to evoke a spiritual mood in several films, including L.A. Story, Far and Away, and The Age of Innocence. The platinum A Day Without Rain reached #17 in 2001.

EPMD

Formed 1986, Brentwood, NY

Erick Sermon (a.k.a. E Double E, b. Nov. 25, 1968, Bayshore, NY), voc.; Parrish Smith (a.k.a. PMD, b. May 13, 1968, Smithtown, NY), voc., programmer.

1988—Strictly Business (Fresh) 1989—Unfinished Business
1991—Business as Usual (Def Jam) 1992—Business Never Personal (RAL/Def Jam) 1997—Back in Business 1999—Out of Business.

Erick Sermon with Def Squad (Sermon; Redman, voc.; Keith Murray, voc.): 1998—El Nine O (Def Jam).

PMD solo: 1994—Shadé Business (Def Jam).

Once described as "the rap equivalent of a rock & roll garage band," EPMD (stands for "Erick and Parrish Making Dollars") got into the hip-hop business not to spout its political agenda, but to have fun and get paid.

Erick Sermon and Parrish Smith grew up together on Long Island, home to rapper's Eric B. and Rakim, De La Soul, and Public Enemy's Flavor Flav. In 1987, while on a college break, Smith (who played tight end for Southern Connecticut State University's football team) recorded with Sermon the duo's raps, which they had first performed together the previous year. EPMD immediately released the songs as a 12-inch single ("It's My Thing" b/w "You're a Customer") on Sleeping Bag (a subsidiary of independent Fresh Records), which sold 500,000 copies. Within six weeks of its release, Strictly Business had topped the R&B LPs chart (#1, 1988) and gone gold. Hits included "You Gots to Chill" (#22 R&B, 1988) and "Strictly Business" (#25 R&B, 1988).

EPMD's initial sound blended suburban angst with the hardcore edge of their inner-city rap brethren. The group's self-produced raw, bass-heavy rhythm tracks were fortified liberally by sampled loops (Steve Miller's "Fly Like an Eagle," Bob Marley's "I Shot the Sheriff"). Critics pegged Sermon's slurred vocal delivery as everything from "cotton-mouthed" to sounding like he was "rapping through a mouthful of marbles."

As its title suggests, Unfinished Business offered more of the same. By the early '90s, with the vast popularity of gangsta rap, EPMD acknowledged the style by injecting Business as Usual with a harder edge, and it paid off. The album went to #36 on the pop chart and scored hits with "Gold Digger" (#14 R&B, 1991) and "Rampage" (#30 R&B, 1992), the latter a collaboration with L.L. Cool J. In 1992 the duo released Business Never Personal (#14 pop, #5 R&B), which contained the hit "Crossover" (#42 pop, #14 R&B, 1992). Sermon and Smith formed a production team, working with K-Solo, Das EFX, and Redman, and put together the Hit Squad package tour.

In early 1993 EPMD called it quits, according to Billboard, reportedly over financial disagreements so severe that one member of the duo allegedly hired people to break into the other's home to resolve the matter. Both Sermon and Smith then launched independent careers that included Sermon's Def Squad posse of acts (Redman, K-Solo, and Keith Murray) and the management of Das EFX and other acts via Smith's Shuma Entertainment. Sermon's No Pressure (#16 pop, #2 R&B, 1993) charted with the single "Stay Real" (#92 pop, #52 R&B). Smith (now just PMD after his moniker, Parrish Mad Deep) continued to stay in the business with Shadé Business (#12 R&B, 1994). Sermon also joined Redman and Murray for a Def Squad album, 1998's El Nine O.

The MC duo reunited as EPMD to record 1997's Back in Business (#4 R&B), which featured a more stripped-down sound and earned mixed reviews. It was followed two years later by Out of Business (#13 pop). By 1999, both had also become devout Christians. And that same year, Sermon launched his own Def Squad label (in a deal with Dreamworks/Universal), debuting with Dave Hollister's Ghetto Hymns. He also worked as a producer on new discs by Redman and Murray.

Hits (Sire) 1994—I Say I Say I Say (Mute/Elektra) 1995—

Erasure (Elektra) 1997—Cowboy (Maverick).

After rising to prominence in England as one half of the techno-pop duo Yazoo, songwriter and synthesizer ace Vince Clarke formed Erasure, another two-man electronic music outfit that found him paired with a distinctive, chansmatic singer. As the voice of Erasure, Andy Bell became the flamboyant foil to Clarke's shy-wizard persona. Bell was one of the first openly gay pop entertainers—he chose not to change the gender of pronouns in the band's cover versions of Ike and Tina Turner's "River Deep, Mountain High" and Abba's "Gimme Gimme Gimme (A Man After Midnight)"; his gender-bending theatricality defined Erasure's live performances as much as his high-pitched voice and the danceable, synth-drunk songs that he and Clarke collaborated on established the band's overall sound.

An original member of Depeche Mode, Clarke left that group early on to form Yazoo (known as Yaz in the U.S.) with vocalist Alison Moyet [see entry]. Yazoo released two critically acclaimed albums. 1982's Upstairs at Eric's (#2 U.K.) and 1983's You and Me Both (#1 U.K.), that were successful in England but never surpassed cult-favorite status in America. When Moyet decided to embark on a solo career, Clarke teamed up briefly with Irish singer Feargal Sharkey in the Assembly. Then, in 1985, Clarke placed a blind ad for a vocalist in a British music paper. Bell responded and was selected from more than 40 applicants.

Erasure's first album, 1986's Wonderland (#71 U.K.), was a commercial failure that led some critics and Yazoo fans to compare Bell's voice unfavorably with Moyet's warm, husky alto. The Circus was better received and reached #6 on the English charts—thus vindicating Bell, whose creative input was greater on the sophomore effort. The following year, a third album, The Innocents, hit the top of the U.K. charts (as did the next three LPs), and two of its singles—"Chains of Love" and "A Little Respect"—nearly entered the U.S. Top 10, peaking at #12 and #14, respectively.

Erasure's only other Top 40 song to date was 1994's "Always" (#20), but the band continued to attract attention throughout most of the '90s for its outrageous stage shows, which featured Bell in gaudy drag costumes, paying homage to everyone from Tammy Wynette to Judy Garland. In 1992 Erasure paid tribute to a group of Swedish songbirds with Abba-esque, an Abba tribute EP. Later that year, Clarke and Bell released a compilation of their "first 20 hits," most of which deserved to be classified as such in England—where many of their albums hit the top slot—more than in the States. The duo continued to record and tour together, their contrast in personalities oddly contributing to Erasure's longevity. Clarke has said that he and Bell have never had an argument.

Eric B. and Rakim

Formed 1985, New York, NY

Eric B. (b. Eric Barrier, Nov. 8, ca. 1965, Elmhurst, NY), DJ; Rakim (b. William Griffin Jr., Jan. 28, ca. 1968, Long Island, NY), voc.

1987—Paid in Full (4th & Broadway/Island) 1988—Follow the Leader (Uni) 1990—Let the Rhythm Hit 'Em (MCA) 1992—Don't Sweat the Technique.

Eric B. solo: 1995—Eric B. (Nine).

Rakim solo: 1997—18th Letter/Book of Life (Uptown/Universal) 1999—The Master (PolyGram).

Hip-hop trailblazers Eric B. and Rakim's first single, "Eric B. Is President" (#48, 1986), sparked early debate on the legality of unauthorized, uncredited sampling when James Brown sued to prevent the duo's use of a fragment of his music. It also established Brown's back catalog as a hip musical mining ground for a new generation of hip-hop programmers.

With Rakim's relaxed vocal delivery ("Microphone Fiend," "Paid in Full") and rhymes that have been described as "existential," together with Eric B.'s deft turntable manipulation, the duo became one of the most acclaimed hip-hop acts of the late '80s. The two met in 1985 when Eric Barrier was working as a DJ at New York City radio station WBLS and looking for an MC to rap over his turntable work. A year later they released "Eric B. Is President" (#48 R&B, 1986) on the independent Harlem label Zakia.

Paid in Full (#58 pop, #8 R&B) appeared in 1987 with a new mix of the single, as well as songs such as "I Know You Got Soul" (#64 R&B, 1987) and "I Ain't No Joke" (#38 R&B, 1987). The duo's subsequent three albums reached the Top 40, with Follow the Leader peaking at #22, Let the Rhythm Hit 'Em at #32, and Don't Sweat the Technique at #22. In 1991 Eric B. and Rakim scored another hit with the theme to House Party 2, "What's on Your Mind" (#34 R&B). The duo, who were never close friends, parted ways after Don't Sweat the Technique, but not before running into another legal dispute over their sampling of Funkadelic's "No Head, No Backstage Pass," from Follow the Leader's "Lynx of Fury."

In 1995 Eric B. released a self-titled debut solo album, but spent most of the '90s as a producer and executive for Street Life Records. After suffering years of legal wrangling and label mishaps, Rakim finally reemerged in 1997 with the acclaimed 18th Letter/Book of Life (#4 pop, #1 R&B, 1997)—a two-disc set split between new material and classic Eric B. and Rakim cuts. That same year, Rakim performed a duet with Mobb Deep for the Hoodlum soundtrack. The rapper returned two years later with The Master, which eschewed ghetto stories for a more mystical approach.

Roky Erickson/13th Floor Elevators

Born Roger Kynard Erickson, July 15, 1947, Dallas, TX
 1980—Roky Erickson and the Aliens (CBS, U.K.) 1981—The Evil One (415) 1985—Fire in My Bones (Texas Archive Recordings) 1986—Don't Slander Me (Pink Dust); Gremlins Have Pictures 1987—I Think of Demons (Edsel, U.K.)
 1990—Reverend of Karmic Youth (Skyclad) 1991—You're Gonna Miss Me: The Best of Roky Erickson (Restless)
 1992—Love to See You Bleed (Swordfish); Mad Dog
 1995—All That May Do My Rhyme (Trance Syndicate); Roky Erickson & Evilhook Wildlife (Sympathy for the Record Industry)
 1999—Never Say Goodbye (Emperor Jones) 2000—Hide Behind the Sun (Aim); Live at the Ritz (New Rose, Fr.); Beauty & the Beast (Sympathy for the Record Industry).
 With the 13th Floor Elevators, formed 1965, Austin, TX:
 Erickson, voc.; Tommy Hall, jug; Benny Thurman, bass; John Ike Walton, drums; Stacy Sutherland (d. 1977, TX), gtr.
 1967—The Psychedelic Sounds of the 13th Floor Elevators (International Artists) (– Thurman; – Walton; + Danny Thomas, drums; + Danny Galindo, bass) 1967—Easter Everywhere
 1968—Thirteenth Floor Elevators Live; Bull of the Woods
 1987—Elevator Tracks (Texas Archive Recordings).

Roky Erickson made his mark in the '60s Texas-based psychedelic band the 13th Floor Elevators, whose garage classic "You're Gonna Miss Me" (#56, 1966) was the closest the group got to a hit single. The Elevators disbanded in 1969 after Erickson was arrested on charges of marijuana possession. He spent three years in Rusk State Hospital for the criminally insane. Since the 1970s, Erickson, who sings in a high, soaring tenor voice, has had an erratic solo career and endured schizophrenia.

The son of an architect and amateur opera singer, Erickson took up piano at five and guitar at 12. Not long after quitting Travis High School, he wrote "You're Gonna Miss Me," the protopunk tune that was originally recorded by Erickson's combo, the Spades, in 1965. The song caught the attention of jug player/lyricist Tommy Hall, who asked Erickson to join the 13th Floor Elevators, the band Hall had founded with the purpose of spreading psychedelia. After the Elevators rerecorded and released "You're Gonna Miss Me," they got a deal with International Artists, their debut album Psychedelic Sounds sold 140,000 copies. The band released other singles and albums but had started getting harassed by police for their heavy marijuana and LSD use. In 1969 Erickson was busted for possession of a small quantity of marijuana, pleaded not guilty by reason of insanity, and was sentenced to Rusk, where he was diagnosed as schizophrenic, subjected to electroshock therapy, and treated with Thorazine and other powerful psychotropic medications. While inside, he also formed a band with fellow inmates called the Missing Links.

By 1973 Erickson was out of the hospital and performing again. He wrote the first in a series of songs based on horror themes, including "I Walk With a Zombie," and recorded "Red Temple Prayer (Two-Headed Dog)," which had a profound influence on punk but did not chart. Due to ill-advised management, publishing, and legal decisions, numerous unauthorized releases of his music, from which he has not received royalties, have circulated since the early '80s. In 1982 Erickson signed an affidavit proclaiming himself "inhabited" by a Martian, two years later he stopped recording, and in 1987 he ceased performing.

By the early '90s, Erickson was living on $200 monthly Social Security checks and help from friends. In January 1990 he was arrested on mail theft charges, which were later dropped. Also in 1990 a group of high-profile bands including R.E.M., ZZ Top, and the Butthole Surfers appeared on the album Where the Pyramid Meets the Eye: A Tribute to Roky Erickson (Sire). Three years later, in 1993, Erickson reemerged in a brief performance at the Austin Music Awards, and reentered the studio later that year, recording six new songs, with assistance from Austin guitarists Charlie Sexton and Paul Leary (Butthole Surfers). Following the release of a vinyl single at the end of 1994, a new album called All That May Do My Rhyme was released on Butthole Surfers drummer King Coffey's Trance Syndicate label in 1995. It was Erickson's first collection of new songs in more than a decade. At the same time, Henry Rollins published Opens II: The Lyrics of Roky Erickson through his 2 13 61 Publications. Never Say Goodbye gathered previously unreleased lo-fi demos (including six tracks recorded by his mother while he was at Rusk) in 1999. And in early 2000 Erickson returned with Hide Behind the Sun.

Esquerita

Born Eskew Reeder Jr. or Esquerita Milochi, New Orleans, LA; died 1986, New York, NY 1987—Vintage Voola (Norton) 1990—Esquerita (Capitol).

Esquerita was one of the most original, colorful, and mysterious figures in rock & roll, a pianist and singer whose look and style most likely influenced Little Richard's. Little is known of Esquerita's life, and the veracity of some of his claims is hard to establish. Still, there is no denying that he was among if not the first to combine a pumping piano style, falsetto screams and whoops, and racy lyrics into some very wild early rock & roll records. Visually as well, it would seem that Esquerita originated the flamboyant mannerisms and piled-high pompadour later adopted by Little Richard, who was still recording gospel records when his and Esquerita's paths first crossed. Among his releases—all of which have become highly valued collectors' items—were "Oh Baby," "Rockin' the Joint," "I Need You," "Batty Over Hattie," and "Esquerita Voola." He wrote Jim Lowe's 1956 #1 hit "The Green Door," but Esquerita himself never even made the Top 100 singles chart. Esquenta eventually moved to New York City, where he performed on occasion. He died of AIDS in 1986.

David Essex

Born David Albert Cook, July 23, 1947, London, Eng. 1973—Rock On (Columbia) 1974—David Essex 1975—All the Fun of the Fair 1976—Out on the Street 1979—Imperial Wizard (Mercury) 1980—Hot Love 1981—Be-Bop the Future 1995—Living in England (Cleveland International).

In the mid-'70s English pop star David Essex inspired teenybopper hysteria in his homeland. While he was able to overcome that image there and establish himself as an actor while continuing to chart singles, here in America, he is best known for his 1974 gold single "Rock On."

Essex grew up in London's East End, and at 14 he started playing the drums with a succession of amateur bands; by the time he graduated from high school he had become a lead singer. In the late-'60s theater columnist-turned-manager Derek Bowman put Essex through voice and dance training and then helped him land a role in the London production of The Fantasticks. He moved on to rave reviews as Jesus Christ in Godspell, which opened in November 1971 in London. Soon he was a teen pop idol. Essex had a hand in writing most of his U.K. hits ("Lamplight," "Gonna Make You a Star," "Hold Me Close," and "Rock On"). Most were produced by former commercial jingles writer Jeff Wayne.

In late 1974 Essex toured Britain, where young fans greeted him with hysteria. Essex made two films based on the rags-to-riches-to-rags theme of rock stardom: That'll Be the Day (1973), in which he costarred with Ringo Starr and Keith Moon of the Who, and Stardust (1975), in which he shared billing with Starr and Dave Edmunds. He sang Paul McCartney's "Yesterday" in All This and World War II, but was forced to turn down a role in the Who's Tommy because of shooting conflicts with Stardust. None of these films had much impact in the U.S., but "Rock On" garnered a Grammy nomination.

His reputation as a teenybopper singer proved unshakable in the late '70s despite attempts to attract a more mature audience (e.g. Out on the Street). He played Che Guevara in the British stage production of Evita in 1978 and has since had several more hit singles in Britain. He starred in the film Silver Dream Machine, appeared in Childe Byron, and starred in the musical Mutiny, based on Mutiny on the Bounty. Among his U.K. Top 10 hits are "Rollin' Stone" (1975), "Oh What a Circus" (1978), "Silver Dream Machine (Part 1)" (1980), and "A Winter's Tale" (1982), "Tahiti" (1983). In 1989 "Rock On" was revived in America via teen idol Michael Damian's #1 cover version. Essex continues to perform and release albums, primarily in the U.K. Throughout the '90s he occasionally worked on musical productions and scores for ice ballet. In 1999 the Queen presented him with an OBE for his chanty services in Africa.

Gloria Estefan

Born Gloria Fajardo, Sep. 1, 1957, Havana, Cuba With Miami Sound Machine, formed 1975, Miami, FL: (Estefan, voc.; Enrique "Kiki" Garcia, drums; Juan Marcos Avila, bass; Emilio Estefan Jr., kybds., perc.; Raul Murciano, sax, kybds.; Mercı Murciano, voc.): 1982—(- M. Murciano) 1984—Eyes of Innocence (Epic) 1985—Primitive Love 1987—Let It Loose. Gloria Estefan solo: 1989—Cuts Both Ways (Epic) 1991—Into the Light 1992—Greatest Hits 1993—Mi Tierra 1994—Hold Me, Thrill Me, Kiss Me 1995—Abriendo Puertas; Christmas Through Your Eyes 1996—Destiny 1998—Gloria! 1999—20th Anniversary 2000—Alma Caribeña 2001—Greatest Hits, vol. 2.

Gloria Estefan rose out of Miami's Cuban community to become a top-selling international pop star, first with the dance band Miami Sound Machine and then with her own ballads. She moved to Miami in 1959 when her father, a bodyguard to Cuban president Fulgencio Batista, fled the Castro-led revolution. She spent her early life nursing her father, who was stricken with multiple sclerosis after serving in Vietnam; she sang for hours in her bedroom to release her emotions.

In October 1975 Gloria Fajardo and her cousin Mercı Murciano auditioned for keyboardist Emilio Estefan's wedding band, the Miami Latin Boys. They passed, and the rechristened Miami Sound Machine became one of the most popular groups in Miami, playing a mix of disco-pop and salsa (Merci left the band in a dispute in 1982.) In 1978 Emilio and Gloria married, and the following year Miami Sound Machine released the first of several Spanish-language albums for CBS's Hispanic label. It became popular in Latin markets in the U.S. and overseas, but the band didn't cross over until Estefan sang in English on Eyes of Innocence; in 1984 "Dr. Beat" became a top dance hit in Europe.

In 1985 Miami Sound Machine released its first all-English album. Primitive Love (#21, 1985) went triple platinum, with three Top 10 hits: "Conga" (#10, 1985), "Bad Boy" (#8, 1986), and "Words Get in the Way" (#5, 1986). Most of the songs were written, arranged, and performed by "the Three Jerks," Joe Galdo, Rafael Vigil, and Lawrence Dermer. At this point Miami Sound Machine became two bands, the studio group and the touring band, which included original members Kiki Garcia and Marcos Avila. Gloria was the common denominator (Emilio had moved from keyboards to management.)

The band was billed as Gloria Estefan and the Miami Sound Machine on their triple-platinum Let It Loose (#6, 1987), which included the hits "Rhythm Is Gonna Get You" (#5, 1987), "Can't Stay Away From You" (#6, 1987), "Anything for You" (#1, 1988), and "1-2-3" (#3, 1988). It was Estefan's last record with the Miami Sound Machine; remaining original member Garcia left after the band's 1988 tour. Estefan wrote most of the lyrics and some of the music on her solo debut, Cuts Both Ways (#8, 1989), which yielded her second #1 hit, "Don't Wanna Lose You" (1989), as well as "Here We Are" (#6, 1989).

On March 20, 1990, while traveling between shows on a snowy Pennsylvania highway, Estefan's tour bus was hit by a tractor-trailer. Her husband and son were slightly injured, but one of Estefan's vertebrae was broken. She recovered from surgery that included inserting eight-inch metal rods in her back. In 1991 her song about the accident, "Coming Out of the Dark," went #1, the double-platinum Into the Light (#5) also yielded the hits "Can't Forget You" (#43, 1991) and "Live for Loving You" (#22, 1991), which were especially popular on adult contemporary radio formats. In 1993 Estefan paid tribute to her Latin roots with her first solo all-Spanish album, Mi Tierra (#27), which features cameos from such stars of Cuban music as Nestor Torres, Luis Enrique, Israel (Cachao) Lopez, Paquito D'Rivera, Arturo Sandoval, and Tito Puente. Hold Me, Thrill Me, Kiss Me (#9, 1994) yielded the hit singles "Turn the Beat Around" (#13, 1994) and "Everlasting Love" (#27, 1995).

Abriendo Puertas (1995), a dance record that mined grooves from all over the African diaspora, was Estefan's second Spanish-language LP in two years. Since then she has worked mainly in an adult contemporary vein. "Reach" (#42, 1996), a billowy ballad cowritten by Diane Warren, was one of the songs selected for the 1996 Olympic Games in Atlanta. The single also appeared on Destiny, along with "You'll Be Mine (Party Time)" (#70, 1996) and "I'm Not Giving You Up" (#40, 1996). Gloria! (#23, 1998) produced two more hits, "Heaven's What I Feel" (#27, 1998) and "Don't Let This Moment End" (#76, 1998). In 1999, she made her acting debut in Music of the Heart. Her next album, 2000's Alma Caribeña (which translated as "Caribbean Soul"), was a Spanish-language LP that featured several Latin styles. It was certified gold and received 2000's Best Latin Tropical Album Grammy.

"Sleepy" John Estes

Born Jan. 25, 1904, Ripley, TN; died June 5, 1977, Brownsville, TN

1963—The Legend of Sleepy John Estes (Delmark) 1967—1929–40 (Folkways) 1974—Down South Blues, 1935–1940 (MCA).

An important first-generation bluesman, "Sleepy" John Estes lost the sight of one eye as a child and became completely blind by 1950. When Estes was 12, his sharecropper father gave him his first guitar. By the time he was 20 he was playing local house parties. Shortly thereafter he moved to Memphis, where he performed on Beale Street with mandolinist Yank Rachell. He supported himself by working the late shift at a trainyard, where his tendency to doze off (later discovered to be a result of blood-pressure problems) earned him his nickname. In the '30s Estes moved to Chicago with harmonica player Hammie Nixon. Over the next few years he worked as a street musician and occasionally as a medicine-show barker, hawking swamp root for Dr. Grimm's Traveling Menagerie.

In 1941 Estes and Nixon recorded blues for Bluebird: "Someday, Baby" and "Drop Down, Mama." He subsequently returned to Brownsville, Tennessee, and remained an obscure performer until the late '50s, when filmmaker Ralph Blumenthal (who was making a documentary on black migration to the North) rediscovered him. The new attention got Estes a contract with the Chicago-based Delmark label. By 1964 he had gone on his first European tour and appeared at the Newport Folk Festival. Estes' LP Broke and Hungry included a guest spot by guitarist Mike Bloomfield, and Estes later played and sang on Ry Cooder's LP Boomer's Story. Around the same time, Joy of Cooking had a minor pop hit with the Estes-penned "Going to Brownsville" (1971). Estes died of a stroke in 1977 while preparing to embark on a European tour.

Melissa Etheridge

Born May 29, 1961, Leavenworth, KS

1988—Melissa Etheridge (Island) 1989—Brave and Crazy 1992—Never Enough 1993—Yes I Am 1995—Your Little Secret 1999—Breakdown 2001—Skin.

Melissa Etheridge's raw, raspy voice and gritty delivery have inspired comparisons to everyone from Janis Joplin to Bruce Springsteen. Her fervid, percussive guitar work drives the confrontational and often hard-bitten love songs that earned the singer/songwriter a solid core following, encompassing fans of both alternative and album-oriented rock. She broke through to mass popularity with her 1993 album, Yes I Am.

Melissa Etheridge

A self-taught musician, Etheridge got her first guitar when she was eight and began writing songs shortly afterward. She started performing at 12, in a country group, and played in various bar bands through her teens. After attending Boston's Berklee College of Music, Etheridge moved to the L.A. area, where she performed in clubs. In 1986 Island Records founder Chris Blackwell spotted her and offered her a contract. Etheridge's first recording gig involved contributing songs to the soundtrack of a film called Weeds. Then, working with drummer Craig Krampf, who was eventually replaced by Fritz Lewak, and bassist Kevin McCormick (Lewak and McCormick remained in her band through Yes I Am), the singer released her debut album in 1988. Melissa Etheridge spawned a pair of singles, "Bring Me Some Water" and "Like the Way I Do"; though neither entered the Top 40, both were well received by album-oriented rock radio. The album went gold, as did its successor, 1989's Brave and Crazy. Etheridge's third LP, 1992's gold Never Enough, yielded the song "Ain't It Heavy," which failed to chart significantly but earned the singer a Grammy (on her fourth nomination) for Best Rock Vocal Performance, Female. In 1993 Etheridge publicly declared that she was a lesbian; that same year, she released a fourth album, Yes I Am (#16). The disc, produced by Hugh Padgham (the Police, Phil Collins), resulted in several hits—including "Come to My Window" (#25, 1994), "I'm the Only One" (#8 pop, #1 Adult Contemporary, 1994), and "If I Wanted To" (#16, 1995)—and spent 138 weeks on the LP chart.

Because of both her increasing success and her coming out, the public grew curious about Etheridge's personal life; she revealed that she was in a long-term relationship with director Julie Cypher, who had once been married to actor Lou Diamond Phillips. In 1995 Etheridge released Your Little Secret (#6), coproduced by Padgham and featuring the singles "I Want to Come Over" (#22, 1996) and "Nowhere to Go" (#40, 1996). She embarked on nearly a year of touring worldwide in support of the album.

Etheridge intrigued the public once again in 1996 with the announcement that she and Cypher were expecting a baby. Cypher gave birth to the couple's daughter, Bailey, in February 1997. Aside from occasional performances and benefit appearances, Etheridge opted for the longest break from recording and touring in her career to spend time with her family. In November 1998 Cypher gave birth to their son, Beckett. The following year Etheridge emerged with Breakdown, an album of new material coproduced by her guitarist and sometime cowriter since Your Little Secret, John Shanks. Though not a hit, it offered the noncharting single "Angels Would Fall" as well as "Scarecrow," a tribute to Matthew Shepard, the gay college student who was murdered in Wyoming. Etheridge and Cypher had another coming out of sorts in the media in January 2000, when they divulged in a ROLLING STONE cover story that musician David Crosby was the biological father of both of their children (via artificial insemination). The women have since announced their breakup.

Eurythmics were perhaps the greatest of the early-'80s British synth-pop bands, mixing a cynically business- and image-conscious approach with a sometimes soulful, mournful sound. Although Dave Stewart's studio wizardry provided the band's foundation, Annie Lennox's theatrical appearance and beautiful, icy wail ultimately were the duo's calling cards.

Lennox grew up in Aberdeen, Scotland, the only daughter of a bagpipe-playing shipyard worker. Her piano- and flute-playing skills won her a scholarship to the Royal Academy of Music in London, but she quit on the eve of finals, disgusted with the school's pretensions. She spent three years working odd jobs in London and playing with a folk-rock band, a jazz-rock group, and a cabaret duo. A friend introduced her to Dave Stewart.

Stewart came from an upper-middle-class family in Northern England. By the early '70s his band Longdancer was signed to Elton John's Rocket Records but never accomplished anything. He then played in a variety of groups, which ranged from soul to medieval music. When he met Lennox he was writing music with a recluse named Peet Coombes.

Lennox and Stewart immediately began a musical and romantic partnership. With Coombes they formed a band called Catch, which shortly became the Tourists. The Tourists' three albums (The Tourists, 1979; Reality Effect, 1979; Luminous Basement, 1980) mixed folk, psychedelia, and new wave. A cover of the Dusty Springfield hit "I Only Want to Be With You" was a big hit in England (#4 U.K., 1979), but barely made it into the U.S. Hot 100 (#83, 1980).

When the band disintegrated in late 1980, so did Lennox and Stewart's romance. They continued to work together, however, and named their partnership after Eurythmics, a system of music instruction developed in the 1890s that emphasizes physical response. Their debut was recorded in Germany and featured Blondie drummer Clem Burke, members of Can and DAF, and Marcus Stockhausen, son of the avant-garde composer. Despite good reviews, it was weakly supported by their label.

Lennox and Stewart were committed to making the Eurythmics a solid business and artistic venture, however. In a makeshift studio that Stewart set up, they recorded Sweet Dreams (Are Made of This) (#15, 1983), using an 8-track recorder and synthesizers. Though the first British single, "Love Is a Stranger," attracted some attention in clubs, it was the title track (#1) that propelled the band to stardom.

As the singer for the Tourists, Lennox was a platinum blonde often called the British Blondie. Sick of that dolly image, Lennox wore an orange crewcut and a man's suit in the Eurythmics' early work. When the band performed at the 1984 Grammys, she dressed like Elvis. In the video for "Who's That Girl?" she plays a chanteuse who leaves a club with her butch alter-ego; at the end, she-Annie kisses he-Annie.

Touch (#7, 1983) yielded "Here Comes the Rain Again" (#4, 1984), but Eurythmics' next release, the soundtrack for 1984 (the film based on George Orwell's novel), was a disappointment. The film's director complained on a televised awards show that he had been forced to use the band's music, and the single "Sexcrime (Nineteen Eighty-four)" was widely misinterpreted. Lennox suffered another public humiliation when she married a Hare Krishna and divorced him a year later. But Be Yourself Tonight (#9, 1985) returned the band to the public grace, showcasing Lennox's soulful vocals in a duet with Aretha Franklin, "Sisters Are Doin' It for Themselves" (#18, 1985). The album also yielded the hit single "Would I Lie to You" (#5, 1985). On Revenge (#12, 1986), the Eurythmics went for an arena-rock sound and produced their last Top 20 single, "Missionary Man" (#14, 1986).

In 1987 Stewart married singer Siobhan Fahey, formerly of Bananarama and later half of the duo Shakespear's Sister. Many critics considered the Eurythmics to have run out of steam on We Too Are One (#34, 1989), so it was not surprising when Lennox announced that she was taking a couple years off from music to work for a homeless charity. She had delivered a stillborn baby in 1988 and wanted to devote time to her family (she is married to filmmaker Un Fruchtmann, with whom she's since had two children). In 1992 she released Diva (#23, 1992), a platinum-selling solo album that received three Grammy nominations. Stewart, meanwhile, had already released one soundtrack album, Lily Was Here, and put together the band Spiritual Cowboys, which included drummer Martin Chambers (Pretenders). He has also produced records for Daryl Hall, Tom Petty, Mick Jagger, and Bob Dylan. In 1995 Stewart released his first real solo album, Greetings From the Gutter, a modern Ziggy Stardust-like opus with a funky backing band (Bootsy Collins is on bass). A pop-rock followup, Sly-Fi, appeared in 1998.

Lennox and Stewart hadn't spoken with each other for four years when she called in 1997 to inform him of the death of their former Tourists bandmate, Peet Coombes. The conversation got the duo talking again: later, while rehearsing for an acoustic performance at a party for a mutual friend, they began writing new material together. Peace (1999), the album that grew out of those sessions, was the first new Eurythmics LP in 10 years and found Lennox's supple, powerful alto fully intact. It also eschewed the catchy, electro-pop of the duo's '80s heyday in favor of lushly orchestrated ballads focusing on the pair's musical and prior romantic partnership. After the record's release, Stewart and Lennox played a series of dates, most of them in Europe, the proceeds of which went to Amnesty International and Greenpeace. There was no indication that the Eurythmics' reunion would be permanent.

Attitude.

By alternative-rock standards, Everclear frontman Art Alexakis was an old man—33 years old—when his band's major label debut Sparkle and Fade was released in 1995, and his career took off into high gear. But having already logged years of performing locally and kicking a near-fatal, decade-long drug addiction, he quickly made up for lost time.

Raised by his mother in an L.A. housing project, Alexakis grew up poor and began abusing hard drugs; by 13 he was on heroin. His addiction continued despite both his older brother and a girlfriend dying of overdoses. He finally kicked the habit after nearly dying himself from an overdose at 22.

He played in a handful of L.A. bands during the '80s and cut an album with the San Francisco group Colorfinger before relocating to Portland, Oregon, where he formed Everclear with bassist Craig Montoya and drummer Scott Cuthbert. The band recorded a $400 EP, Nervous and Weird (1993), which was expanded into their debut album, World of Noise later that year. Both were released by Portland indie label Tim/Kerr, though Capitol reissued World of Noise after signing Everclear in 1994. Greg Eklund replaced Cuthbert the same year.

Fueled by heavy touring and the modern-rock hits "Heroin Girl," "Santa Monica," and "Heartspark Dollarsign," 1995's Sparkle and Fade went platinum and climbed to #25. The momentum continued with 1997's double-platinum So Much for the Afterglow (#33), and in 2000 the group went for broke by releasing two albums (based on Alexakis' divorce) within the span of six months: the pop-leaning Songs From an American Movie Volume One: Learning How to Smile (#9) and the more hard-rock-oriented Songs From an American Movie Volume Two: Good Time for a Bad Attitude (#66). The former featured the #11 hit single, "Wonderful."

Betty Everett

Born Nov. 23, 1939, Greenwood, MS
1964—Delicious Together (with Jerry Butler) (Vee-Jay) 1974—Love Rhymes (Fantasy); There'll Come a Time (MCA) 1975—Happy Endings (Fantasy) 1976—It's in His Kiss (DJM).

Soul vocalist Betty Everett had a decade's worth of hits in the '60s and '70s. She played piano and sang in church as a child before moving with her family to Chicago at age 17. Everett's career peaked with the pop novelty "The Shoop Shoop Song (It's in His Kiss)" (#6, 1964) and a duet with Jerry Butler, "Let It Be Me" (#5, 1964), the Everly Brothers hit. Lesser hits included "You're No Good," "I Can't Hear You," and "Getting Mighty Crowded." A minor 1964 hit, "Smile," was a duet with Jerry Butler.

Vee-Jay's mid-'60s collapse brought her to a change in labels. After a hitless tenure with ABC-Paramount, Everett made a modest 1969 comeback on Uni with "There'll Come a Time," "I Can't Say No to You," and "It's Been a Long Time." By 1970, she was recording for Fantasy ("I Got to Tell Somebody," 1971). Everett achieved respectable soul sales over the next couple of years with albums like Love Rhymes and Happy Endings. By then she was taking advantage of her prestigious standing in Europe with regular continental tours. She more or less retired in 1980. In 1991 Cher took "The Shoop Shoop Song" to #33 on the American singles charts. Five years later Everett was honored by the Rhythm and Blues Foundation; she and Butler reunited to sing "Let It Be Me" for the occasion.

Everlast/House of Pain

Everlast, born Erik Schrody, Aug. 18, 1969, Valley Stream, NY 1990—Forever Everlasting (Warner Bros.) 1998—Whitey Ford Sings the Blues (Tommy Boy) 1999—Today EP.
House of Pain, formed 1990, Los Angeles, CA: Everlast, voc.; Danny Boy (b. Daniel O'Connor, Dec. 12, 1968, Los Angeles), voc.; DJ Lethal (b. Leor DiMant, Dec. 18, 1972, Latvia), DJ. 1992—House of Pain (Tommy Boy) 1994—Same As It Ever Was 1996—Truth Crushed to Earth Shall Rise Again.

Not merely a white rap group, House of Pain was the first Irish-American rap group. Its bios were sent out on green paper; the group's logo was a shamrock with the words "fine malt lyrics"; the group's debut album (#14, 1992) included such tracks as "Top o' the Mornin' to Ya" and "Shamrocks and Shenanigans" (#65, 1992). Everlast wore a green Boston Celtics basketball jersey in the video for House of Pain's biggest hit, "Jump Around" (#3, 1992) which—like Kris Kross' contemporaneous hit "Jump"—grafted shouted vocal hooks onto dissonant, Public Enemy–denved mixes brimming with big, bumptious beats and grating, high-pitched whistles and wheezes.

Everlast and Danny Boy first met at Taft High School in L.A., where rapper Ice Cube was a student. Everlast later worked with Ice-T's Rhyme Syndicate before forming House of Pain with Danny Boy and Latvian emigré, DJ Lethal. House of Pain's debut album was coproduced by DJ Muggs of hardcore L.A. rap group Cypress Hill. Muggs also produced Same As It Ever Was (#12, 1994).

In March 1993 Everlast was arrested at New York's Kennedy Airport for gun possession, when an unregistered (unloaded) pistol was found in his luggage. He eventually plea-bargained the charge down to a community-service sentence. The Truth album sank without a trace, and House of Pain dissolved. DJ Lethal eventually joined Limp Bizkit [see entry], while Everlast, who had released a low-profile solo album in pre-House of Pain days, made a splash with the folk/hip-hop fusion of Whitey Ford Sings the Blues (#9 pop, 1998) and its talkin' blues single, "What It's Like" (#13, 1998). Everlast, who suffered a massive heart attack the day he finished recording Whitey (an artificial valve was installed during coronary bypass surgery), would go on to join the list of guest stars on Carlos Santana's hit 1999 album, Supernatural. In 1999, Danny Boy formed the L.A.-based techno/hip-hop duo XSupermodels with rapper Eric Gregory.

The Everly Brothers are the most important vocal duo in rock. The enduring influence of the brothers' close, understated yet expressive harmonies is evident in the work of such British Invasion bands as the Beatles and the Hollies and of folk-oriented acts, such as Simon and Garfunkel, not to mention countless solo artists, among them Dave Edmunds, Gram Parsons, Emmylou Harris, and Linda Ronstadt. Most of the Everlys' hit singles, which merged Nashville's clean instrumental country style with innocuous teenage themes, cut a course to the night of contemporary country-rock hybrids like rockabilly. Their indisputable mastery is revealed in their ballads, among them "Let It Be Me."

They were the children of Midwestern country stars Ike and Margaret Everly. They toured with their parents around the South and Midwest and performed on the family radio show (a taped sample of which appears on Roots) throughout their childhoods. In the summer of 1955, still teenagers, they left for Nashville, where they were soon hired by Roy Acuff's publishing company as songwriters. Don had a minor success when his "Thou Shalt Not Steal" became a hit for Kitty Wells. The brothers also recorded a country single entitled "Keep On Loving Me" for Columbia before signing with Cadence in 1957. Songwriters Felice and Boudleaux Bryant gave them "Bye Bye Love," which 30 acts had previously rejected. It was an international hit (#2 U.S., 1957), topped the country chart, and established an Everlys style with close country harmonies over a rocking beat.

The Everlys toured internationally with a small combo over the next few years, sporting matching suits and haircuts and leaving fans to identify each brother by the color of his hair (Don's was darker). Their heyday lasted through 1962, by which time they were at Warner Bros., with cumulative record sales of $35 million. In their three years with Cadence (which they left in a dispute over royalties) they averaged a Top 10 hit every four months, including four #1 hits: "Wake Up Little Susie," "All I Have to Do Is Dream," "Cathy's Clown," and "Bird Dog."

Some of their most successful records—"Till I Kissed You" (#4, 1959), "When Will I Be Loved" (#8, 1960)—were written by Don or Phil Everly. Their best-selling single, "Cathy's Clown" (sales of which exceeded 2 million), came after their switch to Warner Bros., but their success with the new label was short-lived. In June 1962 their string of hits ended with "That's Old-Fashioned" (#9, 1962). They remained major stars in England, but their careers slowed markedly in the U.S. despite continued releases on Warner Bros. ("Bowling Green," #40, 1967) and, beginning in 1972, RCA (where they moved shortly after hosting a summer TV series on CBS). Their latter-day backup band was led by keyboardist Warren Zevon and included future L.A. studio guitarist Waddy Wachtel.

By then the brothers' personal lives had gone through serious upheavals. Both were addicted to speed for a while, and Don was hospitalized for a nervous breakdown. Their relationship became increasingly acrimonious until it blew up at the John Wayne Theater at Knott's Berry Farm in Buena Park, California, on July 14, 1973. Phil smashed his guitar and stalked off stage, leaving Don to announce the duo's obvious breakup. Subsequent solo attempts by both were largely unsuccessful.

In 1983 the Everlys returned to the spotlight. Phil's duet with Cliff Richard, "She Means Nothing to Me," reached the British Top 10 in the spring. That September the brothers reunited onstage at London's Royal Albert Hall for a triumphant concert that was chronicled on Reunion Concert and in a video documentary that was widely aired. In 1984 they released EB 84 (#38, 1984), produced by longtime fan Dave Edmunds. "On the Wings of a Nightingale," penned by another admirer, Paul McCartney (who'd mentioned the pair in his "Let 'Em In"), went to #50 in the U.S. and #41 in England. Edmunds also produced 1986's Born Yesterday, which came out the same month that the duo was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. The Everlys continued to perform into 2000. They have inspired several musicals, including 1998's biographical Bye Bye Love: The Everly Brothers Musical, which ran in Nashville, and 2000's Dream, Dream, Dream, which played Atlantic City.

Everything But the Girl

Tracey Thorn (b. Sep. 26, 1962, Hertfordshire, Eng.), voc.; Ben Watt (b. Dec. 6, 1962, London, Eng.), gtr., kybds.

1984—Eden (Blanco y Negro, U.K.); Everything But the Girl (Blanco y Negro/Sire) 1985—Love Not Money 1986—Baby, the Stars Shine Bright 1988—Idlewild 1990—The Language of Life (Atlantic) 1991—Worldwide 1992—Acoustic 1994—Amplified Heart 1996—Walking Wounded 1999—Temperamental.

Everything But the Girl makes melodic, literate, and scrupulously crafted pop that often draws on prerock traditions, incorporating elements of jazz, theatrical music, and early-'60s rock & roll. In the mid-'90s, the duo began a successful foray into electronic and dance music.

Watt (who is the chief composer) and vocalist Thorn first met at Hull University. Before joining with Watt, Thorn made two albums as a member of the Marine Girls. In 1982 the duo (who took their name from a local store whose slogan claimed they could supply "everything but the girl") recorded a version of Cole Porter's "Night and Day." Thorn then cut a mini album, A Distant Shore, and Watt released his North Marine Drive.

Everything But The Girl first charted in Britain with "Each and Everyone" (#28 U.K., 1984), a cover of "I Don't Want to Talk About It" by Danny Whitten (Crazy Horse guitarist who died in 1972) became its biggest hit (#3 U.K.) in 1988.

Signing with Atlantic, Everything But The Girl went for the full L.A. studio treatment on The Language of Life. With Tommy LiPuma producing, a host of first-call session musicians, and a guest appearance by jazz saxophonist Stan Getz, The Language of Life made the U.S. charts (#77, 1990) and a popular single, "Driving," was culled from it.

Despite its accomplishments, the group was stranded by a sound that was too light for rock airplay yet too sophisticated for "lite" airplay. Neither the followup album, Worldwide, nor Acoustic (an "unplugged" project that concentrated on covers, including Thorn's rendition of Springsteen's "Tougher Than the Rest") had the commercial impact of Language of Life. Shortly before the duo embarked on an acoustic tour of the U.S. in support of the album, Watt was hospitalized with the rare, life-threatening autoimmune disease, Churg Strauss Syndrome. He spent three months in a hospital bed recovering and would later write about his battle in the 1997 book Patient: The True Story of a Rare Illness.

In 1994 Everything But The Girl released Amplified Heart, a quiet acoustic-leaning affair that produced a surprise club hit when a house remix of the song "Missing" spent an unprecedented year on the Billboard Hot 100 singles chart (peaking at #2 in 1995). The success of the remix, coupled with Thorn's collaboration on the 1994 Massive Attack album Protection, propelled Everything But the Girl into the full-on embrace of drum-and-bass and ambient electronica that marked 1996's widely acclaimed Walking Wounded (#37) and 1999's Temperamental. The later album's more assured take on the genre was no accident: Watt spent the three years between albums perfecting his DJ skills on the club circuit.

Exposé

Formed 1986, Miami, FL

Jeanette Jurado (b. Nov. 14, 1966, Los Angeles, CA), voc.; Ann Curless (b. Oct. 7, 1965, New York, NY), voc.; Gioia Carmen Bruno (b. Italy, June 11, 1965), voc.

1987—Exposure (Arista) 1989—What You Don't Know 1992—(– Bruno; + Kelly MoneyMaker [b. June 4, 1965, Fairbanks, AK], voc.) Exposé 1995—Greatest Hits.

The phenomenally successful vocal trio Exposé began as a project of Miami pop svengali Lewis Martinee. But by their third album, the three women were trying to assert themselves as artists. Martinee wrote and recorded the single "Point of No Return" with Ale Lorenzo, Laurie Miller, and Sandee Casanas, whom he dubbed Exposé in 1985. The song became a dance hit, followed by 1986's "Exposed to Love," and the group began work on an album. Before its completion, Martinee replaced all three members—reports conflict as to whether the women quit or were fired (perhaps, it has been suggested, for not looking the part). Martinee hired Jurado, Curless, and Bruno to be the new Exposé.

With its Latin-tinged dance grooves, the multiplatinum Exposure (#16, 1987) broke the Beatles' record for most Top 10 hits from a debut album with "Come Go With Me" (#5 pop, #14 R&B, 1987), a rerecorded "Point of No Return" (#5, 1987), "Let Me Be the One" (#7 pop, #29 R&B, 1987), and the ballad "Seasons Change" (#1 pop, #27 R&B, 1987). The gold What You Don't Know (#33, 1989) followed this success with the singles "What You Don't Know" (#8, 1989), "Tell Me Why" (#9, 1989), "When I Looked at Him" (#10, 1989), and "Your Baby Never Looked Good in Blue" (#17, 1990).

On its third album, Exposé replaced Bruno, who was having throat problems, with the L.A.-based Kelly MoneyMaker, who had performed with Todd Rundgren and Wayne Newton. The trio branched away from Martinee on Exposé, using four songs written by hitmaker Diane Warren (including "As Long As I Can Dream," written with Roy Orbison) and working with producers Steve Thompson and Michael Barbiero (Madonna, Guns n' Roses) on several tracks. That album includes the hit "I'll Never Get Over You (Getting Over Me)" (#8, 1993). Subsequent singles didn't fare as well and, by the mid-'90s, the trio had faded from the limelight.

Extreme

Formed 1985, Boston, MA

Pat Badger (b. July 22, 1967, Boston), bass; Nuno Bettencourt (b. Sep. 20, 1966, Azores, Port.), gr.; Gary Cherone (b. July 26, 1961, Malden, MA), voc.; Paul Geary (b. July 24, 1961, Medford, MA), drums.

1989—Extreme (A&M) 1990—Extreme II: Pornograffitti 1992—III Sides to Every Story 1994—(– Geary; + Mike Mangini, drums) 1995—Waiting for the Punchline.

Nuno Bettencourt solo: 1997—Schizophonic.

Extreme's metal funk is more in line with fellow Bostonians Aerosmith, and Nuno Bettencourt is considered one of the premier hard-rock guitarists, but the group is best known for the acoustic ballad "More Than Words" (#1, 1991). That uncharacteristically soft single made the band's second album, Pornograffitti (#10, 1990), a Top 10 double-platinum hit.

Gary Cherone and Paul Geary were part of the Dream, an early-'80s Boston band. When the group broke up, Cherone began writing songs with Bettencourt, a Portuguese-born guitarist who had lived in Boston since he was four. Bettencourt brought in Badger, and the new band began to build a strong local following. A&M Records signed the band in 1987; in 1989 Extreme released its self-titled debut (#80).

That album stalled at the lower end of the Hot 100, and Pornograffitti threatened to do the same until "More Than Words" attracted a mainstream audience. The band kept its metal credentials by toning with ZZ Top, while a second ballad, "Hole Hearted" (#4, 1991), returned the band to the Top 10. Seemingly unwilling to give up either style, Extreme released III Sides (#10, 1992), an ambitious project divided into three suites: the aggressive "Yours," the introspective "Mine," and a 22-minute orchestral piece, "The Truth." The album, particularly the final three songs recorded at Abbey Road Studios with a 70-piece orchestra, demonstrated the band's eclecticism and willingness to experiment.

Extreme's next album, Waiting for the Punchline (#40, 1995), returned the band to its original, stripped-down sound. But without a hit single, the album sold disappointingly, and in 1996 the group decided to call it a day.

Singer Gary Cherone joined Van Halen [see entry] in 1997, when that band's reunion with David Lee Roth failed to take hold. Nuno Bettencourt took the solo route, releasing one album, 1997's Schizophonic.

Fabian

Born Fabian Anthony Forte, Feb. 6, 1943, Philadelphia, PA
1959—Hold That Tiger! (Chancellor); Fabulous Fabian 1995—
The Best of Fabian (Varèse Vintage).

Fabian was marketed alongside several other late-'50s Philadelphia teen idols, including Frankie Avalon and Bobby Rydell. From 1959 to 1960 his Top 10 hits included "Turn Me Loose" (#9, 1959), his signature song, "Tiger" (#3, 1959), and an Elvis Presley imitation, "Hound Dog Man" (#9, 1959), the theme from his first feature film in 1959.

He then turned to acting. In 1960 he starred with John Wayne in North to Alaska and in 1966 was featured in Fireball 500. Since the early '70s, Fabian has occasionally appeared on TV sitcoms such as Laverne and Shirley and Blossom. In 1974, before '50s acts were in great demand on the oldies circuit, Fabian posed nude for a woman's magazine, a move that he publicly regretted; he claimed he looked "fat and stupid." In 1977 he was involved in a program under the auspices of California governor Jerry Brown to encourage citizen volunteers to work with mental patients.

Besides touring on his own, Fabian also performs as part of a package, the Golden Boys (or the Boys of Bandstand) with Avalon and Rydell. The 1980 film The Idolmaker is said to have been based on Fabian's first manager, Bob Marcucci, who discovered the teenager and manufactured him in the image of Rick Nelson. Fabian also works as a television producer. In addition to appearing in occasional films and commercials, he has guest-starred on numerous network and cable shows throughout the '80s and '90s, including The Facts of Life, Blossom, and Murphy Brown. He has also hosted Fabian's Celebrity Golf Tournament, which raises money for veterans' causes.

The Fabulous Thunderbirds

Blues stalwarts the Fabulous Thunderbirds hit their commercial peak in the mid-'80s. Known for their relentless touring, the members were archetypal roots musicians, lean and energetic in style.

Starting in 1963, guitarist Jimmie Vaughan, older brother of Stevie Ray Vaughan, played Hendrix and Clapton covers in Dallas bands such as the Swinging Pendulums and the Chessmen before founding the Fabulous Thunderbirds. With vocalist Lou Ann Barton and drummer Otis Lewis departing shortly after the band's 1974 beginning, Vaughan solidified the lineup with bassist Keith Ferguson (who'd declined an offer to join ZZ Top), drummer Mike Buck, and singer/harmonica player Kim Wilson, who became chief songwriter.

With a self-titled debut blueprinting their no-frills approach, the Fabulous Thunderbirds went on to gain overseas exposure and a new-wave following by opening for Rockpile in 1980 (Rockpile bassist Nick Lowe produced the T-Birds' fourth album). Replacing Buck with Roomful of Blues drummer Fran Christina, they continued live work, but spent the next four years without a record contract. In 1986 came their big break: Signed to Columbia, the Fabulous Thunderbirds opened shows for the Rolling Stones and Santana, and with the Top 10 "Tuff Enuff" (produced by Dave Edmunds, Lowe's former partner in Rockpile), gained a mainstream audience. Hot Number (#49, 1987) also fared well, by then, however, only Vaughan and Wilson remained of the original members.

In 1990 Vaughan left to record with his brother, effectively ending the original Thunderbirds. Vaughan released his solo debut, Strange Pleasure, in 1994, followed four years later by Out There. Meanwhile, with Wilson at the helm, a reconstituted Thunderbirds carried on, featuring New England-based guitarists Duke Robillard, a jazz and blues player who'd founded Roomful of Blues, and the more rock-oriented Kid Bangham. The group finally fizzled, with Kim Wilson going solo. His albums Tigerman (1993) and That's Life (1994) were very much in the T-Birds' vein.

In 1995 Wilson assembled a new Thunderbirds lineup—now featuring Christina, guitarist David "Kid" Ramos, former Blasters keyboardist Gene Taylor, and bassist Mark Carrino—and cut the Danny Kortchmar-produced Roll of the Dice for Private Music. Although that lineup remained more or less intact (minus Christina and Carrino) as the "official" touring Thunderbirds, 1997's High Water was recorded by Wilson backed only by studio multi-instrumentalists Kortchmar and Steve Jordan. Wilson released his third solo album, My Blues, the same year. The 1996 Thunderbirds album, Different Tacos!, was an odds and sods collection of early live recordings and studio outtakes. Girls Go Wild is a repackaging of the 1979 album with three additional tracks.

Fairport Convention seeded Britain's folk-rock movement, and most British musicians who've tried to play Celtic folk material on modern instruments have some connection with Fairport or its many offshoots. The group's repertoire included traditional British songs rearranged for electric instruments, songs by Bob Dylan and other current songwriters, and originals by Richard Thompson and Iain Matthews (both founders) and Sandy Denny. As the Bunch, Fairport and friends also recorded an album of '50s and '60s rock classics entitled Rock On. Their eclecticism inspired their imitators and descendants.

The original Fairport Convention—at first called the Ethnic Shuffle Orchestra—included folk-club veterans who were also Byrds fans, and was named after Simon Nicol's house in Muswell Hill, London. From the beginning, the lineup was unstable. Judy Dyble left in 1968 to form Trader Horne and later Penguin Dust, her replacement, Sandy Denny, had sung with the Strawbs before their first album. Matthews left after What We Did on Our Holidays (in the U.S., Fairport Convention) to form the country-pop band Matthews Southern Comfort ("Woodstock," 1971) and to record solo and with the short-lived Plainsong [see Ian Matthews entry]. Lambie was killed in an equipment-van crash right before Unhalfbricking's release.

Fairport had its first European hit with Unhalfbricking's "Si Tu Dois Partir," a French translation of Dylan's "If You Gotta Go, Go Now." Denny, whose song "Who Knows Where the Time Goes" was covered by Judy Collins, left to form Fotheringay with husband Trevor Lucas and Jerry Donahue [see Sandy Denny entry]; in 1973 the three rejoined Fairport. A Moveable Feast was a live set from Denny's second stint with the band. By then Thompson had started a solo career [see entry], and fiddler Dave Swarbrick had joined Fairport. Swarbrick led the group in its later years, and it toured internationally. By 1976 the band had dropped "Convention" from its name, and by 1979 Fairport had given up, due to financial problems, constantly shifting lineup, and Swarbrick's hearing impairment. Pegg joined Jethro Tull; Swarbrick recorded solo albums. Nicol and Mattacks toured with Richard and Linda Thompson (who had sung with the Bunch as Linda Peters) in 1982. Mattacks became a respected session drummer whose credits include Paul McCartney, Elton John, Mark Knopfler, and XTC. More recently he has recorded and toured with Mary Chapin Carpenter and Richard Thompson solo.

Fairport has been a going concern again since 1985. The members have chosen not to include another female singer, feeling that Denny was "irreplaceable" (She died in 1978 after falling down a flight of stairs.) They do perform with guest singers on rare occasions. The lineup with Ric Sanders (Soft Machine, sessions with Jethro Tull and Gerry Rafferty) and Martin Allcock produced several albums and toured the world from 1985 to 1995.

Pegg left Jethro Tull in 1995 to concentrate on Fairport and on the running of Woodworm Records and Studio. Since then, Fairport has existed as two internationally touring bands—the standard quintet and an acoustic four-piece without a drummer (on Old New Borrowed Blue). Their star-studded, annual Cropredy Festival, held in August in the village of Cropredy in Oxfordshire, has become one of Europe's largest folk events, drawing crowds of 20,000 to 25,000. Many Fairport live albums (including the two box sets) were recorded at the festivals.

In 1997 Allcock was replaced by Chris Leslie (Whippersnapper, the Albion Band, tours with Ian Anderson and All About Eve). The following year Gerry Conway, who had played on Fairport spinoffs and solo projects, replaced Mattacks.

Marianne Faithfull

Born Dec. 29, 1946, London, Eng.

1965—Come My Way (Decca) 1966—Faithful Forever (London) 1977—Faithless (NEMS) 1979—Broken English (Island) 1981—Dangerous Acquaintances 1983—A Child's Adventure 1987—Strange Weather 1990—Blazing Nights 1994—Faithfull: A Collection of Her Best Recordings 1995—A Secret Life 1997—20th Century Blues (RCA Victor) 1998—The Seven Deadly Sins; A Perfect Stranger: The Island Anthology (Island) 2000—Vagabond Ways (Instinct).

Marianne Faithfull first appeared on the British pop scene as the angel-faced, sweet-voiced singer of "As Tears Go By" (#22 U.S., #9 U.K.) in 1964, when she was 18. The song was written for her by Rolling Stones Mick Jagger and Keith Richards, and although she had three more hits independent of the Stones—"Come and Stay With Me" (#26 U.S., #4 U.K.), "This Little Bird" (#32 U.S., #6 U.K.), and "Summer Nights" (#24 U.S., #10 U.K.), all in 1965—she became better known as Jagger's girlfriend than as a singer. After leaving the spotlight for close to a decade, Faithfull made a striking comeback with 1979's Broken English, which established her as a songwriter and interpreter in her own right.

Faithfull is the daughter of a London University lecturer in Renaissance studies and an Austrian baroness descended from Leopold von Sacher-Masoch (from whose name "masochism" is derived). She attended St. Joseph's Convent School in Reading until she was 17. At 18 she married London art dealer John Dunbar, through whom she met Jagger. She and Dunbar were separated after the birth of their son, Nicholas, in 1965, and divorced in 1970.

During the late '60s Faithfull became pregnant by Jagger (she miscarried) and was later heavily involved in drug use (she was hospitalized following an overdose on the Australian movie set of Ned Kelly, in which she was to costar with Jagger). Although she abandoned her recording career after 1966, she contributed lyrics (uncredited) to the Rolling Stones' "Sister Morphine." Her major activity after 1966 was acting with Alain Delon in a 1968 French film, The Girl on the Motorcycle, in Chekhov's Three Sisters at the Royal Court Theatre, London, in 1969; and as Ophelia opposite Nicol Williamson in a 1970 film production of Hamlet.

Following her breakup with Jagger in 1970 and her widely publicized eight-month commitment to a hospital to cure her heroin addiction, Faithfull withdrew from public life, reappearing only briefly in 1974 on a David Bowie television special. In 1977 she recorded her first album in over 10 years, and although it received little notice, it led to her signing with Island Records in 1979. Her Island debut, Broken English—marked by stark instrumentation, venomous lyrics, and Faithfull's raspy vocals—was barely recognizable as the work of the woman who sang "As Tears Go By." It was followed by four more critically acclaimed albums for Island. Strange Weather occasioned Faithfull's limited return to live performance; on Blazing Away, she was backed by Dr. John, and Band member Garth Hudson, along with her guitarist and cocreator, Barry Reynolds. She also acted in the films Turn of the Screw (1992) and Shopping (1993), and published an autobiography entitled Faithfull (cowritten with David Dalton) in 1994. A compilation album of the same name featured the Patti Smith–penned "Ghost Dance," on which the singer was backed by the Rolling Stones' Charlie Watts and Ron Wood. The following year she released A Secret Life, on which she collaborated with Twin Peaks composer Angelo Badalamenti.

Resuming her acting career, Faithfull appeared onstage in a 1989 production of Kurt Weill's Seven Deadly Sins in New York, Chicago, and Berlin, and in the Brecht-Weill Threepenny Opera in Dublin in 1991. After relocating to Ireland in 1993, she spent the latter part of the '90s exploring the Weimar songbook and consolidating her image as a world-weary chanteuse. A pair of live albums commemorated this evolution: 20th Century Blues (which focused on Brecht-Weill material but also included songs by Noel Coward and Harry Nilsson) and The Seven Deadly Sins, recorded with the Vienna Radio Symphony. Faithfull returned to the studio on 2000's Vagabond Ways. The album was a mix of original material—some of which she cowrote with Daniel Lanois and longtime accomplice Reynolds—and covers, including "Incarceration of a Flower Child," a song written by Pink Floyd's Roger Waters in 1968, which had never been recorded before.

Fat Bastard: Live at Brixton Academy 1992—Angel Dust 1993—Songs to Make Love To EP 1995—King for a Day/Fool for a Lifetime (– Martin; + Trey Spruance, gtr.) 1997—Album of the Year (– Spruance; + Jon Hudson, gtr.) 1998—Who Cares a Lot.

Most fans who bought Faith No More's #9 1990 hit single "Epic" had no idea the group had been around for eight years and had begun life as a postpunk hardcore-thrash band.

Bassist Billy Gould and keyboardist Roddy Bottum had both played on the Los Angeles punk-rock scene of the late '70s, before moving to San Francisco to attend college. Through a classified ad placed by drummer Mike Bordin, they formed Faith No More, recruiting guitarist Jim Martin from a local thrash band with future Metallica bassist Cliff Burton. At club gigs they let audience members be vocalists; Chuck Mosely, who often wore a dress, was among the most frequent volunteers, and eventually joined the band. "We Care a Lot"—a sardonic thrash-funk answer to "We Are the World"—got college-radio play, and some MTV play for its video, leading to a deal with Warner Bros.–distributed Slash Records. Mosely was kicked out after two albums and two European tours, because of his "unpredictable behavior."

With an album's worth of new music written, Faith No More auditioned new vocalists and quickly selected Mike Patton, from the bizarrely theatrical Mr. Bungle. Patton wrote lyrics to match Faith No More's new tunes for The Real Thing (#11, 1990), which sold over a million copies, thanks largely to "Epic" (#9, 1990), an anthemic mix of funk-rap verses and hard-rock choruses. On tour, Patton sometimes wore leisure suits or monster masks, while the band played surprising but seemingly sincere covers of New Kids on the Block's "Right Stuff," Madonna's "Vogue," and the Commodores' easy-listening classic "Easy."

In 1991 Patton recorded an album with Mr. Bungle, and Faith No More contributed "The Perfect Crime" to the soundtrack of the film sequel Bill & Ted's Bogus Journey, in which Jim Martin had a bit part. Angel Dust (#10, 1992) failed to yield a hit single, while Songs to Make Love To included the band's covers of "Easy" and the Dead Kennedys' "Let's Lynch the Landlord." Martin was replaced by Mr. Bungle guitarist Trey Spruance for King for a Day/Fool for a Lifetime, a genre-shuffle that added Portuguese balladry and soulful crooning to the band's militantly eclectic agenda. The group's final studio release, Album of the Year (#41, 1997), saw another new guitarist, Jon Hudson, step in for Spruance. A greatest hits package, Who Cares a Lot, recapped Faith No More's career, which officially ended in 2000 when its members finally called it quits.

Patton recorded a third Mr. Bungle release in 1999, while Bottum achieved fresh commercial success with his own side project Impenpal Teen, which formed in 1996. "Yoo Hoo," from that group's second album, What Is Not to Love (1998), found steady rotation on modern-rock radio, where its catchy chorus played as quirky novelty.

Falco

Born Johann Holzel, Feb. 19, 1957, Vienna, Austria; died Feb. 6, 1998, Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic 1982—Einzelhaft (A&M) 1984—Junger Roemer 1986—Falco 3; Emotional (Sire) 1988—Wiener Blut 1992—The Remix Hit Collection 1998—Out of the Dark (Into the Light) (EMI Electrola).

Falco was Austria's most successful international pop artist on the basis of two unlikely singles: 1983's "Der Kommissar," a driving technopop ditty on which he rapped in German, and the #1 camp classic Mozart tribute "Rock Me Amadeus," from his 1986 album Falco 3. Although he had never reclaimed his '80s fame in the U.S. by the time of his death, he remained a success in his homeland. An estimated 10,000 mourners—from family members and fellow musicians to politicians and fans—attended his funeral.

Young Johann Holzel's parents had wanted him to become a doctor, but he dashed those hopes when, after graduating from school, he moved to West Berlin and began singing in a jazz-rock outfit. Taking the moniker Falco from East German ski jumper Falko Weissflog, he returned to Vienna in the late '70s, where he played bass guitar in a punk band called Drahdwaberl before landing a contract as a solo artist.

While Falco's version of "Der Kommissar" was a danceclub favorite in the U.S., it was an English-language cover by After the Fire that became the hit, topping at #5 in 1983. Though best known for his cheekier material (including "Vienna Calling," which reached #18 in the U.S. in 1986), and for prancing around dressed as a punk Mozart in the popular video for "Rock Me Amadeus," Falco addressed serious matters in some of his songs. "Jeanny," also from Falco 3, was a controversial tale of prostitution that narrowly escaped censorship in Germany, and "The Sound of Musik" took aim at Austria's controversial president Kurt Waldheim, who was alleged to have been a Nazi.

Two weeks before his 41st birthday, Falco was killed in a car accident. News of his death sparked a resurgence of his music throughout Europe. He had completed recording Out of the Dark (Into the Light) shortly before, and the album quickly went to #1 in Austria and #5 in Germany. In addition, various retrospectives released overseas—two volumes of Greatest Hits as well as a Best Of collection—sold enormously well in those countries.

Through ongoing personnel and label shifts (not all of them listed above), and with an audience that's international in scope yet cultish in size, the Fall has held fast to a dour, distinctive sound, becoming the longest-lived and most prolific band to emerge from England's late-'70s punk-rock movement. Sole constant Mark E. Smith is a white-rap progenitor who delivers caustic commentary on British life in a distinctively accented, sneering sing-speech (sometimes turning his back on audiences to read handwritten lyric sheets). The Fall's music, rooted in rockabilly and skiffle, hinges on abrasive, twangy guitars and nagging, racy rhythms.

Named after the Camus novel, the Fall followed the Buzzcocks out of the grimy Northern England industrial city of Manchester, recording Live at the Witch Trials in one day. By Grotesque and Slates, the Fall's scraggly dissonance had grown thicker and, at times, more bright and tuneful. The hooky 1981 single "Totally Wired" became something of a new-wave anthem.

On a 1983 tour Mark E. Smith met Brix Smith at a Chicago show; she married him and replaced Marc Riley as second guitarist (she also led her own band, the Adult Net), honing the Fall's sound in a poppier direction. Mark E. Smith, a frequent critic of clerical hypocrisy (going back to Dragnet's "Spectre vs. Rector"), wrote a musical play about papal politics called Hey! Luciani, which was mounted in London in 1985/86; the Fall recorded the title song as a single.

The Frenz Experiment's faithful cover of the Kinks' "Victoria" was a hit single in the U.K. and got some video play on MTV in America; the disco-influenced "Hit the North" seemed to presage the imminent explosion of Manchester's "rave" scene (of which inveterate antitrendy Smith wanted no part). I am Kurious, Oranj, based on a Smith fantasy about William of Orange, was the score for a ballet by avant-garde choreographer Michael Clark. Brix Smith dissolved her marriage to Mark E. Smith and left the Fall in 1990. New keyboardist Dave Bush pushed the group's sound toward dub-reggae and techno-dance styles.

Nothing about the Fall, save Smith's rattlesome presence, remained fixed, however. Throughout the '90s, the band's mercurial lineups were rarely the same between tours and albums, which, despite a brief liaison with U.S.-based Matador Records, were recorded for British labels. Brix Smith returned to the group for a tour supporting the 1994 release Middle Class Revolt and helped to rejuvenate rock elements on Cerebral Caustic, the live The Twenty-Seven Points (both 1995), and The Light User Syndrome (1996), before departing again in the middle of a tour. Keyboardist Julia Nagle arrived during the same period, replacing the departed Bush, and became the only latter-day member of the group to outlast the decade. She also became Smith's significant other, and led the group toward more electronic experimentalism. Longtime members Steve Hanley and Burns, and guitarist Tommy Crooks (who joined for 1997's Levitate), quit the Fall after a rancorous 1998 U.S. tour that resulted in Smith facing domestic violence charges after an alleged hotel room altercation with Nagle. The meltdown occurred with an ironic timing Fall fans could truly appreciate. Even as the band appeared to be in smithereens, Smith had been declared the winner of the New Musical Express's Godlike Genius Award.

Undaunted, Smith shortly recruited a new roster for the Fall, and in 1999 released The Marshall Suite, followed the next year by The Unutterable.

Georgie Fame is best known in the U.S. for his 1968 novelty hit "The Ballad of Bonnie and Clyde," and as an R&B/jazz singer and keyboardist in Bntam. Clive Powell played keyboards in Eddie Cochran's band during his last tour, before English impresario Larry Parnes steered him to a 1960 job with Billy Fury's band, the Blue Flames. Parnes also suggested the name change to Georgie Fame. In 1962 Fame left Fury and took along the Blue Flames. By the mid-'60s Fame was playing jazzy R&B; guitarist John McLaughlin was in the band for a short time. In late 1963 his expanded group (including Cream's Ginger Baker) released two instrumental singles followed by its influential 1964 set, Rhythm and Blues at the Flamingo.

In 1965 Fame had a #1 U.K. hit, "Yeh Yeh," which also slipped into the U.S. Top 30. He had another U.K. #1 in 1966 with "Get Away." When Fame disbanded the Blue Flames later that year, the lineup included future Jimi Hendrix Experience drummer Mitch Mitchell. Fame's first solo LP, Sound Venture (Columbia), was MOR jazz, the next year he played an Albert Hall concert with Count Basie. His ragtime novelty hit, 1968's "Bonnie and Clyde," hit #7 in the U.S. From 1971 to 1973 he teamed up with former Animals keyboardist Alan Price; they had a #11 U.K. hit in 1971, "Rosetta." Fame also recorded an LP, Shorty, in the early '70s with his group. In 1974 Fame reincarnated the Blue Flames (including Colin Green) and released an album of R&B ballads, Georgie Fame. In the '80s he turned to writing for the stage, and produced musical tributes to Hoagy Carmichael (1981) and George Gershwin (1986). He toured and recorded with Van Morrison through the '80s and '90s. With Ben Sidran the duo created the 1996 album Tell Me Something, a tribute to Mose Allison. Fame has released several more solo albums, which feature jazzier material. He currently has several floating bands including an Australian incarnation of the Blue Flames and Three Line Whip, which includes his sons Tristan and James.

Family

Formed 1967, Leicester, Eng.
Roger Chapman (b. Apr. 8, 1944, Leicester), voc.; Rob Townsend (b. July 7, 1947, Leicester), drums; Rick Grech (b. Nov. 1, 1946, Bordeaux, Fr.; d. Mar. 17, 1990), bass, violin, voc.; Jim King (b. ca. 1945, Eng.), sax, flute; Charlie Whitney (b. June 4, 1944, Eng.), gtr., voc.
1968—Music in a Doll's House (Reprise) 1969—Family Entertainment (— Grech; — King; + John "Poli" Palmer [b. May 25, 1943, Eng.], perc., flute, piano; + John Weider [b. Apr. 21, 1947, Eng.], bass, violin) 1970—A Song for Me; Anyway (United Artists) (— Weider; + John Wetton [b. July 12, 1949, Derby, Eng.], bass, voc.) 1971—Fearless (— Wetton; + Jim Cregan, bass, gtr.) 1972—Band Stand (— Palmer; + Tony Ashton, kybds., voc.) 1973—It's Only a Movie (— Townsend) 1974—Best of Family (Reprise).

Although Family's wildly eclectic progressive rock made it a hitmaker in England, the group remained relatively unknown in the U.S. Family featured the often grating, goatish vibrato singing of Roger Chapman and a repertoire by Chapman and Charlie Whitney, tempered in later years by the jazzy flute and vibraphone of John "Poli" Palmer. The group started in Leicester in 1962 as the Farnas, which included Chapman, Whitney, King, and later, Grech. They turned into the pin-stripe-suited Roaming Sixties, and finally settled on the Family name at the suggestion of Kim Fowley.

Traffic's Dave Mason (with Jimmy Miller) coproduced its debut. The group's harder-rocking followup, Family Entertainment, prompted a U.S. tour. Unfortunately, the day before it was to start, Rick Grech quit to join Blind Faith [see entry], and Family's debut performance at the Fillmore East ended in a fistfight between Chapman and promoter Bill Graham. A few days later Chapman lost both his voice and his visa, and Family returned to England. The band's appearance at the 1970 Rotterdam Festival was filmed in Stomping Ground, and it was featured in Jenny Fabian's novel Groupie Family's reputation continued to grow at home, with hit singles Anyway's "In My Own Time" (#4 U.K., 1971) and Band Stand's "Burlesque" (#13 U.K., 1972).

Family opened for Elton John in 1972, but never found a U.S. audience despite FM airplay for Fearless and Band Stand. It's Only a Movie, the group's final album, was released in Britain on its own Raft label in 1973. That fall, Family played a farewell tour of England, including a final gig in Leicester. Chapman and Whitney founded Streetwalkers; Chapman recorded some solo albums and appears on Mike Oldfield's Islands. Cregan later joined Rod Stewart's band, and Palmer went into session work, appearing on albums by Pete Townshend of the Who. Ashton and Townsend joined the U.K. group Medicine Head, then Townsend drummed for Kevin Ayers' band in the '70s, and Dave Kelly's group in the early '80s.

Fanny

Formed 1970, California

June Millington (b. 1949, Manila, Philippines), gtr., voc.; Alice de Buhr (b. 1950, Mason City, IA), drums; Addie Clement, gtr.; Jean Millington (b. 1950, Manila, Philippines), bass, voc.

1970—(– Clement; + Nicole "Nicky" Barclay [b. Apr. 21, 1951, Washington, DC], kybds.) Fanny (Reprise) 1971—Charity Ball 1972—Fanny Hill 1973—Mother's Pride 1974—(– June Millington; – de Ruhr; + Patti Quatro [b. Detroit], bass; + Brie Brandt-Howard, drums) 1975—Rock and Roll Survivors (Casablanca) 2001—Fanny Live (Slick Music).

Nicky Barclay solo: 1976—Diamond in a Junkyard (Ariola).

Jean Millington and June Millington: 1978—Ladies on the Stage (United Artists).

June Millington solo: 1981—Heartsong (Olivia).

The members of Fanny were true rock & roll pioneers, forming one of the first all-female hard-rock groups. The band's nucleus was the Philippine-born Millington sisters, who moved to Sacramento, California, when their father, a Navy man, was transferred in 1961. They formed their first quartet, the Sveltes, with girlfriends in high school. They played in a series of local bands for five years, under different names, and were performing at the Troubadour in L.A. when record producer Richard Perry's secretary discovered them.

After her boss got them signed to Warner Bros., the group changed its name to Fanny. According to June Millington, "We didn't really think of it [the name] as a butt, a sexual term. We felt it was like a woman's spirit watching over us."

Nonetheless, the group's record company launched promotional campaigns that exploited the sexual aspect, including bumper stickers urging people to "Get Behind Fanny" and ads that showed the women from the back.

Perry produced the group's first three albums, and Fanny also backed up Barbra Streisand on her 1970 LP Stoney End Charity Ball yielded their first chart single with its title cut. Perhaps their most fully realized effort was Fanny Hill, recorded at the Beatles' Apple studios in London. The group's hardest-rocking release, 1973's Mother's Pride, was produced by Todd Rundgren.

Around the same time, Fanny toured extensively (including several dates with Jethro Tull), performing its rock opera, Rock and Roll Survivors. Bassist Patti Quatro, Suzy Quatro's elder sister, replaced June Millington, and original Svelte Brie Howard joined. Ironically, the group broke up shortly after scoring its highest-charting single, "Butter Boy," from the last album. Later that year Jean convinced June to return to music, and together they formed the L.A. All-Stars. They were on the verge of signing a record contract but refused when they learned that one of its conditions was that they be called Fanny again.

June became deeply involved in the women's music movement, producing records for Cns Williamson and Holly Near, among others. She recorded with another all-female rock group, Isis, in the mid-'70s, and she has recorded solo. In 1987 she cofounded the Institute for the Musical Arts, a studio and performance space in Bodega, California. By 1979, Jean Millington was married to ex-David Bowie guitarist Earl Slick, playing club dates, and recording and producing for Olivia Records. The sisters recently reunited in a band called the Slammin' Babes.

Keyboardist and chief songwriter Nicky Barclay, who had been included in Joe Cocker's Mad Dogs and Englishmen, went on to form her own group called Good News in 1976 and released an Ariola-American LP, Diamond in a Junkyard. She also played on Keith Moon's solo album Two Sides of the Moon.

Richard and Mimi Fariña

Richard Fariña (b. 1937, Brooklyn, NY; d. Apr. 30, 1966, Carmel, CA), dulcimer, voc.; Mimi Fariña (b. Mimi Baez, Apr. 30, 1945, New York, NY; d. July 18, 2001, Mill Valley, CA), gtr., voc. 1965—Celebrations for a Grey Day (Vanguard) 1966—Reflections in a Crystal Wind 1968—Richard Fariña; Memories 1971—The Best of Richard and Mimi Fariña; Mimi Fariña and Tom Jans (A&M)

The Fariñas were an American husband-and-wife folk duo whose promising career ended with Richard's death in 1966. Richard was born to Irish and Cuban parents. Although his parents had immigrated to the United States in the '20s, Fariña spent extended periods during his youth in Cuba as well as in Brooklyn and Northern Ireland. While living in Northern Ireland in the mid-'50s, he became actively involved with the IRA and the British government had him deported. He later moved to Cuba and supported Castro. In 1959 he moved to Greenwich Village and began performing; he was briefly married to folksinger Carolyn Hester.

In 1963 he wed Joan Baez's younger sister, Mimi, in Paris. The couple moved to California, where they began working as a duo. They recorded three albums for Vanguard in the mid-'60s. The second, Reflections in a Crystal Wind, was one of the earliest fusions of folk material with a rock rhythm section. Material from all three was later included on Vanguard's Best of Richard and Mimi Fariña. Throughout, Fariña maintained his literary career, writing plays, magazine articles, and Been Down So Long It Looks Like Up to Me, a novel concerned with the cultural transition from the beatniks to the hippies. He was returning home from a promotional party for the book when he died in a motorcycle crash in 1966 on his wife's 21st birthday. The book was subsequently reprinted.

Mimi withdrew from the public eye for a few years, but she subsequently worked as both a singer and an actress (notably as a member of the Committee). As the '60s closed, she performed and recorded with her sister, Joan. In the early '70s she helped establish Bread and Roses, a chantable organization that provides entertainment for prisoners, hospital patients, and institutionalized people. She died of cancer in 2001.

Chris Farlowe

Born John Henry Deighton, Oct. 13, 1940, London, Eng. 1967—The Fabulous Chris Farlowe (CBS, U.K.) 1968—Paint It Farlowe (Immediate, U.K.) 1970—From Here to Mama Rosa (with the Hill) (Polydor) 1985—Out of the Blue (Polydor, U.K.) 1988—Born Again 1996—As Time Goes By (KEG/Out of Time, U.K.) 1998—The Voice (Citadel/Out of Time, U.K.) 2000—Glory Bound (Delicious/Out of Time, U.K.).

A minor English R&B figure in the early '60s, vocalist Chris Farlowe's records sold poorly until mid-decade, when Mick Jagger gave him his first major U.K. hit with a Jagger-Richards composition, "Out of Time."

John Deighton began playing the guitar at age 13 and soon formed the John Henry Skiffle Group, which won the All-English Skiffle Championship. By 1962 he was calling himself Chris Farlowe and singing R&B at London's Flamingo Club with his Thunderbirds. Their early recordings included "Buzz with the Fuzz" and "Stormy Monday Blues" (which Farlowe released under the alias Little Joe Cook).

But it was only after Jagger (who sang occasional backup vocals on Farlowe's records) became his patron that the Thunderbirds sustained any serious impact. "Out of Time" hit #1 in July 1966, but later that year Farlowe disbanded the Thunderbirds, only to re-form the group the following year (with Carl Palmer on drums). Other band members included guitarist Albert Lee, keyboardist Pete Solley, and keyboardist Dave Greenslade, later of Colosseum. In 1970 Farlowe formed a new group, the Hill, which recorded one album. That same year he joined Greenslade in Colosseum. When that group broke up in November 1971, Farlowe lent his services to Atomic Rooster for two LPs.

Concurrently he worked on various solo projects, including a 1970 stint with a band called the Hill. In 1972 Farlowe retired from music to run his Nazi war memorabilia shop in North London. In 1975 he attempted a last-ditch comeback by reissuing "Out of Time" and an LP, The Chris Farlowe Band Live. He again retired, but resurfaced in 1985 with Out of the Blue. Three years later Farlowe came out with Born Again and sang on Jimmy Page's first solo album, Outrider. Through the '90s Farlowe's name appeared on numerous import releases. He embarked on a solo tour of Europe in 2001. Colosseum reunited, toured, and recorded an album in 1996.

Fatboy Slim/The Housemartins

Fatboy Slim, born Quentin Cook, July 31, 1963, Bromley, Eng. 1996—Better Living Through Chemistry (Astralwerks/Skint) 1998—You've Come a Long Way, Baby 2000—On the Floor at the Boutique; Halfway Between the Gutter and the Stars. The Housemartins, formed 1984, Hull, Eng.: Paul Heaton (b. May 9, 1962, Merseyside, Eng.), voc., gtr.; Stan Cullimore (b. Apr. 6, 1962, Hull, Eng.), gtr.; Ted Key, bass; Hugh Whitaker, drums. 1985—(– Key; + Cook, bass) 1986—London O'Hull 4 (Elektra) (– Whitaker; + Dave Hemingway [b. Sep. 20, 1960, Hull], drums) 1987—The People Who Grinned Themselves to Death 1988—Now That's What I Call Quite Good! (Go! Discs, U.K.).

Recording under the alias Fatboy Slim, British DJ/producer Norman Cook was one of the major pioneers of big beat, he ranks second only to the Chemical Brothers in terms of breaking the genre in the States. Cook samples from a wide range of music—house, funk, even rock—to create electronic music specifically designed for dancing. This emphasis on hedonism over experimentalism caused many techno punts to scorn Fatboy Slim, though it granted him immense success both at home and in America.

Cook, who was christened Quentin, started DJ'ing at age 15. In 1985 he changed his name to Norman and joined the British pop band the Housemartins, replacing departing bassist and founding member Ted Key. The Housemartins were known for their socially conscious, no-frills image and scathing sarcasm. Their 1986 and 1987 albums yielded several Top 20 pop hits, including "Caravan of Love" (#1 U.K., 1986) and "Happy Hour" (#3 U.K., 1986).

Following the band's split in 1988, Housemartins frontman Paul Heaton and drummer Dave Hemingway formed the Beautiful South [see entry]; Cook, meanwhile, returned to his dance-music roots with Beats International, which scored a #1 hit in the U.K. with its 1990 single "Dub Be Good to Me." Cook also recorded under numerous other monikers, including Pizzaman, Freakpower, and Mighty Dub Katz—who all charted in the U.K.—before embarking on his Fatboy Slim project. He made a minor splash in America with 1996's Better Living Through Chemistry and its single, "Going Out of My Head," which drew its defining guitar sample from Yvonne Elliman's remake of the Who's "I Can't Explain." But it was 1998's You've Come a Long Way, Baby that transformed Cook into an international star with its inescapable hits "The Rockafeller Skank" and "Praise You," the latter of which stayed on the U.S. pop chart for 20 weeks in 1999. Cook veered away from big beat for his next venture, Halfway Between the Gutter and the Stars, on which he worked with live vocalists (including R&B singer Macy Gray) for the first time.

Charlie Feathers

Born June 12, 1932, Holly Springs, MS; died Aug. 29, 1998, Memphis, TN

1973—Good Rockin' Tonight/Live in Memphis (Edsel, U.K.)
 1978—Rockabilly Man (Charly) 1979—Live in Memphis (Barrelhouse); Charlie Feathers, vol. 1 (Feathers); Charlie Feathers; That Rockabilly Cat (Edsel) 1982—Honky Tonk Man (New Rose) 1984—Rockabilly Kings (Polydor) 1986—Legendary '56 Demo Sessions (Zu-Zazz) 1987—Jungle Fever (Kay); The New Jungle Fever (New Rose, Fr.); Wild Wild Party (Rockstar) 1988—The Living Legend, vol. 2 (Redita) 1991—Rock-a-Billy (Zu-Zazz); Charlie Feathers (Elektra/Nonesuch) 1993—Uh Huh Honey (Norton); 1995—Tip Top Daddy (Norton); Rock 'n' Roll (Star) 1998—Get With It (Revenant).

Although rockabilly pioneer Charlie Feathers never achieved commercial success, he was present at the creation of the form. Feathers himself hinted that a mysterious, undisclosed "conspiracy" denied him mainstream fame, he has since become a cult legend.

Raised on a farm, Feathers quit school after the third grade, learned guitar from a black sharecropper, and worked on oil pipelines in Illinois and Texas as a teen. Moving to Memphis at 18, he contracted spinal meningitis and spent months bedridden, listening to the radio. Upon recuperating he concentrated on music. Feathers later claimed that he spent a great deal of time in the mid-'50s at Sam Phillips' Sun studios, arranging some of Elvis Presley's early material. Though most of Feathers' assertions have been unsubstantiated, he did cowrite Presley's "I Forgot to Remember to Forget" (#1 C&W, 1955). That year, his own debut single on Flip, "I've Been Deceived," showed the influence of Hank Williams, and from then until 1959, he recorded for Sun and smaller labels (King, Kay, and Walmay among them). Such singles as "Tongue-Tied Jill" and "Get With It" did little on the charts, but Feathers persevered, playing local roadhouses until gaining, in 1977, a gig at London's Rainbow Theatre that drew raves from rockabilly revivalists.

In the late '70s Feathers got the financial backing to start his own short-lived record label, Feathers, upon which he released a couple of albums and several singles. Frequently comic in tone, his work was often straightforwardly country. However, with the critical praise that attended 1991's Charlie Feathers (his only major label release), 1995's Tip Top Daddy (an unearthed collection of stellar unissued demos), and 1998's Get With It (a definitive collection of early singles), Feathers will be remembered essentially as a great, early, if not widely known, rocker. He died in 1998, following complications from a stroke.

The Feelies

Formed 1976, Haledon, NJ

Bill Million (b. William Clayton, ca. 1953, Haledon), gtr., voc.; Glenn Mercer (b. ca. 1955, Haledon), gtr., voc.; John J., bass; Dave Weckerman (b. ca. 1950), drums.
 1977—(- J.; - Weckerman; + Keith Clayton [b. Keith DeNunzio, Apr. 27, 1958, Reading, PA], bass; + Vinny D. [b. Vincent DeNunzio, Aug. 15, 1956, Reading], drums) 1978—(- D.; + Anton Fier [a.k.a. Andy Fisher] [b. June 20, 1956, Cleveland, OH], drums) 1980—Crazy Rhythms (Stiff) 1986—(- Fier; - Clayton; + Stanley Demeski [b. ca. 1960], drums; + Brenda Sauter [b. ca. 1959], bass, violin; + Weckerman, perc.) The Good Earth (Coyote); No One Knows EP 1988—Only Life (Coyote/A&M) 1991—Time for a Witness (A&M).

With their quirky rhythms, frantically strummed guitars, pop melodies, and enigmatic lyrics, the Feelies epitomized New York postpunk. They stubbornly rejected a commercial recording career after one album and disappeared for several years, reappearing in the late '80s with their twin-guitar sound intact and gaining a stronghold in the American indie-rock scene.

Glenn Mercer and Bill Million, the group's songwriters, met at high school in Haledon, New Jersey, where several years later the Feelies made their live debut. After a lineup change, they began playing New York's new-wave venues and quickly earned a place in the vanguard of that city's rock experimentalists: in 1978 the Village Voice named them the best underground band in New York. That fall, Vinny D. left to play with Richard Lloyd (Television) and was replaced by Anton Fier.

Adamant about producing their own records, the Feelies did not sign a long-term recording contract until 1980, although they did record a single, "Fa Ce La," for the English independent label Rough Trade in 1979. Crazy Rhythms introduced the band as four nerds making intricate and intense white noise; songs included "The Boy With the Perpetual Nervousness" and a cover of the Beatles' "Everybody's Got Something to Hide (Except Me and My Monkey)."

Frustrated and disappointed by Stiff's demands for a hit single, the band fizzled. Fier went on to work with Pere Ubu [see entry] and form the Golden Palominos. Mercer and Million wrote the soundtrack for the punk coming-of-age film Smithereens in 1982. They played in several different New Jersey bands, including the Weckerman-led Yung Wu (who released an album in 1987), the Trypes (who released a 1984 EP), and Beatles and Velvet Underground cover bands. It was the instrumental group the Willies, with Weckerman, Brenda Sauter, and Stan Demeski, that led to the reactivation of the Feelies in 1983. As in the past, the Feelies played sporadically, mostly on holidays.

Their second album, The Good Earth (coproduced by R.E.M.'s Peter Buck), introduced a kinder, gentler group, with a more reflective, acoustic tone. Live, the Feelies built their songs into a frenzied crescendo culminating in the album track "Slipping (Into Something)," with Mercer shaking feedback out of his electric guitar, Million strumming his acoustic at a breakneck pace, and the two percussionists egging the whole thing on. That fall the Feelies appeared as the band playing the high school reunion in Jonathan Demme's Something Wild.

The Feelies' subsequent albums echoed the progression of their live shows, each more manic than the next, with Mercer increasingly taking a leading role. On Only Life, their major-label debut, they finally gave in to their longtime Velvet fetish with a cover of "What Goes On." The Feelies have never been musical innovators as much as performance perfectionists, wearing their influences on their sleeves with their frequent covers of Neil Young, Patti Smith, the Monkees, and Modern Lovers, among others. On Time for a Witness, those borrowings were dramatically overstated, each song sounding like someone else's, culminating in a cover of the Stooges' "Real Cool Time."

The Feelies broke up shortly after their last album. Demeski went on to play with Luna, while Mercer and Weckerman formed the group Wake Ooloo, recording three LPs for the Pravda label before disbanding in 1998. The two men subsequently formed a new band called Sunburst.

José Feliciano

Born Sep. 10, 1945, Lares, P.R.
 1968—Feliciano! (RCA); Souled 1969—Feliciano/10 to 23; Alive, Alive-O! 1970—Fireworks 1971—Encore! Jose Feliciano's Finest Performances; Jose Feliciano 1972—Jose Feliciano Sings 1973—Compartment 1974—And the Feeling's Good 1975—Just Wanna Rock 'n' Roll 1976—Sweet Soul Music (Private Stock) 1981—Jose Feliciano (Motown) 1983—Romance in the Night 1988—All Time Greatest Hits (RCA) 1989—I'm Never Gonna Change (EMI) 1992—Latin Street '92 (Capitol/EMI Latin) 1997—On Second Thought (32 Jazz); Americano (Rodven/PolyGram Latino) 1998—Señor Bolero.

José Feliciano reached worldwide popularity with his flamenco-flavored versions of pop hits such as "Light My Fire" (#3, 1968). Born blind, Feliciano was the second of 12 children of a poor Puerto Rican farmer; he grew up in New York's Spanish Harlem. Feliciano was introduced to the accordion and the guitar as a child. He first performed at the Bronx's El Teatro Puerto Rico. At 17 he dropped out of high school and began playing Greenwich Village clubs and coffeehouses like the Cafe Id (where he met his first wife and manager, Hilda Perez) and Gerde's Folk City (where he was discovered).

The next year, he released his first single, "Everybody Do the Click," and album, The Voice and Guitar of Jose Feliciano, and appeared at the Newport Folk Festival. Initially most of his releases were in Spanish, intended for the Latin market (in 1966, he played before 100,000 in Buenos Aires). In 1968 his cover of the Doors' "Light My Fire" hit the Top 5, nearly equaling the success of the original version. It went gold, as did Feliciano! (#2, 1968). He followed up with minor hits ("Hi Heel Sneakers," #25) and released a controversial rendition of "The Star Spangled Banner," recorded live at the fifth game of the 1968 World Series. He won the Best New Artist Grammy of 1968.

One of the first Western singers to appear behind the Iron Curtain, he tours frequently. Besides guitar, Feliciano also plays bass, banjo, keyboards, timbales, mandolin, and harmonica. His occasional compositions ("Rain," "Destiny") have been covered by Anne Murray and Blue Swede. He has also been a frequent guest on television shows (Kung Fu and McMillan and Wife). Feliciano contributed to the soundtrack of the early-'70s film MacKenna's Gold. He signed with Motown in 1980, and his label debut, Jose Feliciano, was produced by Berry Gordy Jr. and Suzee Ikeda. He recorded two more LPs for Motown, both for its Spanish-language division.

Subsequent U.S. success has been meager, although in the early '70s he recorded with Joni Mitchell ("Free Man in Paris"). His last charting English-language single was the theme song to the television series Chico and the Man (#96, 1974). Nevertheless, he has three gold albums in the U.S., but over 40 gold and platinum citations from around the world. He has recorded nearly as many Spanish-language records as English, and he has won Grammys in both language categories. An East Harlem public school was renamed the José Feliciano Performing Arts School in his honor. In the early '90s Feliciano wrote music for Ray Bradbury's play The Wonderful Ice Cream Suit. In 1994 he released a dance single, "Goin' Krazy," using the name JF. Having become a father figure to the emerging global Latin pop audience, Feliciano toured extensively during the decade and performed on several television specials. He briefly appeared in the 1995 Coen Brothers film Fargo.

Freddy Fender

Born Baldemar Huerta, June 4, 1937, San Benito, TX
 1974—Before the Next Teardrop Falls (ABC/Dot) 1975—Are You Ready for Freddy 1976—Rock 'n' Country; If You're Ever in Texas 1977—Best of Freddy Fender 1991—The Freddy Fender Collection (Reprise) 1993—Canciones de Mi Barrio (Arhoolie) 1996—The Best of Freddy Fender (MCA).

Freddy Fender is a Tex-Mex country rocker who specializes in the polka-waltz style called conjunto and is known for his tearful, choked-up singing in Spanish and English. After recording nine Top 10 C&W hits in the '70s, he found a new audience as lead singer of the all-star Texas Tornados [see entry].

Fender began playing the guitar and singing in amateur contests as a child. He joined the Marines at 16, and upon his return home in the mid-'50s began performing rockabilly tunes in Spanish, billed as El Bebop Kid. At one Corpus Christi nightclub he was the victim of an after-hours fight that left his nose permanently crooked and a deep knife scar in his neck. In 1957 two early recordings—Spanish versions of English-language hits first recorded by Elvis Presley (“Don’t Be Cruel”) and Harry Belafonte (“Jamaica Farewell”)—became big sellers in Mexico and South America, earning him the nickname the Mexican Elvis.

In 1959 he signed to Imperial, changed his surname to Fender (inspired by the guitar), and cut “Holy One” and the original version of “Wasted Days and Wasted Nights,” which sold 100,000 copies. On Friday, May 13, 1960, shortly after the release of yet another moderate hit, “Crazy, Crazy, Baby,” Fender was arrested for possession of two marijuana cigarettes in Baton Rouge, Louisiana. Sentenced to five years in prison, he subsequently served 30 months in the Angola State Prison.

Upon his release he played bars in New Orleans and in San Benito, Texas, from 1963 until 1968. By 1975, he had released more than 100 records on regional labels, and in early 1974 he met producer Huey Meaux, who masterminded Fender’s 1975 national pop breakthrough, “Before the Next Teardrop Falls” (#1). Before the end of the year he’d placed two more 45s in the Top 20: “Wasted Days and Wasted Nights” (#8) and “Secret Love” (#20). Fender’s subsequent releases kept him before country audiences. He also acted in the films Short Eyes (1977) and The Milagro Beanfield War (1987).

In the mid-’80s Fender, who holds a degree in sociology, completed treatment for drug and alcohol dependency. In early 2001 he announced that he was being evaluated by medical professionals for possible kidney and liver transplants due to his chronic health conditions hepatitis C and diabetes, which had resulted in his requiring kidney dialysis.

Marilyn McCoo and Billy Davis Jr.: 1976—I Hope We Get to Love in Time (ABC) 1977—The Two of Us 1978—Marilyn and Billy (Columbia).

The Fifth Dimension had a string of pop-soul hits in the late ’60s and early ’70s (seven gold LPs, five gold singles), which introduced songs by Laura Nyro and Jim Webb. Both the Fifth Dimension and the Friends of Distinction were offshoots of a vocal group, the Hi-Fi’s, formed by Marilyn McCoo and LaMonte McLemore. McCoo, who had won the Grand Talent Award in the Miss Bronze California pageant, was working as a fashion model, and McLemore (a onetime minor-league baseball player) was photographing her when they decided to start the Hi-Fi’s with Floyd Butler and Harry Elston, who later formed the Friends of Distinction. The Hi-Fi’s toured with Ray Charles’ revue before breaking up. McCoo then recruited Florence LaRue, who had also won a Grand Talent Award, and they brought in McLemore’s fellow St. Louis-born Angeleno, Ron Townson. Billy Davis Jr. was singing with his own group, the Saint Gospel Singers, when McLemore, his cousin, invited him to join.

As the Versatiles, they signed with Johnny Rivers’ Soul City label. After a minor West Coast hit, “I’ll Be Loving You Forever,” Rivers persuaded them to change their name. Their manager suggested the Fifth Dimension. The quintet’s first hit was a cover of the Mamas and the Papas’ “Go Where You Wanna Go” (#16, 1967), but its pop dominance began with its first Jim Webb song, “Up, Up and Away” (#7, 1967), which received four Grammys. In 1968 the Fifth Dimension made hits of Laura Nyro’s “Stoned Soul Picnic” (#3) and “Sweet Blindness” (#13); in 1969 the group had its biggest seller with a medley from Hair, “Aquarius/Let the Sunshine In” (#1, 1969), which sold nearly 2 million copies. Another Nyro composition, “Wedding Bell Blues,” topped the chart later that year. The group apparently took the song to heart, for McCoo and Davis married, as did LaRue and manager Marc Gordon.

In the early ’70s the Fifth Dimension moved toward easy-listening ballads, with occasional hits, including “(Last Night) I Didn’t Get to Sleep at All” (#8, 1972). The act began to play the nightclub and television circuits; it also appeared at the Nixon White House. McCoo and Davis left to work as a duo in late 1975; their 1976 album I Hope We Get to Love in Time included the #1 hit “You Don’t Have to Be a Star.” By 1980 she was cohosting the TV show Solid Gold.

The remains of the Fifth Dimension, meanwhile, reunited with Webb in 1975 for the unsuccessful Earthbound; LaRue and McLemore continue to tour, with Greg Walker, Phyllis Battle, and Willie Williams (who replaced Townson in 1998). In the ’90s the group starred in a national tour of the popular Fats Waller musical Ain’t Misbehavin’. In 1991 the Fifth Dimension became the Original Fifth Dimension for a one-off reunion tour with Davis and McCoo. In 1996 McCoo, who sang solo and acted through the ’80s and ’90s, made her Broadway debut in Showboat. Later in the decade she and Davis wrote and performed several touring musical shows, including a Duke Ellington tribute.

Fine Young Cannibals

Formed 1983, Birmingham, Eng.

Andy Cox (b. Jan. 25, 1960, Birmingham), gtr.; David Steele (b. Sep. 8, 1960, Isle of Wight, Eng.), bass, kybds; Roland Gift (b. Apr. 28, 1961, Birmingham), voc.

1985—Fine Young Cannibals (I.R.S.) 1989—The Raw and the Cooked 1990—The Raw and the Remix (I.R.S./MCA) 1996—The Finest.

When the English Beat [see entry] broke up in 1983, two of the group's founders, Andy Cox and David Steele, continued as Fine Young Cannibals, recruiting the handsome, half-white, half-Caribbean actor/singer Roland Gift as frontman. With Cox and Steele's market-tested blend of ska rhythms, dance beats, and pop hooks, and Gift's quavering, American soul-influenced falsetto and striking, video-friendly face, the Cannibals attained the chart success their predecessor never knew.

Taking the name from an obscure 1960 film, All the Fine Young Cannibals, the trio released its first album in 1985 and became familiar to MTV viewers through "Johnny Come Home" and a humorous, overstated remake of Elvis Presley's "Suspicious Minds." The Cannibals gained even more visibility with their updated version of the Buzzcocks' "Ever Fallen in Love," done for the Jonathan Demme film Something Wild. When director Barry Levinson heard the music, he asked the group to write some material for his film Tin Men, and the resulting tunes made up most of the "raw" side of the group's followup, The Raw and the Cooked.

That album shot to #1 and remained there for most of the summer of 1989. It ultimately sold more than 2 million copies, producing two #1 hits ("Good Thing" and "She Drives Me Crazy"); a third single, "Don't Look Back," reached #11, and two others made it into the Top 100.

At home, the British trio was just as well known for its politics, regularly attacking Margaret Thatcher's Conservative government. In 1990 the Cannibals even returned two BRIT Awards, after criticizing the ceremony as a "photo opportunity" for Thatcher's government.

Throughout, Gift was attracting film offers. After the entire band appeared in Tin Men, the singer landed starring roles in Sammy and Rosie Get Laid and Scandal; he also appeared in a stage performance of Romeo and Juliet. With Gift becoming increasingly involved with his acting, Cox and Steele did a remixed version of The Raw and the Cooked. Plans for a third album, to be titled The Finest, were left stillborn. But three tracks (including "The Flame") from that abandoned album surfaced on a best-of collection of the same name in 1996. Gift essentially walked away from both music and acting throughout the '90s, preferring the company of old friends in the neighborhood pub. But in 1999 he reemerged with two high-profile performances at the Edinburgh Festival.

The Fireballs

Formed 1957, Raton, NM

Chuck Tharp (b. Feb. 3, 1941), voc.; Stan Lark (b. July 27, 1940), bass; Eric Budd (b. Oct. 23, 1938), drums; George Tomsco (b. Apr. 24, 1940), gtr.; Dan Trammell (b. July 14, 1940), gtr.

1959—(- Trammell) 1960—(- Tharp; + Jimmy Gilmer [b. 1940, LaGrange, IL], voc., piano) 1962—(- Budd; + Doug Roberts [d. Nov. 18, 1981], drums) 1963—Sugar Shack (Dot).

Jimmy Gilmer and the Fireballs had the biggest hit of 1963 with the million-selling "Sugar Shack." Gilmer began singing as a youngster, and in 1951 he moved with his family to Amarillo, Texas, where he studied piano for four years at the Musical Arts Conservatory. While studying engineering at Amarillo College in 1957, he formed his first pop band. In 1960 he replaced Chuck Tharp as singer of the Fireballs, a group of high school friends that had placed two instrumentals in the Top 40, "Torquay" (#39, 1959) and "Bulldog" (#24, 1960). Gilmer was introduced to the band by Buddy Holly's producer Norman Petty at his Clovis, New Mexico, recording studio.

With Gilmer on piano and vocals, their first release, "Quite a Party," made the Top 30. "Sugar Shack," credited to Jimmy Gilmer and the Fireballs, and featuring a distinctive-sounding keyboard called a Solovox, held the #1 spot on the chart for over a month. Another 1963 single, "Daisy Petal Pickin'," hit #15. By mid-decade, however, Gilmer and the Fireballs had gone their separate ways. Gilmer had little subsequent success, while the Fireballs returned to the chart in 1968 with a rocked-up version of a Tom Paxton song, "Bottle of Wine" (#9).

Firefall

Formed ca. 1974, Boulder, CO

Rick Roberts (b. 1950, FL), gtr., voc.; Jock Bartley (b. KS), gtr., voc.; Mark Andes (b. Feb. 19, 1948, Philadelphia, PA), bass; Larry Burnett (b. Washington, DC), gtr., voc.; Michael Clarke (b. June 3, 1944, New York, NY; d. Dec. 19, 1993, Treasure Island, FL), drums.

1976—Firefall (Atlantic) 1977—Luna Sea 1978—Élan 1980—Undertow; Clouds Across the Sun 1983—Break of Dawn 1984—Mirror of the World 1992—Firefall's Greatest Hits (Rhino) 1994—Messenger (Redstone).

With its lightweight blend of acoustic guitars, high harmonies, and pop-flavored country rock, Firefall jumped onto the national scene with one of 1976's biggest hits, "You Are the Woman" (#9, 1976). The band's chief writer and leader, guitarist Rick Roberts, sang on the Byrds' Untitled before joining the Burnto Brothers (which then included another ex-Byrd, drummer Michael Clarke), where he stayed until 1972. Roberts then released a couple of solo albums (Windmills, 1972, and She Is a Song, 1973) while trying to establish himself in L.A. music circles.

He eventually retreated to Boulder, where he formed Firefall in mid-decade, recruiting ex-Spint and Jo Jo Gunne bassist Mark Andes. With Washington, DC, singer/songwriter Larry Burnett, he wrote most of the material for the group's gold debut, Firefall. Its second LP, which also went gold, contained "Just Remember I Love You" (#11, 1977). The following year's Élan continued Firefall's streak, going platinum, thanks to Roberts' "Strange Way" (#11, 1978). Two more Top 40 hits followed in the early '80s, "Headed for a Fall" (#35, 1980) and "Staying With It" (#37, 1981), but thereafter Firefall faded from the airwaves. The group's 1984 album, Mirror of the World, failed to even chart. Ten years later a new Firefall, led by original guitarist/singer Jock Bartley, released Messenger on the independent Redstone label.

Wild Man Fischer

Born 1945, Los Angeles, CA
 1969—An Evening With Wild Man Fischer (Bizarre) 1977—Wildmania (Rhino) 1981—Pronounced Normal 1984—Nothing Scary.
 Wild Man Fischer Meets Smegma: 1997—Sings Popular Songs (Birdman).

A man who got his start on street corners singing made-to-order compositions for a dime, Larry "Wild Man" Fischer was a well-known eccentric on the L.A. rock fringe in the late '60s. A former mental patient, he met Frank Zappa, who produced An Evening With Wild Man Fischer for Bizarre Records in 1969. Fischer spent a good deal of the early '70s roaming the country, singing for his widely scattered band of cult followers.

In 1975 he released his first record in six years, a single promoting a record store, "Go to Rhino Records." He came to record the song because, according to store owner Richard Foos, the Rhino Records store was the only one Fischer could hang around in without being thrown out. When the single sold 2,000 copies, Foos and Harold Bronson decided to start Rhino Records, which has since grown to become a major source of reissues and obscurities. The label's first LP release was Fischer's Wildmania, which reconfirmed the singer's out-to-lunch status; he once told a Los Angeles Times reporter that he lives "all over." On August 3, 1982, Wild Man Fischer "quit" show business. The next day he was "back in" show business. He currently lives a very private life somewhere near Hollywood. Sings Popular Songs (the jacket of which misspells Fischer's surname) contains sessions from 1975, recorded with the charmingly named West Coast noise collective Smegma.

Fishbone

Formed 1979, Los Angeles, CA
 John "Norwood" Fisher (b. Sep. 12, 1965, Los Angeles), bass, voc.; Phillip Dwight "Fish" Fisher (b. July 16, 1967, Los Angeles), drums; Kendall Rey Jones (b. Sep. 9, 1965, Los Angeles), gr., voc.; Angelo Christopher Moore (b. Nov. 5, 1965, Los Angeles), voc., sax; Christopher Gordon Dowd (b. Sep. 20, 1965, Las Vegas, NV), trombone, kybds., voc.; Walter Adam Kibby II (b. Nov. 13, 1964, Columbus, OH), trumpet.

 1985—Fishbone EP (Columbia) 1986—In Your Face 1987—It's a Wonderful Life (Gonna Have a Good Time) EP 1988—Truth and Soul 1990—Bonin' in the Boneyard EP (+ John Bigham [b. Mar. 3, 1959, Chicago, IL], gr., kybds.) 1991—The Reality of My Surroundings 1993—Give a Monkey a Brain and He'll Swear He's the Center of the Universe (- Jones) 1996—Fishbone 101: Nuttasaurusmeg, Fossil Fuelin' the Fonkey; Chim Chim's Badass Revenge (Rowdy).
 As Fishbone & the Familyhood Experience: 2000—(- Dowd; - P. Fisher; + Tracey E. "Spacey T" Singleton III [b. June 6, 1957], gr., voc.; + John Drewey McKnight [b. Aug. 9, 1968], kybds., horns, voc.; + John Steward [b. Dec. 2, 1961], drums, voc.) The Psychotic Friends Nuttwerx (Hollywood).

Fishbone's mélange of ska, funk, punk, and metal was born when residents of South Central L.A. were bussed to the San Fernando Valley for junior high school. Dropped into foreign territory, the Fisher brothers, Jones, Dowd, and Kibby banded together with Valley resident Moore and expressed the tensions of integration through music. Combining homeboy and Valley boy tastes (they cite Funkadelic and Rush as equal influences), Fishbone confront and transcend racial barriers, yet the career hurdles these black rockers have faced compared to the success of their white-funk peers (Red Hot Chili Peppers) indicate the depths of such divisions.

Fishbone played under a variety of names, including Hot Ice, Megatron, and Counterattack, before recording its debut EP. Fishbone is a fierce, hardcore record on which the band members flex their credentials as both able social commentators and avid partiers. Producer David Kahne slicked up Fishbone's sound on In Your Face, but the record still lives up to its title. Kahne also produced It's a Wonderful Life, a collection of twisted Christmas carols, and Truth and Soul, which featured a metallic version of "Freddie's Dead." In 1988 Fishbone backed Little Richard on "Rock Island Line," a track on the Woody Guthrie and Lead Belly tribute Folkways: A Vision Shared. In an odder pairing yet, Fishbone backed Annette Funicello singing the '60s hit "Jamaican Ska" in the beach party spoof Back to the Beach.

Bonin', a collection of studio tomfoolery, including an X-rated version of the title track, was produced by the Jungle Brothers. Fishbone spent more than a year making The Reality of My Surroundings, producing it mostly alone, with assistance from Kahne. (The band reportedly fought with Columbia for its independence and was resentful of Kahne's control.) The album was the band's biggest, featuring "Everyday Sunshine" and "Sunless Saturday," both favored by the alt-rock crowd. The video for "Sunless Saturday" was directed by Spike Lee. Having never received much radio play, Fishbone has relied on critical acceptance and infamous live shows, where the musicians thrash and mosh like hyperkinetic punks, to build their following.

The concurrent release of Fishbone's fourth album and its slot on the main stage of Lollapalooza '93 boded well for the band's future (Give a Monkey a Brain broke the Top 100). This breakthrough was marred, however, when Norwood Fisher was arrested with four others for trying to kidnap ex-Fishbone guitarist Kendall Jones off a California street in April 1993. Jones had left the band in March, reportedly obsessed with the apocalypse and denouncing Fishbone as "demonic." Fisher said he was trying to take Jones to psychiatric experts. Jones claimed he left the band over philosophical differences. Fisher was later acquitted of the kidnapping charges, and in early 1994 the band (minus Jones) began touring again.

Give a Monkey a Brain didn't sell well enough for Columbia, and the label dropped Fishbone from its roster. The group countered with the caustic Chim Chim's Badass Revenge (1996), a Dallas Austin-produced album that likened the record industry to the institution of slavery. Then, just as the third-wave ska revival led by No Doubt and Mighty Mighty Bosstones seemed to have passed Fishbone by, the group, now recording under the name Fishbone & the Familyhood Experience, released The Psychotic Friends Nuttwerk (2000). The album owes a stylistic debt to the music of Sly and the Family Stone, even to the point of including a cover of Sly's "Everybody Is a Star." It also boasts a dazzling supporting cast, including Blowfly, George Clinton, Rick James, Perry Farrell, Donny Osmond, No Doubt's Gwen Stefani, and members of the Red Hot Chili Peppers.

The "5" Royales

Formed late 1940s, Winston-Salem, NC

As the Royal Sons Gospel Group: Johnny Tanner (b. ca. 1927), tenor voc.; Lowman Pauling (b. c. 1927; d. Dec. 26, 1973, New York, NY), baritone voc., bass voc., gtr.; Clarence Pauling (a.k.a. Clarence Paul [b. Mar. 29, 1928, Winston-Salem; d. May 6, 1995, Los Angeles, CA]), voc.; Otto Jeffries, bass voc.; William Samuels, voc.
ca. 1950—(- C. Pauling; + Obadiah Carter [d. July 1994, Winston-Salem], tenor voc., baritone voc.; + Jimmy Moore, tenor voc., baritone voc.; + Johnny Holmes, voc.) 1953—(- Jeffries; + Eugene Tanner [d. Dec. 29, 1994, Winston-Salem], voc.)
1960—(- L. Pauling) 1994—Monkey Hips and Rice: The "5" Royales Anthology (Rhino).

The "5" Royales were originally a gospel group called the Royal Sons Gospel Group (then Quintet). They emerged in 1953 with two R&B #1 hits on the Apollo label, "Baby Don't Do It" and "Help Me Somebody," both of which were written by lead guitarist Lowman Pauling. Inexplicably, there were at times six members of the "5" Royales.

They enjoyed their first pop success in 1957, when "Think" hit #66. Their most famous song, "Dedicated to the One I Love," another Pauling original, peaked at #81 in 1961 (it had been released with even less success in 1957). "Dedicated to the One I Love" would hit the Top 5 twice in cover versions by the Shirelles (1961) and the Mamas and the Papas (1967). Later releases (with little mass-market impact) came out on ABC, Home of the Blues, Vee-Jay, and Smash, through 1965, and the group broke up.

Original Royal Son Clarence Pauling, going under the name Clarence Paul, became an influential writer, producer, and A&R man for Motown, working with, among others, Stevie Wonder and Marvin Gaye. All the other members have since retired; Lowman Pauling died in 1974. The "5" Royales are among the few groups of their era who have yet to reunite.

The Five Satins

Formed 1955, New Haven, CT

Best-known lineup: Freddie Parris (b. Mar. 26, 1936), lead voc.; Lou Peebles, voc.; Ed Martin, voc.; Stanley Dortch, voc.; Jim Freeman, voc.

1990—In the Still of the Night (Relic) 1995—Lost Treasures.

The Five Satins were one of the best-known doo-wop vocal groups of the '50s. They evolved from lead singer Freddie Parris' high school group, the Scarlets. By 1956 he'd organized a new group, christened it the Five Satins, and used a two-track machine to record "In the Still of the Night" in the basement of an East Haven Catholic church. Originally released in 1956 on the Standard label, it was later leased to Ember Records and became a #24 hit that October. (The song had some chart success when reissued in 1960 and 1961 and has become an R&B ballad standard. It has been estimated to have sold 15 to 20 million copies and is a perennial winner in oldies-station listeners' polls.)

Soon after the single's release, Parris returned to the army. The Satins had recorded while he was on leave and continued to record with sporadic success. "To the Aisle" (with Bill Baker on lead vocals) hit #25 in 1957. Out of the Satins' many releases, only "Shadows" and "I'll Be Seeing You" reached the lower rungs of the Hot 100 as 1960 began. They sang a cappella re-creations of the latter tune and "In the Still of the Night" in the 1973 film Let the Good Times Roll. Upon his discharge in 1958, Parris re-formed the group.

The Five Satins were featured on Dick Clark's American Bandstand and on many of his road revues in the late '50s. They also toured Europe, where they built up a following. In 1970 the group appeared in the film Been Down So Long It Looks Like Up to Me. By the early '70s they were a staple item on rock revival shows. In 1974, with Parris still underpinning the harmonies, they signed with Kirschner Records and released "Two Different Worlds." The group had an R&B Top 40 hit, "Everybody Stand Up and Clap Your Hands," in 1976 under the name Black Satin. The following year the group appeared on Southside Johnny and the Asbury Jukes' "First Night" from This Time It's for Real.

Onetime member Willie Wright went on to become a successful disc jockey in Connecticut. The many labels for which the Five Satins have recorded include Red Bird, Cub, Chancellor, Warner Bros., Roulette, and Mama Sadie. By 1982 the group was recording for Elektra and experiencing limited success on the pop chart (#71) with "Memories of Days Gone

By," a medley of classic doo-wop hits. Parris and company continue to perform and record.

Roberta Flack

Born Feb. 10, 1939, Asheville, NC
 1969—First Take (Atlantic) 1970—Chapter Two 1971—Quiet Fire 1972—Roberta Flack and Donny Hathaway 1973—Killing Me Softly 1975—Feel Like Makin' Love 1977—Blue Lights in the Basement 1978—Roberta Flack 1980—Roberta Flack Featuring Donny Hathaway; Live and More (with Peabo Bryson) 1982—I'm the One 1983—Born to Love (with Peabo Bryson) (Capitol) 1989—Oasis (Atlantic) 1991—Set the Night to Music 1993—Softly with These Songs: The Best of Roberta Flack 1994—Roberta.

Roberta Flack's clear, reserved vocals have given her a string of ballad hits. The daughter of a church organist, she entered Howard University in Washington, DC, on a full music scholarship at age 15. While working toward her degree in music, she was the first black student teacher at an all-white school in Chevy Chase, Maryland, then after graduation taught at another all-white school in Farmville, North Carolina. Eventually she returned to Washington, where she taught in several junior high schools and began singing in local clubs. Four years later, she left teaching for good.

In 1968 she was discovered by musician Les McCann. That November she signed with Atlantic, and a few months later recorded her entire debut album in less than 10 hours. Entitled First Take, it sold well; by 1971 Flack had toured Europe and Ghana, as well as the U.S. Her first hit single was a duet with Donny Hathaway, "You've Got a Friend" (#29, 1971), which she followed with a Carole King-Gerry Goffin composition, "Will You Love Me Tomorrow." Meanwhile, the Clint Eastwood movie Play Misty for Me was released with a song from Flack's debut album, "The First Time Ever I Saw Your Face," on the soundtrack. It became a #1 hit in 1972, and returned the three-year-old First Take to the LP chart; it reigned at #1 for five weeks that spring. Another Flack-Hathaway duet, "Where Is the Love" (#5, 1972), followed. After two more #1 hits, "Killing Me Softly With His Song" (1973) and "Feel Like Makin' Love" (1974), Flack cut back her performing to concentrate on recording and to pursue outside interests, including educational programs for disadvantaged youth.

She reemerged in late 1977 with Blue Lights in the Basement, which contained "The Closer I Get to You" (#2, 1978); by then she had been awarded four gold records in three years. Hathaway's death in 1979 interrupted the recording of Roberta Flack Featuring Donny Hathaway; the album included "You Are My Heaven" and "Back Together Again." In 1980 Flack toured and recorded a live album with vocalist Peabo Bryson (Live & More); they collaborated again in 1983 with Born to Love, which featured "Tonight, I Celebrate My Love" (#16). In 1981 she composed and produced her first soundtrack, for Bustin' Loose. The following year, Flack charted one of her last pop hit singles of the decade, "Making Love" (#13, 1982). "Oasis," a #1 R&B hit from the album of the same name did not chart on pop. But in 1991 Flack returned to the pop charts when the title track to Set the Night to Music, a duet with Maxi Priest, went to #6.

Throughout the '80s she performed around the world, including many dates with symphony orchestras and several shows with Miles Davis. She contributed "Goodbye Sadness" to Yoko Ono's tribute album to John Lennon, Every Man Has a Woman Who Loves Him. She remains fairly active; 1994's Roberta was nominated for a Grammy. In 1996 the Fugees had a hit with their version of "Killing Me Softly." The group made several public appearances with Flack; they even took her to perform at an awards ceremony in Europe.

Oklahoma City's Flaming Lips are one of the most enduring acts of the '80s American indie-rock explosion. They scored a surprise hit single/video when "She Don't Use Jelly" climbed to #54 in 1994. More important, a loyal following has embraced the group's tuneful, hooky approach to quirky psychedelia and whimsical sound exploration.

Disheartened by Jones' 1996 departure, the trio changed direction, conducting "parking lot experiments" in which the audience triggered prerecorded sound sources (e.g., fleets of boomboxes or car stereos). These interactive spectacles led to 1997's critically lauded Zaireeka—four CDs, designed to be played simultaneously, individually, or in the listener's preferred sequence and/or combination. The Soft Bulletin (1999) organizes the studio trickery and mellow drone pop into more manageable songform.

Vocal-group aficionados consider the Flamingos one of the, if not the, best of their era. Their cool yet dramatic singing and elegant harmonies were unparalleled, and this smooth, mature style influenced later groups such as the Four Tops and the Temptations. They are also remembered for their one major pop success (1959's "I Only Have Eyes for You") and for their contributions of talent to other noted black acts. The group began singing on Chicago's South Side. Early recordings on the Chance label revealed influences ranging from Christian gospel and Jewish hymns to the clean harmonies of the Four Freshmen on such releases as Johnny Carter's "Golden Treadrops." Lead vocalist Sollie McElroy was replaced by Nate Nelson, who subsequently joined the Platters. McElroy joined the Moroccos, another Chicago group, in 1955. He died of cancer-related complications in early 1995.

The Flamingos (who were also known as the Five Flamingos) followed with a variety of sentimental songs aimed at the white market. They remained also-rans until 1956, when "I'll Be Home" hit the R&B Top 10. (Although the song was credited to Fats Washington and New Orleans record distributor Stan Lewis, Nate Nelson subsequently claimed to have written all but the opening line.) Typical of the times, a white artist—Pat Boone—had a bigger pop hit with his cover version. Their crossover break came in 1959 with the languid "I Only Have Eyes for You" (#11 pop, #3 R&B).

For the next two years, the Flamingos had several minor hits on the End label, among them "I Was Such a Fool" and "Nobody Loves Me Like You" in 1960; and "Time Was" in 1961. They scored occasional soul hits through the early '70s with such releases as "Boogaloo Party" (#22 R&B, 1966) and "Buffalo Soldier" (#28 R&B, 1970). Other labels with which the group has been associated include Parrot, Decca, and, beginning in 1972, Ronze. Onetime member Johnny Carter joined the Dells, while another, Tommy Hunt, became a minor soul star ("Human," #48, 1961). Cousins Zeke and Jake Carey continued to lead a group of Flamingos into the late '90s. The Flamingos were inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 2001.

While the three-minute pop-rock song has gone in and out of fashion, the Flamin' Groovies have stuck to the form since the mid-'60s despite marginal commercial success. They formed in the Bay Area during the tail end of the British Invasion but were overshadowed by psychedelic jam bands on the San Francisco scene. The group was briefly known as the Chosen Few and then the Lost and Found before becoming the Flamin' Groovies.

In 1969 the group made its own EP, Sneakers, which sold 2,000 copies and led the Flamin' Groovies to be signed by Epic (it was reissued with 10 additional live tracks in 1996 as Supersneakers). Their major-label debut, Supersnazz, was popular only in the Midwest. The Groovies toured the Midwest, then returned to San Francisco, where it booked concerts at what had been Bill Graham's Fillmore West. That venture ended when the group's business manager disappeared with the receipts.

The band moved to New York and made Flamingo and Teenage Head, but in 1971 founding member Tim Lynch was arrested for drug offenses and draft evasion. Roy Loney, the group's main songwriter, quit, he reemerged in the late '70s with his own group, the Phantom Movers. The Groovies moved to England in 1972, released two singles, and returned to San Francisco.

Greg Shaw, editor of Bomp magazine, helped finance a single, "You Tore Me Down," and in 1976 pop revivalist Dave Edmunds (whom the band had met in Britain) produced the Groovies' major-label comeback, Shake Some Action. While the band toured Europe with the Ramones, Buddah released old tapes as Still Shakin'. Edmunds also produced Now, and the band continued to tour as the '80s began, though it did the bulk of its performing and recording in Europe, Australia, and New Zealand. The Groovies were particularly popular in France.

Jordan continues to play regularly, joining a reunion show of the Beau Brummels [see entry] in 2000, for instance. After the Phantom Movers, Loney released solo records and played with the Longshots and the Fondellas.

Béla Fleck/the Flecktones

Béla Fleck, July 10, 1958, New York, NY
1979—Crossing the Tracks (Rounder) 1981—Fiddle Tunes for Banjo 1982—Natural Bridge 1984—Double Time; Deviation (with New Grass Revival) 1986—Inroads 1987—Daybreak 1988—Places; Drive 1995—Tales From the Acoustic Planet (Warner Bros.) 1999—The Bluegrass Sessions—Tales From the Acoustic Planet, vol. 2.

With the Flecktones, formed 1990, Nashville, TN: Fleck, banjo; Howard Levy, harmonica, kybds.; Victor Lemonte Wooten, bass; Roy "Future Man" Wooten, Synthaxe Drumitar)

1990—Béla Fleck and the Flecktones (Warner) 1991—Flight of the Cosmic Hippo 1992—UFO TOFU 1993—(– Levy) Three Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest 1996—Live Art 1998—Left of Cool 1999—Greatest Hits of the 20th Century 2000—Outbound (Columbia).

While he has yet to spur a full-scale revival of the five-string banjo, Béla Fleck nevertheless played the key role in modernizing the instrument. In his hands the instrument rises out of its traditional bluegrass context to enter the world of contemporary fusion music.

Named for Hungarian composer Béla Bartók, Fleck was turned on to the banjo the way any New Yorker growing up in the rock era might have been—through TV's Beverly Hillsbillies theme and the 1972 hit single "Dueling Banjos." At age 14 Fleck began playing the banjo while studying guitar and music theory at the New York High School of Music and Art. Fleck's private banjo teachers included renowned players Erik Darling and Tony Trischka.

After graduation Fleck relocated to Boston to join the bluegrass band Tasty Licks. He moved to Kentucky in 1979 and helped form the group Spectrum. Fleck's first solo album, Crossing the Tracks, followed that year. In 1982 Fleck joined the New Grass Revival, a forward-thinking outfit whose eclecticism expanded and subverted bluegrass music. "Seven by Seven," a Fleck composition from the 1986 album New Grass Revival (Capitol), was nominated for a Grammy. By the time New Grass Revival split, Fleck's reputation as the banjo's most daring practitioner was nearly a point of fact.

In 1989 Fleck participated in a sort of bluegrass super-group, composed of New Grass Revival mandolinist Sam Bush, Mark O'Connor on fiddle, Edgar Meyer on bass, and Jerry Douglas on Dobro, releasing Strength in Numbers (MCA). A stylistically diverse amalgamation of musical concepts, the album relied heavily on classical compositions as well as traditional bluegrass ideas.

Pulling together three musicians whose unconventional approach to their instruments matched his own, Fleck formed the Flecktones in 1990. The virtuosic playing of Howard Levy on harmonica, Victor Wooten on bass, and his brother Roy "Future Man" on his invention, the Drumitar, a guitar-shaped drum synthesizer, garnered as much attention as Fleck's technically flawless, wildly imaginative picking. With a sound that drew upon jazz, funk, world music, and rock while hinting at country roots, the Flecktones became popular with both jazz and rock audiences. After Levy left the band in 1993, the Flecktones carried on as a trio. Bruce Hornsby and Branford Marsalis were among the guests who performed on Three Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest. With Left of Cool (#191, 1998), the group introduced vocals to its music, relying on guest singers Dave Matthews and Amy Grant. The album's "Almost 12" won a Grammy for Best Instrumental Composition. The Flecktones' Columbia debut, Outbound, featured guest appearances by Shawn Colvin, Yes vocalist Jon Anderson, guitarist Adrian Belew, and B3 organist John Medeski of Medeski, Martin and Wood.

Outside of the Flecktones, Fleck continues to explore new musical territories through both his solo career and additional collaborations, including his 1996 teaming with Indian and Chinese musicians Vishwa Mohan Bhatt and Jie-Bing Chen for the Grammy-nominated world music effort Tabula Rasa (Water Lily Acoustics).

Whoever named Fleetwood Mac was either lucky or prescient. The only thing about the group that hasn't changed since it formed in 1967 is the rhythm section of Mick Fleetwood and John McVie. Through the '70s, the band's personnel and style shifted with nearly every recording as Fleetwood Mac metamorphosed from a traditionalist British blues band to the maker of one of the best-selling pop albums ever, Rumours. From that album's release in 1977 into the present, Fleetwood Mac has survived additional, theoretically key, personnel changes and remained through the mid-'90s a dominant commercial force.

Peter Green's Fleetwood Mac was formed by ex-John Mayall's Bluesbreakers [see entry] Green, McVie, and Fleetwood along with Elmore James enthusiast Jeremy Spencer. McVie had been a charter member of the Bluesbreakers in 1963, Fleetwood had joined in 1965, and Green had replaced Eric Clapton in 1966. With its repertoire of blues classics and Green's blues-style originals, the group's debut at the British Jazz and Blues Festival in August 1967 netted it a record contract. Fleetwood Mac was popular in Britain immediately, and its debut album stayed near the top of the British chart for 13 months. The quartet had hits in the U.K. through 1970, including "Black Magic Woman" and the instrumental "Albatross" (which was #1 in 1968 and reached #4 when rereleased in 1973). America, however, largely ignored Fleetwood Mac, its first U.S. tour had the group third-billed behind Jethro Tull and Joe Cocker, neither of whom was as popular in Britain.

Fleetwood Mac: Lindsey Buckingham, John McVie, Christine McVie, Stevie Nicks, Mick Fleetwood

Green and Spencer recorded Fleetwood Mac in Chicago with Willie Dixon, Otis Spann, and other blues patriarchs in 1969 (the LP wasn't released until 1971), yet the group was already moving away from the all-blues format. In May 1970 Green abruptly left the group to follow his ascetic religious beliefs. He stayed out of the music business until the mid-'70s, when he made two solo LPs. His departure put an end to Fleetwood Mac's blues leanings; Danny Kirwan and Christine Perfect moved the band toward leaner, more melodic rock. Perfect, who had sung with Spencer Davis in folk and jazz outfits before joining British blues-rockers Chicken Shack [see entry] in 1968, had performed uncredited on parts of Then Play On, but contractual obligations to Chicken Shack kept her from joining Fleetwood Mac officially until 1971, by then she had married McVie.

Early in 1971 Spencer disappeared in L.A. and tumbled up as a member of a religious cult, the Children of God (later the title of a Spencer solo effort). Fleetwood Mac went through a confused period. Bob Welch joined, supplementing Kirwan's and Christine McVie's songwriting. Next Kirwan was fired and replaced by Bob Weston and Dave Walker, both of whom soon departed. Manager Clifford Davis then formed a group around Weston and Walker, called it Fleetwood Mac, and sent it on a U.S. tour. An injunction filed by the real Fleetwood Mac forced the bogus band to desist (they then formed the group Stretch), but protracted legal complications kept Fleetwood Mac from touring for most of 1974. From then until around the time of the Tusk tour in 1979–80, the band managed itself, with Mick Fleetwood taking most of the responsibility.

The group relocated to California in 1974. After Welch left to form the power trio Pans in 1975. Fleetwood Mac finally found its best-selling lineup. Producer Keith Olsen played an album he'd engineered, Buckingham-Nicks (Polydor), for Fleetwood and the McVies as a demo for his studio. Fleetwood Mac hired not only Olsen but the duo of Lindsey Buckingham and Stevie Nicks, who had played together in the Bay Area acid-rock group Fritz from 1968 until 1972, before recording with Olsen. Fleetwood Mac now had three songwriters, Buckingham's studio craft, and an onstage focal point in Nicks, who became a late-'70s sex symbol as Fleetwood Mac (#1, 1975) racked up 5 million in sales. The McVies divorced in 1976, and Buckingham and Nicks separated soon after, but the tensions of the two years between albums helped shape the songs on Rumours (#1, 1977), which would sell over 17 million copies, win the Grammy for Album of the Year, and contained the 1977 hits "Go Your Own Way" (#10), "Dreams" (#1), "Don't Stop" (#3), and "You Make Loving Fun" (#9).

After touring the biggest venues around the world—with Nicks, who was prone to throat nodes, always in danger of losing her voice—Fleetwood Mac took another two years and approximately $1 million to make Tusk (#4, 1979), an ambitious, frequently experimental project that couldn't match its predecessors' popularity, although it still turned a modest profit and spun off a couple of hits: "Tusk" (#8, 1979) and "Sara" (#7, 1979). Buckingham and Mac engineer Richard Dashut also produced hit singles for John Stewart and Bob Welch. As with many bands that have overspent in the studio, Fleetwood Mac's next effort was a live double album (#14, 1980).

In 1980 Fleetwood and Dashut visited Ghana to record The Visitor with African musicians, and Nicks began work on her first solo LP, Bella Donna, which hit #1 and went quadruple platinum with three Top 20 singles: "Stop Draggin' My Heart Around" (a duet with Tom Petty), "Leather and Lace" (a duet with Don Henley), and "Edge of Seventeen (Just Like the White Winged Dove)." Late 1981 saw the release of Buckingham's solo LP, Law and Order (#32, 1981) and his Top 10 single "Trouble."

Fleetwood Mac's first collection of new material in three years, Mirage (#1), was less overtly experimental and featured the 1982 hit singles "Hold Me" (written by Christine McVie about her relationship with Beach Boy Dennis Wilson) (#4), "Gypsy" (#12), and "Love in Store" (#22). The following year Nicks released her second solo effort, The Wild Heart, which contained "Stand Back" (#5). Unlike Buckingham's critically lauded but only moderately popular solo releases, Nicks' were hugely popular, with her third release, Rock a Little ("Talk to Me"), charting at #12. In 1984 Christine McVie released two hit singles, "Got a Hold on Me" (#10) and "Love Will Show Us How" (#30), and Buckingham released his critically acclaimed Go Insane. Under the stress of several factors—among them each member having his or her own management team, Buckingham's increasing authority in the studio, Nicks' ascent to solo stardom and chemical dependency (treated during a 1987 stint at the Betty Ford Clinic), Fleetwood's bankruptcy—the group took a hiatus, not coming back together again until 1985, when it began work on Tango in the Night. Long dissatisfied with his position in the group, Buckingham officially left the group after deciding not to tour with it to support the album. His replacements, Billy Burnette [see entry], who was a member of Fleetwood's informal side group Zoo, and Rick Vito, toured instead. While the group was at work on Tango, Nicks was also recording, working, and touring behind Rock a Little. Released in the spring in 1987, Tango quickly moved into the Top 10, bolstered by the Top 20 hits "Little Lies," "Seven Wonders," and "Everywhere."

Behind the Mask (#18, 1990), Fleetwood Mac's first studio album not to go platinum since 1975, came out in 1990, around which time Christine McVie and Nicks both announced they would remain in the group but no longer tour. Later that year the drummer's best-selling memoirs, Fleetwood. My Life and Adventures in Fleetwood Mac, was published.

In early 1991 Vito left the group, followed two years later by Burnette. In January 1993 Buckingham joined Fleetwood, the McVies, and Nicks to perform Bill Clinton's campaign anthem, "Don't Stop," at his presidential inaugural gala. The next month Nicks announced her departure from the group; in 1994 she released Street Angel (#45, 1994), her first album of new material in four years.

Two new members joined Fleetwood Mac in fall 1993: Dave Mason [see entry] and Bekka Bramlett (the daughter of Delaney and Bonnie Bramlett, with whom Mason had toured before Bekka was born). Bramlett had also sung with the Zoo. After releasing Time (1995) to disappointing response, the group dissolved.

A year later, the Rumours edition of Fleetwood Mac reunited to record The Dance (#1, 1997), a live document of an MTV concert that featured the band's greatest hits as well as four new songs. The album's release coincided with a worldwide tour—its first in 15 years—that found Fleetwood Mac's popularity undiminished as it marked the 20th anniversary of Rumours. In 1998 the band was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, where it played an acoustic set that Buckingham insisted would be its swan song. Ironically, founding member Peter Green performed as well—but with fellow inductees Santana. Taking stock of Nicks' solo highlights, Enchanted, a three-disc box set, was also released. Her 2001 release, Trouble in Shangri-La, returned her to the Top 10. Even Green enjoyed a comeback, forming the Peter Green Splinter Group and releasing a series of late-'90s albums devoted to the blues. By 2000, Fleetwood Mac had sold more than 100 million copies of its albums—including 25 million for Rumours alone—making it one of the most popular rock bands in history.

The Fleetwoods

Formed 1958, Olympia, WA
 Gary Troxel (b. Nov. 28, 1939, Centralia, WA), voc.; Barbara Laine Ellis (b. Feb. 20, 1940, Olympia), voc.; Gretchen Diane Christopher (b. Feb. 29, 1940, Olympia), voc.
 1990—Best of the Fleetwoods (Rhino).

The Fleetwoods were unique among vocal groups in that their angelic, mellow style proved popular not only with the predominantly white pop audience but with R&B fans as well. Their debut single, "Come Softly to Me," hit #1 on the pop chart, then crossed over to #5 R&B in 1959. The three high school friends were known originally as Two Girls and a Guy. They had several other hits, including "Tragedy" (#12, 1959), and a second #1 hit, the DeWayne Blackwell composition "Mr. Blue," in 1959, but broke up in 1963 after releasing a cover of Jesse Belvin's "Goodnight My Love" (#32, 1963). The trio reunited occasionally through the years. By the '90s Christopher had become the sole remnant of the original lineup.

Aug. 22, 1956, Lewiston, ME), bass; Lenny Calderone (b. ca. 1955, New York, NY), drums. 1979—(—Calderone; + Bill Milhizer [b. Sep. 21, ca. 1948, Troy, NY], drums) 1980—Up Front (I.R.S.) 1982—Roman Gods; Blast Off (ROIR) (+ Gordon Spaeth [b. Sep. 21, ca. 1950, New York], sax, organ, harmonica) 1983—Hexbreaker (I.R.S.) (—Pakulski; + Robert Burke Warren [b. Mar. 29, 1965, Quantico, VA], bass) 1987—Fleshtones Vs. Reality (Emergo) 1988—(—Warren; + Fred Smith, bass) 1989—(—Smith; + Andy Shernoff [b. Apr. 19, 1952, Bronx, NY], bass) 1990—(—Shernoff; + Ken Fox [b. Pigeonholed as garage-rock revivalists, the Fleshtones mix the hallmarks of that genre—fuzz-guitar and fuzz-bass riffs, Farfisa organ, "sha-la-la" backing vocals—with elements of rockabilly, surf rock, and Stax-Volt soul into their exuberant retro-raveup rock.

Shortly after forming in 1976, the Fleshtones began playing at CBGB and Max's Kansas City, winning fans on Manhattan's burgeoning punk-rock scene with their spinted shows. Their 1978 debut single, "American Beat" b/w "Critical List," on New York independent label Red Star Records (home of Suicide, among other acts), led to a deal with I.R.S. Records, which released the group's debut EP, Up Front. The Fleshtones' first full-length album, Roman Gods, was well received by critics but sold in only cult-sized numbers. Blast Off collected earlier tracks recorded with original drummer Lenny Calderone. During the mid-'80s, frontman Peter Zaremba moonlighted as the host of MTV's The Cutting Edge, an I.R.S.-sponsored show that was an important outlet for the emerging indie-rock movement.

While their audience never grew beyond cult status, the Fleshtones kept recording and touring, gaining enough of an international profile to inspire Spain's Impossible Records label to release the 1994 compilation The Angry

Years. The band spawned spinoff acts—including Peter Zaremba's Love Delegation and Keith Streng's Full Time Men—but has remained intact, recording for a variety of labels.

Will Shatter (b. Russell Wilkinson, 1956; d. Dec. 9, 1987, San Francisco), voc., bass; Ricky Williams (b. ca. 1955, Palo Alto, CA; d. Nov. 21, 1992, San Francisco), voc.; Ted Falconi (b. Laurence Falconi, Sep. 2, 1947, Bryn Mawr, PA), gtr.; Steve DePace (b. Jan. 29, 1957, San Francisco), drums. 1979—(—Williams; + Bruce Lose [a.k.a. Bruce Loose, b. Bruce Calderwood, June 6, 1959, Fresno, CA], bass, voc.) 1982—Album—Generic Flipper (Subterranean) 1984—Gone Fishin'; Blow'n Chunks (ROIR) 1986—Public Flipper Ltd. (Subterranean) 1987—Sex Bomb Baby (—Shatter) 1992—(+ John Dougherty [b. Apr. 20, 1961, Oakland, CA; d. Oct. 31, 1997], bass) American Grafishy (Def American).

Flipper emerged from San Francisco in the early '80s as one of America's most powerful and distinctive postpunk bands. Opting for slow-paced noise dirges that, despite their tempo and volume, could never be mistaken for heavy metal. Flipper influenced many Seattle "grunge" bands, including Nirvana. Flipper's sometimes topical ("Love Canal") or philosophical ("Life" rejected nihilism by declaiming "Life's the only thing worth living for!") lyrics also set it apart.

Will Shatter and Steve DePace had played together in the Bay Area punk band Negative Trend before forming Flipper with guitarist Ted Falconi and the infamous Ricky Williams. Early on, Williams was replaced by Bruce Lose (sometimes spelled "Loose"), who traded bass and lead vocals onstage with Shatter. Lose was already notorious in local punk clubs for inventing the Worm, a postpogo dance in which he threw himself on the floor and flailed about, trying to knock people over. With a sardonic onstage attitude, Flipper quickly drew a large cult following and recorded its first single, "Love Canal" b/w "Ha Ha Ha," in 1980. Flipper's debut album included "Life," and the seven-minute classic "Sex Bomb"—in which Shatter periodically screamed a single line ("She's a sex bomb, baby, yeah!")—while the band ground out one monolithic, bass-heavy riff.

Flipper carried on in this fashion until December 9, 1987, when Shatter died of an accidental heroin overdose. Three years later Flipper regrouped, with Falconi's old friend John Dougherty on bass. Soon after American Records' Rick Rubin—who had once covered Flipper songs in the New York band Hose—called seeking a demo of new songs. He not only signed Flipper but reissued its first album in 1992. The band toured Europe and the U.S. after the 1992 release of American Grafishy. Original vocalist Williams, who spent the '80s singing for the Sleepers and the Toiling Midgets, died that year of respiratory complications. Dougherty suffered a fatal overdose on Halloween 1997. In 2000 the remaining trio recorded tracks for tributes to Nirvana and Metallica.

Flo and Eddie: See the Turtles

A Flock of Seagulls

Formed 1980, Liverpool, Eng.

Mike Score (b. Nov. 5, 1957, Liverpool), voc., kybds.; Ali Score (b. Alistair Score, Aug. 8, 1956, Liverpool), drums; Paul Reynolds (b. Aug. 4, 1962, Liverpool), gtr.; Frank Maudsley (b. Nov. 10, 1959, Liverpool), bass.

1982—A Flock of Seagulls (Jive/Arista) 1983—Listen 1984—The Story of a Young Heart (– Reynolds; + Gary Steadnir [b. U.S.], gtr.; + Chris Chryssaphis [b. U.S.], kybds.) 1986—Dream Come True 1991—The Best of A Flock of Seagulls 1995—The Light at the End of the World (SAVA) 1999—Greatest Hits Remixed (Cleopatra).

One of the first post-new wave pop bands of the MTV era, A Flock of Seagulls crafted a few techno-rock hits, but is perhaps better-remembered for frontman Mike Score's bizarre "waterfall" haircut—an exaggerated pompadour that cascaded his peroxide-blond locks forward in a long, thin point hanging down to his nose. Score, in fact, was a former hairdresser with no real musical training when he, salon assistant Frank Maudsley, and Score's brother Ali first formed the band. They made their recording debut with a British EP on Bebop Deluxe guitarist Bill Nelson's Cocteau label; the jet-paced single "Telecommunication" failed to chart in America, but its mix of Eurodisco sequencer beats and sleek dance-rock rhythms found a home in new wave rock-disco dance clubs. The band's self-titled debut album (#10, 1982) yielded hits in the upbeat "I Ran (So Far Away)" (#9, 1982) and "Space Age Love Song" (#30, 1982), which codified A Flock of Seagulls' ballad technique—wrapping simple, yearning love songs in pillowy, billowy layers of string synthesizers and plangent guitar chords that seemed to zoom off into infinity. The group, which got constant MTV play, tried to affect a half-baked sci-fi aura in its videos, with Score's hair the inevitable focus.

Listen (#16, 1983) yielded only one hit single, the lovely ballad "Wishing (If I Had a Photograph of You)" (#26, 1983), while Story of a Young Heart peaked at #66 (1984), with its single "The More You Live, The More You Love" hitting only #56 (1984). The band eventually replaced departed guitarist Paul Reynolds with a pair of American musicians and gave it one last try with Dream Come True, which failed to chart at all. Ever resilient, Score—at this stage the sole remaining original member—formed a new version of the group for 1989 and toured the U.S. The singer moved to Florida in 1993, where another version of the band recorded the independent release The Light at the End of the World (1995).

Eddie Floyd

Born June 25, 1935, Montgomery, AL

1967—Knock on Wood (Stax) 1968—I've Never Found a Girl 1970—California Girl 1973—Baby Lay Your Head Down (Gently on My Bed) 1974—Soul Street 1977—Experience

(Malaco) 1986—Try Me (Seasaint) 1988—Flashback (Wilbe) 1993—Rare Stamps (Stax).

R&B singer and songwriter Eddie Floyd was in his teens when he moved to Detroit, where his uncle Robert West founded the LuPine and Flick labels, two early rivals of Berry Gordy Jr.'s fledgling Motown empire. He had sung in a number of vocal harmony groups before cofounding the Falcons, initially a racially integrated group, in 1956. West arranged the group's deal with Mercury, but they recorded without success, and in 1957, a personnel shuffle resulted in their gaining a new lead singer, Joe (brother of the Four Tops' Levi) Stubbs. Their 1959 hit, "You're So Fine" was a Top 20 pop hit.

Following a few less successful singles, Stubbs left and was replaced by Wilson Pickett, with whom the Falcons recorded "I Found a Love" (complete with backing vocals by another LuPine group, the Primitives, which included future Supremes Mary Wilson and Diana Ross). This version of the Falcons disbanded in 1963, although other groups of singers going under the Falcons name continued to record.

Over the next few years, Floyd released singles on LuPine, Atlantic, and Saffice, which he partly owned, before he moved to Washington, DC, and began commuting to Memphis, where he wrote songs for Stax. He cowrote "Knock on Wood" with Steve Cropper for Otis Redding, but when the label released Floyd's demo version, it went to #28 in 1966. (According to Floyd, the song has been covered over 60 times, including a #1 hit disco version by Amii Stewart in 1979.) Later hits included 1967's "Raise Your Hand," 1968's "I've Never Found a Girl," and "Bring It On Home to Me" (#17) and "California Girl" in 1970. He also wrote for others, including "Comfort Me" for Carla Thomas, whom he also produced; "Don't Mess With Cupid" for Otis Redding; "Someone's Watching Over You" for Solomon Burke; and "634-5789" for Wilson Pickett.

Floyd occasionally toured the U.S. and Europe as part of the Stax Revue, but the financially beleaguered label took his career under with it. In 1977 he put out a disco record on Malaco called Experience, but he like so many other singers of his generation, was displaced on the charts by disco. In 1989 he reunited with several Stax/Atlantic artists for President George H. Bush's inaugural ball. He continues to perform around the world, often as a guest vocalist with the successful Blues Brothers Band. In 1996 Floyd received a Pioneer Award from the Rhythm & Blues Foundation.

The Flying Burrito Brothers

Formed 1968, Los Angeles, CA

Feb. 2, 1934, Gallipolis, OH], bass) Sleepless Nights (A&M); Airborne (Columbia) 1988—Farther Along: The Best of the Flying Burrito Brothers (A&M) 1997—(group re-forms: John Beland, gtr., voc.; Gary Kubal, drums; Wayne Budge, steel gtr.; Larry Patton, gtr., voc.) California Jukebox (Ether) 1999—Sons of the Golden West (BMG/Arista) 2000—Hot Burritos! The Flying Burrito Bros. Anthology 1969-1972 (A&M/Universal). Gram Parsons solo: see entry. Chris Hillman solo: 1982—Morning Sky (Sugar Hill) 1984—Desert Rose. Chris Hillman with the Desert Rose Band: 1987—The Desert Rose Band (Curb) 1988—Running 1990—Pages of Life 1991—A Dozen Roses; True Love.

When Gram Parsons led the Flying Burrito Brothers, his emotive, haunting songs and the band's classic C&W-based virtuosity set the standard for California country rock. After he left, followed by cofounder Chris Hillman, the band quickly devolved into an uninspired follower of the style it had started. Eventually, ex-Burritos went on to greater commercial success in the Eagles, Firefall, and the Desert Rose Band.

Parsons had joined Chris Hillman in the Byrds [see entry] for Sweetheart of the Rodeo before the two started the Burritos in L.A. As the lineup gelled (four different drummers played on the band's first album), they recruited ex-Byrd Michael Clarke as drummer. The first album, The Gilded Palace of Sin (#164, 1969) only sold about 40,000 copies. The band developed a rabid local following, however, including members of the Rolling Stones (recording in L.A. at the time), who arranged for the group to play at Altamont.

Parsons, who began spending most of his time with Keith Richards, had already lost interest in the Burritos by the recording of the second album. In 1970 Parsons left the band for a solo career [see entry] and was replaced by Rick Roberts, who'd recorded with the Byrds. When Bernie Leadon left to join the nascent Eagles [see entry] and Hillman and Al Perkins were recruited by Stephen Stills for Manassas, Roberts became de facto leader. After Manassas, Hillman joined the Souther-Hillman-Furay Band for two LPs, released a couple of solo albums, and started his own group, the Desert Rose Band, which scored several C&W hits.

Roberts recruited members of bluegrass-rockers Country Gazette for a 1973 European tour (when Live in Amsterdam was made), but disbanded the Burritos late in 1973. Roberts then left to form Firefall [see entry]. In 1975 Kleinow and Ethridge revived the name with ex-Canned Heat bassist Joel Scott Hill and fiddler "Gib" Gilbeau, but Ethridge left in 1976. Various aggregations of Burritos (minus any original members) periodically make recordings and hit the honky-tonk club circuit.

The Flying Lizards

Formed 1978, Ireland

David Cunningham, kybds., gtr., perc., etc.; Deborah Evans, voc. 1980—Flying Lizards (Virgin) 1981—(- Evans; + various personnel) Fourth Wall (Virgin, U.K.) 1984—Top Ten (Statik, U.K.).

As the Flying Lizards, conceptual artist David Cunningham and session vocalist Deborah Evans enjoyed novelty hits with their radically rearranged, disinterested versions of Barrett Strong's "Money" and Eddie Cochran's "Summertime Blues."

Irish art-school student Cunningham performed with a 13-piece band, Les Cochons Chic. He made a minimalist solo album, Grey Scale, in the late '70s. In 1978 he conceived the Flying Lizards and put out "Summertime Blues," which attracted some attention in Britain. The followup, "Money," had its signature riff played on an upright piano with rubber toys, sheet music, cassettes, and telephone directories inside. The song was recorded for approximately $14 in a home studio. "Money" (#50 U.S., #5 U.K., 1979) picked up substantial U.S. airplay and prompted Virgin to ask for an album, which also included a Brecht-Weill song and more Cunningham instrumentals. The floating lineup on the more experimental Fourth Wall features guitarist Robert Fripp, vocalist Patti Palladin, and sax player Peter Gordon.

Cunningham later worked with the Pop Group, the Mo-dettes, the Electric Chairs, and This Heat. He returned to experimental music and work in theater and film. In 1984 he revived the Flying Lizards to issue Top Ten, which dismantled songs by Jimi Hendrix, Little Richard, and Leonard Cohen, among others. Since then Cunningham has released numerous solo albums; his Piano Records label has been active since 1976. As of 2001 a Flying Lizards retrospective CD was awaiting release.

Focus

Formed 1969, Amsterdam, Neth.

Thijs Van Leer (b. Mar. 31, 1948, Amsterdam), organ, flute, voc.; Martin Dresden, bass; Hans Cleuver, drums.

1970—(+ Jan Akkerman [b. Dec. 24, 1946, Amsterdam], gtr.) 1971—In and Out of Focus (Sire) (- Cleuver; + Pierre Van der Linden [b. Feb. 19, 1946, Neth.], drums; - Dresden; + Cyril Havermanns, bass) Moving Waves (- Havermanns; + Bert Ruiter [b. Nov. 26, 1946], bass) 1972—Focus Three 1973—Live at Rainbow (- Van der Linden; + Colin Allen, drums, perc.) 1974—Hamburger Concerto (Atco); Ship of Memories (Harvest) 1975—Mother Focus (- Allen); Dutch Masters 1976—(+ Van der Linden; - Akkerman; - Van der Linden; + Philip Catherine

1978—Focus Con Proby (with P.J. Proby) (Harvest).

Jan Akkerman solo: 1973—Profile (Sire) 1974—Tabernakel (Atco) 1977—Eli 1978—Jan Akkerman (Atlantic).

The progressive-rock band Focus became a major draw in Europe playing extended songs with tinges of classical melody from flutist Thijs Van Leer and pyrotechnical solos by guitarist Jan Akkerman. In the U.S. Focus is remembered for a yodeling novelty single, "Hocus Pocus" (#9, 1973).

Classically trained Jan Akkerman became known in the Netherlands as a member of Brainbox, which also included drummer Pierre Van der Linden. Meanwhile, Thijs Van Leer, a classically trained keyboardist and flutist, formed Focus in 1969 as a trio; its first gig was as a pit band for the Dutch production of Hair. In 1970 Akkerman joined in order to try making more complex music than Brainbox's. Focus' debut album was modestly successful in Europe, and the followup included "Hocus Pocus," which became an international hit. The band considered it a joke but wound up stuck with it as a signature song.

Focus had its second and last U.S. chart showing with "Sylvia" (1973), then returned to more ambitious compositions on Focus 3, which went gold, as had Moving Waves. In the early '70s Focus was a headlining band in the U.S. and Europe. After 1974's Hamburger Concerto, the group turned to more concise four-minute pop songs on 1975's Mother Focus. Akkerman left in 1976 to continue his concurrent solo career; he was replaced by guitarist Philip Catherine in the group's waning years. Future Journey drummer Steve Smith was briefly a member in 1978. Focus Con Proby featured British pop star P.J. Proby.

After Focus' peak, Akkerman released a string of solo albums, and Van Leer released the three-volume Introspection, Nice to Have Met You, and O My Love. A later-day Focus led by Akkerman and Van Leer existed in the '80s. The original group re-formed for a Dutch television special around 1990.

Dan Fogelberg

Born Aug. 13, 1951, Peoria, IL

1972—Home Free (Columbia) 1974—Souvenirs (Full Moon/Epic) 1975—Captured Angel 1977—Netherlands 1978—Twin Sons of Different Mothers (with Tim Weisberg) 1979—Phoenix 1981—The Innocent Age 1982—Greatest Hits 1984—Windows and Walls 1985—High Country Snows 1987—Exiles 1990—The Wild Places 1991—Dan Fogelberg Live—Greetings From the West 1993—River of Souls 1995—No Resemblance Whatsoever (with Tim Weisberg) (Giant) 1997—Portrait: The Music of Dan Fogelberg From 1972–1997 1999—The First Christmas Morning (Chicago) 2000—Something Old, New, Borrowed . . . and Some Blues.

Singer/songwriter Dan Fogelberg studied piano for a few years, began playing the guitar, and was composing at age

14. During the two years he studied art at the University of Illinois in Champaign, he also played campus coffeehouses, where he met Irving Azoff, ex-student and manager of local bands like REO Speedwagon. In 1971 Fogelberg dropped out of school, moved to L.A., and signed with Columbia. Home Free went largely unnoticed, but his second album, Souvenirs (produced by Joe Walsh), went double platinum on the strength of "Part of the Plan" (#31, 1975).

In the early '70s Fogelberg was active in West Coast music circles, guesting on LPs by Jackson Browne, Roger McGuinn, and Randy Newman. Uncomfortable with the starmaker lifestyle, he left California in late 1974. In 1976 his backup group, Fool's Gold, released a self-titled LP that featured its own single, "Rain, Oh Rain."

Eventually settling in Boulder, Colorado, Fogelberg continued his string of platinum albums with Captured Angel (#23, 1975); Netherlands (#13, 1977); Twin Sons of Different Mothers (#8, 1978), a collaboration with jazz-pop flutist Tim Weisberg; Phoenix (#3, 1979); and The Innocent Age (#6, 1981), a double-album song cycle lamenting the passage of childhood. He appeared on the soundtrack of Urban Cowboy in 1980, the same year he made his first live TV appearance.

Although the singer/songwriter genre was in noticeable decline by the early '80s, Fogelberg bucked the trend with The Innocent Age. Four singles from that album, "Hard to Say," "Leader of the Band," "Run for the Roses," and "Same Old Lang Syne," reached the Top 20. His last big hit was 1984's "Language of Love" (#13), an uncharacteristically hard rocker. From there, however, Fogelberg changed gear, recording bluegrass with guest stars Doc Watson, Ricky Skaggs, and David Gismán on High Country Snows. It was his first album in more than a decade to sell fewer than 500,000 copies. None of his four subsequent albums has matched his former sales, but Fogelberg still commands an audience. River of Souls marked another departure, incorporating South African singers, Brazilian rhythms, and other world-music elements, but it peaked at #164.

In 1995 Fogelberg teamed up with Weisberg for a followup to their 1978 collaboration. The box set, Portrait, included five previously unreleased songs, one of which, "Song for a Carpenter," he recorded with the Chieftains in 1983. Subsequent releases have included a Christmas album and a live collection. In the summer of 2000, Fogelberg undertook a solo acoustic tour.

John Fogerty: See Creedence Clearwater Revival

Foghat

Formed 1971, London, Eng.

"Lonesome" Dave Peverett (b. Apr. 16, 1943, Dulwich, Eng.; d. Feb. 7, 2000, Orlando, FL), gtr., voc.; Roger Earl (b. 1949, Eng.), drums; Rod Price (b. Eng.), gtr.; Tony Stevens (b. Sep. 12, 1949, Eng.), bass.

1972—Foghat (Bearsville) 1973—Foghat 1974—Energized; Rock and Roll Outlaws (– Stevens; + Nick Jameson [b. MO], bass, kybds., synth.) 1975—Fool for the City (– Jameson; + Craig MacGregor [b. CT], bass) 1976—Night Shift 1977—Live 1978—Stone Blue 1979—Boogie Motel 1980—Tight Shoes (– Price; + Erik Cartwright, gtr.) 1981—Girls to Chat and Boys to Bounce 1982—In the Mood for Something Rude 1983—Zig-Zag Walk 1988—Best of Foghat (Rhino) 1992—Best of Foghat, vol. 2 1994—Return of the Boogie Men (Atlantic) 1998—Road Cases (Plum).

In the '70s Foghat's basic blues-based boogie and extensive U.S. touring brought it a loyal audience and gold and platinum albums (Rock and Roll Outlaws, Fool for the City, Night Shift, plus four others). "Lonesome" Dave Peverett founded Foghat along the lines of his previous band, Savoy Brown [see entry]. (Tony Stevens and Roger Earl had also been in Savoy Brown.) After three years of heavy touring—the group averaged eight months per year on the road—cofounder Stevens was replaced by Nick Jameson, who had helped mix Foghat's first albums. While he was in the band, Jameson was also producer, and he oversaw its first hit single, "Slow Ride" (#20, 1976).

Jameson left in 1976 for a solo career and other production work. By then the band was based on Long Island and recruited replacements in the U.S. In 1977 Foghat hosted a benefit concert for the New York Public Library's blues collection, with guests Muddy Waters and John Lee Hooker. Foghat's late-'70s albums yielded three hits: "Stone Blue" (#36, 1978), "Third-Time Lucky" (#23, 1979), and a live version of "I Just Want to Make Love to You" (#33, 1977).

In 1993 Peverett, Price, Stevens, and Earl re-formed the original Foghat lineup for a tour and a new studio album, Return of the Boogie Men. The band toured regularly until Peverett's death of complications from cancer in 2000.

Ben Folds Five

Formed 1994, Chapel Hill, NC

Ben Folds (b. Sep. 12, 1966, Greensboro, NC), voc., piano; Robert Sledge (b. Mar. 9, 1968, Greensboro), bass, voc.; Darren Jessee (b. Apr. 8, 1971, Houston, TX), drums.

1995—Ben Folds Five (Caroline) 1997—Whatever and Ever Amen (Sony/550 Music) 1998—Naked Baby Photos (Caroline) 1999—The Unauthorized Biography of Reinhold Messner (Sony/550 Music).

Ben Folds solo: 2001—Rockin' the Suburbs (Sony/550 Music).

Bombastic, piano-driven pop songcraft, an aversion to guitars, and a breakthrough song about the lonely aftermath of a teenage abortion. These are but three of the quirks that made Ben Folds Five—three guys calling themselves a quintet—one of the '90s' most unlikely alternative-rock success stories. Centered around Ben Folds and his baby grand piano, the trio emerged at the tail end of the grunge era with a highly melodic, guitar-free sound reminiscent of Elton John's rock & roll days, spiked with the wry lyrical wit of prime Randy Newman and an exuberant, punkish verve.

Folds, who served as the group's frontman and main songwriter, began taking piano lessons at age nine while growing up in Winston-Salem, North Carolina. He landed a scholarship to study jazz at the University of Miami, but soon left the school to follow his muse to Nashville and New York before ultimately returning home. It was on the Chapel Hill local scene that he met and teamed up with drummer Darren Jessee and bassist Robert Sledge.

The group was signed to the independent Caroline label on the strength of an indie single, "Jackson Cannery." That song kicked off their self-titled 1995 debut, a tuneful showcase of the band's Tin Pan Alley-derived power pop and Folds' knack for offsetting sly sarcasm with bittersweet character portraits. The album earned rave reviews, as did the band's hyperactive live act, which Folds would bring to a climax by plucking the strings of his baby grand by hand or by playing the keys with his feet. A major label bidding war ensued, leading to the trio's move to Sony/550 Music.

The group's major-label debut, Whatever and Ever Amen (#42, 1997), continued in much the same vein as its predecessor, featuring such typically wry (and frequently acerbic) fare as "Song for the Dumped" and "Battle of Who Could Care Less." But it was "Brick" (#19, 1998), Folds' melancholy, autobiographical ballad about a young couple dealing with the emotional landslide of an abortion, that propelled the album to gold status in the U.S.

A month and a half after "Brick" debuted on the singles chart, the group fulfilled its commitment to Caroline with the early tracks and demos collection Naked Baby Photos (#94, 1998). In stark contrast to the rough, unfinished edges of that set, The Unauthorized Biography of Reinhold Messner (#35, 1999) found the group embracing strings and horns (but still not guitars) for a lushly orchestrated, full-on concept album (albeit not one about the real Messner, historically known as the first man to scale Mount Everest sans extra oxygen). The band claimed their association with the name came from a fake ID Jessee used as a teenager.)

In 2000 Folds appeared in a series of Priceline.com commercials with actor William Shatner and guested on Rickie Lee Jones' covers album, It's Like This. The group also contributed a cover of Steely Dan's "Barrytown" to the soundtrack of the Jim Carrey comedy Me, Myself and Irene, as well as "Lonely Christmas Eve" to Carrey's How the Grinch Stole Christmas. Feeling that the group had run its course, however, the trio scrapped plans for a new album and announced their amicable breakup in November. Jessee and Sledge each began assembling new bands, while Folds began work on his first solo album, Rockin' the Suburbs.

Wayne Fontana and the Mindbenders

Formed 1963, Manchester, Eng.

Wayne Fontana (b. Glynn Geoffrey Ellis, Oct. 28, 1945, Manchester), voc.; Bob Lang (b. Jan. 10, 1946, Manchester), bass; Eric Stewart (b. Jan. 20, 1945, Manchester), gtr.; Ric Rothwell (b. Mar. 11, 1944, Manchester), drums; Graham Goldman (b. May 10, 1946, Manchester), bass.

1965—Wayne Fontana and the Mindbenders (Fontana); The Game of Love 1966—Eric, Rick, Wayne, Bob; The Mindbenders 1967—With Woman in Mind; A Groovy Kind of Love 1995—The Best of Wayne Fontana and the Mindbenders. Wayne Fontana solo: 1966—Wayne One (Fontana).

Wayne Fontana and the Mindbenders' contribution to the British Invasion was "Game of Love" (#1, 1965), and the Mindbenders minus Fontana followed up with "A Groovy Kind of Love" (#2, 1966).

Glynn Ellis started out in a school skiffle group, the Velfins. By 1963 he was playing in a Manchester pub band, the Jets, while working as an apprentice telephone engineer. Ellis arranged to have the Jets play for a Fontana Records talent scout at Manchester's Oasis Club, but only Ellis and bassist Bob Lang showed up for the audition. They recruited some musician friends from the audience and landed a contract, with Ellis becoming Wayne Fontana at a Philips/Fontana Records executive's behest. They started recording R&B covers in 1963 and began to score British hits in 1964 with a version of Major Lance's "Um, Um, Um, Um, Um, Um."

In 1965 "Game of Love" became an international hit, but after one more hit, "It's Just a Little Bit Too Late" (#45, 1965), Fontana decided on a solo career. He had a few U.K. hits—"Pamela, Pamela" and "Come On Home"—before moving into cabaret and nostalgia-rock revues, including a major English tour in 1979.

The Mindbenders had two U.S. hits on their own, "A Groovy Kind of Love" and "Ashes to Ashes," and they appeared in To Sir with Love before breaking up in the late '60s.

Gouldman—whose songs were British Invasion hits for Herman's Hermits, the Yardbirds, and others—and Stewart founded a group called Hotlegs, and then 10cc [see entry], in the '70s.

Foo Fighters

Formed 1994, Seattle, WA

David Grohl (b. Jan. 16, 1969, Warren, OH), voc., gtr., drums, bass; Pat Smear (b. Georg Ruthenberg, Aug. 5, 1959, Los Angeles, CA), gtr.; Nate Mendel (b. Dec. 21, 1969, Seattle), bass; William Goldsmith (b. July 4, 1972), drums. 1995—Foo Fighters (Roswell/Capitol) 1996—Big Me EP 1997—The Colour and the Shape (- Goldsmith; + Taylor Hawkins [b. Feb. 17, 1972, Laguna Beach, CA], drums; - Smear; + Franz Stahl [b. Oct. 30, 1962], gtr.) 1998—(- Stahl; + Chris Shiflett [b. May 6, 1971, Los Angeles], gtr.) 1999—There Is Nothing Left to Lose (RCA).

The Foo Fighters were the first and most substantial success to emerge from the ashes of Nirvana [see entry], but the band's roots were in the years of personal recordings made by leader Dave Grohl. The former Nirvana drummer had played guitar and written songs since he was a Washington, DC, teenager, while also playing drums in several hardcore bands. At age 17, Grohl became the drummer for the veteran punk act Scream. In 1990 he joined Nirvana, but continued to work on his own material during breaks from the road and studio. After finishing Nirvana's Nevermind, Grohl returned to DC to record several tracks, which were released on the cassette-only Pocketwatch. Plans for another cassette release were shelved with Kurt Cobain's 1994 suicide.

Later that year Grohl entered a studio with friend and producer Barrett Jones to record what would become the first Foo Fighters album. Grohl played all the instruments himself (with the exception of the song "X-Static," which featured guitar by Greg Dulli of the Afghan Whigs). Though he had written and sung just one Nirvana song (the B-side "Mangold"), Grohl demonstrated a flair for pop hooks amid driving guitar rock. (The name Foo Fighters came from what American World-War II pilots called unidentified fireballs spotted over Germany.) Grohl signed with Capitol and formed a band in time for a 1995 tour, recruiting bassist Nate Mendel and drummer William Goldsmith (both of Sunny Day Real Estate). Pat Smear, the former Germs guitarist who had joined Nirvana for its final tour, also joined.

Foo Fighters (#23) was released in 1995 and spawned the Modern Rock hits "This Is a Call," "I'll Stick Around," and "Big Me" (#13 pop; also #175 pop album as a seven-track EP in 1996). Goldsmith quit during the making of The Colour and the Shape (#10, 1996), the first Foo Fighters album recorded as a band, and was replaced by Taylor Hawkins (Alanis Monisette). The album included the Modern Rock hits "Monkey Wrench," "My Hero," and "Everlong." Smear quit and was briefly replaced by Franz Stahl (Scream), and then Chris Shiflett (No Use for a Name). Grohl relocated to Virginia and recorded There Is Nothing Left to Lose (#10, 1999) in his basement; the album included "Learn to Fly" (#19, 1999).

Steve Forbert

Born 1955, Meridian, MS

1978—Alive on Arrival (Nemperor) 1979—Jackrabbit Slim 1980—Little Stevie Orbit 1982—Steve Forbert 1988—Streets of This Town (Geffen) 1992—The American in Me 1993—What Kinda Guy? The Best of Steve Forbert (Columbia/Legacy) 1995—Mission of the Crossroad Palms (Giant) 1996—Rocking Horse Head 2000—Evergreen Boy (Koch) 2001—Young Guitar Days (Relentless/Nashville-Rolling Tide).

Folk-rock singer/songwriter Steve Forbert learned guitar at age 11 and later played in a variety of semipro rock bands on through college. At age 21, he quit his job as a truckdriver and moved to New York, where he began singing for spare change in Grand Central Terminal. Forbert worked his way up through the Manhattan clubs before landing a contract with Nemperor in 1978. His debut album, Alive on Arrival, was well received, and its followup, Jackrabbit Slim (#20, 1979), yielded a #11 single, "Romeo's Tune" (allegedly dedicated to the late Supreme Florence Ballard).

Little Stevie Orbit and Steve Forbert were neither critical nor commercial hits. In 1985 Forbert moved to Nashville, and he has continued to perform and record. His 1988 album, Streets of This Town, was produced by Gary Tallent. Forbert retains a sizable following and the respect of many critics for his finely crafted songs.

Frankie Ford

Born Francis Guzzo, Aug. 4, 1939, Gretna, LA
1959—On a Sea Cruise (Ace) 1984—New Orleans Dynamo
(Ace, U.K.) 1959—Hot & Lonely 1998—Sea Cruise: The Very Best of Frankie Ford (Music Club).

Frankie Ford was a white singer and pianist whose "Sea Cruise" (#14, 1959) remains one of the best New Orleans rockers of all time. To date the record has sold more than 30 million copies worldwide.

Ford, who appeared on Ted Mack's Amateur Hour at age eight, was marketed in the late '50s as Ace Records' attempt at a teen idol. The "Sea Cruise" track was made by Huey "Piano" Smith and the Clowns; Smith's vocals were erased and Ford's overdubbed, as was the case with the less popular followup, "Alimony." Ford's touring band included Mac Rebennack, later better known as Dr. John, on guitar. The singer had minor hits in 1960 ("You Talk Too Much" and "Time After Time") and 1961 ("Seventeen"). He was drafted in 1962. After his discharge, he returned to recording—with the Paula and ABC labels, as well as his own, Briar-meade—but he has supported himself primarily by performing in oldies package shows. He continues to play 200 nights a year. Ford has also comanaged several other oldies acts, including the Dixie Cups and Johnny Preston.

Lita Ford

Born Rosanna Ford, Sep. 23, 1959, London, Eng.
1983—Out for Blood (Mercury) 1984—Dancin' on the Edge
1988—Lita (RCA) 1990—Stiletto 1991—Dangerous Curves
1992—The Best of Lita Ford 1993—Greatest Hits 1995—
Black (ZYX) 2000—Lita Live (Cleopatra).

After the Runaways [see entry] broke up, guitarist and singer Lita Ford pursued a solo career as a hard-rock artist, counterbalancing her blond bombshell image by flexing her metal muscularity. She has found rare acceptance in that male world. She was the first woman in 20 years to be inducted into Circus magazine's Hall of Fame and was the first woman ever on the cover of Hit Parader.

Inspired by Jimi Hendrix, Ford led a power trio on her first two albums. Neither did well, and in 1986 she changed labels, managers, and producers. Ford hit it big with the platinum pop metal of Lita (#29, 1988), which was produced by glam master Mike Chapman and featured "Kiss Me Deadly" (#12, 1988), "Can't Catch Me" (cowritten with Motorhead's Lemmy), and "Close My Eyes Forever" (#8, 1989), a duet with Ozzy Osbourne. Sales were helped by her videos, in which she looked like a gas-station calendar girl come to life. Ford's subsequent records failed to sell as well. In 1992 she was a member of the house band for Howie Mandel's CBS show Howie.

In 1994 Ford and three other former Runaways sued Poly-

Gram Records and their ex-manager Kim Fowley for breach of contract and unpaid royalties. In 1995 Ford released Black, a less hard-rocking album produced by the Robb Brothers (Lemonheads, Buffalo Tom). Ford is no longer a factor on the charts, but her influence, solo and as a member of the Runaways, remains evident in the music of such all-female, metal-leaning bands as L7.

Julia Fordham

Born Aug. 10, 1962, Portsmouth, Eng.
1988—Julia Fordham (Virgin) 1989—Porcelain 1991—
Swept 1994—Falling Forward 1997—East West 1999—
The Julia Fordham Collection.

In the late '80s Julia Fordham was among a new crop of female singer/songwriters whose folk-influenced, intellectually ambitious pop traced its lineage to the earlier work of Joni Mitchell and Joan Armatrading. Her sultry alto and delicate, jazz-inflected songs about love and other social dilemmas have endeared her to fans of both alternative pop and adult contemporary music, giving her a cult following in the U.S. as well as mainstream success in Europe and Japan.

Fordham grew up on the southern coast of England, got her first guitar at six, eventually began performing in local pubs with her older brother, and quit school at 15 to pursue a music career. In her late teens, Fordham moved to London, where she hooked up with pop singer Mari Wilson and recorded an album as part of a beehive-hairdo-sporting group called Mari Wilson and the Wilsations. After two years as a Wilsation, Fordham found work backing singer Kim Wilde, then decided to parlay the songwriting she'd been doing since early adolescence into more serious artistic pursuits.

Fordham released a self-titled solo album in 1988, featuring two semisuccessful singles, "Happy Ever After" (#27 U.K., 1988) and "Where Does the Time Go?" (#41 U.K., 1989). After a sophomore album, 1989's Porcelain (#74, 1990; #13 U.K., 1989), Fordham became a familiar presence on VH1. Like its predecessor, Porcelain embellished a mellow pop-jazz with touches of African folk and Brazilian samba. A third album, Swept, proved less successful. Fordham returned in 1994 with a less controlled delivery on Falling Forward, singing with abandon on "Caged Bird" and the gospel-tinged "Hope, Prayer & Time." She displayed a bare, acoustic sound on 1997's East West, and played several dates on the Lilith Fair tour in 1998. The following year saw the release of a best-of album, The Julia Fordham Collection, which included a couple of new songs as well as a reworking of "Where Does the Time Go?" as a duet with Curtis Stigers.

Mick Jones solo: 1989—Mick Jones (Atlantic).

Despite accusations of formulaic commercialism, Foreigner's heavy metal with keyboard flourishes has racked up sales of over 30 million records worldwide to date.

The band is led by British journeyman rocker Mick Jones, who played in the '60s with Nero and the Gladiators, a Shadows-like group that had several hits in England, including "Hall of the Mountain King." He worked with French rock singer Johnny Hallyday, then with a latter-day version of Spooky Tooth. Jones had worked as an A&R man in New York before joining the Leslie West Band. A year later he decided to form his own band. In early 1976 he met ex-King Crimson multi-instrumentalist Ian McDonald at recording sessions for

Foreigner: (top) Lou Gramm, Mick Jones, (bottom) Rick Wills, Dennis Elliott

Ian Lloyd, former lead singer of Stories. A few months later Jones and McDonald formed Foreigner with four unknown musicians, including lead vocalist Lou Gramm, founder and lead singer of Black Sheep, a Free and Bad Company cover band in upstate New York.

The group's 1977 debut sold more than 4 million copies in the U.S. and stayed in the Top 20 for a year, on the strength of "Feels Like the First Time" (#4, 1977), "Cold as Ice" (#6, 1977), and "Long, Long Way From Home" (#20, 1978). Double Vision (#3, 1978), which sold 5 million records, spawned "Hot Blooded" (#3, 1978) and a #2 hit with the title track. Late in the year Foreigner headlined the Reading, England, music festival. Head Games (#5) with "Dirty White Boy" (#12) and "Head Games" (#14) hit in 1979 and went double platinum. In 1980 the group became a quartet, with Rick Wills (formerly of Frampton's Camel, Small Faces, and Roxy Music) on bass. Gagliardi and Greenwood went on to form the much-ignored Spys.

Foreigner's next album, 4 (#1, 1981), was its biggest ever, racking up six million in sales. It provided two Top 10 singles: "Urgent" (#4), which featured Junior Walker on sax, and a rare ballad, "Waiting for a Girl Like You" (#2). Agent Provocateur (#4, 1985) went double platinum, yielding the #1 pop hit "I Want to Know What Love Is," an epic piece of AOR-gospel on which Gramm was backed by Jennifer Holliday and the New Jersey Mass Choir. The album spawned another hit in "That Was Yesterday" (#12, 1985). Inside Information (#15, 1987) also went platinum, spawning the hit "Say You Will" (#6, 1987). Sometime between in the late '80s Gramm "officially" went solo, reliable sources differ, because he initially planned to have a parallel solo career while remaining in Foreigner. He had hits with "Midnight Blue" (#5, 1987) and "Just Between You and Me" (#6, 1989) before forming Shadow King, which went nowhere. Jones' solo album reached only #184 and had no hit singles. In 1989 Jones and Billy Joel co-produced the latter's hit Storm Front. Through it all, Gramm and Jones were sniping at each other in the press. Jones brought singer Johnny Edwards aboard for 1991's Unusual Heat, Foreigner's first album not to crack the album Top 100.

In 1992 the pair reconciled and the group returned with a lineup that (with the exception of the drum seat) has remained stable ever since. As of this writing, the group has released only one album of new material. 1995's Mr. Moonlight (#136). In 1997, on the eve of a tour of Japan and Australia, Gramm was diagnosed with a benign but life-threatening brain tumor. He took off 1998 for treatment and recuperation, and by 1999, Foreigner was back on the concert trail.

The Foundations

Formed 1967, London, Eng.

Peter Macbeth (b. Feb. 2, 1943, London), bass; Alan Warner (b. Apr. 21, 1947, London), gtr.; Clem Curtis (b. Nov. 28, 1940, Trinidad), voc.; Eric Allan Dale (b. Mar. 4, 1936, West Indies), trombone; Tony Gomez (b. Dec. 13, 1948, Sri Lanka), organ; Pat Burke (b. Oct. 9, 1937, Jam.), sax, flute; Mike Elliot (b. Aug. 6, 1929, Jam.), sax; Tim Harris (b. Jan. 14, 1948, London), drums. 1967—Baby Now That I've Found You (Uni) 1968—(– Curtis; + Colin Young [b. Sep. 12, 1944, Barbados], voc.) 1969—Build Me Up Buttercup; Digging the Foundations.

The Foundations were a mid-'60s pop band that had two major hits: the Motown-ish "Baby Now That I've Found You" and "Build Me Up Buttercup." In London the group became the house band at the Butterfly Club in Westbourne Grove. Record store owner Barry Class became the Foundations' manager and introduced them to songwriter Tony Macauley, who got them a record deal and then wrote and produced their hits.

Their debut single, "Baby Now That I've Found You" (#11, 1968), went gold. A minor hit, "Back on My Feet Again," followed before "Build Me Up Buttercup" (cowritten by Macauley and former Manfred Mann vocalist Mike d'Abo) hit #3 in early 1969. Followups like "In the Bad, Bad Old Days" and "My Little Chickadee" failed to hit, and the group split up in 1970, although the name was used by a British cabaret act (with little relation to the original group) for several years in the early '70s.

The Four Seasons

Formed 1956, Newark, NJ

Frankie Valli (b. Francis Castelluccio, May 3, 1937, Newark), voc.; Tommy DeVito (b. June 19, 1936, Belleville, NJ), gtr.; Nick DeVito, gtr.; Hank Majewski (d. 1969), bass.

During their nearly 40-year career, Frankie Valli and the Four Seasons have sold over 100 million records, making them the most long-lived and successful white doo-wop group. Lead singer Valli (whose three-octave range and falsetto are the group's trademark) has also maintained a successful solo career.

Valli, sometimes billed under his real name and later as Valley (after Texas Jean Valley, a country singer who had encouraged him as a child), began singing in his mid-teens with the Newark vocal groups the Romans and the Varietones. The Varietones, which included Hank Majewski and the DeVito brothers, eventually became the Four Lovers. The Lovers' "You're the Apple of My Eye," a tune songwriter Otis Blackwell gave them in exchange for their not recording his "Don't Be Cruel" (which he then gave to Elvis Presley), was a hit in 1956, and they appeared on The Ed Sullivan Show.

The Four Lovers became the Four Seasons (named after a Jersey cocktail lounge) with the addition of Bob Gaudio, formerly of the Royal Teens and composer of their hit "Short Shorts." As the group's chief songwriter, Gaudio changed the Four Seasons' repertoire and sound, which were later refined by producer Bob Crewe. After a single, "Bermuda," flopped, they again became the Four Lovers and returned to the clubs. They also served as Crewe's production group, arranging, performing, and providing instrumental and vocal backing in singles Crewe produced for other singers. This arrangement continued until 1962, when Valli, desperate over the group's lack of success, nearly quit the band. Then the group recorded a song by Gaudio, "Sherry." After the song was featured on American Bandstand, the Four Lovers became the Four Seasons once again, and within months "Sherry" hit #1.

The followup, "Big Girls Don't Cry," also went to #1, and over the next five years (until Valli's first solo hit, "I Can't Take My Eyes Off of You" in 1967), the Four Seasons had 50 hits, including "Santa Claus Is Coming to Town" (in an arrangement later imitated by Bruce Springsteen) (#23, 1962); "Walk Like a Man" (#1), "Ain't That a Shame" (#22), and "Candy Girl" (#3) in 1963; "Dawn" (#3), "Girl Come Running" (#30), "Let's Hang On" (#3), and "Working My Way Back to You" (#9) in 1965; "Opus 17 (Don't Worry 'bout Me)" (#12), "I've Got You Under My Skin" (#9), and "Tell It to the Rain" (#10) in 1966; "Beggin'" (#16), "C'mon Marianne" (#9), and "Watch the Flowers Grow" (#30) in 1967.

The group left Vee-Jay over a royalty dispute in 1964, and by 1965 was recording for Philips, continuing its string of hits, which ended abruptly with its excursion into psychedelia, Genuine Imitation Life Gazette. (It had also recorded several singles, including a cover of Dylan's "Don't Think Twice" in 1965 under the pseudonym the Wonder Who.) As the '60s closed, the group's popularity waned. By the time it signed to Motown's Mowest subsidiary, in 1971, Valli and Gaudio were the only original members left, and a $1.4 million debt had taken its toll.

In 1972 Crewe, whose independent label had folded, joined the group at Mowest. But even with the Crew-Gaudio-Valli team intact, none of its singles hit. The release of a 1972 LP, The Night, was canceled, and the group toured supporting the Four Tops and the Vandellas. Valli's 10-year-old hearing problem (diagnosed as otosclerosis, excessive calcium deposits in the ear) became critical. (Faced with the possibility of going deaf, Valli underwent surgery in 1976.) Meanwhile, Gaudio retired from performing to concentrate on writing and producing. In 1973 one Gerald Zeimanowitz testified before a Senate subcommittee that the Four Seasons had ties to organized crime, a charge he later retracted.
