ADVERTISEMENT.

BOSTON TYPE FOUNDRY, JANUARY, 1861.

In the present edition of our "Condensed Specimen Book," we beg leave to call attention especially to the Book and Newspaper Faces, some of which are entirely new. They are shown at greater length in our "Specimen of Book Faces," which will be supplied to such as desire it. We have yet others in hand, and shall spare neither pains nor expense to be first in this important branch of the art.

"Hard metal" is no new thing with us, it having been used in this foundry for many years; but we furnish copper-faced type for those who prefer it,—whether for newspaper use or otherwise,—and we give special attention to putting up regular and well-sorted founts. We are at all times ready to make estimates for Book, Job, and Newspaper Offices, and when the amount of type to be supplied is considerable our terms are correspondingly liberal. We furnish all kinds of Printing Presses and Printing Inks, and in fact all the implements and furniture required in the complete Printing Office. Old Type taken in exchange for new at current rates.

Thanking the trade for the liberal patronage hitherto bestowed on our establishment, we respectfully ask its continuance and increase.

BREVIER, No. 10.

Albertus Magnus. — After the lapse of about one hundred and fifty years from the period of the last-named alchemist, and four hundred years from the time of Geber, the celebrated Albertus Magnus was born, who, with his pupil, Thomas Aquinas, made great exertions to obtain the philosopher's stone, and the elixir vita. It was this elever man who constructed the "Brazen Head" which had the power of talking, and on one occasion it chattered so fast that Thomas Aquinas took up a hammer and broke it to pieces. The Brazen Head must have been some acoustic contrivance by which the voice was rendered audible, most probably thro' the medium of an ordinary speaking-pipe. It is Albertus Magnus who was said to have-the power of changing the course of the seasons, and the story is thus related by Charles Mackay, from Lang's "Histoire de la Philosophie Hermetique." Albertus was desirous of obtaining a piece of ground, on which to build a monastery, in the neighborhood of Cologne. The ground belonged to William, Count of Holland, and King of the Romans, who, for some rea-

ALBERTUS MAGNUS.—He had no sooner done so, than the dark clouds rolled away from the sky, a warm sun shone forth, the cold north wind veered suddenly round, and blew a mild breeze from the south; the snows melted away; the ice was unbound upon the streams, and the trees put forth their green leaves and their fruit; flowers sprang up beneath their feet, while larks, nightingales, cuckoos, blackbirds, thrushes, and every other sweet song-bird sang hymns from every tree. The earl and his attendants wondered greatly; but they ate their dinner, and in recompense for it, Albert got his piece of ground to

WILLIAM, COUNT OF HOLLAND, and King of the Romans, who, for some reason or other, did not wish to part with it. Albertus is reported to have gained it by the following extraordinary method:— He invited the prince, as he was passing through Cologne, to a magnificent entertainment prepared for him and his whole court. The prince accepted it, and repaired with a lordly retinue to the residence of the sage. It was in the midst of winter; the Rhine was frozen over, and the cold was so bitter that the knights could not sit on horseback without running the risk of losing their toes by the frost. Great, therefore, was their surprise, on arriving at Albert's house, to find that the repast was spread in his garden, in which the snow had drifted to the depth of several feet. The count in high dudgeon remounted his steed; but Albert at last prevailed upon him to take his seat at the table. He had no sooner done so than the dark clouds rolled away from the Immediately that the repast was over, he gave the word, and dark clouds obscured the sun; the snow fell in large flakes; the singing birds fell dead; the leaves dropped from the trees, and the winds blowed so cold and howled so mournfully, that the guests wrapped themselves up in their thick cloaks, and retreated into the house to warm themselves at the blazing fire in Albert's kitchen.
